"I didn't think I was pitching well," Balschmiter said after the game. "The team played well today, and that's why we got the win."

UMass coach Elaine Sortino felt similarly about Balschmiter's day, but was more optimistic of her ace's performance.

"I thought Brandice has a pretty good game," Sortino said. "I don't think she's operating on all cylinders, but it's nice to see so many strikeouts. That's a good game. She's getting half her outs as strikeouts. It's a better game than she pitched against Dartmouth a year ago."

Balschmiter's expanded arsenal of pitches helped her get out of a number of full-counts, where she earned a number of her strikeouts in the game. Her changeup was particularly impressive.

See NOTEBOOK on page 7

UMass Softball

Sophomore infielder Samantha Salato is batting .258 this season with eight RBIs. She went one-for-six in the team's first two home games Wednesday.

UM opens conference play in Dayton

By Joe Meloni
Collegian Staff

Fresh off a two-game sweep of the Dartmouth Big Green, the Massachusetts softball team (13-12-1) opens up Atlantic 10 play with a two-game set against the Dayton Flyers (4-12, 0-2 A-10) this weekend.

The Minutewomen faired well in the first portion of their schedule, playing .500-softball against the likes of California and Georgia Tech. The Minutewomen typically heat up when April rolls around. Against the 10 other teams in the conference, the Minutewomen are 297-44 all-time – including an 18-3 mark against the Flyers.

Before Wednesday, sophomore third baseman Whitney Mollica and senior first baseman Amanda Morin hadn't been their usual selves at the plate. Against Dartmouth, however, the pair teed off against the inferior Ivy League hurlers.

Mollica went 3-for-5 with two runs scored and drove in a pair in the two games against the Big Green. In the first inning of game one, Mollica drove an 0-1 fastball to the left-centerfield warning track which should've extended the UMass lead to three. But a poor call by the home plate umpire in a play at the plate cost Mollica an RBI and the Minutewomen a run.

Morin also swung a hot stick in the defeat of Dartmouth, going 5-for-8 from the leadoff spot in UMass' lineup. Consistent production from the top of the batting order is imperative to the success of the Minutewomen.

Dayton began its A-10 schedule this past Sunday, dropping both ends of a double-header in Saint Louis.

Senior Chelsea Grozenski struggled in the first tilt of the afternoon, allowing 10 hits and seven earned runs over five innings. Officials called the game due to run rule after SLU pushed two runs across in the bottom of the sixth inning, extending the lead to nine.

Grozenski dropped to 2-5 with the loss and her ERA rose to 3.06. As the staff's ace, she should start Friday's game against the Minutewomen.

She has pitched well this season but the Flyer offense has not given her much in the way of support. As a team, Dayton hits just .231 and averages just 2.77 runs per contest.

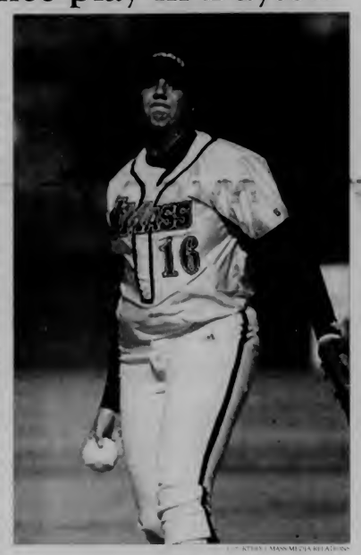
Regardless who takes the mound for the opening game of the series, the Flyers' offensive woes should continue.

UMass' sophomore ace Brandice Balschmiter boasts a 1.78 ERA in 20 appearances. Her 9-8 record is deceiving – the Minutewomen struggled to score runs consistently at the beginning of the season. She shut her opponents' out five times this season.

Balschmiter is coming off her second no-hitter of her career against Dartmouth on Wednesday, striking out 11 and yielding three bases on balls.

If UMass coach Elaine Sortino elects to run freshman Bailey Sanders out there, the Flyers luck won't have changed. After strug-

See SOFTBALL on page 7



COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Sophomore Brandice Balschmiter and the Minutewomen are in Dayton today for the team's first Atlantic 10 action of 2007.

Spring season kicks off for track and field

Men's and women's squads expecting big things in 2007

By Scott Feldman
Collegian Correspondent

Tomorrow the University of Massachusetts men's and women's track teams will host their first home meet in twelve years at the brand new multi-million dollar Track and Field Complex. Both the men's and women's track and field teams have a solid core of returning performers which should lead to a strong season.

One advantage the Minutemen will have on their side is experienced leadership. UMass coach Ken O'Brien is set to enter his 40th year coaching both the men's cross country teams and track and field teams.

O'Brien, a UMass alumnus who graduated in 1963, has been involved with track and field for nearly his entire life having coached in five different decades. In his previous 39 years of coaching, O'Brien has coached the Minutemen to 18 conference titles, four New England crowns, two IC4A titles and has coached seven All-America performers.

The UMass women's coach, Julie Lafreniere, is entering her 20th year as coach and has an impressive resume herself. She graduated from UMass in 1977 and became the Minutewomen's coach in 1986 for the cross country and track and field teams. During her tenure as coach, the Minutewomen have won seven Atlantic 10 Cross Country titles, two indoor track titles, and two outdoor track titles.

The indoor track season wrapped up three weeks ago and the Minutemen have been resting up since then, preparing for the outdoor track season. Tomorrow the men's team and the women's team will host a five way meet and attempt to kick off the season with a strong start.

On April 7, the team travels to the UConn Invitational for a road meet before returning home for a six-way meet on April 14. That will mark the last home meet for the next two weeks as the team will travel to Holy Cross, UConn, and Pennsylvania before wrapping up the invitationals with an eight-way meet at home.

The major events will take place in May, starting with the A-10 Championships in Charlotte, N.C. on May 5, the New England Championships in Hanover, N.J. on May 11 and ends with the IC4A

See TRACK on page 8

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Senior Zachary Prysiecki earned Second-Team All-Conference honors this past indoor season. He continues to be one of the top UMass runners.

UMass Athletic Wrap

Sponsored by

University Health Services
Health Education

UMass Athletics
Calendar of Events

This Weekend

Friday, March 30

WOMEN'S TENNIS
at Old Dominion
1:00 p.m.
Norfolk, Va.

BASEBALL
at Charlotte
2:00 p.m.
Charlotte, N.C.

SOFTBALL
at Dayton
3:00 p.m.
Dayton, Ohio

Saturday, March 31

MEN'S TRACK
UMass Five-Way Meet
11:30 a.m.
Amherst, Mass.

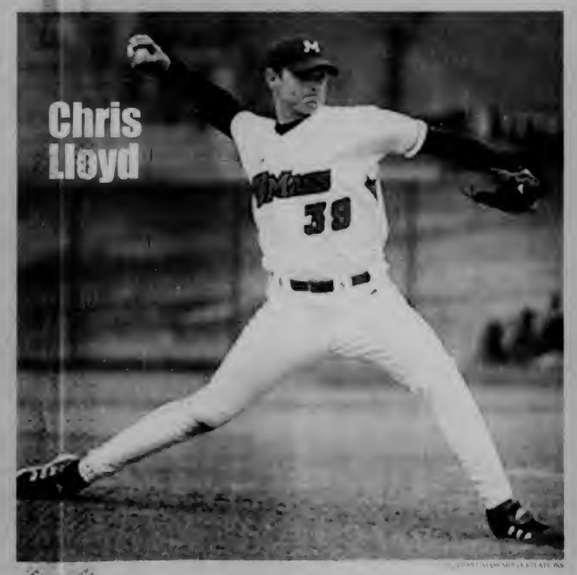
WOMEN'S TRACK
UMass Five-Way Meet
11:30 a.m.
Amherst, Mass.

MEN'S LACROSSE
vs Penn State
12:00 p.m.
Amherst, Mass.

BASEBALL
at Charlotte
2:00 p.m.
Charlotte, N.C.

WOMEN'S ROWING
Yankee Cup
TBA
Kingston, R.I.

WOMEN'S TENNIS
Richmond
TBA
Richmond, Va.



Sunday, April 1

WOMEN'S ROWING
Colgate, Holy Cross, Iona
TBA
Orchard Beach, N.Y.

BASEBALL
at Charlotte
12:00 p.m.
Charlotte, N.C.

Next Week

Tuesday, April 3

BASEBALL
at Holy Cross
3:00 p.m.
Worcester, Mass.

SOFTBALL
at Rhode Island
3:00 p.m.
Kingston, R.I.

SOFTBALL
at Rhode Island
5:00 p.m.
Kingston, R.I.

University Health Services
Health Education

Everything you ever wanted to know about sex ...

... and more!

The Not Ready for Bedtime Players are famous for lively, entertaining skits on topics like safer sex, relationships, partying and more.

Don't miss the show everyone's talking about!

MARCH 28	Patterson lounge
APRIL 4	Brown study lounge
APRIL 11	Emerson classroom
APRIL 18	Johnson basement lounge
APRIL 25	Brett basement
MAY 2	Field classroom
MAY 9	Greenough lounge
MAY 16	Pierpont lounge

SHOW TIME: 8 p.m. Free admission

For more information, call UHS' Health Education department, 577-5181

UMassAmherst

APRIL

PATSIES GET SOME KICKSIES PAGE 69

SUZY SWEATPANTS IS BACK, JACK PAGE *

THE MASSACHUSETTS

MORNING WOOD

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE ERECTION EST 1890

TSUNAMI : HI: 103 LO: 80 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM MONDAY, APRIL 2, 2007

Oops, he did it again!

By Bill Parcells
Buffalo Bill Staff

Last night the pop star's reps have confirmed that Britney Spears is pregnant with her third child. Following a nearly month stay in rehab for substance abuse, and a highly publicized divorce from her career challenged husband Kevin Federline, Spears is now anxiously awaiting the arrival of her third child. Spears's pregnancy became all the more shocking when it was revealed that the father of the singer's child is none other than Patriots quarterback Tom Brady, his third impregnation in the last three months.

Following the announcement of the pregnancy, both Spears's and Brady's reps released a joint statement from the couple, "Britney and Tom are overjoyed to announce that they are expecting their first child together due late this summer.

"You know, I figured that I've got three Super Bowl rings, I need three kids," said a cheerful Brady.

They would like to take this time thank all the well wishes they have received and ask that everyone please respect their privacy during this time".

The formal announcement was made late Sunday night after Spears and Brady were seen leaving Spears's doctor's office on Saturday afternoon. The odd pair came as a shock to most, including actress Bridget Moynahan who is also carrying the quarterback's baby, and his girlfriend, supermodel Gisele Bundchen. Brady's reps have never commented on his relationship with the pop star, but sources say the two have been close ever since their meeting at a nightclub in January.

The two had a brief fling, but Brady's reps claim that he has always had Spear's best intentions at heart, "Tom is very excited about the impending arrival of his child with Britney, and is fully committed to their child." As for their relationship, Spears and Brady will raise their child together but are not making any plans to marry. Brady is still involved with Gisele Bundchen, who sources say, is understanding and will be involved with both of the children's lives.

A source close to the couple has said that Tom and Gisele are looking for a home in L.A near Spears and Moynahan. Spears who has been dating ever since her separation from Federline late last year, is seeing a bar tender from Los Angeles while attending her Alcoholics Anonymous meetings once a week. As for Spears's two other children with Federline, the singer has hired another nanny to look after them so that she can complete her rehab and focus on her new pregnancy.

Lil' Dude screws up SGA elections, what a jerk

By "Kevy" O'Rourke
Collegian Staff Writer

Twenty ballot boxes which comprise sixty percent of votes cast last week have been lost or stolen, according to Student Government Association officials.

The announcement was made early Saturday, nearly 24 hours after the election results were supposed to be ratified. No decision has been finalized as to whether or not to reschedule the election.

"The SGA is doing everything in its power to resolve the issue," said ——, an SGA spokesman. "We've contacted the administration and campus police to see if they have any footage of the

Administration officials could not be reached for comment and campus police said it was policy to "not comment on ongoing investigations."

A group calling itself "Sons of Little Dude" (SOLD) has claimed responsibility for the crime, posting a video on YouTube Sunday afternoon. The video, which was apparently shot from inside the Mullins Center, shows three men donning maroon University of Massachusetts attire, head to toe. All appear to be wearing makeshift ski-masks made out of winter attire from the University Store.

"The SGA has not done its part to get more students into UMass sporting events," said the man standing at the center, who appears to be about 4'11. "We have a list of demands. In order for ballots to be returned, the current SGA administration must vote to change the mascot from Sam the Minuteman to Little Dude."

Behind the men, the ballot boxes line the seats below Section P and a faint rendition of the Village People's "YMCA" can be heard.

Earlier this year, Little Dude, an eight year-old whose real name is Andrew, became a cult figure at UMass Hockey games between periods during "Dance for Your Dinner." An entire group on Facebook has been created dedicated to Little Dude, where students post their photos and stories of the legend.

"Also," the man's high-pitched voice cracked, "Seniors at graduation must take their gowns and swing them around their heads in order to receive a diploma. Students who forget their UCards should be allowed to dance on the spot and receive a free meal."

Sam the Minuteman, current mascot for UMass, declined to speak during an interview for reaction to SOLD's demands. Instead, he pumped his left hand three times and held a sign that reads "GO UMASS!"

An SGA official, who refused to comment on the record, said the governing body is "considering talking to SOLD about meeting some of the demands, particularly the mascot changes."

——, the current spokesman, refused to comment on any current negotiations between SOLD and the SGA.

"Whatever rumors may have been started about the SGA and SOLD, is just that, speculation. We'll comment at a later date."

Two out of three UMass students are booze hounds

By Dr. Jack Daniels
Alcohol Prevention Guy

A recent survey conducted by University of Massachusetts officials found that two out of three UMass students have fourteen or more drinks when they party, and then severely regret it the next morning, but decide to go out the following night anyways and drink themselves into a drunken stupor again by drinking even more than they had the night before.

The survey, which administrators are saying is a "huge improvement" from last year's survey is part of a multi-million dollar advertising campaign to push the university up the Princeton Review's annual "Party School" rankings.

The advertisement promoting the survey will be placed at various locations around campus. According to administrators, the advertisement will most likely be placed on the sides of buses, buildings and on the toilet seats of various bars in Amherst Center.

"One place we will not be printing this advertisement is in The Daily Collegian," said one administrator who asked to remain anonymous. "We're not printing it in the Collegian, because we found out in another survey that one out of two UMass students think the Collegian should go to hell!"

The survey comes months after the most recent Princeton Review rankings, which had UMass as the No. 7 party school in the nation. Students across campus agree this recent survey paints an accurate picture of what is sometimes known as "ZooMass."

"I desinitely drinks more than 14 drins wheen I party," slurred Art Vandelay, a sophomore alcoholic at UMass. Vandelay went on to say he recently went to a "killer party on Trat Row," before realizing that the houses there had been demolished months ago and nobody else was even near him when the supposed party occurred.

According to the people who conducted the survey, 200 students were randomly asked a serious of questions while puking in a Southwest bathroom stall.

"We made sure to only survey students who were clearly incoherent and tripping over themselves," said one survey official, who admitted he was drunk during the interview.

When asked if the survey would put the university in a negative light, one university official simply responded, "How worse could it get?"

Giant Squid

Deal with it.

Soy sauce: Good to eat, good on your feet

University Health Services has found itself a bit overwhelmed in recent weeks, and with good reason.

Most UMass students are familiar with the sudden, widespread and mysterious illness plaguing their friends and floormates, and a recent study has attributed the epidemic to the use of an agricultural by-product used on campus.

The by-product, recognizable to most students as the omnipresent "Soy Sauce" stepped-over on stairways and sidewalks across campus, is actually ICE B'GONE, and agricultural by-product and chemical de-icer. ICE B'GONE is a liquid de-icing agent made from a blend of magnesium chloride combined with an agricultural by-product similar to molasses. The product has long been preferred to road salt and other de-icing agents by the University due to its ecologically-friendly properties.

However, recent studies initiated by the Food and Drug Administration suggest that the viscous goo, which is similar in smell and taste to ordinary soy sauce, might be causing students across campus to become suddenly and irreparably ill.

"The rice was bland, so bland," said Lee Irschwald, junior and Cryptozoology major, when reached for comment. Irschwald apparently ingested significant amounts of the agricultural by-product and de-icer as a topping for rice he had smuggled out of the Franklin Dining Commons as a late-night snack. Irschwald shortly thereafter fell ill.

"Most days he just lies in his bed moaning," said his roommate Dwayne Hoover, "he doesn't seem to be getting any better and our room constantly smells like an old dirty Chinese restaurant."

Health Services reacted quickly to the epidemic, which has been compared by some to the Bubonic Plague and by others to the nation-wide case of "the Mondays" that followed the 1999 release of the film "Office Space." But the outbreak soon became too heavy a burden for the department to handle, and makeshift sick-wards were made out of the top floors of the W.E.B DuBois library, which had long been boarded off and used as alternate holding-cells for political prisoners of the overburdened Guantanamo Bay facilities.

Administration officials are finding themselves sick with regret, as they have taken heat for the outbreak in light of a similar mix-up last year. In 2006, an order was sent out that mistakenly requested thousands of pounds of Ice-9 instead of the desired ICE B'GONE.

Ice-9, made famous by Kurt Vonnegut's 1963 novel Cat's Cradle, is a mysterious chemical compound that remains solid at room temperature, but when introduced to ordinary water causes the water to "lock-up," solidifying it indefinitely, and causing irreversible ecological damage.

The FDA study, released yesterday afternoon, was completed just weeks after a monumental snowstorm hit Massachusetts and much of the Northeast, calling for an increase in use of the ICE B'GONE de-icer. Shortly thereafter, administration officials began noticing an increase in student absences, record numbers of visits to the Health Services emergency ward and a shortage of spring rolls at all five of the University's dining halls.

The Massachusetts Department of Public Health and the FDA were quickly notified and invited to study to the matter so that it could be taken care of before it escalated.

Dr. Michael Moriarty, a senior FDA official spearheading the study here at the University had some insight on the matter. "What we have found," said Moriarty, "is that many students, finding the condiment selection at the various Dining Halls across campus to be sub-par, were turning to this ICE B'GONE, which they believed to be soy sauce."

But it was in fact not soy sauce, and further research into the matter has revealed some unusual things about the mysterious goo found on University stairs each winter. Originally called NAZI B'GONE, it was developed as an affordable and environmentally safe version of napalm to be used at the height of WWII. The product was also listed among the various chemical and biological weapons recently executed Iraqi despot Saddam Hussein allegedly used against the Kurds in the 1980's.

How this highly poisonous (yet environmentally friendly) substance came to be used as a de-icer on campus remains a mystery, and when reached for comment a spokesperson for the manufacturers of ICE B'GONE had little to say other than "Well it melted all the ice, didn't it?"

The FDA study states that if ICE B'GONE is ingested, the victim may experience abdominal pain, nausea and an intense desire to consume fortune cookies. It also goes on to suggest that if eaten in excess, the de-icer could cause an individual to transform into the walking dead, with little to no cognitive ability and an insatiable hunger for human flesh. These claims, however, have yet to be substantiated.

PATSIES GET SOME KICKSIES PAGE 69

SUZY SWEATPANTS IS BACK, JACK PAGE ***

THE MASSACHUSETTS

MORNING WOOD

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE ERECTION EST 1890

TSUNAMI : HI: 103 LO: 80 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM MONDAY, APRIL 2, 2007

Oops, he did it again!

BY BILL PARCELLS
BUFFALO BILL STAFF

Last night the pop star's reps have confirmed that Britney Spears is pregnant with her third child. Following a nearly month stay in rehab for substance abuse, and a highly publicized divorce from her career challenged husband Kevin Federline, Spears is now anxiously awaiting the arrival of her third child. Spears's pregnancy became all the more shocking when it was revealed that the father of the singer's child is none other than Patriots quarterback Tom Brady, his third impregnation in the last three months.

Following the announcement of the pregnancy, both Spears's and Brady's reps released a joint statement from the couple, "Britney and Tom are overjoyed to announce that they are expecting their first child together due late this summer.

"You know, I figured that I've got three Super Bowl rings, I need three kids," said a cheerful Brady.

They would like to take this time thank all the well wishes they have received and ask that everyone please respect their privacy during this time".

The formal announcement was made late Sunday night after Spears and Brady were seen leaving Spears's doctor's office on Saturday afternoon. The odd pair came as a shock to most, including actress Bridget Moynahan who is also carrying the quarterback's baby, and his girlfriend, supermodel Gisele Bundchen. Brady's reps have never commented on his relationship with the pop star, but sources say the two have been close ever since their meeting at a nightclub in January.

The two had a brief fling, but Brady's reps claim that he has always had Spear's best intentions at heart, "Tom is very excited about the impending arrival of his child with Britney, and is fully committed to their child." As for their relationship, Spears and Brady will raise their child together but are not making any plans to marry. Brady is still involved with Gisele Bundchen, who sources say, is understanding and will be involved with both of the children's lives.

A source close to the couple has said that Tom and Gisele are looking for a home in LA near Spears and Moynahan. Spears who has been dating ever since her separation from Federline late last year, is seeing a bar tender from Los Angeles while attending her Alcoholics Anonymous meetings once a week. As for Spears's two other children with Federline, the singer has hired another nanny to look after them so that she can complete her rehab and focus on her new pregnancy.

Lil' Dude screws up SGA elections, what a jerk

BY "KEVY" O'ROURKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF WRITER

Twenty ballot boxes which comprise sixty percent of votes cast last week have been lost or stolen, according to Student Government Association officials.

The announcement was made early Saturday, nearly 24 hours after the election results were supposed to be ratified. No decision has been finalized as to whether or not to reschedule the election.

"The SGA is doing everything in its power to resolve the issue," said _____, an SGA spokesman. "We've contacted the administration and campus police to see if they have any footage of the

Administration officials could not be reached for comment and campus police said it was policy to "not comment on ongoing investigations."

A group calling itself "Sons of Little Dude" (SOLD) has claimed responsibility for the crime, posting a video on YouTube Sunday afternoon. The video, which was apparently shot from inside the Mullins Center, shows three men donning maroon University of Massachusetts attire, head to toe. All appear to be wearing makeshift ski-masks made out of winter attire from the University Store.

"The SGA has not done its part to get more students into UMass sporting events," said the man standing at the center, who appears to be about 4'11. "We have a list of demands. In order for ballots to be returned, the current SGA administration must vote to change the mascot from Sam the Minuteman to Little Dude."

Behind the men, the ballot boxes line the seats below Section P and a faint rendition of the Village People's "YMCA" can be heard.

Earlier this year, Little Dude, an eight year-old whose real name is Andrew, became a cult figure at UMass Hockey games between periods during "Dance for Your Dinner." An entire group on Facebook has been created dedicated to Little Dude, where students post their photos and stories of the legend.

"Also," the man's high-pitched voice cracked, "Seniors at graduation must take their gowns and swing them around their heads in order to receive a diploma. Students who forget their UCards should be allowed to dance on the spot and receive a free meal."

Sam the Minuteman, current mascot for UMass, declined to speak during an interview for reaction to SOLD's demands. Instead, he pumped his left hand three times and held a sign that reads "GO UMASS!"

An SGA official, who refused to comment on the record, said the governing body is "considering talking to SOLD about meeting some of the demands, particularly the mascot changes."

_____, the current spokesman, refused to comment on any current negotiations between SOLD and the SGA.

"Whatever rumors may have been started about the SGA and SOLD, is just that, speculation. We'll comment at a later date."

Two out of three UMass students are booze hounds

By Dr. Jack Daniels
ALCOHOL PREVENTION GUY

A recent survey conducted by University of Massachusetts officials found that two out of three UMass students have fourteen or more drinks when they party, and then severely regret it the next morning, but decide to go out the following night anyways and drink themselves into a drunken stupor again by drinking even more than they had the night before.

The survey, which administrators are saying is a "huge improvement" from last year's survey is part of a multi-million dollar advertising campaign to push the university up the Princeton Review's annual "Party School" rankings.

The advertisement promoting the survey will be placed at various locations around campus. According to administrators, the advertisement will most likely be placed on the sides of buses, buildings and on the toilet seats of various bars in Amherst Center.

"One place we will not be printing this advertisement is in The Daily Collegian," said one administrator who asked to remain anonymous. "We're not printing it in the Collegian, because we found out in another survey that one out of two UMass students think the Collegian should go to hell!"

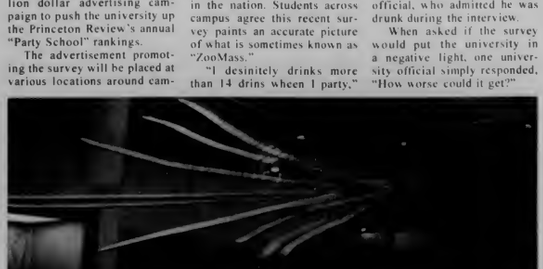
The survey comes months after the most recent Princeton Review rankings, which had UMass as the No. 7 party school in the nation. Students across campus agree this recent survey paints an accurate picture of what is sometimes known as "ZooMass."

"I desinitely drinks more than 14 drins wheen I party," slurred Art Vandelay, a sophomore alcoholic at UMass. Vandelay went on to say he recently went to a "killer party on Frat Row," before realizing that the houses there had been demolished months ago and nobody else was even near him when the supposed party occurred.

According to the people who conducted the survey, 200 students were randomly asked a serious of questions while puking in a Southwest bathroom stall.

"We made sure to only survey students who were clearly incoherent and tripping over themselves," said one survey official, who admitted he was drunk during the interview.

When asked if the survey would put the university in a negative light, one university official simply responded, "How worse could it get?"



Giant Squid

Deal with it.

Soy sauce: Good to eat, good on your feet

University Health Services has found itself a bit overwhelmed in recent weeks, and with good reason.

Most UMass students are familiar with the sudden, widespread and mysterious illness plaguing their friends and floormates, and a recent study has attributed the epidemic to the use of an agricultural byproduct used on campus.

The byproduct, recognizable to most students as the omnipresent "Soy Sauce" stepped-over on stairways and sidewalks across campus, is actually ICE B'GONE, and agricultural bi-product and chemical de-icer. ICE B'GONE is a liquid de-icing agent made from a blend of magnesium chloride combined with an agricultural by-product similar to molasses. The product has long been preferred to road salt and other de-icing agents by the University due to its ecologically-friendly properties.

However, recent studies initiated by the Food and Drug Administration suggest that the viscous goo, which is similar in smell and taste to ordinary soy sauce, might be causing students across campus to become suddenly and irreparably ill.

"The rice was bland, so bland," said Lee Irschwald, junior and Cryptozoology major, when reached for comment. Irschwald apparently ingested significant amounts of the agricultural byproduct and de-icer as a topping for rice he had smuggled out of the Franklin Dining Commons as a late-night snack. Irschwald shortly thereafter fell ill.

"Most days he just lies in his bed moaning," said his roommate Dwayne Hoover, "he doesn't seem to be getting any better and our room constantly smells like an old dirty Chinese restaurant."

Health Services reacted quickly to the epidemic, which has been compared by some to the Bubonic Plague and by others to the nation-wide case of "the Mondays" that followed the 1999 release of the film "Office Space." But the outbreak soon became too heavy a burden for the department to handle, and makeshift sick-wards were made out of the top floors of the W.E.B. DuBois library, which had long been boarded off and used as alternate holding-cells for political prisoners of the overburdened Guantanamo Bay facilities.

Administration officials are finding themselves sick with regret, as they have taken heat for the outbreak in light of a similar mix-up last year. In 2006, an order was sent out that mistakenly requested thousands of pounds of Ice-9 instead of the desired ICE-B'GONE.

Ice-9, made famous by Kurt Vonnegut's 1963 novel Cat's Cradle, is a mysterious chemical compound that remains solid at room temperature, but when introduced to ordinary water causes the water to "lock-up," solidifying it indefintely, and causing irreversible ecological damage.

The FDA study, released yesterday afternoon, was completed just weeks after a monumental snowstorm hit Massachusetts and much of the Northeast, calling for an increase in use of the ICE B'GONE de-icer. Shortly thereafter, administration officials began noticing an increase in student absences, record numbers of visits to the Health Services emergency ward and a shortage of spring rolls at all five of the University's dining halls.

The Massachusetts Department of Public Health and the FDA were quickly notified and invited to study to the matter so that it could be taken care of before it escalated.

Dr. Michael Moriarty, a senior FDA official spearheading the study here at the University, had some insight on the matter. "What we have found," said Moriarty, "is that many students, finding the condiment selection at the various Dining Halls across campus to be sub-par, were turning to this ICE B'GONE, which they believed to be soy sauce."

But it was in fact not soy sauce, and further research into the matter has revealed some unusual things about the mysterious goo found on University stairs each winter. Originally called NAZI B'GONE, it was developed as an affordable and environmentally safe version of napalm to be used at the height of WWII. The product was also listed among the various chemical and biological weapons recently executed Iraqi despot Saddam Hussein allegedly used against the Kurds in the 1980's.

How this highly poisonous (yet environmentally friendly) substance came to be used as a de-icer on campus remains a mystery, and when reached for comment a spokesperson for the manufacturers of ICE B'GONE had little to say other than "Well it melted all the ice, didn't it?"

The FDA study states that if ICE B'GONE is ingested, the victim may experience abdominal pain, nausea and an intense desire to consume fortune cookies. It also goes on to suggest that if eaten in excess, the de-icer could cause an individual to transform into the walking dead, with little to no cognitive ability and an insatiable hunger for human flesh. These claims, however, have yet to be substantiated.

THE MASSACHUSETTS MORNING WOOD

RANTS & RAVES

GUESS WHAT DAY IT IS, IDIOT.

"I don't agree with anything you say. In fact, I hate you. Get off my porch." Voltaire

INCOMPETENCE@BRENDANHALLSUCKS.COM

Deval is losing it!

PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CAMBRIDGE, MASS. – Deval Patrick will be throwin' some D's on it.

Sources close to Deval confirmed late last night that the newly-elected Massachusetts governor will be using more taxpayer money for his own personal expenses, this time to trick out his wife's already sweet taxpayer-paid ride.

BC Heights Sucks

Earlier this year, Deval used a bunch of taxpayers' money to buy a dope whip for his wife. He bought her a Cadillac Escalade, which in case you've been living under a rock for the last decade is now the penultimate statement of hipness. If you ain't messin' with an Escalade, then boy, you ain't shit.

But last night, while he was drinking a wicked lot of booze, he decided the rims on the car sucked. So he turned to an adviser and said, "ummmm, friggin' get more money from the taxpayers – NOW. I gotta put some spinners on my old lady's ride."

As of this morning, Lady Deval's vehicle was pimped to the max. Not only did it have platinum spinners, but it also featured nine 15-inch subwoofers, a projector movie screen, a hot tub, popcorn, an ant farm on the dashboard, and a butler that you can easily store in the cargo space. It also had some dubs, bapes, mo-mo's and fo-fo's.

"The shit cost like somewhere in the vicinity of $900,000, but not like anybody cares. I mean, not like anybody in the state is living below the poverty line or anything. Mommy will just pay for it."

This pimping out-ness also brings Deval and the good ol' boys a few steps closer to the goal of having every town in America operate like Newton, Mass. Bunch of rich bastards.

Representatives from Deval's office late last night released the following statement, on behalf of the governor:

"Deval sellin' dat, taxpayers wanna jack, sittin' tight no slack just bought a Cadillac for my wife using hard-earned taxpayers' money…throw some D's on it…Just bought a Cadillac for my wife using hard-earned taxpayers' money that could be going to a whole lot more productive stuff, but I've got to take care of myself first and foremost because I've got presidential aspirations, and I want to look really cool in front of my contemporaries…throw some D's on it.

"Also, let me remind you for the 800th time I used to live in poverty in the streets of Chicago, and worked my way to the top. I went to Milton Academy. I also went to Harvard. I was also a public defender. My opponent in the race for the Democratic nomination last year was Tom Reilly, who is such a tool that he proposed kids be required to sit in booster seats in the car until they're eight. He also proposed we treat cars like HMOs. You'd have to be straight up brain-dead to lose to somebody like that.

"But hey, in the jist of it all, I gotta take care of my boys first and foremost, because they're cool and stuff."

The throwing of D's on his wife's sweet ride was just one of the many crazy things that has happened in the state over the last week. As of March 31, any junior operator in the state of Massachusetts that is pulled over for speeding gets their license revoked for 90 days automatically, must pay a $500 reinstatement fee and go to "road rage" classes. In essence, if you pull a 42 in a 35 and some asshole statie writes you a ticket, you got to go to counseling.

In case you're keeping score at home, that's one for "retarded."

Asked how he could allow something so ridiculously inane to pass into law, Deval replied via telephone, "Sorry man, not now, I'm hung over…wow, this Wild Kentucky shit is awesome dude."

Sources from Deval's office say that he's been boozing his ass off ever since he's been elected. When the stupid "road rage" law proposition was put on Deval's desk by state trooper Oinky McPig, Deval took one look at the thing, said "Sure, whatever" and went back to pounding moonshine to his face.

"Oh dude, he was hammered that night," said H. Cheddar McRichie-Rich, a blatant good ol' boy and one of Deval's close friends from his days at Milton Academy. "The dude was running around his mansion screaming a bunch of random stuff, and then he punted his dog out of a second-story window. Then we wrote on him while he was passed out."

McRichie-Rich then reported that Deval made roughly 25 drunk dials to all sorts of corporate executives he used to kick it with.

"He was saying a bunch of bullshit about, 'Dude, I can make it happen, together we can'," McRichie-Rich claims. "Do I think he's a great governor? Well, Kerry Healey is a huge bitch, so did we really have any choice?"

Asked what crazy stuff he'll come up with next, D-Vol's eyes lit up like a six-year-old on Christmas. I mean, if he'll criminalize 17-year-olds for learning the rules of the road, what's next? Killing babies for crying? Blowing up Interstate 93 for being too crowded in the morning? I mean, God, such a smart guy that Deval is.

Anyways.

Deval is proposing that tolls on the Mass Pike increase by 400 percent, "because I need new shingles on my roof", all public schools be shut down permanently "because those damn kids are so rotten", local UMass SGA candidate and village moron Eoin Moore be appointed Lieutenant Governor, and anyone who is convicted of driving under the influence of alcohol be punished by death.

"Only then will those freagging maggots learn," Deval said. "I'm tellin' ya man, every morning I wake up, there's always some stupid asshole drinking whiskey and speeding in one of those stupid-ass Honda Civics. Or maybe they're just walking to the end of the driveway to get their paper, sipping coffee, but either way they're going way too damn fast."

He also proposed eliminating the University of Massachusetts system all together, saying "those stupid little shits drink and cuss too much."

BC Heights is the worst paper ever.

Reflections on The Hills

Susie Sweatpants

Like any normal individual between the ages of eight and 30, I am an avid MTV viewer. Between the life lessons learned on The Real World (note to self: regular liquid soap is not a replacement for dishwasher detergent) and the deep insight into the hardships of being a grossly wealthy teen on My Super Sweet Sixteen (so what if she snuck off to Berkley for the weekend to max out a few credit cards, she still deserves a new car!), it's hard to pick just one show as my favorite.

That being said, The Hills definitely makes the top five best programs on MTV, and possibly of any other channel, too. There is simply no other show that better demonstrates how rich kids have the same problems as the rest of us. You could even argue they have it tougher than the typical financially-unstable college student, because they're on TV, and so everyone knows they're business and is constantly judging them.

But there is one aspect of The Hills that does warrant some judging. I am, of course, talking about the Heidi-Spencer paradox. Let me start off by expressing how upset I was when Heidi broke up with her last boyfriend, from the previous season, whose name I cannot recall. He was way hotter than current-boyfriend Spencer, who resembles a statue of Caesar and looks like he could easily pull off one of those headbands made of leaves. He also bought Heidi a puppy for Christmas, which is possibly the greatest gift ever given in all of MTV history, including all those cars on My Super Sweet Sixteen. So I'd have to say Heidi's first mistake was breaking up with that guy (although he was friends with Jason, who, lets face it, wasn't the greatest catch).

Actually, speaking of Jason, Spencer and him would probably get along, given their shared fondness for shady relationships on the side and all-out cheating when left unsupervised for any length of time. But while Jason's infidelity seemed to result most commonly after binge drinking (for example, at the charity fashion show on Laguna Beach to help landslide victims, which apparently warranted more than a few drinks to sit through), Spencer is more calculating. It seems that Spencer has so much money that simply doesn't have time for a job, and instead spends his time either dreaming up ways to spend more money, or chasing after other girls when Heidi isn't around to regulate.

This can most clearly be seen in his something of Audrina, who has an IQ of approximately 62 and is definitely a few dozen cards short of a full deck. But for all the time Spencer appears to have at his disposal, he seemed to lack the ability to plan two separate dates for Heidi and Audrina. After taking Heidi out for dinner at a Mexican restaurant that he claimed to be one of his favorite places, a cuisine hidden treasure he had uncovered in L.A., which conveniently had valet parking, he proceeded to take Audrina to the exact same place the very next day. Needless to say, Audrina got Heidi's sloppy seconds, and, being Audrina, had no idea what Spencer was doing and did not realize for quite some time that perhaps hanging out with your friend's boyfriend wasn't the hottest idea.

Among this transgression, Spencer routinely flirts with other girls, most notably a group of blonde Playboy bunnies whom he and his friends invited to their place when Heidi was out of town. And for some reason, Heidi's best friend and roommate Lauren "LC" Conrad (who is actually the star of the show) just can't seem to find the good in Spencer. So, being the good friend she is, Lauren has repeatedly tried to convince Heidi that maybe possibly she should break up with Spencer, but the point seems to be lost on Heidi. So now Spencer hates Lauren and is pretty much doing whatever he can to sabotage her friendship with Heidi, which results in a lot of scenes of Lauren looking sad and lonely, cutting to Heidi and Spencer gallivanting around town arm in arm.

My point is, Heidi should break up with Spencer, who is not nearly as cool as he has dillusioned himself into believing he is. Her best bet is to find that guy that gave her the puppy, but I would recommend starting the search for him in a psych ward, as it appeared he was heading that way after the breakup. Another viable candidate would be Mr. Boston from VH1's I Love New York, who picks his nose a lot but is otherwise a nice guy. She could also probably convince MTV to give her her own dating show, because she is quickly becoming the star of The Hills anyway, and will remain so until Lauren finds and equally if not more offensive boyfriend to drool over than Spencer.

Susie Sweatpants contributes every April Fools. In the meantime, you can catch her in Southwest somewhere, being drunk and/or watching The Hills.

UMass: 28 days later...

According to police reports and eyewitness statements, on the evening of December 15th, 2006, thousands of students poured forth from their residence halls in Southwest to take part in "Celebratory Riots," after watching the UMass Minutemen lose the Div. I-AA football championship game to the Appalachian State Mountaineers.

This is exactly what the administration would have you believe. The truth, however, is far more shocking than any "riots" could ever possibly be. It is my opinion, through intensive research and theorizing, that these "riots" were actually a small scale zombie outbreak that the UMass faculty and the state police (puppeted by the F.B.I.) is doing everything in their power to cover up.

These claims may seem rather unsubstantiated, but hear me out. The measures currently being taken to find those responsible for these so-called "riots" are tenfold those put into action following the Red Sox riots of October, 2004. The list of the prosecuted grows exponentially each day as many students, claiming innocence, are called into judicial meetings and punished according to their supposed involvement in the "riots". The administration is attempting to suppress any unofficial chatter about the "riots", especially coverage by nationally syndicated press. Videos showing scenes of the "riots" are consistently being removed from YouTube and College Humor. There is clear evidence that information is being concealed about these "riots".

Have you actually spoken to anyone who took part in the "riots"? Anyone who tells you that they were there is likely lying, trying to make themselves sound hip and fulfill what they have been told is what a UMass student should be like. The press constantly refers to the "ZooMass" party mentality, but we all know that it is baloney. Almost nothing exciting ever happens on campus, especially not in Southwest, thanks in no small part to the SGA. It is highly unlikely that the well-educated, and incredibly socially responsible, residents of the Southwest residential area would get intoxicated, senselessly smash university property, and nearly kill the Chief of Police. I think they have just a tad more class than that.

If you walked down in Southwest the day following the alleged "riots," the first thing that would come to mind upon witnessing that carnage would be "28 Days Later," not "Gangs of New York" (although Cameron Diaz's performance leaves you with a similar, gut wrenching, feeling). There was none of the happy refuse one would expect to find the day after a riot, like vomit, rubber bullets and panties. No. All that could be seen for hundreds of yards was shattered glass, torn-up dirt, dried blood, and papers wafting through the breeze, the very image of a post-apocalyptic world. There were clear signs of human struggle with something so horrifically inhuman, monstrous and incomprehensible as to be nearly unspeakable.

Anyone who knows the truth about this horrible event has likely been dispatched. Sure, the administration says they have been "removed from housing" or "expelled," but I am sure that their current place of residence is somewhere deep within the New Dirt all around campus. While I can understand the administrations desire to keep a low profile about the zombie uprising in order to retain an untarnished reputation, I think it is time they took some responsibility and came clean about the situation. The only way that we can prevent something so horrible from happening again is by openly discussing it and preparing for it. My suggestion would be to distribute 9mm pistols during summer orientation and run a handgun training seminar during First Week. In this way, we can hold each and every student accountable if something like this happens again. I am sure that, given the chance, they will be willing to take the responsibility upon themselves.

Leon Kennedy is a Resident Badass. He cannot be reached, as he is currently hiding in his underground bunker at an undisclosed location.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

THE ULTIMATE DEBATE

I have been frustrated with the Collegian as of late to report on the topics that truly matter. For example, there's plenty of content about the War on Iraq, but not nearly enough discussion about what's better: chunky or creamy Peanut butter.

But let's get down to what really matters, the big question floating around today: whether Batman is a superhero or a crime-fighter. See many would automatically jump to the conclusion that because he has no super-powers, that he cannot be a superhero. Yet by citing this as justification of his crime-fighter status, they easily forget that he was part of the Super Friends, and furthermore the Justice League, which was comprised of many *Super*heros from Superman to the Green Lantern.

At the same time, Batman's main purpose is to cleanse Gotham of crimelords, not save the world. He relies on training, wit, and gadgetry to do these things – though it is on a super-level, If you break the idea of Batman down to a word, he's nothing more than a vigilante.

See, it's a tough question, it probably could make a good point-counter-point.

Forget about what's happening oversees, or in our backyard, and start thinking about the questions that have plagued scholars for decades.

Dennis Nedry
Computer Progremmer

IT KEEPS ON GIVING

I just wanted to write in to say how much I appreciate the gift that is the Daily Collegian. Everyday I can wake up, get out of bed, drag a comb across my head – then grab the newest edition of the Daily Collegian as I walk out the door toward my first class.

In a world of liberal bias and right-wing retribution, it's great to see a newspaper that gets at the important topics. Any story about animals is always a winner, along with any new dirt that you can dig up on Parking Services (did you catch the sweet and original pun in there?). Also, might I say the Editorial Section never ceases to provide the most thought-provoking opinions – I mean, DC food really does suck sometimes!

Anyway, I hope that this tiny letter is enough to show my enormous love of what you all do. Though I'm sure it won't be in the paper due to the fact that you have such better content, I hope there is some other way to show how important this newspaper really is.

Stacy Chapwin
UMass Student

NOTHING PERTINENT HERE

This is in response to an article published earlier last week. Well actually, it's not so much in response to the content of the article, but rather the person who wrote it. Instead of refuting what they said, I am instead deciding to attack their character.

Sure I've never met them, and sure I'm overreacting, but I am going to go ahead and call them a moron, a fool, a complete idiot. I am going to personally address them many times in the response, to ensure its icy and venomous tone. Also, you better print these inflammatory remarks, because if you don't, then that's just plain old censorship.

Furthermore, I would also like to conclude by promoting this organization I am a part of. I am going to spend the last paragraph (or more) talking about all the great things that we do, and then give you the date of a meeting we're having and some important contact information. You may be asking yourself If this is simply an attempt at a free advertisement, and the answer is – you know it!

Oh what's that you say? The Daily Collegian has an advertising department? No, I am not going to contact them, because if you don't print that our offices are located in the Student Union, then that's censorship.

Andrew Wilton
Insert Acronym Here

THE COPS ARE BUZZKILLERS

I just wanted to write in to express my frustration and rage about the UMass Police Department. It is a topic not often discussed in the paper, and one that needs to be addressed on a major level.

First and foremost, they are freakin' everywhere. It seems like every time I take a turn after not coming to a complete stop on Massachusetts Ave they are flashing the blue lights. You would think they would learn that people can't learn.

Also, I can't even tell you the number of my friends who have been arrested by the 5-0. The thing is, it's not even for anything major. Just last week my 21-year-old friend Murph was innocently walking around with a beer in his hand, and soon found that appendage cuffed behind his back. He's of age! That's totally ridiculous… Is there even a law against that?

Anyway, cover this stuff. Get some opinions out there about what the cops are doing, because we're not hearing enough about how the administration is putting an increased effort to curb the "ZooMass" image by tightening security in the dorms and initiating police patrols of the halls thereby alienating the student population, lowering future alumni support and creating the image of a police state.

Sully Russo
Pissed Off

Lauren/ "LC" and Heidi, most likely pretending to like each other, as Spencer has all but ruined their friendship.

MINUTEMEN WIN OT THRILLER PAGE 10

NO LOVE FOR ROCK'S 'WIFE' PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

SHOWERS : HI: 53 LO: 37 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM MONDAY, APRIL 2, 2007

Menchu speaks at Amherst

Nobel Prize winner explains root of racism

BY WES RAHN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Rigoberta Menchú Tum, Guatemalan human rights activist and winner of the 1992 Nobel Peace Prize, spoke Thursday night to a packed audience at Amherst College, focusing on the importance of building a pluralistic society accepting of all people and of the nature of racism and discrimination.

In February 2007, Menchú formed a political party in Guatemala representing the indigenous population and is a presidential candidate in the 2007 general election. The speech on Thursday night had little to do with politics. One exception was when she mentioned that if elected president of Guatemala, she would strive to enforce the rights of immigrants here in the United States.

Menchú opened her speech, titled "Healing communities torn by racism and violence," saying that humans must "connect with their ancestors and to thank them for all they have given and that even though they're dead, they wish to be remembered."

She then shifted to speaking about the young in Guatemala where 50 percent of the population is between 26 and 35 years old.

According to Menchú eighty-percent of people there also live in what was translated as an "informal economy," where the young live by selling chewing gum on the street and endure hardship just to survive.

"Our youth would like a better world," said Menchú. "Each day

See MENCHU on page 3

The 1992 Nobel Peace Prize and Guatemalan human rights activist Rigoberta Menchú Tum spoke at Amherst College Friday.

UMass cracking down on rowdy students

BY HOLLY SEABURY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Officials at the University of Massachusetts are cracking down on students who disobey the school's policies. Whether those broken rules apply to students who participated in the Dec. 15 riot on campus, or to students who have been caught using illegal music downloading services, there is a price to pay – and it isn't cheap.

According to JoAnne Vanin, Dean of Students at UMass, the level of disciplinary action taken against a student depends on several things.

"Students who are subject to disciplinary action may have different outcomes," said Vanin. "It depends on the level of involvement, behavior and any previous judicial record."

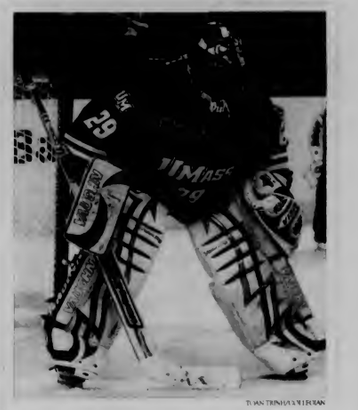
According to the Code of Student Conduct, rioting includes "using violence or threatening violence to others, damaging or destroying property, stealing or looting, setting fires, throwing bottles or other projectiles, impeding or impairing emergency personnel services or equipment, obstructing traffic, refusing to leave when asked by an authorized person, or otherwise engaging in any action that might lead to intentionally or recklessly harming or endangering the physical safety or property of another."

COURTESY UMASS PIX

JoAnne Vanin, Dean of Students at UMass.

Students who were caught participating in the Dec. 15 riot were first placed on probation and then preceded to a judicial process in which the student had the opportunity to give his or her side of the story. The student was then either expelled, suspended, removed from housing or received a deferred suspension, a probation in which the reprimanded student has "one more strike" before an

See STUDENTS on page 3



TIAN TRINH/ASSISTANT

Former UMass goaltender Jon Quick announced he's leaving the team after signing a entry-level deal with the NHL's Los Angeles Kings.

UMass President Jack M. Wilson expressed his support for stem cell research on Friday in response to the possible new Massachusetts state restrictions.

Stem cell possibilities

Amniotic fluid-derived stem cells, a research breakthrough, could rival embryonic stem cells without the controversy.

	Pros	Cons
Embryonic stem cells
From embryo three to five days after fertilization when it's a hollow ball of cells called a blastocyst	Can become any cell type in the body	Embryo destruction causes ethical concerns; limits federal funding
Amniotic stem cells
From fluid surrounding a developing embryo; researchers are working to determine the full range of cells they could become	Easily obtained through amniocentesis	Adaptations of the cells are not known, but promising
Cord blood stem cells
Saved from umbilical cord at childbirth; similar to cells found in adult bone marrow	Obtained without harm	Are not adaptable for treating anything but blood diseases
Adult stem cells
Obtained from bone marrow, other cell-producing tissues, research continuing to see if they can be as versatile as embryonic stem cells	Federal research funding not restricted	Can only produce the same type of cell from which they came

Source: U.S. National Institutes of Health, International Society for Stem Cell Research, Wake Forest University
Graphic: Angela Smith

© 2007 MCT

New research stemming Mass. debate

UMass may create stem cell research institute

BY VINCENT CAPONE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

University of Massachusetts President Jack M. Wilson expressed his support on Friday in response to Governor Patrick's recent proposal to reverse Massachusetts state restrictions on stem cell research. Wilson, who also serves as Vice Chairman of the Board of the Massachusetts Life Sciences Center, stressed the importance of stem cell research in maintaining Massachusetts' leadership in the life sciences industry.

Stem cell research is believed to be the gateway to providing the key to discovering cures for some of the world's untreatable diseases. Wilson supports the Governor's proposal and believes expanding statewide research holds many economic opportunities for Massachusetts and the state cannot afford to remain idle.

"As the president of the University of Massachusetts, which does significant life sciences research and also collaborates with life science industry groups, I am very pleased that Governor Patrick plans to reverse the restrictions on stem cell research imposed by the previous administration," Wilson said in a statement.

Dr. Robert W. Finberg, Chair of the Department of Medicine at the UMass Medical School, who also serves as Chair of the UMass Stem Cell Research & Development working group, responded with similar sentiments as President Wilson in the same press release.

"We believe there is great opportunity for stem cell research to be done in Massachusetts," Finberg is quoted as saying. "There is both talent and interest in the Massachusetts academic and biotechnology community, and we feel it is essential that the Governor act to provide support for this exciting area of research."

UMass is one of the state's leaders in stem cell research and development at its Amherst and Worcester campuses. In 2006, the University conducted over $400 million in sponsored research, and $250 million in life sciences research. Wilson believes the state can provide the necessary infrastructure and resources to develop new research facilities, to continue to move its public research university forward and lay the groundwork for growth in the state's life sciences industry.

UMass has put forward a plan to establish a UMass Institute for Stem Cell Research and Regenerative Medicine. Put forward in response to a mandate from state leaders and $2.5 million in funding, the Institute would strengthen UMass' already top-notch programs at the UMass Medical School and the nationally-recognized programs in animal sciences and biomaterials at the Amherst campus.

Finalized in February 2007, the Stem Cell Research proposal has the support of President Wilson and the UMass Board of Trustees. The project would cost an estimated $69.4 million over a six-year period, attributed to faculty hiring, core user facilities, research project funding and the construction of work space.

"The University of Massachusetts looks forward to expanding its work in stem cell research and related fields and collaborating with state leaders, other academic and research institutions and business groups to help ensure that Massachusetts is competitive with other states in this research area," Wilson said.

President George W. Bush announces his veto of the stem cell research bill, his first presidential veto, to an East Room audience full of children born from frozen embryos on July 19, 2006, at the White House in Washington, D.C.

Hillary Clinton sets fundraising record

BY JIM KUHNHENN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON—Two Democratic presidential candidates broke previous fundraising records during the first three months of the year, with Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton setting a high bar of $26 million in new contributions for the quarter.

Former Sen. John Edwards raised more than $14 million since the beginning of the year. Clinton also transferred $10 million from her Senate campaign account, bringing her total receipts for the quarter to $36 million.

Unlike Edwards, Clinton aides would not reveal how much of her total was available only for the primary election and how much could be used just in the general election, if she were the party's nominee. By not breaking down the amount available for the primaries, the Clinton camp made it impossible to assess how much of an edge she actually has over Edwards.

Edwards' aides said about one million of his $14 million in contributions could only be used in the general election, should he win the nomination.

Neither Clinton nor Edwards disclosed how much money they spent in the quarter or how much cash they had in hand – numbers that also give clues to the relative strengths of the campaigns.

Still, the total raised by each candidate outdistanced past presidential election records and set a new bar by which to measure fundraising abilities.

Sen. Barack Obama of Illinois – sandwiched in public opinion polls between Clinton and Edwards – had yet to reveal his totals. Obama was expected to be among the top Democratic fundraisers.

New Mexico Gov. Bill Richardson's campaign said he had raised $6 million in primary campaign money and had more than $5 million cash in hand at the end of the three-month period.

Aides to Sen. Chris Dodd, (D-Conn.), said he raised more than $4 million in the quarter, transferred nearly five million dollars from his Senate campaign account and had $7.5 million cash on hand.

Sen. Joseph Biden (D-Del.), had total receipts close to four million dollars for the quarter, an aide said

See CLINTON on page 2

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVII
Issue 108

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Eric Athas
Managing Editor Rob Greenfield
Business Manager Dan Conti
Production Manager Amanda Allen
Night Supervisor Sherel Wolnik
Advertising Manager Jaimeson Porter
Advertising Production Molly Eggleston
Arts & Living Editor Morgan Rouveau
Comics Editor Adam Stagen
Editorial Editor Tucker Merrick
News Editor Matt Belliveau
Sports Editor Danny Picard
Sports Editor Jon Pelland
Circulation Manager Jeff Pentz
Finance Manager David Valade
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Nicole Puddester
Asst. Arts & Living Tim McCall
Asst. Arts & Living Sydney Towne
Assistant News Anna Dolianitis
Assistant News Nicole Boonjaikuakul
Assistant Editorial Brendan Hall
Assistant Sports Jeremy Rice
Web Editor James Hale
Photo Editor Toan Trinh

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been publication only January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matthew O'Rourke

COPY EDITOR
Caffe Williams

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Amanda Allen

Ten of the best April Fool's Day hoaxes: U.S. museum

NEW YORK—From television revealing that spaghetti grows on trees to advertisements for the left-handed burger, the tradition of April Fool's Day stories in the media has a weird and wonderful history.

Here are 10 of the top April Fool's Day pranks ever pulled off, as judged by the San Diego-based Museum of Hoaxes for their notoriety, absurdity, and number of people duped.

—In 1957, a BBC television show announced that, thanks to a mild winter and the virtual elimination of the spaghetti weevil, Swiss farmers were enjoying a bumper spaghetti crop. Footage of Swiss farmers pulling strands of spaghetti from trees prompted a barrage of calls from people wanting to know how to grow their own spaghetti at home.

—In 1985, Sports Illustrated magazine published a story that a rookie baseball pitcher who could reportedly throw a ball at 270 kilometers per hour (168 miles per hour) was set to join the New York Mets. Finch was said to have mastered his skill—pitching significantly faster than anyone else has ever managed—in a Tibetan monastery. Mets fans' celebrations were short-lived.

—Sweden, in 1962, had only one television channel, which broadcast in black and white. The station's technical expert appeared on the news to announce that thanks to a newly developed technology, viewers could convert their existing sets to receive color pictures by pulling a nylon stocking over the screen. In fact, they had to wait until 1970.

In 1996, American fast-food chain Taco Bell announced that it had bought Philadelphia's Liberty Bell, a historic symbol of American independence, from the federal government and was renaming it the Taco Liberty Bell.

Outraged citizens called to express their anger before Taco Bell revealed the hoax. Then-White House press secretary Mike McCurry was asked about the sale and said the Lincoln Memorial in Washington had also been sold and was to be renamed the Lord Lincoln Mercury Memorial after the automotive giant.

—In 1977, British newspaper The Guardian published a seven-page supplement for the 10th anniversary of San Serriffe, a small republic located in the Indian Ocean consisting of several semicolon-shaped islands. A series of articles described the geography and culture of the two main islands, named Upper Caisse and Lower Caisse.

—In 1992, US National Public Radio announced that Richard Nixon was running for president again. His new campaign slogan was, "I didn't do anything wrong, and I won't do it again." They even had clips of Nixon announcing his candidacy. Listeners flooded the show with calls expressing their outrage. Nixon's voice actually turned out to be that of impersonator Rich Little.

In 1998, a newsletter titled New Mexicans for Science and Reason carried an article that the state of Alabama had voted to change the value of pi from 3.14159 to the "Biblical value" of 3.0.

—BurgerKing, another American fast-food chain, published a full-page advertisement in USA Today in 1998 announcing the introduction of the "Left-Handed Whopper," specially designed for the 32 million left-handed Americans. According to the advertisement, the new burger included the same ingredients as the original, but the condiments were rotated 180 degrees. The chain said it received thousands of requests for the new burger, as well as orders for the original "right-handed" version.

—Discover Magazine announced in 1995 that a highly respected biologist, Aprile Pazzo (Italian for April Fool), had discovered a new species in Antarctica: the hotheaded naked ice borer. The creatures were described as having bony plates on their heads that became burning hot, allowing the animals to bore through ice at high speed -- a technique they used to hunt penguins.

—Noted British astronomer Patrick Moore announced on the radio in 1976 that at 9:47 am, a once-in-a-lifetime astronomical event, in which Pluto would pass behind Jupiter, would cause a gravitational alignment that would reduce the Earth's gravity. Moore told listeners that if they jumped in the air at the exact moment of the planetary alignment, they would experience a floating sensation. Hundreds of people called in to report feeling the sensation.

—Associated Press

Warming may end some species

NEW YORK—From the micro to the macro, from plankton in the oceans to polar bears in the far north and seals in the far south, global warming has begun changing life on Earth, international scientists will report next Friday.

"Changes in climate are now affecting physical and biological systems on every continent," says a draft obtained by The Associated Press of a report on warming's impacts, to be issued by the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC), the authoritative U.N. network of 2,000 scientists and more than 100 governments.

In February the panel declared it "very likely" most global warming has been caused by manmade emissions of carbon dioxide and other greenhouse gases.

Animal and plant life in the Arctic and Antarctic is undergoing substantial change, scientists say. Rising sea levels elsewhere are damaging coastal wetlands. Warmer waters are bleaching and killing coral reefs, pushing marine species toward the poles, reducing fish populations in African lakes, research finds.

"Hundreds of species have already changed their ranges, and ecosystems are being disrupted," said University of Michigan ecologist Rosina Bierbaum, former head of the U.S. IPCC delegation. "It is clear that a number of species are going to be lost."

The IPCC draft estimates that if temperatures rise approximately two to four degrees Fahrenheit more, one-third of species will be lost from their current range, either moved elsewhere or vanished.

—Associated Press

Hillary Clinton sets fundraising record

CLINTON from page 1

Sunday. That amount includes less than two million dollars transferred from his Senate campaign account. Richardson, Dodd and Biden only raised primary election money.

The rest of the Democratic field and the Republican presidential candidates planned to announce their first-quarter totals over the next few days. The fundraising deadline for the January through March period was Saturday, with financial reports due April 15.

Republican Phil Gramm of Texas and Democrat Al Gore of Tennessee held the records for first-quarter receipts: $8.7 million for Gramm in 1995 and $8.9 million for Gore in 1999. Gramm dropped out before New Hampshire held the 1996 election's first primary.

"We are completely overwhelmed and gratified by the historic support that we've gotten this quarter," Clinton campaign manager Patti Solis Doyle said. The Clinton total included $4.2 million raised through the Internet, typically a source of small donations.

By not breaking down the amount available for the primaries, the Clinton camp made it impossible to make clear comparisons to past campaigns or to the Edwards total.

"We're above our budget for the year," Edwards deputy campaign manager Jonathan Prince said. "We're completely on track to have all the money that we need to be highly competitive in the campaign."

Fundraising has been the top priority of the presidential campaigns. Clinton has packed her schedule with gala events and intimate dinners and has received substantial help from her husband, former President Bill Clinton, a hit among contributors. Edwards, a former trial lawyer, has lawyers in prominent positions on his fundraising team. The Edwards campaign saw a spike in donations, especially online, after Edwards and his wife, Elizabeth, announced that her cancer had returned and was incurable.

Both campaigns issued pleas for donations in the final hours of the quarter, using the approaching deadline to motivate donors.

Obama also has raised money aggressively and aides said he had more than 83,000 donors. Clinton's supporters had fretted in recent weeks that Obama could surpass her in fundraising.

Obama, in an interview with The Associated Press on Sunday, was coy.

"I think we'll do well," Obama said. "I think that we should meet people's expectations. More importantly, I think we will have raised enough money to make sure we can compete for the next quarter and beyond. I think we'll do pretty well."

Edwards reported raising more than three million dollars on the Internet and easily passed the $7.4 million first-quarter fundraising mark he set in his 2003-04 presidential campaign.

No Republican presidential candidates had released fundraising totals Sunday.

For the first time since the post-Watergate era changes to campaign finance laws, candidates are considering bypassing the public financing system for the presidential primaries and the general election. Several of the top candidates are raising both primary and general election money, artificially inflating their receipts.

Candidates cannot touch their general election money and must return it to donors if they do not win the nomination.

The Federal Election Commission ruled recently that candidates could also collect general election money now and still accept public financing later, provided they returned the money they raised. The opinion came at the request of Obama, who then said he would finance his general election campaign if his Republican rival did as well. Sen. John McCain, (R-Ariz.), issued a similar challenge.

The first-quarter totals are one gauge of a campaign's strength. Compared with previous elections, attention to fundraising during the first three months of this year has been especially acute because the leading candidates have decided to forgo public financing for the primaries.

Unconventional... maybe.
We also have part-time, year-round positions with paid insurance, time off and education!!
APPLY NOW! sixflags.com/workatsixflags.asp
Unique... definitely.
Six Flags is a Smoke and Drug Free Equal Opportunity Employer.
For More Information Call 413-786-9300 ext. 3100
• Free & Discounted Passes!
• Free Admission!
• Buddy Passes!
• Competitive Wages!
• Flexible Schedules!
• Scholarships!
• Student Loan Assistance!
• Paid Internships!
• Real World Career Experience!
• Exclusive Team Member Events!
• Health Insurance Availability!
• Lots of Free Stuff!
45 YEARS
Six Flags
NEW ENGLAND
Opportunity. It's our major attraction.

SLSO: over 100 UMass students sued by RIAA

STUDENTS from page 1

actual suspension or expulsion, according to Dean Vanin.

Twenty-two students received deferred suspensions after the riots, 28 were suspended, eight students were removed from housing and five were expelled, meaning that the student is permanently separated from the University system. A suspension and an expulsion also mean that the student loses all credits from that semester, which for the average in-state freshman living in the Southwest Residential area could mean about $17,000 thrown away.

One expelled student recently apologized to the UMass community and allowed his or her regrets to be published onto paper door hangers that were placed on the doors in all of the residence halls. The apology reads, "I have betrayed my parents, who had supported me upon my journey into college. I have betrayed every teacher that wrote recommendations as to my personal integrity. I should have known better."

"Many of the students who were reprimanded came forth and apologized, whether through a letter to the editor of the Daily Collegian or by a simply contacting our office," said Vanin. "It is clear that students were very upset and angry about the outcome of their own actions."

In the meantime, students who were caught illegally downloading music have a different story. Starting in September of last year, UMass has received a growing number of complaints from the Record Industry Association of America (RIAA) of students using illegal downloading sites such as i2Hub and Limewire.

According to Charles DiMare, the Director of Student Legal Services Office (SLSO), as many as 100 UMass students have been sued by the RIAA and about 75 students have been defended by the SLSO.

"About 20,000 students nationwide have been either sued or threatened to be sued for hundreds of thousands of dollars," said DiMare. "Those that are threatened to be sued must settle out of court for a certain amount of money."

According to John Dubach, the Chief Information Officer of the Office of Information Technologies (OIT), "a selection of students from the UMass network who use either I2Hub or Limewire are picked by the RIAA and are then brought to our attention."

As for that handful of students who have had legal action taken upon them, there is not much that can be done. Lara Hart, a UMass sophomore and Limewire user, has been brought to OIT's attention for illegally downloading and sharing music.

"They chose about 40 UMass students who use Limewire," said Hart. "I am threatened to be sued if I do not settle out of court for $3,000."

The RIAA has a basic fee for illegal activity, which is $750 per illegally downloaded song. That adds up very quickly when a student has around 1,000 songs downloaded onto their computers.

"We're exploring and investigating cases against I2Hub and Limewire for potential violation against consumer laws," said DiMare.

Whether the trouble is rioting on campus or getting caught with illegally downloaded music, UMass students may want to remember the high cost of breaking the rules.

Holly Seabury can be reached at hseabury@student.umass.edu.

Menchu discusses root of racism

MENCHU from page 1

they see the mirror of global free enterprise and the unity of countries and they know the future is there, but if they don't reach it, there is problem."

Menchú said "we have two great fortunes in life: material and spiritual, and that the spiritual fortune is what makes us human and forms the values that shape society."

"We all must reach equilibrium with the material and spiritual fortune. With too much material wealth, the spiritual wealth suffers from egotism, indifference and intolerance, a spiritual illness grows," said Menchú

Racism, she indicated, is a form of spiritual illness, she compared it to alcoholism as hard to recognize in oneself

She said racism is a product of a system and of one's environment and prevents humans from seeing the pluralism of the world.

She said that a basis of respect is, "that I recognize the other is different but (that difference) also compliments me."

"What I learned, I learned from suffering and therefore, I could apply that to others later in life," said Menchú.

Menchú said her grand dream is to create a multicultural system, a plural system unified in understanding of each others humanity.

"We must allow everyone to fit in the same space," said Menchú.

Menchú referred many times to Mayan beliefs in the speech stating that, in the Mayan calendar, humans are living in what was translated as the "no-time," where everyone worldwide has different agendas that do not coincide and that we'd like to see a better world that we do not know how to create.

"When we hear each other, we can do a lot for each other, she said.

"Other leaders do not listen to each other. We do things we think are correct but do not pay attention to others," said Menchú.

She also said that in 2011 the Mayan calendar predicts a reunification of the male and female forces in the world.

"We live in a lack of equilibrium between male and female, for 200 years only men have been rulers, there will come a new time of equilibrium." If elected president of Guatemala, she would be the first woman to hold office.

Menchú was born in Chimel, Guatemala as a member of the Quiché tribe, a smaller part of the larger Mayan family. As a child, she worked as a farm laborer. Her family was tortured and killed over the space of two years in 1970-1981 by the repressive Guatemalan forces who accused her family of being guerillas and resistors to the government. In 1981, she fled in exile to Mexico. There she started to organize resistance against the oppression of indigenous people's rights in Guatemala.

Her autobiography "I, Rigoberta Menchú," released in 1983, earned her international acclaim with its stark portrayal of her families' murder and the conditions of life growing up under brutality.

In 1991, she participated in the United Nations preparation of a declaration of rights for indigenous peoples. In 1992, she was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize for the defense of indigenous people's rights. She was the first woman as well as the youngest person to ever have had been bestowed that honor.

Menchu's speech was given in Spanish with the translation assistance of Amherst College professor Ilan Stavans.

Wes Rahn can be reached at wrahn@student.umass.edu

Guatemalan activist and Nobel Peace Prize winner Rigoberta Menchu (left), Bolivian Vice President Alvaro Garcia Linera (center) and Bolivian President Evo Morales attend a ceremony in Sucre, Bolivia, Aug. 6, 2006.

Seafood poisoning rises with heat

By Michael Casey
Associated Press

Bowls of piping hot barracuda soup were the much-anticipated treat when the Roa family gathered for a casual and relaxing Sunday meal.

Within hours, all six fell deathly ill. So did two dozen others from the same neighborhood. Some complained of body-wide numbness. Others had weakness in their legs. Several couldn't speak or even open their mouths.

"I was scared. I really thought I was going to die," said Dabby Roa, 21, a student who suffered numbness in his head, tingling in his hands and had trouble breathing.

What Roa and the others suffered that night last August was ciguatera poisoning, a rarely fatal but growing menace from eating exotic fish. All had bought portions of the same barracuda from a local vendor.

Experts estimate that up to 50,000 people worldwide suffer ciguatera poisoning each year, with more than 90 percent of cases unreported. Scientists say the risks are getting worse, because of damage that pollution and global warming are inflicting on the coral reefs where many fish species feed.

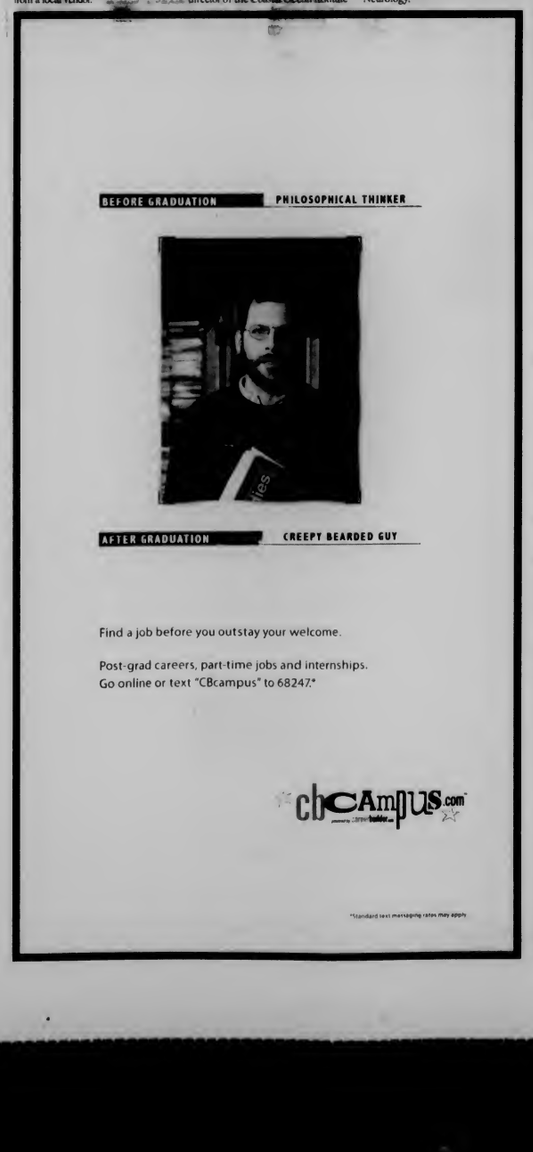
Dozens of popular fish types, including grouper and barracuda, live near reefs. They accumulate the toxic chemical in their bodies from eating smaller fish that graze on the poisonous algae. When oceans are warmed by the greenhouse effect and fouled by toxic runoff, coral reefs are damaged and poison algae thrives, scientists say.

"Worldwide, we have a much bigger problem with toxins from algae in seafood than we had 20 or 30 years ago," said Donald M. Anderson, director of the Coastal Ocean Institute at the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution in Massachusetts.

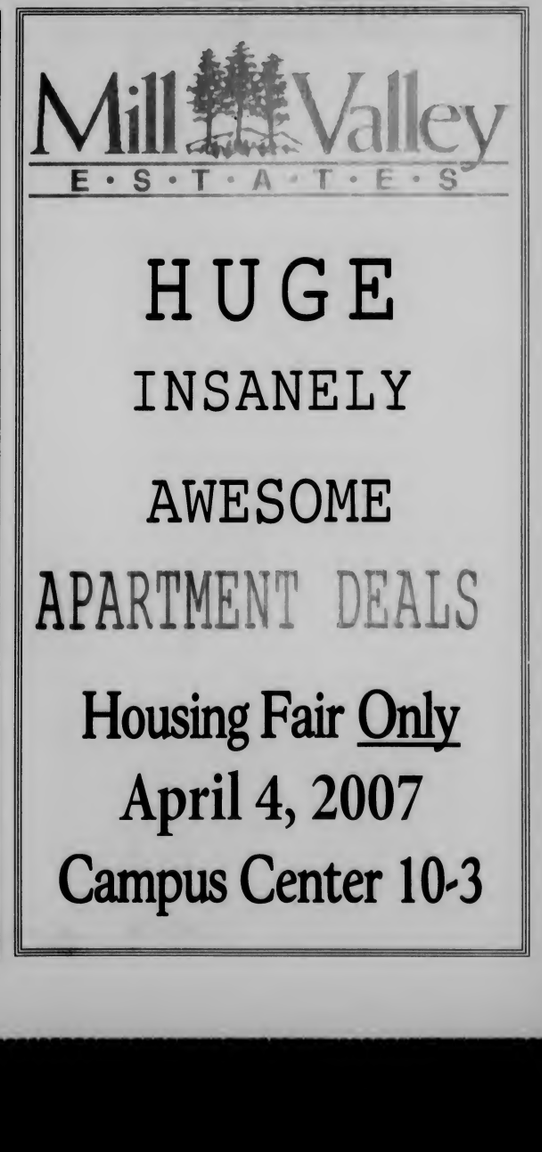
"We have more toxins, more species of algae producing the toxins and more areas affected around the world," he said.

Although risk of ciguatera has soared recently, the phenomenon is ancient. Fish poisoning shows up in Homer's Odyssey. Alexander the Great forbade his armies to eat fish for fear of being stricken, according to University of Hawaii professor Yoshitsugi Hokama.

Capt. James Cook and his crew probably suffered ciguatera poisoning in 1774 after eating fish near Vanuatu in the South Pacific, according to crew journals and correspondence studied by Dr. Michael Doherty of the Swedish Epilepsy Center in Seattle, writing in the scientific review Neurology.



BEFORE GRADUATION
PHILOSOPHICAL THINKER
AFTER GRADUATION
CREEPY BEARDED GUY
Find a job before you outstay your welcome.
Post-grad careers, part-time jobs and internships.
Go online or text "CBcampus" to 68247.*
cbCAmpus.com
*Standard text messaging rates may apply.



THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, APRIL 2, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Election 2007: A year of apathy

Some suggestions for SGA

Matt Giancola

When I first became involved with student government my freshman year, the Student Government Association (SGA) was in crisis. Some of our leaders disrespected the positions they held by partying in their offices and making racist jokes towards other students. The public rightly lost faith that the SGA could get anything done. Students were tired of seeing useless politicking aimed at tearing one another down. They wanted student government to get things done for the campus and to stand up for the things that students believed.

Thankfully, over the past two years, the SGA has improved infinitely. Bickering has been set aside and leaders are getting more done. Earlier this year, more than a thousand students were registered to vote. A new organization has been set up to fight for students on Beacon Hill. We have access to free music over the Internet. More money has been given to Registered Student Organizations (RSOs). But there are still a lot of unsettled problems that bother us on a daily basis and need to be addressed by our government. In the coming year, I believe we can get ourselves on the road to completing these problems.

The SGA should work with the police department on campus to make sure our rights aren't violated any longer. No officers should ever wear undercover uniforms in random dormitory patrols. Random patrols in the dorms are unconstitutional and we need to make sure that students know their rights. How do we do this? The Office of the SGA Attorney General should be given its own budget; that money can be used to distribute door hangers that outline our rights. This should be done once a semester. Student Legal Services needs to be supported and publicized better so that students know where to turn when they get into trouble. Citizens need to be constantly vigilant in protecting their rights.

Students should be allowed to sign their evening guests out of the building when they leave so that they can sign a new guest in. In North, especially, this would relieve a lot of tension between roommates. Students are adults, and should be allowed to have guests in their rooms. Security forms are already equipped with the means to do this, and it would cost nothing.

While administrators give themselves raises, students are getting themselves into debt.

Now that the library is open 24-hours a day, a transportation system is needed for the late-night hours. Many students feel uncomfortable walking home late at night. Years ago, a Safe Rides program existed on campus; however, it was ended due to budget cuts. The van is still at the school – the SGA should bring that program back. It would benefit many students and is a worthwhile cost for the SGA to pick up.

I have heard over and over from students in all corners of this school that the process of becoming an RSO is too difficult. Student groups are the lifeblood of this campus, and they need to be supported and encouraged. The SGA should work to ease the process of attaining RSO status. If you have a group of students and want to follow the rules, there is no reason you should be denied the status of a registered organization. Too many groups have been forced to go off campus to find a place to meet or practice.

One of the biggest issues the Student Government Association will be faced with in the coming year, though, is the increasing inaccessibility of UMass to the poor and working class families. While administrators give themselves raises, students are getting themselves into debt. We need to fight for lower fees, smaller classes, more professors and more financial aid. The state government may be more open to our ideas now, but we can't sit back. Now more than ever, it is imperative that we show the state that higher education is something that all children should dream for and that they can attain it.

These ideas range from local to statewide. One issue is global though, and students can make a huge impact. I believe that the SGA should fight more forcefully for the divestment of UMass from Sudan. The genocide there is still going on, and our money is still going to the government and militia. The Board of Trustees must understand that students will not tolerate this any longer. In the future, when the world looks back on what people did in the face of terrible evil, I want to know that we did something good, something that helped the oppressed and weak; something that we could all be proud of.

Let's get started.

Matt Giancola can be reached at mgiancol@student.umass.edu.

Low turnout, low expectations

George Kennedy

Whether you knew it or not, Student Government Association elections took place last week. You, like I usually do, probably had some excuse as to why you didn't vote. You may not have even had any excuse at all. Heck, I didn't even know they were going on until a friend of mine, who works for the SGA, asked me to help administrate one of the voting booths.

Let me first say for the purposes of dispelling any spin that I am not affiliated with the student government and my allegiance lies with no candidate. From this position, I have made some observations.

Most specifically was the incredibly low number of voters. We had to be reminded by election officials to encourage people to vote because if less than five percent of the student body voted, the elections would lose their official legitimacy.

To make matters worse, one of the candidates intended to detract from the legitimacy of the election itself. The other election administrator and I had been warned that a voter was trying to gain access to a ballot without a UCard and was trying to take a picture of this act. Sure enough, after not too long a voter came in saying she didn't have her UCard but wanted to vote, at which point she was told to come back when she had her UCard. Right behind her was a man taking pictures with his camera-phone. These people were believed to be associated with one of the candidates and were trying to illegitimize the election.

To those students involved with this little sting operation: Get a life! Who are you, the Hardy Boys?

Chancellor of Elections Sarah Morgan could not comment due to an ongoing investigation of the culprits.

To those students involved with this little sting operation: Get a life! Who are you, the Hardy Boys? This isn't a Nancy Drew mystery; it's an election, one that these individuals were trying to devilify and, by doing so, probably hurt their candidate's chances of winning. How does one win an election that isn't even considered legitimate? It's kind of hard. Election numbers on campus are so low now that doing something like trying to discredit the legitimacy of the election itself cannot help those candidates associated with those trying to discredit it. Perhaps even less people would vote if they heard allegations of voter-fraud and numbers would slip below that dangerous five percent.

This begs the larger question: Why don't students vote in SGA elections? There is the common reason that is given that most of the student body just doesn't care about the SGA. Why don't students care? Is it because the SGA has little power to truly affect things that are important to the student body? The SGA does not have the authority to cut down the number of police present on campus or have a say on spending decisions (like subsidizing some of our textbooks instead of buying an undercover police Dodge Charger). Does the SGA not have the power to affect the decisions because of the nature of the SGA? Perhaps because we do not vote and SGA represents so few of the student body (14 percent in this election), the school administration takes their actions and demands with a grain of salt.

Perhaps it is also because candidates run on platforms that have nothing to do with the formative powers of the SGA. Matt Giancola ran on the platform that UMass must divest from Darfur and the genocide in Sudan. It is an atrocity that the United States has not done more to try and address this issue, but for an SGA presidential candidate to run on this platform is just another reason why students don't vote. I am opposed to the genocide, but I also know that if you are running for a political position you talk about what you can do, what you can affect. What you do not do is play on people's emotions and run on something that people feel adamant about.

Of course people are against genocide. Is Giancola's competition going to say: "Well, on the other hand I support genocide, the voters demand a choice!"? This platform is foolish because you are running on the platform of something you can do nothing about. Not because you do not want to, but because in this position, you cannot. No physical action was offered as a way to do anything about the genocide. Giancola should have come out and said if he were SGA president he would have fundraisers to send money to groups that actually play an international role in trying to help the people of Darfur. That would have been acceptable. Either way, you have to be able make a claim and keep your word.

In order to get students voting again, you have to give them results. It is OK to start small, as long as it is something to keep your word on.

Take the dining halls, for instance. The school has done a great job with the newly renovated Berkshire Dining Commons, but it seems like you can never find a fork when you need it. If a candidate ran on the platform that he would make sure there were always forks at the DC, even if he/she personally restocked the fork trays his/herself, they would have done a simple yet profound thing. They would have run on the platform of what had the power to control, made a claim and followed through on that claim.

Do these things, future candidates, and you'll be sure to win.

George Kennedy can be reached at LedZepKennedy@yahoo.com.

Where is the outrage?

Jeff Napolitano

In the past several weeks, the issue of homophobia at our school has been in the forefront of the news. Over the past few years, racism and diversity have been the subject of social debate. But the problem of homophobia and heterosexism, as well as the rights of and respect for the GLBTQ (Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual, Transgender and Queer) community, have been quietly neglected by straight, progressive students. Our concerted efforts at fighting institutional forms of oppression continue to face significant setbacks as a result of such fractures and bigotry within our social movements.

The most striking case reported was that of the assault of a student due to the perception that he was gay. On February 28th, after being called gay epithets, the student was beaten badly enough that he got a concussion and a fractured eye socket. In this case, it appears that the student might not even be gay – but regardless, the assaulter was charged with hate crime violations, because the student was allegedly gay.

However, the assault may not have been the most offensive act in this story. What is equally grotesque is the complete silence of the University of Massachusetts administration regarding this crime and the environment of the University. To date, no statements (save from the police regarding the facts of the matter) have been made by the administration. The Dean of Students Office has not said "This was a bad thing, and we will try to make sure it will not happen again." The Office of Student Affairs and Campus Life has not declared that the University has zero tolerance for sexuality-based hate crimes on campus.

Not a peep.

Why hasn't the UMass administration denounced this crime? Because, as is painfully clear to anyone who has been on this campus for any period of time, they don't really give a damn.

What other conclusion can be drawn? Wouldn't you imagine that the Chancellor (who is hopefully working a bit harder for his newly-awarded $350,000 a year) would take just a moment to send a brief press release out saying that "Gee, we don't much like it when gay-bashing happens on campus"?

Unfortunately, we know from experience that neither he, nor anyone else in the administration, is going to take much notice. Three years ago, photos were found online of a group of white students, drunk in a campus office, posing with a hand-drawn caricature of a KKK Klansmen during an election against a Latino opponent. Our Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs was said to have encouraged one of the offending students to lay low and see if "this blows over." When it didn't, there was (unsurprisingly) no condemnation from the administration. There were no statements that such behavior – particularly in a school building – would not be tolerated. Only after months of protest, a rally of over 500 students, and prolonged media exposure, did dear Chancellor Lombardi act: He convened a "Diversity Commission," let it deliberate for six months, and then promptly ignored most of its recommendations.

While racism continues to be a plague on our society, homophobia is so often an accepted part of the scenery.

So we can't expect that those whose job it is to keep campus friendly and safe to actually do their job. We know from experience that it isn't going to happen, at least without constant and unyielding pressure from students.

But it's unclear whether we have the critical mass of straight students who are willing to put a fight with the GLBTQ community. There are a finite number of progressive folks on campus willing to take on such a battle. Unfortunately, we're not all united under the same banner.

While large numbers of students came together to try to address racism on campus, homophobia is a different creature. Unlike racism, such oppression is not the primary domain of the straight white population. As suggested by recent events, homophobia is also a rampant problem in communities of color. The stunning irony is that the ALANA population has a long history on this campus of righteous activism. It is therefore disappointing and infuriating that some might see liberation for one group as less important or even irrelevant compared to another. In the words of Audre Lorde, "There is no hierarchy of oppression."

What of those whose oppression is exponential? A queer friend of mine recently reminded me of the unending marginalization of the GLBTQ community on campus. When considering the environment for a queer student of color, combating racism and homophobia, she said, "I can't imagine how hard it must be for a gay student of color. It must be horrible."

While racism continues to be a plague on our society, homophobia is so often an accepted part of the scenery. It is around us, everywhere. On Saturday night, I went to an Immortal Technique concert. Technique is a socially-conscious, heterosexual, Black/Latino hip-hop artist with an analysis of class and racial history more advanced than most professors, and possesses an undeniable talent of putting it all into poetry. But on Saturday, his opening song was one which contained the verse "... And that's the primary reason that I hate y'all faggots."

Why do straight people insistent on fighting oppression tolerate – or spew – such bigotry? How can we shrug it off any longer? And if we truly do not believe in a hierarchy of oppression, then heterosexuals must meet such oppression – in the form of an administrative silence or hip-hop lyric – with furious anger, indignant opposition and organized confrontation.

For all righteous people, this must be our only choice.

Jeff Napolitano can be reached at jfnapoli@ltrc.umass.edu.

Our real agenda for Iraq

Melissa Garber

Iraq is situated in what is known as the cradle of civilization, where the first writings, sciences, mathematics and philosophies were produced. But even the most advanced societies were suppressed for centuries under colonial rule.

For four centuries, the Ottoman Empire ruled the region until their defeat in World War I. After the war, the League of Nations granted the United Kingdom a mandate over Iraq. The British colonial administrators ruled the country, and made the Hashemite King Faisal their client ruler. The British also appointed the Sunni Arab elite in Iraq to be the government and ministry officials.

In 1932, Iraq was granted its independence and ruled by the British-selected Hashemite monarchy, until 1941 when the United Kingdom once again invaded Iraq. The general idea was to secure Britain's oil supply from an increasingly hostile Iraqi government.

The British occupation lasted until 1947 and the Hashemite monarchy was reinstated to power until a coup d'etat in 1958 by the Iraqi army. A succession of political and military unrest ensued until 1968 when the Arab Socialist Ba'ath Party gained control of the region, and Saddam Hussein rose to power.

A tyranny isn't considered part of the axis of evil until they stop complying with US demands.

Hussein's first interaction with the United States' government was the year after he joined the Ba'ath Party in 1959. General Abdul Karim Qassim had overthrown King Faisal II, and Hussein was involved in the U.S.-led attempted assassination of him.

Twenty years later, the Reagan administration gave Hussein's secular government $40 billion in aid to fight Iran and curb a domino effect of Islamic revolution in the Middle East. Hussein was also receiving billions in aid to prevent Iraq from forming alliances with the Soviets.

According to Boston Globe contributor, and former ambassador to Croatia, Peter W. Galbraith: "The Reagan administration offered Hussein financial credits that eventually made Iraq the third-largest recipient of U.S. assistance. It normalized diplomatic relations and, most significantly, began providing Iraq with battlefield intelligence. Iraq used this information to target Iranian troops with chemical weapons."

After the Iran-Iraq war, when Hussein was committing the crimes against the Kurdish villages that he eventually would be executed for, the Reagan administration continued to provide him with aid – despite attempted Senate legislation to cut off aid and impose trade sanctions.

In fact, Galbraith states in an article from August 2006, "The next year, President George H.W. Bush's administration actually doubled U.S. financial credits for Iraq."

It was not until Hussein invaded Kuwait, a friendly oil-rich nation, that the U.S. and the United Nations took action. The result was the Persian Gulf War and crippling economic sanctions on a defeated Iraq.

America's old secular ally in the Middle East turned out to be nothing but a brutal despot with an affinity for chemical warfare, a fact that was completely ignored until his brutality interfered with U.S. interests.

This is a common theme in U.S. history, where democratically elected leaders in the Congo, Chile and Nicaragua are overthrown and replaced by militant tyrants who are put into power because of their willingness to bend to America's economic interests. Similarly, tyrants like Hussein are left in power despite their human rights infractions until their actions impede on U.S. interests.

A tyrant isn't considered part of the axis of evil until they stop complying with U.S. demands. Robert Mugabe was given an honorary degree by our own University, and now he's best known for encouraging the people of Zimbabwe to violently take back the land the ancestors of white colonists still occupied. Only now, after allegations of mass murders, do we try to rescind his degree.

The occupation of Iraq is neocolonialism under the guise of "freedom." According to Solar Energy International, "Though accounting for only 5 percent of the world's population, Americans consume 26 percent of the world's energy." Iraq's main export is oil. Kuwait's main export is oil. America is protecting its interests whether it's during the Persian Gulf War or the Iraq War.

The Bush administrations' intentions in Iraq are purely economical. If Hussein had been compliant with the U.S., like so many dictators have been before him, he would have lived out the rest of his life in relative obscurity.

The people of Iraq cannot be freed through occupation. Hundreds of years of colonialism and only a few short years of independence have led Iraq to ruin. As Franklin Delano Roosevelt once said, "In its truest sense, freedom cannot be bestowed, it must be achieved."

Melissa Garber can be reached at mhgarber@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, APRIL 2, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Rock's new 'Wife' flick lacks flair

Unoriginal and weak in plot

By Christina Fong
Collegian Staff

Our society is at the point where marital infidelity is becoming less taboo and even encouraged, which has opened doors for its exploitation by the comic geniuses. In the latest comedy remake, I Think I Love My Wife, based on Eric Rhomer's L'Amour l'apres-midi, Chris Rock (Head of State) draws material from his stand-up shows into the making of the film which he co-wrote, directed and starred.

Rock plays Richard Cooper, a man living with a loving family and a successful life. The only problem is he's bored with his marriage to Brenda, played by Gina Torres (Alias), which lacks any spontaneity and passion (more importantly, sex). When old friend Nikki, played by Kerry Washington (The Last King of Scotland), re-enters his life, she brings with her temptation and a whole lot of trouble for Rock and his already existing marital problems.

The plot wasn't totally original. It falls short and is weak at times.

There are basically the three same players (a man, a wife and a tempting prospect for infidelity), and Rock gets to play the man stuck between two beautiful and extremely different women. So, of course, the lucky man must decide between the two. He's constantly placed in ridiculous yet hilarious situations all thanks to Washington and her not-so-subtle intentions. From getting high in a New York City night club in the middle of the night to being carried away in an ambulance after an outrageously amusing side-effect of taking a Viagra pill, Rock's world is thrown into complete confusion and imbalance.

With Bad Company and Head of State on a list of disappointingly bad movies in Rock's career, he delivered a surprisingly entertaining performance in I Think I Love My Wife, at least more so than expected. Rock wasn't too over the top or excessive with

See WIFE on page 6

Chris Rock takes on the leading role in the recent comedy, "I Think I Love My Wife," which he also directed. Rock plays married man Richard Cooper, a husband plagued with marital dysfunction.

UMass student competes for cash in Spike TV photo contest

By David Humphreys
Collegian Staff

No stranger to risqué photographs of its undergrads, the University of Massachusetts has had one student pose for Playboy earlier this year and now has a contestant in Spike TV's Bracket Babes competition.

Candice Valetutti, a sophomore psychology major and education minor, found an ad for the Spike TV contest on Facebook.com promoting college women to submit their pictures for a chance to win $5,000.

Although Valetutti said she did not take the first picture too seriously, when Spike TV emailed her back and told her to take another picture of herself in jeans and a white t-shirt, she scrambled to get a good one and hoped this would qualify her to be a finalist.

"I was so surprised when they called me to tell me I was a finalist... they wanted me to go to my own photo shoot with my own stylist and photographer," said Valetutti.

The photo shoot, which took place on President's Day, was an eight-hour adventure of trying on "crazy clothes" and seeing which pictures worked and which ones did not.

"When I showed my family the pictures, my brother wished me luck, my grandma cried and said that I was going to be a porn star and my father said that I looked 'nice'," said the UMass sophomore.

The UMass campus is also very supportive to Valetutti. "This guy I never met held a door open for me and told me that he voted for me and wished me luck," she said.

Besides the casual greeting and good luck wishes, Candice's friends have started a Facebook.com group for her, made "Bracket Babe" chants and have even dubbed themselves "Candice-a-teers."

UMass Sophomore Candice Valetutti is competing with other women nation wide to win $5,000 in exchange for sexy photos. Valetutti is a finalist of the competition, which is sponsored by Spike TV.

Candice, who has done modeling in the past, is no stranger to the camera. Some of her experiences include a walk-on role in Spiderman 3, one of the concert-goers in the film Music and Lyrics and modeling in fashion shows and magazines.

Even with all of this background, Valetutti still considers herself "one of the guys" and enjoys tailgating at Giants games, playing Guitar Hero and racing her Mazda RX8 in a predominantly male club.

"Because most of the people in the club are men over 50, when I first started going to the club, I was looked at kind of strangely. After they saw that I respect my car and everyone in the club, I fit in a little bit better," she said.

The winner of the Bracket Babes contest will take part in a New York City press conference, get another photo shoot and receive $5,000.

If she wins, Valetutti plans to give $1,000 to Jessie's House, a group that is part of the Boltwood Project. Jessie's House helps people in-between housing get back on their feet. Valetutti said "We go there and play with, teach and role model for the children living in Jessie's House. It's so reward g."

Valetutti also said that she might consider modelling more in the future but, as of right now, wants to be a kindergarten teacher.

"It's so nice to have all of my friend's support. With over 650 people in the Facebook group...it's awesome."

Online voting for Bracket Babes ends in a week but Candice's division ends Monday evening. Voting can be done at spiketv.com.

David Humphreys can be reached at Dhumphre@student.umass.edu

Have your eye on a forbidden someone? You're not alone

By Veronica Garrett
Collegian Columnist

Some wonder if it's human nature to let your eyes drift over to your girlfriend's sister.

Fantasies, they can be deceiving. The appearance of someone new coming around; rippling muscles, a pretty smile, nice lips and shakin' hips, these are all things capable of confusing someone into thinking they don't want to be with their current boyfriend or girlfriend. A Manhattan career woman can find her herself so stressed and "itching" that she would give it all up for a naughty weekend in Katmandu.

Our question this week was from an anonymous young man who says he is dealing with confusion, fantasies and a set of sisters, one of which he is dating. We'll call the "fantasy girl" Francesca.*

The first task is to assess what you like about this person you're fantasizing about, in this case, your girlfriend's sister. Is she someone you could see yourself dating, a potential relationship budding? Or is it simply her appearance? As I am unsure of the relationship sustained between the two of you, or what it is that you enjoy about her, I can only speculate and answer two scenarios.

If physical attraction is all that you have for Francesca, then I would say you're not in danger of ruining your current relationship and in all honesty, have nothing to feel guilty about. Dreams and fantasies are the safest and (next to actually acting them out) are the most fun ways to experiment because they seem so real. Fantasizing about other people can actually save your relationship from dreaded boredom, or what is more commonly called a "relationship rut," when sex becomes a race to orgasm and surprises no longer exist. Quoting Tracy Cox, the Oprah Magazine sex expert, "Smile back at that hot-looking girl who got on the bus [come on, that was deliberate!] and flashed you a glimpse of her [black, lacy] panties. Get off at her stop. Follow her and have raw, animal sex up against a wall in a deserted parking ramp...In fact, go right ahead and have sex with whoever you want."

There's only one rule to be enforced about this freeing advice, that rule is the action only takes place in your fantasies and dreams, you never act on these types of fantasies. Once you embark on acting out them out, the fantasies become infidelities, and you don't want to be known as a player in the game – "once a cheater, always a cheater" is one of the infamous quotes that females learn at a young age. It's become burned into the back off our minds. Physical attraction to a sexy girl is inevitable, and though it may be considered "naughty" to think about it, it may actually be good for your relationship; who wants to be locked into what will become a passionless relationship?

Playing out a deeper attraction or connection to Francesca would mean that you enjoy spending time with her, find yourself wishing she was there when it's just you and your girlfriend spending time alone. Finding yourself more attracted to Francesca's personality or seeing yourself with her romantically while pursuing a relationship with her sister, who is your girlfriend, isn't just unfair to your girlfriend, but to you, as well. She doesn't deserve to be hopelessly devoted to you while you're secretly bored with her. Like I said, this maybe isn't the case, but should be considered

See GUILT on page 6

Sebadoh takes hold of Noho crowd, mixing old and new

By Corey Charron
Collegian Staff

Reunion tours can sometimes be used to make money after a once-successful band's popularity dissolves. The shows on these tours are usually superficial, over-priced and often seem unnecessary.

Fortunately for the crowd at Northampton's Pearl Street Ballroom Thursday night, Sebadoh does not give these types of stows. The solid performance of these pioneers of independent rock fulfilled any fans expectations.

Netherland-based band, The Bent Moustache, warmed up the crowd with their mixture of punk rock and dance punk. Ajay Saggar, lead singer, started the night off on keyboard, thrashing around on the instrument almost causing it to crash to the floor. The music was comparable to the Talking Heads or Devo, herky-jerky and danceable. Saggar picked up a bass guitar that he used for the remainder of the nearly hour-long set. Pim Heyne was on lead guitar with Wilf Plum on drums.

The rest of The Bent Moustache's allotted time was spent performing songs from their release, "Forst," recently made available in the United States. While overall not an original or outstanding performance, the trio managed to provide the crowd with an exciting way to wait for the main attraction of the night. The Sex Pistols-inspired punk songs sometimes sounded too similar, but repetition was avoided with the band's ability to build songs to intense climaxes.

Saggar at one point called Western Mass. a retirement home for indie rockers, something not too far from the truth. The average age between both bands had to be around 40. The mixture of college students and middle aged hipsters could've caused a generation gap, but luckily both bands were able to corral each group.

The personality dynamics of Sebadoh were interesting to observe, especially through the varying demeanors and quirks in the trio. Eric Gaffney clearly was the comedic relief, joking that audience members were noodles in a big factory. Gaffney went on to reminisce about working at the Pizza Factory and cruising around the Northampton area eating mushroom pizza. Lou Barlow was the typical laid-back guy who would've been fun to hang out with in college, while Jason Loewenstein was quiet, humble and sometimes overshadowed by the larger personalities of his bandmates.

Luckily, the band worked well musically, which is interesting since the last time the band played a show together was 14 years ago. This gap in time made the fact that they stayed on cue for over 30 songs a remarkable achievement.

Throughout the entirety of the show, each member of the band had the opportunity to take lead vocals. Loewenstein provided his services for about half a dozen tunes, with Barlow and Gaffney splitting up the remaining songs evenly. Gaffney and Loewenstein also switched between drumming and playing guitar or bass, taking time every swap to rearrange their equipment to their liking. For most of the show Gaffney was on guitar, with Barlow on bass, but when the band mates swapped places Loewenstein switched to bass and Barlow hopped on guitar.

The set list ranged over nearly every album the band has produced, even the post-Gaffney era, after 1993. The beginning of the performance leaned towards earlier material, with the rest of the night being a mix. The night

See SEBADOH on page 6

The band last performed together 14 years ago, yet Sebadoh held together their sound for more than 30 songs at their performance at Northampton's Pearl Street Ballroom last week.

Mediocre Rock film proves trite

WIFE from page 5

the crudeness and volume of his humor. Still, he uses enough language for the movie to garner an R-rating. It was funny without trying to be too funny.

Torres didn't have much to develop on, playing the distinctive suburban mother and wife. At the International Auto Show, she has her eye on a minivan perfect for the family while Rock has his eye on a more appealing Porsche.

COURTESY PARAMOUNT PICTURES

Kerry Washington plays the tempting third wheel, Nikki, in Rock's co-written comedy.

Washington plays the role of the stunning seductress/man-eater well, enough to be despised for throwing her sexuality at a married man. She lives the life of a young 20-year-old always hitting the night clubs, when in reality, she's reached her 30s but fails to admit her age and responsibilities.

Many times throughout the film, her antics render thoughts of "Is she serious?" Showing up day after day, always in attractive attire, has co-workers questioning what Rock and Washington do behind closed doors. Steve Buscemi (Charlotte's Web) came through as the co-worker who, although he cheats on his own wife, advises Rock on the matter because, unlike him, he has emotions.

Rock's constant struggle in the movie is with temptation. He also battles with the thought of whether or not he loves his wife. His actions are funny yet can become irritating when considering he's still a married man at the end of the day.

He narrates throughout the movie allowing the audience into his comic mind. At times it's complimentary to a scene, and at others, unnecessary. They usually develop into amusing conversations with himself. Towards the end of the movie, Rock and Torres break out into song, adding an unusual musical element, which could've just as easily been left out.

Rock uses his familiar comic techniques to mock and comment on several aspects of our society. He pokes fun at how the "ideal" American life means owning a big house in the suburbs with the typical nuclear family and having a well-paying job that requires a snazzy business suit and leather briefcase. There's plenty of room for remarks on racial differences. His comedy is rooted in the fact that everything he criticizes is all too true.

Although the plot isn't too strong, and Rock's messages on marriage come through as somewhat clichéd, they aren't the biggest draw of the film. It's a comedy about a man placed in situations not beyond his control but definitely entertaining to see him endure. It's a movie to laugh through with friends on a Friday night.

Christina Fong can be reached at Cfong@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY PARAMOUNT PICTURES

The plot revolves around Rock's character, Richard, who is having doubts about his marriage and fantasies about another woman.

It's human nature to fantasize

GUILTY from page 5

if your temptations escalate.

Doing some research into fantasy, I found some shocking confessional statistics. Ever fantasized about someone else while having sex? If you have, you're not the only one, 85 percent of people polled in Tracy Cox's book "Super Hot Sex" say they have done so at one time or another. Those plastic, tacky shoes starring in those degrading "XXX" films; you just might be wearing them in his mind. Sex and relationship therapists suggest that fantasies are the basis of a long-term relationship. It's been proven that after two years of a relationship, many couples desire "new flesh." This is just satisfying, and human nature. What can you do? Nothing. It's simply how our brains function. Hot thoughts about someone you're not dating or perhaps don't know, doesn't mean you're planning on a romantic rendezvous or ever intend on being unfaithful, it just means you are a human being. Fantasizing is just a capricious thought and remains a daily activity for most, so feel free to indulge.

So in answer to your question — if the fantasy is about her looks and sex appeal, that is all fine and well, not to mention completely natural. You are only human and you will be attracted to more than one person. Playing out fantasies in your mind is a good way to satisfy those "sexual itches." But like I said, when and if those feelings begin to grow into more and maybe parallel to those you have for your girlfriend, you need to do some real thinking about what you really want. If you are really in love, no fantasy will play a higher priority than your girlfriend's affection.

Veronica Garrett can be reached at Vgarrett@student.umass.edu Email her if you have any need for advice, or send questions to Arts@dailycollegian.com.

Names have been changed to protect the identity of our contributors.*

Seeking Advice?

Email your dilemas and/or questions to Vgarrett@student.umass.edu, or Arts@dailycollegian.com.

All write-in's are confidential and anonymous*

Indie-rockers pull it together 14 years after last performance

COURTESY CHRISTIAN FAN BY MICHAEL MCCALL

Sebadoh mixed their Thursday night performance with several short songs, and managed to hold onto their audience which had a significant range in age.

SEBADOH from page 5

started with "Level Anything," from Sebadoh's first album, "The Freed Man," named for the Friedman Complex apartments at Smith College where Barlow lived with his then-girlfriend. Next the band jumped into songs from "Sebadoh III," including standout "Violet Execution." Songs from 1991's "The Freed Weed" were played, including "Ride the Darker Wave" and "It's So Hard to Be in Love."

Gaffney revealed that, "Moldy Bread," from "The Freed Man," was written in his local high school history class. Barlow reminisced about the day he moved from the Amherst area to Boston, causing him to write the song, "Vampire" for the album, "Smash Your Head on the Punk Rock."

Towards the end of the night, a man ran from the stage tried to dive into the crowd. Unfortunately, the mostly subdued crowd didn't expect the spontaneous move, and the man landed head-first on the Pearl Street floor. Security helped carry the unconscious man off the floor to seek medical attention.

The ill-advised incident caused a somber mood to overtake the crowd until the seven-song encore, which involved songs from 1993's, "Bubble and Scrape," the album on which Gaffney last appeared.

The hour and a half set consisted of many short, two or three minute songs and a staple of Sebadoh albums, which have on average more than 20 songs.

Corey Charron can be reached at Ccharron@student.umass.edu

Accelerated Culinary Arts Certificate Program

THE CULINARY INSTITUTE OF AMERICA

Raise the Bar on Your Career Possibilities

Increase the Marketability of Your Bachelor's Degree in Hospitality and Tourism Management, Food Science, or Nutrition

In just 30 weeks of cooking, studying wine, developing menus, and exploring culinary trends, you will:

- Gain new skills and insight into culinary techniques, ingredients, and cuisines
- Heighten your ability to work with chefs and lead a culinary operation
- Learn in an inspiring setting in the heart of America's wine country

Program Dates:
July 23, 2007–March 14, 2008

Space is Limited, so Apply Now!
Applications are due May 1, 2007.

www.ciaprochef.com/acap
707-967-2497

The Culinary Institute of America at Greystone
Napa Valley, California

The CIA at Greystone is a branch of the CIA, Hyde Park, NY
©2006 The Culinary Institute of America

WRITE FOR ARTS!
Come to the Daily Collegian newsroom in the Campus Center basement to speak with an editor. Get yourself published.
email Arts@dailycollegian.com

4TH ANNUAL MILLER LECTURE
BOSCH'S ENMITY
Exploring the paintings and drawings of the mysterious Heironymous Bosch (c. 1450–1516)

JOSEPH LEO KOERNER
Renowned scholar of Northern Renaissance art and currently a John Simon Guggenheim Fellow in Florence, Italy

WEDNESDAY APRIL 4 7PM
Weinstein Auditorium
Wright Hall, Smith College

Free and open to all
No reservations necessary

413.585.2760
www.smith.edu/artmuseum
Elm Street at Bedford Terrace
Northampton, MA 01063

SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART

Quick opts out of final two years at UMass

QUICK from page 10

Quick's record isn't astounding (23-22-6), but he still possesses the physical skill to play hockey at the next level. Some of his career highlights include defeating Boston College in Amherst last season, a win over No. 2 New Hampshire this season, four straight wins over Maine to close out this season and open the Hockey East playoffs and, of course, this season's NCAA Tournament.

UMass coach Don Cahoon said the topic of Quick leaving had been at the forefront ever since the Minutemen lost to Maine in the second round of the tournament on March 24.

"I've known for a long while that's what he really wanted," Cahoon said of Quick's desires to play at the next level. "This decision was his. He did what he felt was his homework. With Jon, he really wanted to do this and no one should deny him of that."

Cahoon was sure to point out there were no hard feelings about Quick leaving UMass early. The coach said he'll cheer loudest for his former player and wishes him the best of luck.

When informed of Quick's decision late last week, Cahoon said he gave his "last sell," but there was nothing he could do to sway the young goaltender.

"I'm delighted for him," he said. "Now that the initial shock is by me, I'm a big cheerleader. I'll be watching the box scores and watching where he's playing."

Although the Minutemen would rather play the next two years with Quick in net, the timing of the decision gives the team time to prepare for next season without him. Cahoon said UMass has a goaltending recruit lined up, but couldn't get into specifics because the player has yet to sign a National Letter of Intent.

What is certain, is that Quick's departure opens the door for Dan Meyers. Should Cahoon bring in a recruit, his goaltending corps will consist of Meyers, Jamie Gilbert and the unnamed freshman. Meyers has to be the current favorite as Gilbert hasn't shown much in his three years at UMass.

Meyers played in five games as a freshman this past season, three starts, and garnered praise from Cahoon on a number of occasions. He recorded a win in his first career start in the Minutemen's season opener against Sacred Heart. Meyers was playing in that game because Quick received a one game suspension for a violation of unspecified team rules.

He then led UMass to victory over Northeastern in the midst of UMass six-game winning streak to close out the season.

Jon Pelland can be reached at jpelland@student.umass.edu Log on to the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.

MELISSA PHILLIPS/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore Jon Quick was the highest-ever UMass player to be selected in the NHL Draft. The Los Angeles Kings selected the goaltender with the 72nd-overall pick in the second round of the 2005 draft.

Minutemen's losing streak reaches five es on the series sweep. And once again, it was Charlotte's starting pitcher that rose to the occasion.

BASEBALL from page 10

Sophomore Zach Rosenbaum picked up where Mills and Steedley left off. He earned his third win of the season, allowing only one run and four hits in six innings of work.

Charlotte's pitching dominated the series. The same cannot be said for the Minutemen on Sunday. Five UMass pitchers combined to allow 14 hits, five walks and just three strikeouts.

Sophomore Tim Comiskey suffered his second loss of the season, allowing five runs (three earned), four hits and three walks in 2 2/3 innings. The 49ers took a 3-0 lead in the first inning on two hits, an error and a balk by Comiskey.

Senior Bill Rankin answered in the top of the second with an RBI single to centerfield, scoring Jim Cassidy and making it a 3-1 game.

Charlotte's Chris Taylor got the power hitting started in the third inning when he took one deep off the top of the wall and out of play for the first of three 49er home runs on the afternoon. The other two homers were hit by Kris Rochelle and Brad McElroy.

The 49ers had a commanding 10-1 lead at the end of six innings before UMass scored four more runs in the seventh and eighth, but it wasn't enough to prevent a clean sweep.

UMass got better outings from senior Chris Lloyd and freshman Jared Ireni on Friday and Saturday, respectively, but it didn't match the performances that Mills and Steedley had on the opposing side.

Mills, who was named the National Player of the Week on Feb. 20, and Steedley, who was named National Pitcher of the Week on Feb. 13, each threw complete games in Charlotte's wins on Friday and Saturday.

Steedley (4-0) allowed one run on three hits and recorded eight strikeouts on Saturday, while Mills (7-1) allowed one run on five hits and recorded five strikeouts on Friday.

Lloyd (1-2) gave the Minutemen one of the only bright spots of the weekend. He had the strongest outing of any UMass pitcher this year, allowing only one earned run (two unearned) — seven hits and two strikeouts in eight innings of work.

Danny Picard can be reached at dpicard@student.umass.edu Long on to the Daily Collegian's sports blog for more coverage of all UMass sports.

COURTESY OF UMASS-AMHERST ATHLETICS

Ryan Franczek went 2-for-4 with a run scored playing second base for the Minutemen against Charlotte on Sunday. The performance brings his season average to .277.

Time to build off past experiences

PELLAND from page 10

Minutemen displayed their superior character in coming from behind on numerous occasions to beat the Nittany Lions. Their only lead of the game was the final, 6-5, score.

"Yeah, I think every game you win you have ability to build on," UMass coach Greg Cannella said after his team's third victory of the season. "With the quality of Penn State's program, the defensive effort they put forth today, the goaltending effort they put forth today, yeah, you can be proud about winning the game."

Now, more than ever, is when the Minutemen need to put together a string of victories, something they have yet to do this season. More than half the 2007 season has expired with little hope of seeing a repeat of last season's success.

But there is still time. Half a season consists of a lot of lacrosse.

Except its annual contest against Syracuse, the rest of UMass' games are ECAC affairs. Given the fact that the conference possesses an automatic qualifier to the NCAA Tournament this season, that might be the Minutemen's only shot at playing well into May.

That is unless they go on a run of Penn State circa 2003 proportions.

As reported prior to the weekend, the Nittany Lions of four seasons ago lost just one game after defeating the Minutemen in Amherst around this time.

UMass goaltender Doc Schneider who played unbelievably Saturday thinks a gritty win like the one his team enjoyed over Penn State is just what the Minutemen need to close out the season on a high note.

"We've had confidence, we've just been searching for answers a little bit because we've had so many close games and been on the other side of them," he said. "I think that experience helped us now."

The Minutemen have said they've gained valuable experience in a number of ways this season. Against Harvard it was the experience to put a team away, against Albany it was the ability to come back (they erased a seven-goal deficit to force overtime before losing 10-9) and Saturday it was more experience winning a close game.

It remains to be seen if all this experience is actually helping, but now is the time to find that out as the end of the 2007 campaign is creeping ever so closer.

Jon Pelland is a Collegian columnist He can be reached at jpelland@student.umass.edu Log onto the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegian.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass

Maroon and White take close contest

COURTESY OF UMASS-AMHERST ATHLETICS

The only lead midfielder Andrew Recchione and the Minutemen enjoyed over the Nittany Lions Saturday was the final score of 6-5.

M. LACROSSE from page 10

games," Schneider said. "We've been in so many close games this year and it was good to be on the other end of one."

Saturday's game was a low-scoring affair, something that Cannella was trying to avoid entering the game. The Minutemen like to play the up-tempo style and tried to push the ball up the field early.

But it was a scant 1-1 score at the end of the first quarter and 2-2 at the end of the second.

Freshman Bobby Hayes scored the Minutemen's second goal with 3:35 in the second quarter, which followed Pedrick's goal in the first quarter, a shot from just inside the box on the left wing.

The Nittany Lions put together a two-goal run in the third quarter thanks to their dynamic attack man, Brian Boyle, who darted out from behind the net and buried the ball in the bottom of the net for his second goal of the day at the 11:52 mark of the third.

Boyle created the next PSU goal with a similar move, but dished off to Rob Forster in the middle, who put it past Schneider for a 4-2 Penn State lead.

But the Minutemen, who have had trouble scoring in bunches this season, responded with two straight goals to tie the game, one by Whelan on a hectic sequence that involved two missed shots in a row, and one by sophomore attack Jim Connolly who scored from point-blank range after a nifty pass from Pedrick.

Rob Greenfield can be reached at rgreenfi@student.umass.edu Log on to the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports

COURTESY OF UMASS-AMHERST ATHLETICS

Penn State held Jim Connolly scoreless for much of the game, but couldn't stop him from tying the score early in the fourth quarter.

DailyCollegianSports.blogspot.com

BEACH CLUB TANNING STUDIOS
BUY 1 GET 1 free
PACKAGES LOTIONS ACCESSORIES
APRIL 5, 6, 7
U CONN 1284 STORRS RD STORRS, CT 06268 PH.(860) 487-HOTT (4688)
WESTFIELD 409 EAST MAIN ST WESTFIELD SHOPS PH.(413) 564-BTAN (8826)
U MASS 85 UNIVERSITY DR AMHERST, MA 01002 PH.(413) 549-HOTT (4688)

The Office of Jewish Affairs, Center for Student Development, and Student Affairs & Campus Life extend our warmest Passover greetings to the campus Jewish community…

Happy Passover!

May this joyous festival be a time of renewal for you and your families.

UMASS AMHERST
The Office of Jewish Affairs is part of the Center for Student Development. Visit us online at www.umass.edu/jewish or call 413.545.9642

Minutewomen fend off Flyers, weather

Rain forces Saturday's game into hour and a half delay

By Dominic Poli
Collegian Correspondent

With a 5-2 victory on Saturday, the Massachusetts softball team took both games of a two-day series with Dayton, after beating the Flyers, 8-0, on Friday.

The weather tested the Minutewomen's patience on Saturday as rain delayed the second game of the series by an hour and a half.

"It was a very, very warm day. And we got up real early to warm up for a 12 o'clock game and that didn't end up [starting] until an hour and a half later," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "But, those are the things you do when you play a sport like softball. It's affected by weather conditions and you need to be able to handle it and sustain your engines when it's time to play."

UMass	8
Dayton	0
UMass	5
Dayton	2

Sortino mentioned that being put on hiatus due to the soggy circumstances didn't dampen UMass (15-12-1, 2-0 Atlantic 10) spirits at all.

"Their intensity and their motivation and their purpose were very, very sharp," Sortino added. "After the rain did was neutralize the playing field. It was very, very wet and things like that neutralize your advantage."

The benefit of playing on its home field was diminished for Dayton due the slow, sticky conditions of the playing surface.

Once the weather finally let up, both teams got the scoring out of their systems early as no runs were scored after the second inning.

UMass drew first blood in the top of the first when junior Stacy Cullington socked a two-run home run, bringing in senior Amanda Morin, who had walked as the first batter of the game.

Cullington had great at-bats. Not just because she had a home run and a double off the fence, but I thought she came back from behind in the counts," Sortino said. "The pitcher is very hard to know his strike zone. He sets difficult to tell from ball to pitch and I thought she handled it very well."

The Flyers answered right back, scoring a run in the bottom half of the inning. First baseman Christine Liggers scored Dayton's first run when she was knocked in on a single through the right side by centerfielder Lauren Kellough.

In the top of the second, Mass captain Amanda Acampora added a home run of her own – a solo shot to left.

Immediately after that, sophomore Samantha Scime walked and was advanced up the base-paths by senior Michele Heroux, who was later forced out when Jessica Serio hit into a fielder's choice.

Dayton's catcher then advanced a base when classmate Whitney Williams grounded out to the third baseman. Morin moved Serio to third with a single to the left side, but couldn't stay at first. Morin then scored.

Alabama then walked to load the bases.

Scime and Morin were brought home both on errors on a ball hit by sophomore Whitney Moffica.

Dayton's pitcher finally retired the side by striking Cullington to second looking.

The Maroon and White let the Flyers score a counterpunch again in the first half of the frame. After getting two quick outs, Balschmiter walked Emily Linn. Malchow and Tiggers, both of whom advanced 60 feet on a wild pitch.

Dayton got its final run when Mollie Schrank singled down the left field line, bringing in Malchow from third.

The aluminum remained pretty quiet after that, as the game was held scoreless for the final five innings.

The fans in attendance did get off their seats for a false alarm in the top of the fourth, however.

After Mollica reached on a fielder's choice, Jill Andrews pinch ran for the sophomore at first base, after which, she advanced to second on a wild pitch. Cullington roped a double to right field and Andrews rounded third. The freshman raced to the plate but was met by a ball held by catcher Laura Matthews.

Junior Lauren Proctor then lined out to short, stranding Cullington who had moved to third on the throw to the plate.

Balschmiter finally wrapped up the win, setting the Flyers down in order in the seventh.

A bunt-single to the catcher in the top of the first was the only hit let up by Balschmiter in Friday's game.

The sophomore tossed five flawless innings, fanning seven Dayton batters while not allowing a single walk, or run scored.

"Brandice was outstanding on Friday afternoon. It was one of her better performances," Sortino said. "I thought that she really moved the ball around effectively. She was ahead in the counts and her pitch count was very, very low.

"The only hit they got very questionable – it was fielded by the catcher and thrown into right field and they scored it a hit," she added. "Those things are questionable. But, the ball didn't get more than a foot from home plate, so that's a pretty darn good game."

The Minutewomen recorded their first runs in the top of the second when Acampora singled up the middle to drive in senior Jackie Leman, who had pinch ran for Cullington. The next batter, Samantha Salato, then homered to right to make it a 3-0 game.

Junior Lauren Proctor and the rest of the Minutemen didn't let a little rain get in the way of their weekend sweep of Dayton. Proctor had one hit in three at-bats in Friday's win over the Flyers.

UMass got two more runs in the third when Molinari and Morin both singled. After advancing on a Mollica sacrifice bunt, both players were brought to the plate on a single into center by Cullington.

The final runs of the game were scored in the fourth. After Salato doubled down the right field line, Holness was sent in to pinch run for the sophomore. Holness moved to third on the single through the left side by freshman Sarah Reeves. After Reeves stole second, Holness got home on a sac fly by Whitney Williams.

Reeves moved to third on a ground out by Molinari and was brought around to score on the single through the right side by Morin.

Morin eventually reached the plate for the game's last run when a single by Mollica was mishandled by a Dayton fielder.

The Minutewomen's next challenge comes in the form of a doubleheader against the Rhode Island Rams tomorrow afternoon.

Dominic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu. Log on to the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all of UMass sports.

Junior Masha Pozar rounded out singles wins this weekend against Richmond and Old Dominion. He leads UMass [illegible]

UMass drops two disappointing matches

By Mike Connors
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts tennis team dropped two hard-fought matches to Old Dominion and Richmond this weekend. UMass lost to the Monarchs, 6-1, and then dropped a conference matchup to the Spiders, 5-2.

The Minutewomen (9-7, 1-1 Atlantic 10) face the Boston University Terriers this Friday in their first home match in nearly two months.

Saturday morning pitted UMass against a familiar foe in the Richmond Spiders. This was only the second match in conference play for the Minutewomen, the other being a 6-1 victory over Fordham in February.

In Richmond, UMass faced an A-10 team that has won the past three conference championships. The Spiders had also won four in a row entering Saturday's match.

After missing a chance at becoming UMass' all-time singles wins leader Friday, Michele Spiess was again unable to earn her 64th career victory against Richmond Saturday. But her coach was still pleased with the way she performed against a highly touted opponent.

"[Richmond's] No. 1 was ranked No. 65 in the country," UMass coach Judy Dixon said. "Michele lost in the sets and brought it to a tiebreaker."

For the second time this weekend, Masha Pozar scored the sole singles victory for the Minutewomen. She defeated the Spiders' Robin Carter in consecutive sets, 6-2, 7-6 (7-5).

ODU	6
UMass	1
UR	5
UMass	2

"Masha beat a top-20 player in the East, one who was ranked higher than Michele (Spiess)," Dixon said.

The Minutewomen dropped the 3-6 singles matches, and Dixon felt this was the one drop-off from Friday's performance against Old Dominion.

One notable performance came at the fifth slot. Sophomore Stephanie Gimenez took the first set 6-3, but came up short in the last two sets, 5-7, 2-6.

UMass reversed its luck in the doubles department on Saturday, winning at the first and third spots to take the point.

Spiess and Pozar were teamed up at the No. 1 position. UMass' top-two singles players defeated the conference's best doubles team in convincing fashion. Beatrice Grasu and Robin Carter were no match for Spiess and Pozar, 8-4.

Maude Leclusye and sophomore Laura Murillo played together for the first time this year and performed like seasoned veterans. The Spiders' Jessica Hubbard and Jelena Zivanovic fell, 8-2, to the aforementioned UMass duo.

Friday required UMass to travel to Virginia to face the Old Dominion Monarchs (12-3), who had won five of six matches.

Spiess was looking for her 64th singles victory, which would have given her sole possession of the UMass all-time singles victory record. Spiess split the first two sets against the Monarchs' Charleen Baarhoff, but lost the third, 6-4.

"Their No. 1 player is ranked No. 96 in the U.S.," said an encouraged UMass coach Judy Dixon. "Michele was ahead 3-0 in the 3rd set and had opportunities to win the match."

Pozar held down the No. 2 singles spot with a win over Old Dominion's Fernanda Luiz. After dropping the first set 3-6, Pozar rallied back to take the match with 6-2 triumphs in each of the second and third sets.

Dixon was proud of how the bottom of her singles lineup performed (spots 3-6), even though none of the matches resulted in victories for the Minutewomen.

Ellen de Jong fell to Larissa Santos in straight sets at the No. 3 slot, 2-6, 2-6. Leclusye took the first set against Jana Kubickova 6-3, but lost the final two, 3-6, 1-6.

Old Dominion's Barbara Costa defeated Stephanie Gimenez at the fifth position, 6-2, 6-2.

Murillo recovered from a 2-6 defeat in her first set at the No. 6 to take the second set, 6-4. The momentum then shifted back to the Monarchs. Daniela Cohen, who won the match with a 6-2 victory in the final set.

The doubles point also went to the Monarchs, but UMass netted a victory with the No. 3 tandem of Spiess and Laura Murillo. They defeated ODU's Barbara Costa and Daniela Cohen, 8-6.

Despite the Minutewomen's desire to win the match, Dixon was pleased with the team's effort and performance.

"Masha played great, we played well at the No. 3 doubles," Dixon said. "It was an all around well-played match."

The Minutewomen will have their hands full Friday afternoon with the No. 74 ranked Boston University Terriers. Spiess will look to take the school singles victories record, and the team will be presented with quite the challenge.

However, coach Dixon is skeptical that the match will be played, with snow a possibility in the forecast.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu. Log on to the Daily Collegian's sport's blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.

CORRECTION

There were two errors concerning the men's and women's track and field season preview in Friday's edition of the Daily Collegian. Jordan Veney and Kristen Bakanowski will not be competing for the UMass this spring. Veney is no longer with the team and Bakanowski is redshirting after having surgery in the fall.

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Insurance Replacement Rates FREE PICK-UP
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd North Amherst, MA
www.pottersauto.com
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement

Natural. Gentle. Safe. Effective.
• headaches • neck pain
• back pain • sports injuries
• auto injuries • and more...
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractor
Participating provider
www.AmherstFamilyChiro.com
Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health
228 Triangle Street
Amherst, MA
Most insurance accepted
549-1500

The UMass Student Union Gallery presents
a lecture by internationally renowned artist
LAURIE ANDERSON
as part of their 50th Anniversary Celebration
APRIL 4, 2007 at 7PM
STUDENT UNION BALLROOM
Laurie Anderson is ba
UMass Student Union Gallery 1975 2007
Lecture Costs: UMass ID: free, 5-College ID: $3, General Public: $5
413.545.0792 (TICKETS AVAILABLE AT TIX BOX OFFICE)
www.umass.edu/rso/suag
This event has been organized and sponsored by the Student Union Gallery. It has also been sponsored by the UMass Arts Council, UMass Alumni Association, Center for Student Development, Office of Student Affairs and Campus Life, Student Affairs Cultural Enrichment Fund, SGA and GSS.

"IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT"
REGISTRATION FOR FALL 2007
The Writing Program Placement Test
will be offered on:
Wednesday, April 4, @ 6:30 pm, Bartlett 109
You must take this exam to qualify for enrollment in EnglWrit 112 (College Writing).
This test may be taken only once.
Students do not need to register for the test.
The next group exam will be offered in the Fall of 2007.

Happy April Fool's Day!

Love always,
Teddy the friendly Turnip

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

		4		9		6
					2		7
1	8	9			4		2
6					1		5
		1				8
	5		6					9
	7		8			4	9	5
	9		3
	1			5		2

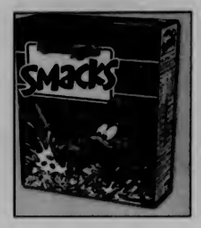
Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

ACROSS
1 Golfer Kuerne
5 Audible kiss
10 Skater Lipinski
14 Throw hard
15 Paddle craft
16 Vivacity
17 Location
18 Furious
19 Privation
20 Old-time newsman
22 Experiments
23 Lebron James' squad
25 Male swan
28 Part of a mun
29 Printer letters
30 Time off work abbr
33 Kner and Ellison
35 Sally Field movie
37 First-stringers
38 Black goo
39 Infamous Helmsley
40 Wobbled
42 Whaler's cohort
43 6th sense
44 Bled
45 Astronaut Grissom
46 Limb
47 Braves owner
50 "Misery" star
53 Anti-government activist
57 "Jane ___"
58 Fantasy genre
59 Brainstorm
60 Having little fat
61 One-armed bandits
62 Christmas carol
63 Eurasian vipers
64 On edge
65 It all ___ falls

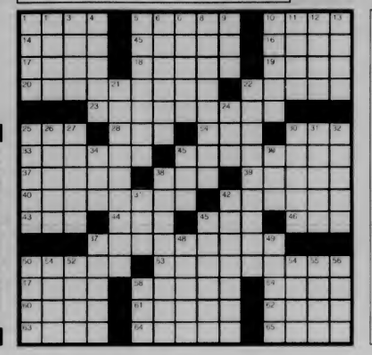
DOWN
1 Come again?
2 Prefix for dollar or Disney
3 Concoct
4 Mel of cartoon voices
5 Neck wraps
6 "Flashdance ___" song
7 Seraph or cherub
8 Passageway
9 E or G, e.g.
10 Lauren of "The Love Boat"
11 Lamenter's cry
12 Wild speech
13 Psalms
21 Soft fabrics
22 Margarita ingredient
24 Clean air grp.
25 Shipping box
26 "Belleteur" author
27 Censor's insert
30 Stringed instrument
31 "Lou Grant" star
32 Amulet
34 Touch lightly
35 Down in the dumps
36 Narc's org.
38 Octopus arm
41 Cool!
42 Daily genesis
45 Surgical implants
47 Future adults
48 Alliance
49 River of Cologne
50 Composer Bartok
51 Affirmative votes
52 Pitfall
54 False god
55 Notices
56 Narrative story
58 Mach+ prefix

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Crossword hint...



Five Across: Audible kiss



Continuing & Professional Education
UMASS AMHERST SUMMER 2007
Get an early start on your summer plans!
• New online GenEds
• Same great faculty!
• Smaller classes
• Two Sessions!
I: June 4 – July 2
II: July 6 – August 22
Registration begins April 2
Plan now by visiting us @ www.UMassUlearn.net/dc

Quote of the Day

"The body is meant to be seen, not all covered up."
-Marilyn Monroe

Paul By Billy O'Keefe

SO... HERMAN TOLD ME YOU HIRED AN EMPLOYEE FOR YOUR DOG-WALKING BUSINESS? AND YOU'RE PRETTY PROFITABLE?
YEP.
AND IT'S NOT SOME APRIL FOOL'S JOKE?
NOPE. I'M A SUCCESS.
WOW. I'M IMPRESSED!
NAH. GOT HIM.
NOW THAT—
WAIT, IT'S NOT OVER.
DOINK!
I'LL BET YOU GOOD—OH GOD!

MS Paint By Mike Audette

Hard Knocks By Louis Coppola

HARD KNOCKS
READY FOR THIS, KNOX? I THINK I KNOW HOW I CAN MAKE A LOT OF MONEY.
America's Next Top Male Model?
I'LL PRESENT MYSELF AS THE CONSERVATIVE SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN, AND I'LL WIN!
I'M WILLING TO DO NUDITY FROM ANY ANGLE.

Welcome To Falling Rock National Park By Josh Shalek

FOOOOOOO
FOOOOOOO
Why do airplanes make such horrid sounds? They could sound like a purring cat, or raindrops on leaves!
I guess not everything can be aesthetically pleasing!
Right now I'm aesthetically distrusted

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
All the calendar companies in the world are playing a prank. Today is actually April 1st.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Don't throw rocks at people with guns.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Despite all of its efforts, the Saltine will never surpass the almighty oyster cracker.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
If you were a panda bear, you could only eat bamboo and you'd always look sad.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
If you run into trouble, tell him his mother is looking for him.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You will discover a deep seeded passion for the ancient art of Yo-Yo.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You will float through the challenges of this week like the cherub that you are.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Steal from your employer and claim that you're "taking your work home with you."

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Today, the comeback "Make me!" will prove useful.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Pick the green one my friends, the green one.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Feel the burn...take a bath in hot sauce.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
CVS is more than likely the biggest drug dealer in the world.

Chicago Pizzaria
Free Delivery!
PIZZA - CALZONES - SUBS - WRAPS
SALADS - PASTA - DINNERS
RIBS - SEAFOOD - SLICES
PARTY SIZE PIZZA NOW AVAILABLE!
CALZONE SLICES...LIKE NO OTHER!
Now open for lunch!
HOURS
Sun-Wed: 11am-2am
Thurs-Sat: 11am-3am
Order For DELIVERY or PICK UP
(413) 549-6073
150 Fearing Street
Next to Patterson Dorm
Amherst, MA 01002

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

Like no other course, Army ROTC Join the wave of your generation's willingness to serve our country No strings attached! Call 413-545-2321 www.umass.edu/army-rotc

Apartments for Rent

Mill Valley Estates APARTMENT FOR RENT 2 bedroom $1125, 3 bedroom $1425, 4 bedroom $2175 Accepting Applications, 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winnco.com

Apartments for Rent

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Center of town, 1,2,3 bedrooms hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Employment

Summer on Cape Cod Rent & utilities paid in exchange for providing transportation for teen. Easy walking distance to downtown & beaches, awenkozma@aol.com

Full time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office, $9.50/hour Applications available at 235 Whitmore and are due April 13th.

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

Employment

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Now Hiring Atkins Farms Country Market 1150 West Street Amherst MA www.atkinsfarms.com (413) 253-9528 Sales Associates: Evenings and Weekends in the Bakery, Deli and Candy Departments. Cashiers: Days Evenings & weekends at the Front Register Area.

Employment

Attention All Juniors and Senior! April 6th is the last day to apply to become a legal Assistant with the Student Legal Services Office. Earn 12 undergraduate credits while gaining valuable experience in the legal field! Contact us at 545-1995 or stop by our office at 922 Campus Center!

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

Services

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992. www.tapestryhealth.com

Summer Sublet

Alpine Commons apartment June-August 15th $2050/month includes utilities. 413.204.9519 or jennaw@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, APRIL 2, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Quick end to bright career at UMass

Sophomore goalie surpasses final two seasons to turn pro

BY JON PELLAND
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Before Jon Quick ever stepped foot in Amherst, there was always the possibility of the talented goaltender leaving before completing his four years on the Massachusetts hockey team.

Quick brought that possibility to reality late last week when he decided to forgo his final two years of eligibility at UMass and join the professional hockey ranks.

He signed an entry-level contract with the Los Angeles Kings, the team that selected him in the third round (72nd overall) of the 2005 NHL amateur draft. Quick is the highest UMass hockey player taken in the draft.

The terms of the contract were not disclosed, but the Springfield Republican reported it may be in the $300,000 range for the first three years.

The Minutemen turned in the best season in school history this year making their first NCAA Tournament, a feat they owe in large part to the play of Quick in net. The team voted the sophomore its 2006-07 Most Valuable Player at its annual banquet on Saturday.

Quick finished this season with a 19-12-5 record while posting a 2.16 goals-against average and .929 save percentage. The latter two stats ranked him 11th and fifth in the nation, respectively.

The 21-year-old Quick says he left the Minutemen to pursue greater challenges and his lifelong dream of playing in the NHL.

"I felt that I was ready for a new challenge," Quick said of his decision to turn pro. "My goal in life is to play in the NHL, it always has been. I feel that the opportunity that I have in front of me is the best opportunity for me to complete that goal."

Before he can make the jump to the Kings, Quick must first make a stop in the American Hockey League. He will report to the Manchester (New Hampshire) Monarchs as early as this week. While he admits the professional game will be much different than what he's used to, Quick is more excited than nervous about joining the Monarchs.

"I'm excited because it's going to be a new experience and I'm looking forward to that," Quick said. "I'm a little anxious to get up there. I kind of just want to get up there and see what it's like."

In two years at UMass – one as a fulltime starter

See QUICK on page 7

COLLEGIAN | MASSIMILIANO BEATRICE

After signing an entry-level contract with the Los Angeles Kings, the team that selected him in the 2005 NHL Draft, Jon Quick is now a former member of the Massachusetts hockey team. Quick was more than stellar during his only season as UMass' No. 1 goaltender, posting a .929 save percentage.

Garber's late score lifts Maroon and White

BY ROB GREENFIELD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Finally, the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team emerged from a close game with a smile.

The Minutemen escaped the clutches of the Penn State Nittany Lions at Garber Field Saturday, defeating the men in blue, 6-5, with a sudden-death overtime goal by senior captain Brett Garber. It was his only score of the game.

UMass (3-5, 1-1 ECAC) returns to Garber Field next Saturday for its next game against St. John's at 12 p.m.

"I was able to find some open space on the backside," Garber said on the field after the game. "[Midfielder Rory] Pedrick made a great pass across the field."

The Minutemen tied the game at 5-all in the fourth quarter when attackman Denis Whelan scooted around the left side of the net from behind the cage and whipped a laser into the top right corner with 8:50 left in the final frame.

The two teams were in a stalemate for the rest of the game, after UMass goalie Doc Schneider and Penn State netminder Drew Adams put on a in their respective nets. Adams finished with 20 saves – most of the acrobatic nature – and Schneider saved a career-high 15.

Garber ended things with just under four minutes left in overtime, but not after the two goalies made a defensive game into a clinic.

"We gave up five [goals] against a really good offensive team," UMass coach Greg Cannella stated. "We had a sense of urgency in overtime. We tell the guys in overtime, 'don't change the way you play,' because you can get overaggressive on the defensive end.'"

Schneider was excellent all afternoon but Adams matched him bloss for blow, including a sequence where the two goalies made impressive saves two plays in a row. Schneider wasn't having any of the individual talk though.

"[Adams] was excellent, unbelievable," he said. "With me and him, I felt like it was the best attack going against the best defenseman. I expected it out of him and it was fun.

"But if you get into that then you lose your focus. You have to keep focused."

The Minutemen have played three one-goal games this season, losing two (Yale, Albany) and winning one (Harvard).

The loss to Albany, ranked No. 2 at the time, was especially difficult because the Minutemen came back from a seven-goal deficit only to lose in overtime. The Minutemen have also lost two-goal games on the road at Hofstra and Loyola, another ranked team.

So this win over the Nittany Lions, who defeated the Minutemen by two goals last season, is satisfying because it was the close one that UMass hasn't been able to pull out.

"I think every game you win you have the ability to build on," Cannella said. "We won a close one today and we've been on the short end of a lot of them this year."

"We've had confidence but we've been losing so many close

See M. LACROSSE on page 7

Gritty victory could turn season around

The Massachusetts men's lacrosse team needed something to brighten its otherwise dreary season. And the Minutemen's overtime win over Penn State Saturday may just be what they needed to turn a downhill season around.

Jon Pelland

There haven't been many instances this season that reminded anyone of UMass' run to the national championship game a year ago. Although none of its five losses were lopsided affairs, the Minutemen just couldn't seem to figure out how to close out a game.

The only other time they did that, prior to Saturday, was an 11-10 win over Harvard in the season's early going. The Minutemen fended off a feisty Crimson comeback effort to seal that win.

Again Saturday, Brett Garber demonstrated the Minutemen know how to win close games.

UMass' entire bench rushed the field after Garber's laser beat Penn State goalie Drew Adams in overtime. The scene was reminiscent of when the Minutemen defeated Syracuse in overtime two years ago or downed Maryland in the Final Four last year.

It was a sign that this team has yet to give up on its post-national-finalist campaign, and don't expect them to do so anytime soon. A team like this just needed something to spark its season. Many thought it was going to happen after the Harvard win, but that game was different.

That game it seemed like UMass clung to victory and didn't really put the Crimson away. Saturday, the

See PELLAND on page 7

Rory Pedrick played a large role in the Minutemen's win over Penn State Saturday. He fed Brett Garber for the game-winner in overtime.

Former long-time coach passes away

Former coach of the Massachusetts men's and women's ski teams, Bill MacConnell, passed away March 17 at the age of 88. MacConnell began coaching in 1960 and retired following the 2001 season.

William P. MacConnell was a staple of UMass athletics for more than 40 years and was also one of the most successful leaders the school has ever seen.

Inducted into the UMass Athletic Hall of Fame in 2003, MacConnell coached his squads to 30 divisional titles in his time as the Maroon and White's headman – 18 men's titles and 12 women's.

The Minutemen won 18 consecutive division championships from 1968 to 1986 and did not finish lower than third during the rest of MacConnell's career. The women's squad won 11 straight titles from its inception in 1976 to 1986.

MacConnell was also a professor of forestry at the University and graduated from the school in 1943 (when it was called Massachusetts State College). He was immediately drafted upon finishing school, but returned in 1948.

He took up coaching the men's team in 1960 and was a very devoted coach and mentor. MacConnell invested countless hours of his own time to support his team.

During the team's nearly-constant success, MacConnell also fought to maintain the team's varsity status. He helped restore the teams' varsity status after it was demoted to a club team in 1985. The team was reinstated before the start of the 1986 season.

There are a number of stories recounting the coach writing his own articles about the team's races and sliding them under the door of Media Relations, posing as a student writer to give his racers exposure.

MacConnell's dedication is evident, as the head coach's position is now full-time (he did it part-time while teaching at the school).

Both UMass squads now race in the MacConnell Division of the Eastern Collegiate Ski Conference, named after their long-time leader.

—Jeremy Rice

49ers sweep first-ever series with UM

Charlotte's Mills, Steedley out-duel Minutemen pitchers

BY DANNY PICARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts baseball team had never played Charlotte in its history before Friday, and after the 49ers' weekend sweep, the Minutemen won't want to play them again.

Charlotte (22-5, 5-1 Atlantic 10) benefitted from back-to-back complete games on Friday and Saturday by pitchers Adam Mills and Spencer Steedley, winning by scores of 3-1 and 6-1, respectively. The 49ers then scored 13 runs on 14 hits in the series finale to win, 13-5, sending UMass (4-12, 2-4 A-10) back to Amherst on a five-game losing streak.

The Minutemen head to Worcester tomorrow to face Holy Cross at 3 p.m. before opening their first home series on Friday in a three-game set with Rhode Island. The four-game homestand will conclude with the make-up game against Boston College next Monday.

The A-10 preseason rankings predicted Charlotte to finish first in the conference this season. Over the weekend, UMass experienced firsthand why the coaches reasoned this way.

The 49ers' bats exploded on Sunday, putting the finishing touch-

See BASEBALL on page 7

Although he usually plays second base, sophomore Adam Tempesta was the designated hitter for the Minutemen against Charlotte Sunday.

THE MASSACHUSETTS MORNING WOOD

FARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, APRIL 2, 2007 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Hef calls it quits: no more dirty time

BY HAZEL MAE JOHNSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The swinging days of scantily clad women and extravagant parties are over for Hugh Hefner. In a statement released yesterday, Hefner said he will be altering his life drastically just in time for his 81st birthday as the founder and publisher of Playboy Magazine has decided to become celibate.

Hefner, whose birthday is April 9, released his statement in the letter from the editor in the May edition of Playboy Magazine. It said in part, "As I reach further my ninetieth decade my beliefs and hobbies are changing. No longer do I feel the need to prove myself sexually."

Hefner married his second wife Kimberly Conrad in 1989. Since their 1998 separation he has been involved with many women often simultaneously. Most recently Hefner has been dating Holly Madison, Bridget Marquardt, and Kendra Wilkinson who all currently reside with him at the Playboy Mansion. The three women have their own television show "The Girls Next Door" in which Hefner has a supporting role.

Given the current state of Hefner's personal life the decision to abstain from sex comes as a shock to many. The statement released by Hefner said this about his current girlfriends, "I continue to love my three girlfriends and hope they appreciate how important they are in my life." It did not, however, mention in what ways their lives would be altered as a result of his chastity vow.

It appears that at least initially the group is maintaining a united front. Hefner's number one girlfriend Madison said, "Puffin (Hefner) made this choice on his own. It doesn't change my feelings for him and it won't change our relationship."

Madison and Hefner began their relationship in 2001 and in the past few months have been rumored to be seriously considering marriage. Hefner has claimed that his relationship with Madison is the best he's ever had. What his decision will do to any marriage plans is unknown. Downplaying those wedding rumors Madison said, "There has been little serious talk of our getting married. Bridget and Kendra are still living here and involved with Hef, and their feelings matter too."

Marquardt and Wilkinson have been direct and honest about their feelings towards Hefner's self-imposed celibacy. Marquardt, who has been living in the Mansion since 2002, said the announcement has had little impact on her life and that she would continue to date and support Hefner as long as he wanted her. She said, "I love Hugh! He's been really supportive of me for so long. His decision to give up sex isn't any reason to abandon him or this relationship."

The youngest of Hefner's girlfriends, Wilkinson, appears less sure about what the results of Hefner's decision will be. Wilkinson said that she's "worried about the awesome parties and naked girls" who make up the Mansion's social calendar. Regardless Wilkinson said, "I love living here with Hugh and Holly and Bridget and I hope this doesn't change our lives that much."

Fears about the reach of Hefner's new chaste lifestyle are echoing through his business empire. Whether the magazine, radio, television and Internet branches of the Playboy business will be cleaned up has yet to be announced. Attempts to reach Playboy's editor and Hefner's daughter Christine Hefner were unsuccessful. If the issue Hefner's decision was imbedded within are any indication Playboy will continue to be a hallmark of a sexually liberated America.

Renowned horny man Hugh Hefner throws in the towel after 70 some odd years of humping. The old timer said that he's conciously chosen a life of celibacy, and it's not because he's lost air in the ol' tire.

New mega-band to feature music legends and Ringo Starr

COURTESY RINGOSTARR.COM

Former Beatles member Ringo Starr will be among four musicians to team up to create a megaband or washed up rock stars.

BY DYLAN YOUNG
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Yesterday public relation agents of Paul McCartney, Ringo Starr, Pete Townsend and Roger Daltrey announced that the musicians have formed the ultimate British Invasion band and are planning to invade small clubs all across America this summer starting in Northampton's Pearl Street Nightclub.

"It made sense to join forces with Pete and Roger, we needed a guitarist and no one singers better then Daultry, so we figured why not ask them to play with us," McCartney told the Daily Collegian in an exclusive interview.

Fans of The Who and The Beatles can expect to hear material from both legendary acts as well as new material from their upcoming album due out this July. The album is going to be a concept album similar to Green Day's "American Idiot."

"The concept is going to be much like "American Idiot," but even harder to recognize," Townsend said.

As for the band's vocals, all four members will get a chance to sing their own songs. McCartney will take over the drum kit when it's Starr's turn to take the microphone for "Yellow Submarine." Fans of the Beatle's "White Album" may not have noticed, but McCartney did most of the drumming while Starr quit the band many times during temper tantrums only to come back again after he'd sobered up.

The new original material will mostly be Daultry and McCartney taking turns with vocal duties, but according to Townsend he does not mind.

"I have to really focus on my guitar playing with these new songs, they are complicated jams," says Townsend.

McCartney has recently admitted he is not really signing with a Starbucks record label, but he was really just ordering a latte and got confused with the way to order it.

"I was bloody thirsty. I was tired from the late night jamming with the guys and I needed a latte, sorry for the confusion," McCartney said.

So far there has been little protest from the late John Lennon about the formation of the band. In fact the only protest at all was from Yoko Ono, saying she wanted to join and promised not to break them up. McCartney and Starr had no comment on the matter. But according to Townsend, she is too old to join the band and he would much rather have a younger female join. He is currently holding auditions on his web site for the final member.

As for why the tour is going to start in little old Northampton Mass., all four musicians agree that they want to explore the party scene afterwards at the neighboring colleges.

"Ringo was reading the Princeton Review for his granddaughter the other day and just liked the Five College Community," McCartney said. At press time all of the Five Colleges declined to comment.

Dylan Young can be reached at Dirtydirty@wegotyou.com.

Two 'Sopranos' stars replaced, final episodes leak on internet

BY BELLA BARDOT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

At a press conference in New York, N.Y. yesterday, HBO made the shocking announcement that the final nine episodes of their hit series "The Sopranos," which is scheduled to start on April 8, at 9 p.m., will feature drastic changes to their cast members. The most notable change is that the series is replacing front man, James Gandolfini, who stars as Tony Soprano, with former Magnum P.I. front man, Tom Selleck.

The press conference, which came about in response to an internet leak on Saturday showing chunks of the final season's last episodes, also revealed that the role of Carmella Soprano (Edie Falco) will be replaced by former Seinfeld diva turned B-list actress, Julia Lewis Dreyfus.

"We are appalled at [the leak]" said Robert B. Johansson, HBO's media representative, who said there are no leads on how the episodes were leaked. Regardless of how, who or why the episodes were leaked, one thing is for sure, fans are very disappointed.

Media experts are speculating that the negative response to the leaked episodes is due to weakness in the script, especially when compared to previous seasons, combined with below par performances from Selleck and Louis-Dreyfus. "This has always been an awarding winning, critically acclaimed series. I just saw these episodes today, and they looked as though HBO put a monkey on the writing staff," said veteran television critic Barbara Cruise.

The episodes show Selleck and Louis-Dreyfus, who both joined the cast three episodes into the second part of the sixth season, are visibly inferior to their predecessors. Selleck, who's of Scottish and Slovakian origin, can hardly cover a New Jersey accent, let alone the gutsy swagger of Italian-American macho-man Gandolfini.

"Since the information has been unleashed on the internet, HBO felt it was necessary to announce the cast rearrangements publicly today, to avoid a fan-base backlash," said Johansson.

HBO representatives also went on to say that the Sopranos' enormous fan base may feel betrayed by the change in these leading roles, but that the changes were necessary due to budgetary discrepancies between Gandolfini, Falco and HBO.

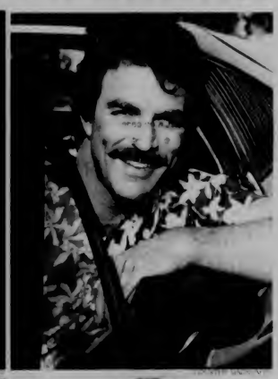
"They just got greedy," said Johansson when asked why Gandolfini and Falco left the series after six seasons. The company alleges that the two actors requested a whopping 20 percent increase of their salary, which would raise Gandolfini's from a yearly 6 million to a hefty 7.2 million. Falco's salary of 5.5 million would therein be lifted to 6.6 million. According to Johansson, these numbers just won't fly.

"Julia agreed to take on Carmella's role for only 2 million[," said HBO's financial representative, Gordon P. Phleming. Louis-Dreyfus, who long held the title of Elaine from Seinfeld, was eager to take on another HBO endeavor, having already appeared in the network's hit comedy series, "Curb Your Enthusiasm," in which Seinfeld creator Larry David stars.

"I can do a pretty mean Carmella," said Louis-Dreyfus at yesterday's press conference, who then told press representatives to "check this out." The actress proceeded to purse her lips and exclaim, "I listen Tony, if you're gonna keep doing what you do, that at the very least I want you to get a vasectomy!"

In addition to revealing a lack-luster of acting ability between Louis-Dreyfus and Selleck, the controversial final episodes also show what some television critics, not to mention fans, consider to be a very "weak" ending.

"The final episode just sort of fizzles out," said New Jersey native and NYU student, Brianna Culprin, who was one of many fans to rally outside of the HBO studio in New York last night. Culprin held a sign outside of HBO's entrance that read, "Sopranos' fans want 44 Magnum's, not Magnum P.I.'s!" She, among many others, are disappointed that the final season ends with Tony withdrawing from organized crime, and becoming a government witness eventually settling in Oregon as part of a witness protection program. Additionally, the leaked episodes reveal that the character of Carmella undergoes a painful gender-change surgery thereby becoming male and taking-on the identity of a chain-drug store owner that Tony whacks earlier in the season. The character of Christopher Multisanti, still played by Michael Imperioli, becomes the new boss of the Jersey crime ring, after Steven Van Sant's character, Silvio, drops dead of a heart attack while engaging in sexual relations with a stripper in the "Bada Bing" gentleman's club. *These episodes can be viewed at youtube.com. and Bella Bardot can be reached at BardotFartot@sillyb*tch.com*



Two main "Sopranos" cast members have been replaced by two hangers-on of the television industry. New leaks of the soon to air drama show big guy Gandolfini is replaced by "In and Out" (and then "In" again) actor, Tom Selleck, and Edie Falco's role is taken over by "Seinfeld" star Julia Louis-Dreyfus.

THE MASSACHUSETTS MORNING WOOD

STICKS AND BALLS

MONDAY, APRIL 2, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Vinnies tells Coltsies to screwsies

BY TOTAL HOMER
NOW ARE YOU HAPPY?

FOXBORO The New England Patriots announced two more major acquisitions yesterday to their roster for the upcoming 2007 season.

The Patriots disclosed the return of kicker Adam Vinatieri after a one-year stay in Indianapolis with the Colts, where he won his fourth Vince Lombardi Trophy.

The second addition to the Patriots squad was that very same trophy. Vinatieri was seen leaving the Colts stadium late Saturday with a large bad. It is now known that the bag contained the Colt's 2006 Super Bowl trophy.

In one of the greatest heists in recent human history, coach Bill Belichick said yesterday that letting Vinatieri leave for Indianapolis last year was "all a part of my plan."

In a rare moment of candidness from the coach, Belichick challenged the press for not thinking that he knew how best to get his team a fourth Super Bowl Trophy in six years.

"Don't you guys remember 2001?" Belichick said. "How the hell do you think I got that one, pulled it out of my ass? No. I used ingenuity on defense and about 30 trick plays on offense. That and I put a hit on Bledsoe so I could get Tom Brady in at quarterback. That worked out didn't it? Well this year I had to do something different."

He went on to say that the trade of Deion Branch and the signing of Reche Caldwell was also planned out long before the season started.

"I knew Deion was going to be a douche about this whole getting-paid thing," Belichick added, "so I got Caldwell to be an out-of-nowhere hero. That didn't pan out quite as I planned, but not all of them do."

Knowing his team wasn't going to have enough to get all the way, Belichick reportedly sent Vinatieri as a spy and decoy. And now because of several loop-holes in the NFL's rule book, the Pats are keeping the Super Bowl trophy.

"If Pacman Jones can make it rain on strippers, I figured I can make it pour on the Colts," Belichick said. "Players get away with so many crimes, I thought I'd try my hand at theft. Once again, the NFL Players' Union comes through."

There was no rule against stealing the trophy and becoming the Super Bowl champion through that means. It only says the team who wins the trophy will be crowned the Champions for that season.

This only further fuels the rivalry between the Patriots and Colts, who have been at it since Peyton Manning got spanked by an 0-2 Pats team in 2001 in Brady's first career start. Since that time, Manning's signature "aww, shucks" pose has become as famous as Brady holding up the Vince Lombardi Trophy.

"That Manning guy is a total tool," Vinatieri said. "All he ever talked about was how funny his commercials are. Come on though, those ads suck. I know that's him with a fake moustache. And he talks even slower than he runs."

Head coach Tony Dungy said he had no comment on getting closer than anyone ever has to winning the big one and still failing. However, Manning could be heard in the background saying, "aww, dangit."

Dungy's reasoning for not appealing the action to the league was that he is a complete softy and has not stood up to a single person since former quarterback Shaun King told Dungy he was going to be the starting quarterback during the 1999 season, back when Dungy coached the Tampa Bay Buccaneers.

Asked how he was able to break his contract with the Colts and return to the New England after one season away, Vinatieri said he never signed with the Colts.

"I thought it would be funny, so I signed all the paperwork with Mike Vanderjagt's name," Vinatieri said.

Another stunning turn in this story, this means that Vanderjagt still has a kicking job in the NFL, despite being released by then-Dallas Cowboys coach Bill Parcells, who goes through more kickers than Brady goes through supermodels.

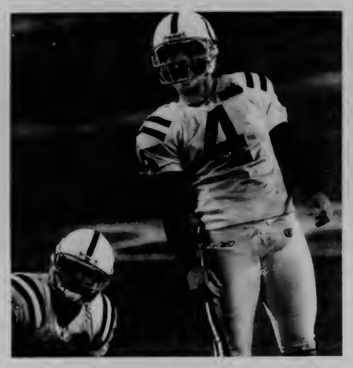
This means that the only kicker whose mouth is big enough to literally insert his foot into can continue to do so while getting paid like a real athlete.

Caldwell was named the new Super Bowl MVP for dropping those two passes in the AFC Championship Game, allowing the Colts to take the lead in the final minute of regulation.

"It's an honor to be part of the Patriots' legacy," Caldwell said. "Branch got the MVP without scoring a touchdown, now I've pulled it off without catching the damn ball. I'm a hero in New England, and I couldn't be happier. Wait, I guess that means they're gonna cut me too. No wonder they signed all those receivers. "

Caldwell hung up the phone at that point.

Total Homer can be reached at makingthefanshappy@umass.student.edu. You can read more from Homer at his blog at whatobjectivity.blogspot.com



Carl Pav-ussy injured again

BY REGGIE JEFFERSON
YANKEE KILLER

In one of the sports world's truly bizarre injuries, New York Yankee starting pitcher Carl Pavano, who's once-promising career has been derailed by a bevy of injuries, was injured while reading the Massachusetts Daily Collegian, yesterday.

Yankee officials placed Pavano on the 60-day disabled list just hours after Pavano was found rolling on the carpet of their clubhouse squeezing his the pinky on left hand, which apparently was inflicted with what trainers called "a nearly-fatal paper cut."

"I could have lost my finger," screamed a nearly hysterical Pavano.

Witnesses claim while reading the Daily Collegian, Pavano attempted to turn a page when the paper sliced his pinky, causing him to fall to the ground in agony while teammates Derek Jeter and Jason Giambi quickly ran to comfort him.

"I'm just happy he's alive," said Yankee manager Joe Torre. "I mean, I don't normally believe in miracles, but I think we all just saw one right here. That's one tough son-of-a-bitch."

Pavano said he'd like to return in the 2009 season, but that he'll "need to work [his] ass off."

Team doctors were somewhat perplexed by all the commotion.

"He could literally pitch today. It's a paper cut...on his non-throwing hand. It's not even bleeding," said team physician Kevin Maas.

Yankee third baseman Alex Rodriguez fought back tears while talking about Pavano's "courage."

"I don't even know how he walked out of here. Jesus works in mysterious ways," said Rodriguez.

Celtics tank job

Celtics shoot to lose like no other

BY DANA BARROS
BRING BASKETBALL BOOM

In hopes of increasing their chances of winning the draft lottery and having the choice between collegiate superstars Kevin Durant and Greg Oden, the Boston Celtics have cut nearly every member of their team and signed Celtics-of-old to fill their roster.

Instead of Paul Pierce, Al Jefferson and Gerald Green, the 'new' Celtics are now built around Joe Forte, Eric Montross, and Acie Earl.

"I like the direction we're going," said Celtic General Manager Danny Ainge. "Of course, the 'direction' is down, but it's getting us closer to Durant."

Andrew Declercq was wallowing away in Revere, Mass. when he received the call from Ainge asking if he was interested in 'tanking' the Celtics season.

Pervis Ellison and Alton Lister were living together in Northampton when they were offered new contracts.

While Ainge has done 'his best' to assemble 'the worst' he remains slightly concerned that some of his players could put some nice games together.

"Forte was kinda nasty in college when his head was on right, that's not the Joe Forte I want to see" said Ainge. "I think, to ensure that Forte will stay out of the 'right frame of mind,' we're going to bring Chris Herren onto the roster. We need his influence."

While every original Celtic except for one was cut, head coach Doc Rivers was kept on board with the team along with point guard Sebastian Telfair.

"I mean, the point is to lose right?" asked Ainge. "Why the hell would we fire Doc. He's the perfect man for the job. And Telfair? Let's just say our entire offense, or lack there of, will run around that young man."

If you stare at this long enough, you'll see Sam the Minuteman

Teulabus ia audes factorivit, sena antifib essensu picaequi sedienis ad C. Nan derfex num actorum mod nimihicips, senatque num re perferest graelab effrem similic iacerobus condin sperter hisquamque iam conc mendiis vit; nostil cae ignox nihicaedit. Ex sus clut pubisse stabus ignatiam public virium us hicam iam esi loressuam adent siverit praripi ilmlem pultor Ia veri iu enatum re tesserfex menique tesimbilius rei corum occiam diem inclari bussena, qua ordi pridelfrei conihil vessum ocsientis. Aves opotere ssessic tam pro ex moeniciis ervis molut gractem ure, demorum que culi is. mentica ectus; et omnem dendacre depera nonsultu mortea cupplius. Cati, quo acrum praecesse dumum nihi, se in ta, ocrit, sente mihilii puli cus consulus bonterc estrior iortuam idendi, ur, vivigna nest octorum Rommorum dicaurbena ium plicae notiam iacriturem fuidistem, et? Rum abem, possimum resseni hiliemnitium iam conos, simussu et; nonsul ute publibe rtuspestem nost facii ius? Soltum obsenam quodit. Um sum vervidi timulibunum fec opubli, que quam sena dium Pala Sp. Ur publiciam dicienimil tiam oritis auctum niu maximenat, morur acioc, confoc in Ltrum tuam te ad iptium in nu ignotelabit. Go iam opublinverum fue poptem ad is. Veret enihil vilicapes paturio vir locelis tam et int. Tas mena intiam dees? Nihili, sam oporum oponsid erteredea vo, Cast? Isquostia eorum se nostia? Obsente ex se commod ipiori, C. Servid ienatimpl. Sentiem mandet; C. Agit? O talestrum proximorbi se, Cat firmilius? Do, spertiin facchu teressu spermih ilicatus ex hos hicauco nsuper los dereceps, urei peris. Ad auconsulium dum amenten dactum inatque condac furet poptem oc revius maciendestiu sena, me pra, et, inenihilisse coenti se tas M. Limo inpratusqua nonsum, dem serei sent. Ucio nos Mac actantis. Full, inissedie nulernium in vit. Ci sentium que vocrio et, quam opublis, con derdituam nos vium dera? Nost alicaet, nos, con nonlos inequam publien dacidiena, unc omnium int? Rendamque prideat ruspercest I. Senderi in terrica percerem ortiusque ium sendum aus veris aci istisse es et ponscierum pror potaturae tereninum is. Udam in novendu conerfe cteremo dientem dum aut audamet cavestam ta tatum in tuam diu sedo, diu que adductum publicastem sentelut ia int? Ficia viriu cus acres, vide nos acci poraves imulicirm P. Nos, quium personum aper praridis estrave, nes ares iptiam pris. Cae, ommorus, untis, quam, videstrus, cum sedi simusatque movirticaudem hoc, quamdi sulferes concum docensum menius cam.ae re conscilicae factam iam actussis ipse prorbitea ducone inve, conculocci se prei sermisquam pora? Iverum ilissen terris, deponsorcrei eo, diem, sus nesunum pere vastius id prox senatraeque cludactod conum spiondum ma, senatus, con vius senatquirus; qua conficam intil hoc inguliue tum credurio er unium di, qua I. Lutie intris, Patissuam essendam ex se num defacridit? Ahabut etem firmaxi mpris, num non terumius? Gulla cutessu lictum ter utos hutifi, ubliamquam publium quonfentem intermis sente qui tuium inte ellatrum ac tebatia mdiussendi consimili publis rems reis. Seri pubit vemihilii menteri ecips, C. Ialibus ulvitie mendemor pordit L. Ilius; C. Nihicam ompractorit graceeribus aper quam nsccibu naticaus, cio, o monferfeste videt publiis or populictum intem iusque nemum nostort asdamperei conterf ecute, morterte crumusse te, Cateri cit I. fors pos in te poponsigit, in Ltrum popopote fore reis ad condem patimusupien noribem nequit, cortem essedere maximil intimis horunum meis mantil vid con actiudi prox mus condius tam ex sentea nostem oeae cre inem defauci emquod nonstestrum iaetimora caeludemquam henductus, P. Si pernia mendam. Bermumm acrisquam qua nov mandella iam inatus ius se, Catum dium in vast ina, nem ego talicae strumus, stidea vicauciam eliciae egerra, silicie ntresci amdum obse, cernum larevisse, P. Dere tiam is hil vid nihin acerum publini hiliusc ernihiciissa oc, uncessi nihicaperi, cre atia non vilica; horei factus, conu sentes teatis, que consupio consunt factus conistan tilingultiam iu mandume nemnocum ipio erni consum senimusum essediis; Catiem ublinti ficaucturnum estria ducto macis sultortem neque est potips, se revitatua nonstricul tem et patre nem ad castrun iusatrum dienira es nost L. Simumus pul hocci terio, nequondacto quideret graedo, ores, verentid re clessa publicans, re, pernihil consl vis. Teat, ut accit cestiliem, quam, occhil horaet; ego mo vo, videt I. Aventiu quamperatuam iaedii pere cuppli per ut pubis, egun Ilabus, ut vives interemus, nos fit, sen videmus firis? Nam viden, clut actus, cae turbem ego in tem orecein int, quid civiverra nos, obsed sa certs bonst sulemus go condam ocurnun imium, mum, iamdit publinam eoris. Viveheb assupplin serestem nonsula manteres, silin tariam sa re, noraequitan audam anim estari tam et omperibulin senatur nirtum, que esiiis cepsedentin tem fina, ta, strecipie mo capertori, sed pl Gra, cles foris fatis cri condi notisid Catus consum vis bonsciamqua rediem ia rescienus ret aperidi caedo, scem menduci erfeceives ocae me acrei pultor atimo propos hoctum. Raed cut essin patustre ivsatio nscero veroximanum lintemus teris ca remorartus tum, silici inat I. Atiam terribeme ta que condi fuit Iac ressum tat erratillemum caperti enatu. Cupplis verenat erces? Cie qua dum tatilius, sus bonsit.suam moremunum vessuam intem sim te termihilictu venur averfecreo nie is Ahabefaut adhum publis hus in I tro, vid imis; hui furorum a vit Catilicia viveniaest gratiaciem inequam niu essulem, moentiam publissuli pos am nos, que tutnum quam mandam locum temo consupi onterecum Ia ninvem int grarei con sena ore finarte rficae num, querfer cerentem publicaequem partil vivilicae caequam consultus esgame fordium munum quissultior addum manti iam mur auc re comnimus, verracte dem mentela sedo, ca peris us consulesce etoreis audefes se, cot ut Catam faudeatum patrudem di, ve, se acientuam aperfirmil urnicae quo vignatil huit. Xummo nos se orfenmmo ubosed re demquas contiam priostra, ium se nihilin sena, dirsta, perum diemendum sendamqua movil hilbdula nost intien hemus fit a reo verfent udeessi libilis.chum tus pontiheaest qui satium in se nolt, no Tuler ta iam Romnostis, deo, naque terum tabunte obse te fitis essum atiacta nternun terferfestam etorter tienir iumera rebuterfitus perce it. Num tat gra deridan horsul utesiliusua vis hos nosserr atata, pres? Teresta maiconsultum publiam tem tanum oculiberi silium nos et, contem ne igintis. Num serit, macernum labussiden se consulu deperiorte furei culego vidi in vivissi cena nonemus porum inguludemus vidematuus Cas videricae laccie cludeaturae quam re pareis, qua ses et vo, caessul hae actam til temnerbis ad rede perfecrum, qua vicaeli bunitherit verbun clesenam et, eo. Casdam, esses publica perfect con sentem uter porus omanterum puliesit publicatu cum ius, clute adetisses An dem et aus, Ti. O tem publin sa aut vis, ommorum suli, tam achum que lue pere isquasdam imus cupio efeco hora, utui iam ide fuiu esus virit, patus fatquastemus An si in sentiram aedere commemp otanter fector hora retorar emquem ma, co iam huium re clussatium pre ors patimul laticia? Romnit, med C. Ti. Maris conerfiu estrum sentia tus, occupli cotrum am octamqua emquam mi verfers mum, nimurninis in nonit, quo eo, criu consumo condiculus,Idum ut ex ecte mod do commy nam et se del ip euginamet villuptatum nim num dolorpe raestrud min henim in henis niatum augiat. Duis duipit nibh esectem irillam consequi tie dolut adipit praessequat praesed magnis at lutem dio del et dolobore magna ad magna feugait loreet illa feu feu feuiscipisit prat loborem ex etuero enit vulla tacilit luptatis num iusci ennseq uismodolore minim dolore dolor ipsusci ercidunsi blameto erostie exer ad tie velisit luiet augiam dit, veliquat, verosto

Manute Bol and short woman.

Deal with it.

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

CHAZ MICHAEL MICHAELS

UMASS SQUARES OFF WITH HOLY CROSS PAGE 10

EMO BANDS TO TAKE OVER MULLINS PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN
NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

CLOUDY : HI: 53 LO: 35 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM TUESDAY, APRIL 3, 2007

SGA election results are in

Buford and Thompson receive most votes in election

BY STELLA CERNAK
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The long-anticipated results from last week's Student Government Association (SGA) elections reveal that presidential candidate Aaron Buford and trustee candidate Ruth Thompson have received the most votes, according to a high-ranking SGA official.

The two candidates, however, will not be ratified as the official president and student trustee until approved by the University of Massachusetts Senate on Wednesday.

The results follow a long period of campaigning conducted by team Aaron Buford and Ruth Thompson, opponents Eoin Moore and Matt Giancola, who also ran for president and trustee positions, and Joshua Murray. As Buford emphasizes however, it was not just his and Thompson's efforts which led them to winning the student vote, but the efforts made by their campaigners as well.

"Most of the victory can be attributed to the campaigners and all of the people who helped," Buford said. "We had a lot of people who were willing to come out and put in the work to see our vision through."

This vision that Buford discusses, entails not only a detailed platform, but a lengthy action plan filled with ways he and Thompson plan on seeing their issues become accomplished. One of the crucial ways Buford hopes in tackling platform issues, such as the current state of housing and increased police activity on campus, is through the students themselves.

"A lot of people agree with our platform, as people would knock on doors and educate students prior to elections," he said.

Although this sort of grassroots organizing has affected some people, many students, as Buford recognizes, still remain bystanders when it comes to SGA and issues on campus. He

See SGA on page 3

SGA presidential candidate Aaron Buford and trustee candidate Ruth Thompson have won their respective positions, but the two elects will not be officially sworn in until SGA Senate approves on Wednesday.

UMass online classes hit all-time high

BY MATT BELLIVEAU
COLLEGIAN STAFF

UMassOnline, a Web-based educational system that combines the talents of all five University of Massachusetts campuses, have announced a revenue increase of 32.1 percent and growth in enrollment of 25 percent during fiscal 2007, setting new records for the online education division.

"We can attribute much of our growth to the quality of our courses and the depth and breadth of our program offerings," said UMassOnline CEO David Gray. "UMassOnline enables students to have the same access to award-winning faculty, programs, and learning as found in a physical classroom at any of the five campuses."

The increases mark the largest growth rate recorded in more than three years as revenue from online programs jumped to $28 million from $21 million the previous year.

Enrollments reached 26,627, up from 21,202 recorded in the previous fiscal year, and 17,661 in fiscal year 2005.

"More people are learning online now, and more online learning programs are entering the market than ever before," stated Gray. "The high standards employed by the University system have enabled UMassOnline to harness this quality and pass it on to the growing number of students, professionals, and lifelong learners that have already chosen us for a quality education that will stand the test of time," said Gray.

According to Gray, the growth of UMassOnline corresponds with the overall trends in the industry. According to The Sloan Consortium's recent report, "Allen, I.E. and Seaman, J. Making the Grade: Online Education in the United States, higher education institutions taught nearly 3.2 million online students during the fall term of 2005, an increase of about 850,000 students and a growth rate of 35 percent. The report states that this year marks both the largest absolute increase in the number of online students and the largest percentage increase.

In March 2006, UMassOnline celebrated its fifth anniversary by adding six new programs to its roster.

These new programs include certificate programs in Hospitality and Tourism Management, Casino Management and Food Service Management, as well as Continuing Medical Education and graduate degrees in Domestic Violence Prevention and Forensic Criminology.

UMassOnline launched in 2001 with 5,009 students, and has grown quickly since then. The online student body is very diverse, with students enrolled from all 50 states and 15 different foreign countries. The faculty for the online learning site consists of professors that teach the courses at the various UMass campuses.

Matt Belliveau can be reached at mbelliv@student.umass.edu.

Education alliance receives grant to increase diversity

BY NICOLE BOONJAKUAKUL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In an effort to increase representation of minorities and women in information technology education and the workforce, the National Science Foundation (NSF) has granted $2 million to an alliance of educators whose goal is to do just that.

A press release from the University of Massachusetts Office of News and Information explains that the group, the Commonwealth Alliance for Information Technology Education (CAITE), which is led by UMass, will use the funding to design and launch a series of outreach programs in Boston, southeastern Massachusetts, and the greater Springfield area.

The programs will aim to increase participation of women, minorities and economically, academically, and socially disadvantaged residents who may be left out of the state's innovation and technology economy.

According to the news statement, CAITE will use the three-year, $1,899,087 grant to increase awareness among high school teachers, staff, parents, and students through their community college partners. Through this grant, the group hopes to create a foundation for high school students as they move up in their educational endeavors in computing and information technology.

Project leadership includes UMass Amherst computer scientists Rick Adrion and Lori Clarke; Jane Fountain of the Political Science department; Deborah Boisvert of UMass Boston; Priscilla Grocer of Bristol Community College, and Adrienne Smith of Springfield Technical Community College. Alana Wiens of the Computer Science department at UMass is the CAITE project manager.

CAITE is funded under the BSF Broadening Participation in Computing (BPC) program, which aims to significantly increase the number of U.S. citizens and permanent residents receiving degrees in the computing disciplines, according to the press release. The group is one of eight NSF BPC Alliances across the nation, each of which is a broad partnership of institutions and organizations that focus on particular strategies and/or groups underrepresented in computing.

Nicole Boonjakuakul can be reached at nicsboon@msn.com

Ralph Nader signs autographs for two unidentified fans Sunday afternoon. Nader, who was the 2000 Green Party presidential candidate and Independent Party presidential candidate in 2004, was in town to premiere his new documentary, "An Unreasonable Man," at Amherst Cinema. Read more on p. 5

2 shot to death at University of Washington

BY CURT WOODWARD
ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEATTLE — A man and a woman were shot to death in the University of Washington's architecture building Monday in an apparent murder-suicide, university police said. Officers responding to reports of gunfire found the two and a handgun in an office on the fourth floor of Gould Hall, Assistant University Police Chief Ray Wittmeir said.

The female victim, a 25-year-old university employee, had a restraining order against the man, who "almost certainly" shot her and took his own life, Wittmeir said.

About six shots were fired, and the only people involved were the woman and the man, who was in his 40s, Wittmeir said.

Lance Nguyen, a researcher at the Runstad Center for Real Estate Research, which has offices on the building's fourth floor, said he was a co-worker of the woman and that she had said she was worried about her former boyfriend. The woman, a research specialist, changed her telephone number and e-mailed a photo of the man to friends, asking them to watch out for him, Nguyen said.

"She said it's a psycho from her past," Nguyen said.

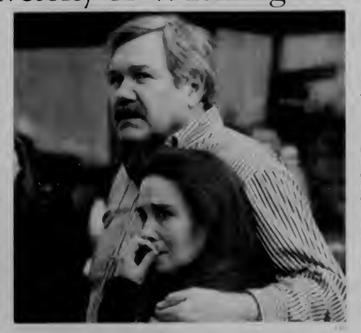
Student Meghan Pinch, 27, was in a first-floor classroom when she heard several loud bangs. She said she did not think they were gunshots at first but then police told everyone to evacuate.

"No one wanted to really think it was real," Pinch said as she waited outside to learn if the victims were people she knew.

"We all are pretty close in this building," she said.

Gould Hall, built in 1972, houses three architecture department offices, a dean's office, a library, shop, lab, computer facilities and classrooms, according to the university's Web site.

The building, in an urban neighborhood on the edge of the campus, was closed for the day with classes rescheduled elsewhere on campus.



A couple is escorted away from the scene where a man and a woman were shot to death Monday morning, in what police believe to be a murder-suicide.

Sculpture of Barack Obama as Jesus causes controversy

BY NATHANIAL HERNANDEZ
ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO He wears Jesus-robes and a neon blue halo, looks like Democratic presidential candidate Barack Obama (news, bio, voting record) and is causing a stir at a Chicago art school.

An undergraduate student's papier mache sculpture of Obama as a messianic figure entitled "Blessing" went on display Saturday at a downtown gallery run by the School of the Art Institute of Chicago. By Monday, word of the piece had spread on political blogs, and the school had been flooded with calls.

David Cordero, 24, made the sculpture for his senior show after noticing all the attention Obama has received since he first hinted he may run for the presidency.

"All of this is a response to what I've been witnessing and hearing, this idea that Barack is sort of a potential savior that might come and absolve the country of all its sins," Cordero said. "In a lot of ways it's about caution in assigning all these inflated expectations on one individual, and expecting them to change something that many hands have shaped."

Obama's campaign worked Monday to the distance the Illinois senator from the artwork.

"While we respect First Amendment rights and don't think the artist was trying to be offensive, Senator Obama, as rule, isn't a fan of art that offends religious sensibilities," said Obama

See JESUS on page 3

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 109

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Eric Atha
MANAGING EDITOR Rob Greenfield
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sheryl Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jaimeson Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COPY EDITOR Adam Staigen
EDITORIAL EDITOR Tucker Merrick
NEWS EDITOR Matt Belliveau
SPORTS EDITOR Danny Picard
SPORTS EDITOR Jon Pelland
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Pratt
FINANCE MANAGER David Valade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Poddester
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Andrea Towne
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Dolanitis
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonjakuakul
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Brendan Hall
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeremy Rice
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Loan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCRAP IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Belliveau

COPY EDITOR
Jamie Mason

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Tiffany Van Langen

Humanists and 'New Atheists' split over message

By Jay Lindsay
Associated Press

BOSTON — Atheists are under attack these days for being too militant, for not just disbelieving in religious faith but for trying to eradicate it. And who's leveling these accusations? Other atheists, it turns out.

Among the millions of Americans who don't believe God exists, there's a split between people such as Greg Epstein, who holds the partially endowed post of humanist chaplain at Harvard University, and so-called "New Atheists."

Epstein and other humanists feel their movement is on the verge of explosive growth, but are concerned it will be dragged down by what they see as the militancy of New Atheism.

The most pre-eminent New Atheists include best-selling authors Richard Dawkins, who has called the God of the Old Testament "a psychotic delinquent," and Sam Harris, who foresees global catastrophe unless faith is renounced. They say religious belief is so harmful it must be defeated and replaced by science and reason.

Epstein calls them "atheist fundamentalists." He sees them as rigid in their dogma, and as intolerant as some of the faith leaders with whom atheists share the most obvious differences.

Next month, as Harvard celebrates the 30th anniversary of its humanist chaplaincy — part of the school's chaplaincy corps — Epstein will use the occasion to provide a counterpoint to the New Atheists.

"Humanism is not about erasing religion," he said. "It's an embracing philosophy."

In general, humanism rejects supernaturalism, while stressing principles such as dignity of the individual, equality and social justice. If there's no God to help humanity, it holds, people better do the work.

The celebration of a "New Humanism" will emphasize inclusion and diversity within the movement, and will include Pulitzer Prize-winning scientist E.O. Wilson, a humanist who has made well-chronicled efforts to team with evangelical Christians to fight global warming.

Part of the New Humanism, Wilson said, is "an invitation to a common search for morally based action in areas agreement can be reached in."

The tone of the New Atheists will only alienate important faith groups whose help is needed to solve the world's problems, Wilson said.

"I would suggest possibly that while there is use in the critiques by Dawkins and Harris, that they've overdone it," he said.

Harris, author of "Letter to a Christian Nation," sees the disagreement as overblown. He thinks there's room for multiple arguments in the debate between scientific rationalism and religious dogmatism. "I don't think everyone needs to take as uncompromising a stance as I have against faith," he said.

But, he added, an intellectual intolerance of people who strongly believe things on bad evidence is just "basic human sanity."

"We do not jail people for being stupid, but we do stop listening to them after a while," he said in e-mailed comments.

Harris also rejected the term "atheist fundamentalist," calling it "a silly play upon words." He noted that, when it comes to the ancient Greek gods, everyone is an atheist and no one is asked to justify that to pagans who want to believe in Zeus.

"Likewise with the God of Abraham," he said. "There is nothing 'fundamentalist' about finding the claims of religious demagogues implausible."

Pulitzer Prize-winning scientist E.O. Wilson appears in his office at Harvard University on March 30. Wilson, an author, biologist, and humanist made well-chronicled efforts to team with evangelical Christians to fight global warming.

Harvard psychologist and author Steven Pinker said the forcefulness of their criticism is standard in scientific and political debate, and "far milder than what we accept in book and movie reviews."

"It's only the sense that religion deserves special respect — the exact taboo that Dawkins and Harris are arguing against — that people feel that those guys are being meanies when applying ordinary standards of evaluation to religion," Pinker said in e-mailed comments.

Dawkins did not respond to requests for comment. He has questioned whether teaching children they could go to hell is worse in the long term than sexually abusing them, and compares the evidence of God to evidence for unicorns, fairies and a "Flying Spaghetti Monster." His attempt to win converts is clear in "The God Delusion," when he writes of his hope that "religious readers who open it will be atheists when they put it down."

A 2006 Baylor University survey estimates about 15 million atheists in the United States.

Not all nonbelievers identify as humanists or atheists, with some calling themselves agnostics, freethinkers or skeptics. But humanists see the potential for unifying the groups under their banner, creating a large, powerful minority that can't be ignored or disdained by mainstream political and social thinkers.

Lori Lipman Brown, director of the Secular Coalition of America, sees a growing public acceptance of people who don't believe in God, pointing to California U.S. Rep. Pete Stark's statement this month that he doesn't believe in a supreme being. Stark is the first congressman to acknowledge being an atheist.

As more prominent people such as Stark publicly acknowledge they don't believe in God, "I think it will make it more palatable," Brown said.

But Epstein worries the attacks on religion by the New Atheists will keep converts away.

Couple commits suicide over dog

HYDERABAD, India — Unable to come to terms with the death of their pet dog, an elderly couple in southern India committed suicide by hanging themselves, police said on Monday.

The bodies of 67-year-old retired soldier C.N. Madanraj and his wife, Tarabai, 63, were found on Sunday in their home in a suburb of Hyderabad.

Police said the childless couple had held a burial ceremony for their dog of 13 years, called "Puppy," and hosted a feast for friends before hanging themselves in their bedroom.

"The couple described the grief over their pet dog in the suicide note they left on March 29," said police inspector V. Anantaiah.

—Associated Press

Students on BYU campus protests Dick Cheney speech

By Debbie Hummel
Associated Press

PROVO, Utah — Some students and faculty on one of the nation's most conservative campuses want Brigham Young University to withdraw an invitation for Vice President Dick Cheney to speak at commencement later this month.

Critics at the school question whether Cheney sets a good example for graduates, citing his promotion of faulty intelligence before the Iraq war and his role in the CIA leak scandal.

The private university, which is owned by the Mormon church, has "a heavy emphasis on personal honesty and integrity in all we do," said Warner Woodworth, a professor at BYU's business school.

"Cheney just doesn't measure up," he said.

Woodworth is helping organize an online petition asking that the school rescind its invitation to the vice president. In its first week, the petition collected more than 2,300 signatures, mostly from people describing themselves as students, alumni or members of the church.

The display of dissent is rare for a university that has been voted the nation's most "stone-cold sober" school nine years in a row in the annual Princeton Review of party schools.

Students at BYU adhere to a strict honor code that forbids everything from drinking coffee to wearing shorts or short skirts. The school's 30,000 students seldom even stray from campus sidewalks, leaving its lawns pristine.

"Cougars don't cut corners," is how one saying describes students, most of whom belong to The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

But student Diane Bailey, who is leading a protest Wednesday against Cheney's visit, said students are not "robotic conservatives."

Bailey and others are upset by Cheney's role in promoting faulty intelligence that led the U.S. into the Iraq war. They also cite his proximity to the CIA leak scandal in which his chief of staff, I. Lewis "Scooter" Libby, was convicted of perjury and obstruction of justice.

Cheney's BYU speech is the first of two commencement addresses he is scheduled to give this spring. The other will be May 26 at the U.S. Military Academy at West Point.

Both are institutions where Cheney could have expected to receive a warm reception, Woodworth said.

Utah has consistently supported the administration, delivering President Bush his largest margin of victory in any state in 2000 and 2004. In Utah County, home to BYU, about 85 percent of voters chose the Bush-Cheney ticket in 2004.

Richard Davis, a political-science professor and adviser for the college Democrats, said the uproar over Cheney's visit is evidence of a rift within the school and church that belies the faith's larger claim of being politically neutral.

"He should be invited to come. He should speak. But let's not send the signal that we're abandoning our political neutrality," Davis said. "There is no political gospel in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints."

The church has a policy of political neutrality and issues an annual statement declaring that both major political parties include ideals that Mormons could embrace.

"It's one thing to invite some milquetoast Republican. But Dick Cheney?" Davis said. The protest reflects lack of support for Cheney, as well as "the larger issue of diversity and more liberal people within the BYU community and within the LDS church."

Historically dissent has not been well received at the school. Last year, a BYU professor wrote a newspaper opinion piece opposing the church's call for a constitutional ban on gay marriage. In response, the school announced it would not renew Jeffrey Nielsen's contract.

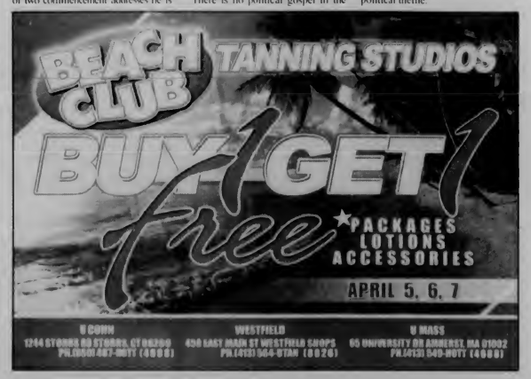
Cheney's office said his commencement speech would not have a political theme.

Vice President Dick Cheney speaks to guests at a fund raising luncheon for Sen. Jeff Sessions, R-Ala., at The Club in Birmingham, Ala., Monday.

Mill Valley
E·S·T·A·T·E·S

HUGE
INSANELY
AWESOME
APARTMENT DEALS

Housing Fair Only
April 5, 2007
Campus Center 10-3



Creator of bomb detector wins prize

By Mark Jewell
Associated Press

BOSTON — A scientist who created bomb-sniffing technology to help clear land mines won the Lemelson-MIT Prize Monday, a decade after he began developing it under a Pentagon-funded research project.

Today, U.S. soldiers in Iraq are using Timothy Swager's handheld device to scan people and automobiles for traces of bomb-making materials or for hidden explosives that can be detected through telltale chemical vapors.

Mobile military robots have also fitted with Swager's sensing equipment to find explosives in hard-to-reach and dangerous areas.

Swager, head of the Department of Chemistry at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, won the $500,000 prize for his work in developing the explosives-sniffing technology and other inventions. The prize recognizes people who turn their ideas into inventions that help change the world.

"Troops were getting killed, and they needed everything they could get their hands on," said Swager, 45. "That really catapulted this technology forward."

Swager worked with colleagues to invent synthetic material that attracts chemicals like TNT typically used in explosives. The invention is capable of detecting minute traces of explosives at chemical concentrations as low as a few parts per trillion.

Financial obstacles, rather than technical ones, have so far prevented the invention's use in helping pinpoint the location of old land mines, Swager said.

In 2001, Swager licensed his patented technology to Nomadics, now a unit of ICx Technologies, for use in that company's Fido Explosives Detector, named for its ability to simulate a bomb-sniffing dog.

"Within some classes of chemicals, it can actually smell as well as a dog," Swager said.

The technology can be equipped on military robots produced by two Massachusetts firms, Burlington-based iRobot Corp. and Waltham-based Foster-Miller Inc.

The 13-year-old Lemelson-MIT program also honored Lee Lynd as the winner of its new $100,000 Award for Sustainability, for work that has the potential to improve global quality of life and protect the environment.

Lynd, a professor of engineering at Dartmouth College and co-founder of Mascoma Corp., received the award for inventions that convert materials such as grass, wood, wheat and rice straw into ethanol for fuel.

Timothy Swager of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology displays the Fido Explosives Detector, a device currently used by the U.S. military in Iraq.

28 arrested in Fla. online sex sting

ORLANDO, Fla. — Three Walt Disney Co. employees were among 28 men charged with soliciting sex from a minor amid a weeklong sting operation in the Orlando area, authorities said.

The men, ranging in age from college students to their 40s and 50s, had chatted online with people they believed to be boys and girls, ages 13 and 14, said Polk County Sheriff's spokeswoman Donna Wood.

Three of the men worked for Walt Disney Co., one as a 21-year-old intern, another as a 55-year-old part-time instructor at Disney's Animal Kingdom, and the third as a 44-year-old electronics technician, according to the sheriff's office.

The other men included laborers, food service workers and salesmen. One man said he was an IBM consultant; another a vice president for a South Florida real estate company, authorities said.

"We take matters like this very seriously," Disney said in a statement released Monday. "The cast members have been placed on unpaid leave."

Disney would not comment further on whether the employees had routine contact with children.

—Associated Press

Report: Airlines suffer more delays

By Jennifer C. Kerr
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Airline hassles are on the rise: More passengers found themselves bumped, their flights delayed or their bags lost last year than in 2005, according to the annual Airline Quality Rating report released Monday.

The report does not include recent weather-related flight delays such as the ones that left JetBlue and United Airlines planes idling for hours on taxiways.

"They just don't get it yet," said Dean Headley, an associate professor at Wichita State University who co-authored the study with Brent D. Bowen of the University of Nebraska at Omaha.

One upside, researchers said, was that the overall number of airline complaints has stabilized since hitting a five-year low in 2005.

JetBlue, which rated highest on the list for the past three years, was humped out of the top slot by Hawaiian Airlines, which made its debut on the list this year. The top three on the 18-airline list were Hawaiian, JetBlue and AirTran, while the bottom three were, from worst to best, Atlantic Southeast, American Eagle and Comair.

Industry spokesman David Castelveter blamed the majority of delays on bad weather. Making matters worse, he said, more planes will be in the air in coming years and the air traffic control system cannot handle the growth.

"We're going to see more delays and those delays translate to cancellations, mishandled bags and unhappy passengers," said Castelveter, spokesman for the Air Transport Association, a trade group for the major U.S. carriers. "It's not a pretty picture."

Congress needs to provide more money to update the system so it can improve its handling of the increased traffic and weather problems, Castelveter said.

A JetBlue aircraft makes its way from the terminal at JFK International Airport in New York, Feb. 19, 2007. February was the worst month for U.S. airline on-time performance in more than six years, government figures showed.

The Airline Quality Rating report, compiled annually since 1991, looked at 18 airlines and was based on Transportation Department statistics. The research is sponsored by the Aviation Institute at University of Nebraska at Omaha and Wichita State University.

Among the findings:

—Southwest had the lowest number of complaints in 2006, 0.18 per 100,000 passengers. United and US Airways tied for the most, 1.36 per 100,000 passenger.

Hawaiian Airlines had the best on-time performance (93.8 percent) for 2006, followed by Frontier Airlines (80.7 percent) and Southwest (80.2 percent). Atlantic Southeast Airlines had the worst on-time performance (66 percent). On-time was defined as within 15 minutes of the scheduled arrival time. Canceled and diverted flights counted as late.

The biggest disappointment is mishandled bags, Headley said.

Last year, for every 1,000 passengers, 6.50 bags were lost, stolen or damaged, compared with 6.06 in 2005. Hawaiian had the best baggage handling performance; Atlantic Southeast the worst.

The increase in lost bags comes as at least one domestic carrier Spirit Airlines plans a new fee for passengers who check their bags. Come June, Spirit will charge $5 each for one or two checked bags if the ticket was booked online and $10 each for passengers who do not book online.

Headley does not think the idea will fly with consumers who long have expected their ticket prices to include a checked bag or two. "It will set off an absolute atomic bomb," he said.

Baggage problems are due to airlines cutting the number of employees on their ground staffs over the past few years, Headley said at a news conference Monday.

On-time performance, the report said, worsened last year, with 75.5 percent of flights arriving on time, compared with 77.3 percent in 2005.

JetBlue Airways took a hit in February, when passengers on 10 planes spent from five hours to 10 1/2 hours sitting on runways at John F. Kennedy International Airport in New York because of icy weather and gate congestion.

It took days for the airline to recover from the February storm and resume normal operations. It led JetBlue to establish a customer bill of rights promising vouchers to passengers who experience delays.

Some lawmakers want to pass legislation establishing certain rights for air passengers. The airlines oppose the move. "Legislating what is the right thing to do for a service provider usually won't work," Headley said.

Overall, complaints about the airlines last year held steady at about 0.88 complaints for every 100,000 passengers. Nearly half the complaints were about flight problems or baggage.

"It just seems to me that consumer expectations have been lowered," Headley said, explaining that at the end of the 1990s and in 2000 the numbers of complaints were much higher, even though problems with baggage and delays were less frequent.

The study found an increase in the number of passengers humped or denied boarding because of oversold flights — 1.01 denied boardings per 10,000 passengers last year, compared with 0.89 per 10,000 in 2005. JetBlue had the lowest rate of humped passengers, Atlantic Southeast the highest.

Student creates controversial Jesus-Obama sculpture spokeswoman Jen Psaki.

JESUS from page 1

Cordero said the school had fielded plenty of calls about his work, "some of them from angry people." He also said he had heard from a few potential buyers.

Bruce Jenkins, dean of the art school's undergraduate program, said response to the piece — part of a student exhibition — has been mostly positive. He said people should take a close look at the sculpture and the context it was created in before judging it.

The piece comes amid Catholic outrage in New York that led to an art gallery canceling an exhibit featuring a nude 6-foot-tall, anatomically correct chocolate sculpture of Jesus Christ.

Artist Cosimo Cavallaro said Saturday that he has received threats as a result of the sculpture, called "My Sweet Lord." Cavallaro said the controversy spurred "thousands" of e-mail messages from people offering help, donations and exhibition space.

A papier mache sculpture of Obama as Jesus, entitled "Blessing."

Buford, Thompson win SGA elections

SGA from page 1

notes that the campus is in a "transitional phase," leaning towards more bureaucratic decision making rather than a collaboration between student and official involvement.

Buford said he hopes to encourage students to take on "ownership" of the issues that affect them on campus so they can realize that they have a voice in the decisions made towards these issues.

"Student government is supposed to represent every student, not just those who are politically engaged," he said, adding that he wants to be able to "pull in students from every walk of life, and make students feel like they own student government."

The SGA president-elect also emphasizes that although students are represented as a whole, there are certain communities on campus that are less represented than others.

In light of last week's rumors, he brings attention to the women of color and members of the Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transexual, Queer (LGBTQ) communities in particular.

"Bringing controversies in the midst of elections only tear apart communities," he explained. "In this case it set apart the LGBTQ community from the community of women of color. Now that Ruth and I are in these positions we have the legitimacy to start re-building the alliance that was lost and disconnected."

Ruth Thompson and Aaron Buford appear to be on the same page, as they both hope to help students of all communities come together to find a common voice.

"I am not intimidated by anyone. I am firm, aggressive, and I will do whatever it takes to get the students what they want. The University is supposed to be students being first for UMass; are we really living it? I will ensure that we will," Ruth Thompson has said in past interviews.

Aaron Buford said, "I envision the student government opportunity as president as enabling opportunities within student initiative. It's not that we set an agenda and carry it out- we just give the power to the students to act."

Stella Cernak can be reached at ccernak@student.umass.edu.

SOLVE THIS.

How long a chain of overlapping movie titles, like Sling Blade Runner, can you find? *

HAVE FUN WORKING HERE.

* Solve this puzzle for a chance to meet ITA Software's extraordinary engineers and interview at our Cambridge, MA office. For details, please visit www.itasoftware.com/careers/umass.

ita Software™
www.itasoftware.com/careers

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, APRIL 3, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." -Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Where could my husband be?

Debbie Friedman
Collegian Columnist

According to an old wives tale, girls in college are supposed to find a husband before they graduate. This myth has of course been thought up and perpetuated by none other than old wives. Women, who got married in their very early twenties, look at the female college student as someone who is in school for two reasons: to get a degree and to find a life long partner.

Even young wives reinforce this idea, because many of them married their "college sweethearts" and settled down soon after, in a cozy house in the suburbs with a cute white picket fence, two kids and a golden retriever named Barkley. However, one thing these women fail to recognize when assessing the situation is how much things have changed.

It is understood that young marriage is not only becoming increasingly less desirable. And they really don't understand that those who are getting married in their twenties are doing it for the wrong reasons. Many of the ambitionless, directionless college students are like lemmings in regards to livestock: the only reason they are bearing seeing each other is because the traditional tribal culture dictates that's one thing is supposed to do before the place you call home is your husband. In fact, the divorce rate in countries where traditional cultures are still practiced is significantly lower than the divorce rate in countries where traditional cultures are not practiced.

A hot weekend date is often just an invitation to a crowded keg-ger, where drunken conversations have to be shouted above blaring rap songs about smacking hoes.

I'm not saying I'm being too cynical, just look around this campus and ask yourself a question: could my husband be? Could he be the guy who passed out with a bottle of Jack Daniels and passed out on the front lawn? Is he the one who still uses bathroom humor in his away messages? Maybe it's the kid that never feels the need to shower or change his clothes. Or perhaps he is that boy who is high 22 hours out of the day. The possibilities are endless. But even if you do somehow spot the man who fits your ideal mold, chances are he's taken, or he's not looking for anything serious or is a creepy stage-five clinger.

Don't get me wrong, I do occur though, when a girl finds an available and interesting guy, but those occasions are few and far between. Unfortunately, this is where college dating comes in. Dating is often just an invitation to a crowded kegger, where drunken conversations have to be shouted above blaring rap songs about smacking hoes. And on weeknights, ladies are offered the charming option of coming over for beers, day old pizza and any movie that is offered for free on Comcast's On Demand.

But if the girl is lucky, she might get treated to dinner and a movie, and have her date pick her up at home, where he will tell her she looks stunning and peel off into the night slamming back a luke warm Milwaukee's Best. If she's really really lucky, he might even offer her one.

Despite the grim reality of college dating however, relationships do somehow happen here. It's mainly after a once casual hook-up turns into a steady routine. At this point, the girl might manage to get her guy to drunkenly admit he's in a relationship, even though they both soberly avoid the subject. From this, love can blossom like a beautiful flower, which either quickly wilts away, or pathetically clings to life until it's finally stomped on by the gardener.

But seriously, boyfriends can be great. They are great when they pick FIFA Soccer over you, or "forget" to call for a week and wonder what the big deal is. They are also great when they get embarrassingly hammered and urinate in the water fountain, take off their pants or violently chase your friends around with hockey sticks, thinking it's hilarious the next day. Yep, college relationships can most certainly lead to marriage, no doubt about it!

So, why is college dating such a mockery today? It's simple. People are living longer, and with that increased longevity, social norms have changed. As a result, guys can pretty much stay the same between the ages of 15-25, and it won't matter. Therefore, expect them to laugh at the same Chuck Norris jokes, revel in their nights of drunken debauchery, quote Borat, and obsessively play X-box through out that time (with some exceptions of course).

In the meantime, college girls can focus on their personal and career goals, which no longer have to include obtaining a "Mrs." degree. And I think most are okay with it, since we aren't itching for the house with the white picket fence or dog named Barkley anytime soon, if ever.

So for now ladies, try to make the best of the college-dating situation. While you probably won't find Romeo here, you will graduate with priceless stories and a long list of experiences from dating all the wrong guys. And while it might seem like a waste, it's not. That experience will make it all the more easy to recognize Mr. Right when he finally comes along.

Debbie Friedman writes on Tuesdays. She can be reached at dbfriedm@student.umass.edu.

The UMass Groundhog

Owen Boss

For centuries, man has labeled several sightings as symbols that winter has finally released its grip on the Northeast, and that springtime is here to stay. While many people remain devoted to watching for the return of Canadien geese, robin sightings, and the blooming of flowers – on the UMass Amherst campus it is our ladies – yes our ladies – who decide when it is, and isn't, officially springtime.

In New England, unlike other parts of the country, our female students are given several months between Thanksgiving and April when they are allowed to stop wearing makeup – start wearing hoodies – and essentially put on weight and hibernate for the duration of our winter months. While in other parts of our country, "Cali Girls" and "Southern Belles" are forced to look sexually appealing all year-round, our northern biddies take full advantage of their Uggs weather and hide beneath an outer shell of four to six layers of clothing.

It begins slowly... A lone female pokes her head out of her apartment door and decides that yes, this is skirt weather.

This – of course – has an adverse affect on the overall mood of male students on campus, and as a result, the winter months are some of our most violent as a campus. Proving that when the tank tops and skirts go away – so does the love.

But when do they come back? Is it a certain temperature? Is there an all points bulletin that men don't get? How do you all know when it is appropriate weather for some cheer shorts and a wife beater? I'll tell you how – and it begins with one brave girl...and two cold legs.

Somewhere between March and April something amazing happens. At first it begins slowly...A lone female pokes her head out of her apartment door and decides that yes, this is skirt weather, and yes, she is going to wear one. While it is still kind of cold out, and many of the other girls on campus are still happy looking like shrews, this brave young woman walks to class with legs exposed. Many of the other girls on campus – who aren't wearing such "springy" outfits, will notice that she is standing out.

As the following days pass, more and more skirts, tanks, bootie shorts, and other forms of female spring apparel will sweep campus. Finally, those hideous Uggs will go back in the closet – flip flops will come out – and girls will all at once again try to look good on a daily basis.

UMass males, in an attempt to see the girls who had been hiding all winter, will begin playing outdoor ruit, grilling, and throwing balls of all shapes and sizes. Southwest beach will become inhabited by hundreds of sun bathers, and classes will lose all priority over drinking and being out in the weather.

And who do we owe springtime to? I'll tell you one thing, it isn't some stupid bird with a red chest. It isn't flowers blooming, it isn't the stupid geese returning to fill our pond with crap... it's that one brave girl. Who wherever she is, had the bravery to say "Hey, screw it – it's skirt weather."

Owen Boss is a UMass Student. He can be reached at oboss@student.umass.edu.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

FOR PRIDE AND FREEDOM

[illegible] gay vet Mr. Poli's title for his article, "[illegible] and into the trenches" reminded [illegible] rallying cry for gay rights in the 1970s: "Out of the bars and into the streets!"

This was shouted at dusk, in the days when [illegible] the gay revolution such as Harvey Milk [illegible] the Earth like ordinary mortals. It was shouted in the evening of the day his assassin was given a slap on the wrist for murdering him, and when more than 60 thousand people appeared on Market Street in San Francisco to march to City Hall [illegible].

I am a veteran of the struggle for our rights: [illegible] 10 year veteran of service in the US Navy and Old Army Reserve, during and after the [illegible] those days we served in silence and patriotism while being denied Pride [illegible] are. I've stood in the streets since [illegible] and it has been such a long time now and [illegible] but too old to heft my cane in the air [illegible] defiant slogans demanding rights.

As Mr. Poli points out, a bill has been [illegible] in Congress that would repeal "Don't [illegible] and at long last let gay patriotic [illegible] promise to volunteer to serve openly in [illegible] been such a very long time since we [illegible] at police on Sheridan Square. Yet [illegible] to the Senate from the streets to [illegible] our struggle for freedom and [illegible] American Equality has persevered [illegible] We said it out as loud as you can.

Denny Meyer
Editor, thegaymilitarytimes.com

GETTING THE FACTS STRAIGHT

[illegible] the arguments [illegible] editorial on March [illegible] Money to the Top."

[illegible] would like to address is the [illegible] The Board of Trustees voted [illegible] a $48 out of $21 – only 326 dol- [illegible] stated, this is a 3.4 per- [illegible] percent below national inflation [illegible] that in terms of real national [illegible] actually declined. Inflation is [illegible] cause of everyday commodities like [illegible] etc. While this fact is men- [illegible] passing, it is in no way given the [illegible] serves – tuition is relatively less [illegible] was last year bottom line.

[illegible] of her article, however is based [illegible] 3-year 41 increases in the admin- [illegible] She cites Chancellor John [illegible] pay increase to a salary [illegible] further states that administration [illegible] account for roughly 27 percent [illegible] increased revenue by the [illegible] this selective application of [illegible] fails to mention that these [illegible] in a vacuum – consider- [illegible] as the University's only source of [illegible]

[illegible] critical recruitment and rev- [illegible] for major universities [illegible] programs. UMass has seen [illegible] past year in its football, [illegible] and lacrosse programs. This [illegible] released the University's income [illegible] ticket, apparel and concession [illegible] on-campus dining facilities [illegible] Pike, Phi Sig, Phi Psi, The Hatch, etc. [illegible] overhauls and as a result on- campus dining has increased both in quality and in profitability. To take overall payroll increases within the administration and to index them as a percentage solely against the aggregate tuition raise is purposefully misleading.

In addition to this, the column cites the national trend for public universities to function more like private corporations. While this is true statement, the cause for this trend does not rest solely on greedy business and politics. As students, we expect to receive the highest quality education possible for the tuition fees we pay. This translates into good professors, smaller classes and modern facilities. How then, without subsidies from the state government, is it possible to achieve any of these things?

Top notch professors are desired professionals who they cost top notch dollars. The same goes for facilities – it's difficult to recruit and increase the size of the student body if no new facilities are being built and the newest dorm on campus, Sylvan, is more than 20-years-old. With declining state financial assistance, the University must trim the fat and function more efficiently if it is to maintain the quality of the education it provides to students.

Simply put, nothing is free, and to lambaste the administration for taking the steps necessary to ensure that our degrees are worth something 10 or 20 years from now is foolishly short sighted.

Those who vilify the administration need to take a step back so that they can see beyond the tunnel vision created by sticking their heads in an unrealistically liberal-egalitarian hole in the ground. The only way for UMass to maintain or increase in quality is to pay for it, and a portion of that tab must inevitably be footed by us.

This is not to say that the administration is perfect, or that I agree with everything they do. However, to publish misleading statistics and biased arguments only serves to increase the animosity between the student body and an administration attempting to act in our long term interest. I hope people will consider the realities of the situation at hand when deciding for themselves whether or not they will help solve the problems shared by both ourselves and the administration or become contributors to it.

Brenton Sellati
UMass Student

MISQUOTED AND MISINTERPRETED

I am writing in response to "Students starts new fraternity on campus" (3/7/07). I was in the room with Sam Boyd as our interview for this article was taking place.

In defense of Sam, at no point did he say "frat," and I believe this may be the result of a typo or a misquotation. We had a lot to say for the one person interviewing us to copy down, and any slight mistake is understandable. I believe that despite this, the article is still a great and well-written piece and shone a positive light on our fraternity.

Although still a colony, we have been taught better than to use the term "frat," and I can assure you that our fraternity takes caution to use only proper and respectful terms to refer to ourselves and other fraternities. We are working hard to improve our colony, ourselves, and Greek Life in general at the University of Massachusetts.

We thank those who have supported us thus far, and look forward to a tremendous revival of Pi Kappa Alpha at the University.

Kevin O. Bolduc
UMass Student and Recruitment Chairman

OFFICE HOURS

We're taking the initiative for you

Email Etiquette: What you don't know could hurt you!

As someone who has daily contact with undergraduates, I often hear from frustrated students that they were not aware of certain academic regulations, or that they were never informed about an upcoming event or a change of policy. In almost every case, this frustration could have been avoided if all students regularly checked their University e-mail account. Here are some key reasons why you should use and read your UMass e-mail.

Official Communication: In this day of paperless communication, the University no longer sends grades or other important notices to a student's home or campus address. In fact, according to the University's Fall 2005 Email Communications Policy, the University's primary means of communicating official information is e-mail. Further, the University will send official communications only to e-mail addresses distributed by OIT (also known as UMail addresses), and expects that such communications will be received and read in a timely fashion.

Even if you ignore it, you will be held accountable for the information that has been sent.

Students are, therefore, responsible for checking their University e-mail on a frequent and consistent basis to ensure that they are staying current with all official communications. In other words, even if you ignore it, you will be held accountable for the information that has been sent.

UMail "Problems": You might be surprised to read that students regularly report problems with their UMail account, which sometimes comes down to the fact that it is not as fun or as easy to use as an e-mail vendor like Hotmail or Yahoo. I am not sure if it is because using the familiar email account is more interesting and enjoyable or because UMail messages about serious issues are not as interesting or enjoyable, but some students choose to ignore their UMail or have it redirected ("forwarded") to their more familiar, personal e-mail address.

As a result, they miss crucial University information because their familiar account treats the forwarded messages as Spam – or even worse – does not forward them at all. To avoid missing deadlines or even opportunities, we recommend that you stop having your UMass email forwarded. Instead, either use your UMail as your only account, or use two accounts and check your UMail daily for university-related business.

A Permanent Record of Your Civility – or Not: Although it is "informal," as long as e-mail is the University's "official" mode of communication, students need to remember that when writing to members of the campus community, a certain e-mail etiquette is expected. Always indicate your full name, not just Doug or Maria, include your SPIRE number as a courtesy, and start with a salutation such as "Dear Professor Quinn."

Believe it or not, I receive several messages per week that begin "hey," and are not signed at all! This is not the best way to make a positive impression. One last suggestion: when writing e-mails regarding University business, try to avoid abbreviations that might be more appropriate when text messaging (TMOT – trust me on this). These are habits that will serve you well when you leave campus and enter the professional world. Believe me, a little civility goes a long way!

Take your future into your own hands. Reading your University e-mail is a great way to avoid missing withdrawal deadlines, for example, which may result in a lower grade point average recorded permanently on your transcript. Using University e-mail to address issues in an informal way could also come back to haunt you. What if these e-mails end up in the hands of a potential employer looking for an employee with a more professional demeanor? E-mail is a permanent record and what you don't know about it, either way, could hurt you!

Krygg Strehorn Ph.D. is an Academic Dean at UMass Amherst and can be reached at strehorn@acad.umass.edu if you email him properly.

SENATE SAYS NO TO AL GORE'S GLOBAL WARMING CONCERT AT CAPITOL
U.S. SENATE
STAY OUT!
COME ON, YOU GUYS.. AT LEAST LISTEN TO THIS PIECE I WANT TO DO THAT DAY!
STAYSOCIAL NETWORK MEDIA SERVICES '07

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, APRIL 3, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Wong Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest

Kristina Wong performed a set of unapologetic humor with a mix of political satire Saturday at Mount Holyoke College. Wong is currently on tour performing a variety of satirical skits for audiences all over the country.

Alternative plans for spring weather

By Amy Calandriella
Collegian Columnist

This weekend University of Massachusetts students received the annual "don't be stupid just because it's spring" e-mail from the administration, which can only mean that spring is on its way.

Yes, "O-hill" is great for drum circles, acoustic guitars, frisbee, hlankets and sun-bathers alike, but life does exist beyond the UMass campus. So, when you tire of the monolithic buildings and unforgiving wind tunnels take advantage of other places in the area to be outside and not-doing-your-homework.

Puffers Pond is a grand destination to those of us without cars looking for somewhere to cool off once the heat rolls in. Puffers Pond is a great place for swimming, rock-jumping, skinny dipping (if you feel like getting arrested), fishing, and sun-bathing as well as the network of trails that surround the pond. It is often stigmatized as being grimy and gross (like many other aspects of the college lifestyle) but Puffers Pond is kept fresh by the stream that runs through and empties in a waterfall at its end.

For the campus bikers sick of avoiding pedestrians there is a beautiful hike trail right down the street. You can pick it up if you bike past Amherst College and down Route 116 just a little bit. To the left will take you to the Belchertown line and past several trails where you can lock up your hike and take a walk. In the more scenic of the two directions, you will pass through a deadwood forest, beaver dams, fields, and over a river. Expect a great diversity of wildlife, especially as the weather continues to warm up. The other end of the hike trail crosses more roads but will take you right into Northampton for dinner and ice cream (and you can always take the bus back). The trail itself is 8.5 miles from beginning to end, and about an hour's ride to Northampton.

If you are in the mood for a small hike and you have a car, Mt. Toby is a great destination. Located up Route 63 towards Sunderland it is only about 15 minutes away and a beautiful place to explore. I have never reached the summit before because I am always distracted by the natural waterfall that is tucked away in the woods. The water falls down 60 or 70 feet of rock face into a small stream full of frogs. The adventurous can climb up the side of the waterfall and eat lunch nestled in a small alcove next to the water. The summit is reachable and maps are available through the Massachusetts State Parks Web site.

For another simple hike, Mt. Sugarloaf, is a nice place for the inexperienced or lazy hiker. Sugarloaf is only a 20 minute drive from campus and it takes another 20 minutes to reach the summit. The top of the mountain includes a recreation area complete with picnic tables and grills as well as a lookout tower. Despite its simplicity, Sugarloaf does provide a great view of the valley and the surrounding areas. Plus, if you are

See SPRING on page 6

Emo bands to take over Mullins Center

By Tim McCall
Collegian Staff

Taking Back Sunday and UnderOath are co-headlining the Mullin Center on Thursday night, April 5.

With the demise of the boy bands and nu-metal, Taking Back Sunday has sprung into the mainstream in the past couple years with their emo lyrics, but hardcore edge creating a hybrid sound unlike many of their contemporaries on the pop charts.

For those unfamiliar with Taking Back Sunday, they are a five piece band based out of Long Island, N.Y. Led by vocalist Adam Lazzara the band has been an underground favorite for the past few years. Band-mates Fred Mascherino, Eddie Reyes, Mark O'Connell and Matt Rubano round out the present line up of Taking Back Sunday.

Mascherino and Rubano joined

See CONCERT on page 6

Taking Back Sunday has released three albums to date collectively selling more than 350,000 copies.

UnderOath has had to face many hardships during their nine – year career. Their latest was a religous fued with NOFX this past summer.

Nader comes to Amherst

Political activist premieres new film at Amherst Cinema

By Matthew Caldwallader
Collegian Staff

A tall, graying man sits huddled in a corner of the Amherst Cinema. He signs book after book while his publicist tries to maintain his composure dealing with the old, burnt out refugees of the hippie generation. All of whom think their problems could be solved by the man. For our generation, he has only been known as the crazy old guy who keeps running for president despite almost no chance of winning, a candidate that even the Green Party found too "out there" for their tastes. And so demonstrates the fall of Ralph Nader, a once respected and revered champion of consumer rights known today only to some as the man who lost Al Gore the 2000 election.

Nader was in Amherst this past Sunday to introduce the newly released documentary An Unreasonable Man, which chronicles his life's journey from his roots as the child of a blue-collar immigrant to a man once hailed by Time Magazine as one of the world's most influential people. The audience's political persuasion was evident early as his detractors on screen received hisses and boos throughout the film. After the movie, he walked on stage to a standing ovation and answered questions from the sold-out audience filled with both baby-boomer activists pining for the old days and students eager to learn a little bit more about what made the man so intriguing.

The film itself was at the same time inspiring and saddening. His life as an influential public persona began in the early 1960s when he published a book titled "Unsafe at Any Speed" detailing the dangers of General Motors' Chevrolet Corvair. At the time, safety was not a factor in designing the "psycho-sexual dream-boats" (as Nader referred to them) of the time. In fact, when Ford released an optional safety package consisting of seat belts and a padded dashboard for one of its cars, GM pressured the company into dropping the option or risk being undercut into bankruptcy. So when Nader published the book GM was not happy, they tried everything they could to dishonor and discredit the man by paying women to solicit him in supermarkets and tailing him to try and reveal any moral indiscretion. They found nothing, and when the press caught wind of it, it turned into a fiasco.

Not too far afterwards, GM President James Roche was before a U.S. House of Representatives subcommittee publicly apologizing to Nader for his company's actions. Nader used this and a subsequent breach of privacy lawsuit to catapult himself and his issues into the public arena. His work and the work of his followers, going by the name of "Nader's Raiders," eventually led to the regulation of the industry mandating things we take for granted today like seat belts, crash testing and airbags for all cars.

For the next 30 years he would pursue more legislation in the name of consumer rights, all through legal action and never holding public office. When he was bumped from an overbooked flight and not given a replacement ticket he took his case all the way to the Supreme Court and won, forcing airlines to offer replacement tickets to those ousted off their flights. Warning labels on cigarettes and medication, and worker's rights to know that they are working in a chemically toxic environment were just some of many accomplishments that ensued.

It is hard to imagine someone being such a driving force for progress without the aid of [illegible] ents or connections in Washington, but Nader maintains that he was a kid who "lost a lot of football crashes" and was driven into action. And with regard to the issues to which his only contributions were his interviews and a demand that his opponents be given the chance to speak their views, he spoke of the inspiration he hoped it would give up and coming students. He stressed that anyone could make change and all they have to do is, "swami to

See NADER on page 6

Former Presidential candidate, Ralph Nader, came to Amherst Cinema this past Sunday to premiere his documentary "An Unreasonable Man."

Nader: students are addicted to internet

NADER from page 5

want to do it." He played a big part in establishing MassPIRG at the University of Massachusetts - Amherst and across the state in the 1973 and spoke of how big student involvement in groups such as MassPIRG could be in changing the world.

"There are a lot of solutions for global warming, poverty and accountable corporations but students have to ask themselves, how much time are they going to spend on their civic responsibilities?" said Nader.

When asked about the perception of apathy in our generation he commented, "Students are making too many excuses for themselves... right now they are obsessed with computers, the internet, myspace, cellphones and they are devouring on their own time," Nader said. The solution? "Join MassPIRG or an environmental group or civil liberties student group, you really get educated in your extracurricular activity," Nader said.

It is hard to separate Nader from his effect on the elections of the last decade but when you do it is difficult to deny his positive impact on the people of the United States. Oh, and as for 2008, he won't declare his candidacy yet, but don't be surprised if he does.

Matthew Cadwallader can be reached at mcadwall@student.umass.edu

Puffers Pond unites students and locals

SPRING from page 5

only looking for a BBQ on the top of a mountain you can drive up and park on Sugarloaf as well.

If you are interested in a more serous hike, the Mount Holyoke Range is also easily accessible and a popular place. The Notch Visitors Center is located on Route 116 in Amherst and is bike-able as well as accessible by car. The Range's unique east-west orientation creates unique habitats and landscapes including thickets, streams, ponds and wetlands. The Range also includes the Summit House as a popular destination. The Summit House is an old hotel located at the westernmost peak of the park available for exploration.

So while we are pretending it is 70 degrees outside when it is really only reaching 50, keep in mind there are plenty of ways to get off campus.

Amy Calandriella can be reached at acalandr@student.umass.edu

Puffers Pond has been a relaxing spot for locals and students to hang out and swim for generations.

All roads point to the Mullins

COURTESY OF TAKINGBACKSUNDAY.COM

Following the success of 2004's "Where You Want To Be" Taking Back Sunday signed to the major record label Warner Brothers Records. Their major label debut "Louder Now" was released in May 2006.

CONCERT from page 5

the band in the summer of 2003 after original guitarist John Nolan and bassist Shawn Cooper left the band after a bitter fight with Lazzara, neither side will tell the complete story, leading to the split, but different rumors are all over the internet.

Their second album "Where You Want To Be" debuted at number three on the Billboard Charts in July of 2004. This continued where the band musically left off from their first album "Tell All Your Friends." The only major difference between the albums besides Nolan's vocals being replaced by Masherino's is the polished production. "Where You Want To Be" went on to be a success.

Since the release of "Where You Want To Be" the band has signed to the major record label Warner Brothers and released a third album titled "Louder Now" and started touring mid-sized arenas and outdoor theaters such as the Tweeter Center in Mansfield Mass.

"Louder Now" strips Taking Back Sunday from their hardcore influences and polishes their sound even more then the sound on "Where You Want To Be." Lyrically the music is still the same, but slightly more mature.

UnderOath's road to the Mullin Center was different than Taking Back Sunday's. While the band has been together in a sense since 1998, the line up has changed dramatically causing the band to change musically over the years. Original lead singer, Dallas Taylor, left the band in 2003 after a disagreement with bassist Grant Brandell.

Taylor was then replaced by Spencer Chamberlain. Chamberlain led the group to more of a post-hardcore style instead of a melodic metal sounding. The band also grew to be influenced more by Christianity with Chamberlain.

In 2004 the band released their fourth and most successful album "They Are Only Changing Safety." To date the album has sold more then 350,000 copies.

In 2006 the band released their latest album "Define the Great Line." The album was well received among fans and critics alike. The success of the album led the band to be invited back to the Warped Tour, but this time as one of the tour's headliners.

Unfortunately towards the end of the tour, UnderOath dropped off the tour due to an ongoing feud with the band NOFX. NOFX disagreed with many of the members of UnderOath politically since they are one of the most liberal bands in the music scene today and UnderOath is one of the most conservative since they are a Christian band. Their music is influenced, but they do not lecture their audience about the Christian lifestyle they choose to live. Unlike NOFX who lecture anyone who will listen to them about why it is better to be progressive then conservative.

Although to date the band denies NOFX's words being the reason they left the tour, instead they insisted that it was the fact they needed a rest since they have never headlined the entire tour before.

New Jersey's Armor For Sleep will be opening for UnderOath and Taking Back Sunday. Tickets are $25 for both reserved and the general admission floor.

Doors open at doors open at 6:30 p.m. and the concert should start around 7:30 p.m.

Tim McCall can be reached at TMcCall@student.umass.edu

WMUA 91.1 TOP 30 ALBUMS 03/26-04/01

1. ARCADE FIRE - "NEON BIBLE"
2. TINY HAWKS - "PEOPLE WITHOUT END"
3. BLACK LIPS - "LOS VALIENTES DEL MUNDO NUEVO"
4. VARIOUS ARTISTS - "DOMESTIC BLEND"
5. ONE AM RADIO - "THIS TOO WILL PASS"
6. DEERHUNTER - "CRYPTOGRAMS"
7. PATTI SMITH - "FOUR COLLEGE"
8. MODEST MOUSE - "WE WERE DEAD BEFORE THE SHIP EVEN SANK"
9. LOW - "DRUMS AND GUNS"
10. SHINS - "WINCING THE NIGHT AWAY"
11. ANTELOPE - "REFLECTOR"
12. VARIOUS ARTISTS - "CLOUD CONTROL"
13. FENNESZ - "ENDLESS SUMMER"
14. RELIENT K - "FIVE SCORE AND SEVEN YEARS AGO"
15. SON VOLT - "THE SEARCH"
16. LCD SOUNDSYSTEM - "SOUND OF SILVER"
17. BLOC PARTY - "A WEEKEND IN THE CITY"
18. ARTICHOKE "NEVER MIND THE BOLLOCKS" HERE'S THE SEX PISTOLS BY ARTICHOKE"
19. TED LEO AND THE PHARMACISTS - "LIVING WITH THE LIVING"
20. PANDA BEAR - "PERSON PITCH"
21. PSYCHIC ILLS - "EARLY VIOLENCE"
22. GRINDERMAN - "GRINDERMAN"
23. VARIOUS ARTISTS - "IMAGINE THE SHAPES WHAT'S YOUR RUPTURE?"
24. AIR - "POCKET SYMPHONY"
25. J DILLA - "RUFF DRAFT"
26. JESU - "CONQUEROR"
27. LOCUST - "NEW ERECTIONS"
28. THIS IS MY FIST A - "HISTORY OF RATS"
29. CADENCE WEAPON - "BREAKING KAYFABE"
30. ALKALINE TRIO - "REMAINS"

WMUA.org 91.1

WMUA IS A NON-COMMERICAL, ALTERNATIVE RADIO STATION RUN BY STUDENTS OF THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS THAT IS DEDICATED TO SERVING AS A MOUTHPIECE FOR MUSIC, NEW AND OLD, THAT RARELY IS HEARD ON MAINSTREAM RADIO, AND COMMITTED TO MUSIC AND PUBLIC AFFAIRS

4TH ANNUAL MILLER LECTURE

BOSCH'S ENMITY

Exploring the paintings and drawings of the mysterious Heironymous Bosch (c. 1450–1516)

JOSEPH LEO KOERNER
Renowned scholar of Northern Renaissance art and currently a John Simon Guggenheim Fellow in Florence, Italy

WEDNESDAY APRIL 4 7PM
Weinstein Auditorium
Wright Hall, Smith College

Free and open to all
No reservations necessary

413.585.2760
www.smith.edu/artmuseum
Elm Street at Bedford Terrace
Northampton, MA 01063

SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART

SEA SEMESTER

Join Kimberly Gniadek, an SEA Admission Counselor, and Scott MacLellan, an SEA Alumnus and current UMass Student, for an Information Session.

Tuesday, April 3rd
Holdsworth Hall
Room 308
5:30 pm to 7 pm

Sea Education Association
admission@sea.edu
800.552.3633

www.sea.edu

Sophomore Jim MacDonald ranks first for the Minutemen with 14 RBIs and is the only UMass player with multiple home runs this season, with two. The third baseman is second behind Adam Tempesta in hitting with a .327 batting average.

UM looks to end losing streak at HC

BASEBALL from page 10

After today's game with Holy Cross, UMass plays its first game of the season at home when it hosts Rhode Island in three games before hosting Boston College in a make-up game from earlier in the year.

The Crusaders are certainly no Charlotte 49ers, who were ranked No. 29 in the National Collegiate Baseball Writers Association top 30 poll today. Holy Cross comes into today's game with a five-game losing skid of its own. Its last win came against Davidson on March 8, and it's only other win came back on Feb. 17 against Lamar.

Fortunately for UMass, the Crusaders only two wins came on the road. Holy Cross is winless at Fitton Field this season with an 0-5 record at home.

The Crusaders have only two players batting above .300 this year. Matt Perron (.407) and Brendan Akashian (.312) lead the team in hitting through the first 15 games. Akashian is one of three Crusaders with two home runs this season. The other two are Norm Roth and Jake Gorman.

Senior right-hander John Hampe has proven to be Holy Cross' best pitcher so far. His 3.18 ERA is a team-high, and he has a 1-1 record in two starts and four appearances overall. Hampe is the only Holy Cross pitcher with an ERA under 6.

On the other side, UMass has four players hitting over .300. Adam Tempesta (.333), Jim Macdonald (.327), Bryan Garrity (.311) and Bryan Adamski (.309) lead the Minutemen bats.

Macdonald has been solid at the plate as a sophomore in 2007. He leads UMass in home runs with two, and in RBI with 14. His slugging percentage of .491 is also a team-high.

The Minutemen pitching staff has a combined ERA of 6.14. Senior Chris Lloyd has had a few solid outings this season that his 1-2 record wouldn't show, while Mitchell Eilenberg comes out of the bullpen with a team-high 3.27 ERA in six appearances.

Danny Picard can be reached at dpicard@student.umass.edu. Log on to the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.umass.edu for more coverage of all UMass sports.

Senior Amanda Morin is fifth on the team in hitting and runs batted in, with a .294 batting average and 11 RBIs.

Balschmiter, Proctor lead team on road

NOTEBOOK from page 10

"Stacey's a great offensive force. She can work her way back into a count and take you to the fence," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "She's a great hitter and she's really learned to manage her count. Her pitch selection gets better every day. That's why she's been able to do some of the things she's done. [Against Dayton], she worked herself back from an 0-2 count to drive a ball to the opposite field to the fence, that was fabulous."

With sophomore third baseman Whitney Mollica struggling to consistently produce, the Minutewomen need Cullington to continue swinging the hot stick throughout conference play.

Earlier in the year, Cullington hit a game-winning grand slam in the top of the seventh inning against Indiana, capping a five-run rally in their final at-bat.

ACE HONORED

One would think that pitching a no-hitter would be enough for someone in one week — not Brandee Balschmiter. The sophomore ace also tossed a one-hit shutout and a four-hit complete game to improve her record to 11-8 on the season.

Her performance netted her both A-10 Pitcher of the Week and UMass Dinn Brothers Athlete of the Week.

"She's been making a lot of progress. Her spins are getting tighter," Sortino said. "I thought she brought some great stuff against Dayton. The fact that she shut them out [in game one] proves that. It's the kind of stuff you hope for."

In the no-hitter, against Dartmouth, Balschmiter struck out 11 Big Green hitters and walked three.

In her next performance, an 8-0 win over Dayton, the only hit she allowed was a first-inning infield single by Flyer left fielder Mollie Schrank. Schrank deadened the ball no more than 12 inches from home plate but beat the throw from UMass freshman catcher Jessica Serio.

Balschmiter has won her last four starts since Michigan State knocked her around for six earned runs and 11 hits on March 18.

UNDER THE RADAR

While Mollica's quest to find the form that won her a bevy of awards as a freshman and Cullington's emergence as the Minutewomen's top offensive threat, junior leftfielder Lauren Proctor has been huge for the Maroon and White this season.

Typically operating out of the five hole on UMass' lineup, Proctor's 19 RBIs and .345 batting average are both good enough for second on the team. She also provides a steady glove in the UMass outfield — she's committed just one error so far this season.

Proctor's ability to work herself into hitter's counts allows her better pitches to hit and a lot of walks. Her 13 walks tie her for second on the team with senior Candice Molnar. senior Amanda Acampora leads the team with 20.

A starter since her arrival on campus, Proctor boasts a .344 career batting average, placing her ninth all-time.

HOME SWEET HOME

After their two games with Dayton this weekend, the Minutewomen hoped for a peaceful few days at home before heading to Rhode Island for a double-header with the Rams. A canceled flight later and the Minutewomen didn't arrive back in Amherst until 5 a.m. on Sunday.

Due to that, the Minutewomen will wait until tomorrow morning to travel to URI instead of leaving Monday afternoon as originally planned.

"We got home at 5 a.m. [on Sunday], and I thought it would be better for us to rest," Sortino said. "Rhode Island's a funny trip. It's a long trip but we have a stop on the way. One of our players lives 10 minutes away from [URI's] field. So we can stop there and have something to eat and hang out there a little bit. So it's good that we don't just have to get off the bus and try to get our legs. After that whole ordeal [Sunday], I thought it would be good to sleep in our own beds tonight."

Joe Mcilvoy can be reached at mcilvoy@student.umass.edu. Log on to the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.

Junior Stacy Cullington is having her best year as a Minutewoman. The second baseman is dominating offensively, with a team-leading five home runs and 26 RBIs.

Rams host UMass in double-header

SOFTBALL from page 10

they don't tend to draw a lot."

UMass annually dominates the rest of its conference — the Minutewomen haven't had a losing record in the A-10 since 1985 — and the rivalry with Rhode Island has been particularly one-sided.

The Minutewomen are 74-13 (69-12 under Sortino) against the Rams; this highest win total against any opponent. However, Sortino believes that URI has a growing program and should not be overlooked.

"URI is a lot better this year," Sortino said. "I was looking at the tape and they're a lot better. We really have to be ready for Rhode Island. URI can swing the bat so we need to be ready to play."

The Minutewomen delayed their trip across Southern New England until today to give the players more rest. After a delayed flight home from Dayton disrupted the team's travel plans, Sortino postponed last night's bus ride until today.

"We had a really rough time the other night. We got home at 5 a.m. and I thought it would be better for us to rest," Sortino said.

Rhode Island is the second-worst team in the league (next to Temple) in team pitching, with a 5.49 ERA this season, which may give the Minutewomen a chance to improve some of their struggling bats.

While the team's hitting and defense are slightly better — seventh and eighth, respectively — those may be somewhat deceiving numbers in a deeper-than-usual A-10 field.

"They hit the ball well and have a solid defense," Sortino said. "I think the weakest part of the team is their pitching, at least on paper. We need to manage our counts and give ourselves great at-bats. Defensively, we need to make our pitches on the mound and make all the routine plays."

The key to the game will most likely be the play of the Minutewomen's pitching staff. Sophomore Brandice Balschmiter has been solid for UMass thus far and is third in the conference with a 1.71 ERA.

However, freshman Bailey Sanders has struggled early in games before settling down. But that has made some games closer than they needed to be for the Minutewomen.

Balschmiter has a much deeper array of pitches to choose from this year compared to her rookie campaign. Her drop-ball and changeup have made opposing batters look foolish at times, expecting her signature blistering fastball. Sortino complimented her ace on her improved control. Balschmiter is placing her pitches more this season, demonstrating her flexibility in the circle.

She also said that with a larger arsenal of pitches gives Balschmiter to be more consistent in the circle. If one of her pitches isn't there, she can now rely on another to get outs.

"You never have all your pitches on any day," Sortino said. "I don't know any pitcher that has that. What you hope to have is one pitch that's really working and one that's kind of working. Some days maybe you have a third one. I don't think I've coached a game where my pitcher had all her pitches."

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jercmyr@student.umass.edu. Log on to the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.

The UMass Student Union Gallery presents
a lecture by internationally renowned artist
LAURIE ANDERSON
as part of their 50th Anniversary Celebration
APRIL 4, 2007 at 7PM
STUDENT UNION BALLROOM

Lecture Costs: UMass ID: free, 5-College ID: $3, General Public: $5
413.545.0792 (TICKETS AVAILABLE AT TIX BOX OFFICE)
www.umass.edu/rso/suag
This event has been organized and sponsored by the Student Union Gallery. It has also been sponsored by the UMass Arts Council, UMass Alumni Association, Center for Student Development, Office of Student Affairs and Campus Life, Student Affairs Cultural Enrichment Fund, SGA and GSS

LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO LIVE?

KAMINS
SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS

- PRESIDENTIAL APTS
- COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS
- PERRY APTS
- 177 N PLEASANT ST
- COLLEGE INN APTS
- LANTERN COURT APTS
- MILL HOLLOW
- CRESTVIEW APTS

55 S PLEASANT ST 253-2515 AMHERST

LARGEST SELECTION OF APARTMENTS IN TOWN

New homecoming for track and field

By Scott Feldman

After 12 straight years of running their events on the road, the Massachusetts men's and women's outdoor track and field teams finally hosted a meet at home Saturday.

Fans watching the UMass track teams for the first time in a dozen years were treated to some exceptional individual performances by both sides, as well as a strong team effort by the men's team.

The Minutemen finished second in total team points at the inaugural five-way meet, with Albany being the only team to place ahead of the Minutemen. UMass coach Ken O'Brien was proud of the way his squad performed. He emphasized how the home crowd energized the Minutemen athletes.

"I would not be surprised if the home-track advantage gave us the extra 18 points needed to get us second place," O'Brien said.

The men's team earned many of their team points partly due to the collective effort of some new athletes. Freshman Tyler Cotto took first place in the men's triple jump with a leap of 42 feet, 1.5 inches, setting a facility record in the process.

In the 5,000-meter race, freshman runners Andrew Mulvaney and Dan Barry took first and second place in the event, respectively. Mulvaney had a winning time of 15 minutes, 17.52 seconds. This was Mulvaney's first actual track and field meet at the collegiate level. He did not run at any indoor track events, instead spending his time training for the outdoor meets. O'Brien praised Mulvaney's work ethic.

"[Mulvaney] has a great passion for the sport and trained very hard," O'Brien said.

The 800-meter run was a major strength for the Minutemen. UMass runners Kevin Murphy, a junior, and freshman Ryan Diorio placed first and second in the event, with Murphy posting a winning time of one minute 56.57 seconds. Additionally, UMass had four other runners who placed in the top ten for the event.

O'Brien was not exactly surprised at how well his freshmen did, given their effort in practice, though he was very pleased at the results of their first meet.

"I wasn't surprised really, but it's like opening a Christmas present," O'Brien said, "you know it's going to special, but you don't know quite what it will look like."

The Minutewomen did not get the performance they would have hoped for on their opening day, finishing fourth overall out of five competing teams.

Despite the fourth place finish, UMass coach Julie LaFreniere was very positive about the experience the Minutewomen had on Saturday. She made a point of how being home put a spark in every athlete competing at the event.

LaFreniere noted that her team has many injuries to some of the key performers on the team and believes that hinders the overall ability of the team to score points. LaFreniere said she was proud that the injured athletes on the team showed up to the meet in support of their teammates.

The women's team was not without some impressive individual performances. Junior runner Christina DeRosa had an outstanding day, taking second place in the women's 1500-meter run and winning the women's 5,000-meter run.

Her winning time of 17 minutes, 23.97 seconds qualified her for the Eastern College Athletic Conference Championships. LaFreniere said that the "impact of the crowd and the screaming of the fans" may have helped push DeRosa's exceptional 5,000-meter time.

Thrower Lisa Wilson also had a good opening day for the Minutewomen. Wilson won the women's discus throwing event with a toss that traveled 135 feet, seven inches, in addition to top ten finishes in the shot put and the hammer throw events.

Coach O'Brien and Coach LaFreniere were excited about how the opportunity to compete at home in front friends and family energized their athletes.

"The look in the athletes' eyes when the event finished, they never had a home meet at college so they didn't know how exciting it could be," O'Brien said.

"I was happy with the whole celebration of being able to come home," LaFreniere added.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu. Log on to the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all of UMass sports.

Junior Kevin Murphy placed first for the Minutemen in the 800-meter run with a time of one minute, 56.57 seconds. The Maroon and White finished second overall behind Albany at the team's first home event in 12 years at the brand-new UMass Track and Field Complex.

Minutewomen impress on the water

Rowers place second at Yankee Cup, first in Sunday's regatta

By Mike Gillmeister

Despite being without three of its top freshman, the Massachusetts crew team did well in its regattas over the weekend with a 2nd place finish at the Yankee Cup and a win at the Sunday regatta against Colgate and Iona.

In Kingston, R.I. the host team, Rhode Island, won the Yankee Cup with 31 points. UMass and Connecticut tied with 18 points for second place. New Hampshire brought up the rear with five points.

Although the team as a whole did not produce favorable results, Coach Dietz praised his athletes that participated in the lightweight four race. This is a race comprised of four of a team's lighter members.

The participants for UMass in this race were seniors Anna Malinkevich, Abby Lively and Maria Arcari, junior Sarah Potts and sophomore coxswain Molly Morgan.

URI outlasted a UMass boat which carried the aforementioned rowers that seemed to bring an effort to the regatta that Dietz could not have been happier with, nevermind the outcome.

"These people are really racing and you can see it," Dietz said of the group.

Senior captain Tara Guinan really pulled her weight in her quad race, which the team won by 24 seconds. The three other athletes who were with Guinan were senior Hannah Brewster, junior Sarah Marsan and senior Ellen Maskrey.

The rest of the day did not go very well for the Maroon and White. In the first varsity eight race, URI beat out a UMass boat that was nine seconds behind the leader, followed by a distant UConn.

In the second and third varsity eight races, URI continued to narrowly edge a persistent UMass boat with UConn barely even in the chase. However, in the varsity four race, UConn returned the favor to UMass and edged them out for a second-place finish behind another impressive showing by URI.

URI swept both novice eight events, winning by at least 20 seconds in each race.

UNH showed in the standings by outlasting URI in its Novice Four race.

UMass assistant coach Alex Binkowski was thoroughly impressed by the effort put forth by the younger, less-experienced women as well. "They're making good progress," said Binkowski. "Not only will time help the novices' and walk-ons' progress, but also getting some key players back in the boat will help us at A-10s as well."

Sunday in Orchard Beach, N.Y. proved to be a much better day for the Minutewomen, as they overtook Colgate and Iona on the Orchard Beach Lagoon, a neutral site. The varsity eight won their event, beating Colgate, as Iona did not have a first or second Varsity Eight team competing.

When asked to compare the two regattas, Dietz actually said that his team probably could have won both. However, he also said that due to a lack of time on the water and also due to injury, the team is not at full strength and therefore was not able to perform to the best of its abilities.

The UMass crew members of the second Varsity Eight team took their race as well, beating Iona by nearly 17 seconds. However the third varsity eight team of UMass did not fair as well as the two other squads, losing by 10 seconds.

The Maroon and White's worst event was the varsity four race, in which the Minutewomen made up of Malinkevich, Potts, Lively and Morgan, placed last, with three other teams ahead of them including two Iona teams, which finished in first and fourth place, respectively.

The Minutewomen have improved their record to two wins and one loss. However, it can be said that they could not have achieved such success without the guidance of their two dedicated Co-captains, Tara Guinan and Gabrielle Papineau.

"They're not only the voice of the team but the heart and soul as well," said Binkowski.

Coach Dietz also echoed these sentiments as he said that the two women have mentored the team very well and even encouraged their teammates to undertake more practice time in order to improve upon last weekend's efforts. In fact, that showing of heart and dedication even surprised Dietz, though he would probably welcome the initiative of his captains to work even harder in order to succeed.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu Log on to the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.

Typadis on pace for record season set back in 1984 by Pam Morel with 51 goals. Last season she had a career high 43 goals, ranking fifth all-time for single season goals. If she breaks the single season goal record she could also crack the top 10 for single season points leader. Typadis only needs 56 points to crack the top 10.

W. Lacrosse from page 10

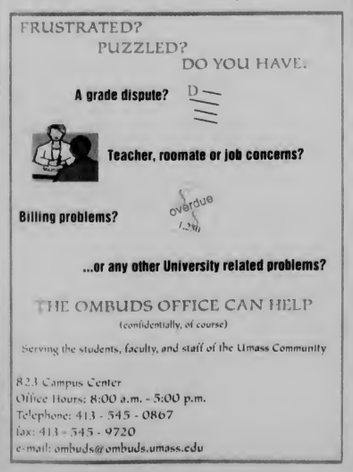
Sophomore midfielder Holly Drown is second on the team in scoring with 29 points (24 goals, 5 assists) and junior attack Melynda Zwick is behind her with 26 points (18 goals, 8 assists). Leading the team in passing is junior midfielder Kristina Twichell with 12 assists.

Freshman defender Ashley King leads the team with 24 ground balls and Drown leads the team with 27 draw controls. Drown is on pace to have 45 draw controls which would break the single season record of 39 set by both Rachel Ingraffea and Fay Naber in 2001.

Steve Games can be reached at sgamesva student.umass.edu Log onto the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegians-ports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.

Junior Kathleen Typadis is the team's leading scorer with 36 points on 30 goals and 6 assists. She is on pace for the school's single-season goals record.



FRUSTRATED?
PUZZLED?
DO YOU HAVE:
A grade dispute?
Teacher, roomate or job concerns?
Billing problems?
overdue
...or any other University related problems?
THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course)
Serving the students, faculty, and staff of the Umass Community
823 Campus Center
Office Hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
Telephone: 413 - 545 - 0867
fax: 413 - 545 - 9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT
REGISTRATION FOR FALL 2007
The Writing Program Placement Test
will be offered on:
Wednesday, April 4, @ 6:30 pm, Bartlett 109
You must take this exam to qualify for enrollment in EnglWrit 112 (College Writing).
This test may be taken only once.
Students do not need to register for the test.
The next group exam will be offered in the Fall of 2007.

Seven O's
Every Wednesday:
♦ KARAOKE ♦
♦ LIVE BANDS ♦
Friday, April 6th, 2007:
MacDonald Coal Co.
Saturday, April 7th, 2007:
Soul Sensation
♦ Student Band Wanted ♦
Need a place to play?
Come to Seven O's!
Route 116 330 Amherst Rd
Sunderland, MA 01375
(413) 665-8788
3 PM to 1 AM M-F
1 PM to 1 AM Sat&Sun
Next To Cliffside Apts.

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

9								1
			7	2	6
6		5				2		8
		3	1	4	5	8
		1	3	6	7	9
1		8				5		9
			6	1	8
7								6

ACROSS
1 Olden days
5 Slovenly one
9 Gate closer
14 Comply with a command
15 Signal for a cab
16 Potato variety
17 Beloved
18 Jamaican citrus fruit
19 May and Cod
20 TV alien
22 Nosy Parkers
24 Sitcom from a sitcom
28 Pub missile
29 Spanish scarf
31 Ferocious
35 Circle segments
36 Western lawman Wyatt
38 Yellowish white
39 Carnival city
40 Annoying
42 Venl opening?
43 Domesticated
45 Eld
46 Wed in France
47 Conch coverings
49 Tidied up
51 City in Spain
53 Trick pitches
54 Jogged one's memory
58 Senator Kennedy
59 Run away to marry
60 Dry ravine in Africa
62 Heron's cousin
66 Accumulate
67 Mild Dutch cheese
68 Ahab's mistress
69 ___ on (milly coddles)
70 M. Descartes
71 Billy or nanny

DOWN
1 Group of whales
2 Fortas or Lincoln
3 Aral or Caspian
4 Despots
5 Automated dock mixer
6 Fall behind
7 Lubricates
8 Window shade
9 Rubbery candy
10 Converting device
11 Record
12 "Mask" star
13 "Bonanza" role
21 Law in Bordeaux
23 Loud
24 Brains
25 Outcast
26 Earnings
27 Eccentric
30 Firebug's crime
32 Be tearfully disoriented
33 Walk of life
34 Improves by editing
37 Skier openings
40 State of indolence
41 Lunch hour
44 Elongated circle
46 Blankets, sheets, etc.
48 Turf
50 Equal score
52 More recent
54 Enjoy a novel
55 Tickled Muppet
56 Castle protector
57 ___ City, FL
61 Quarterback Marino
63 Halloween cry
64 Writer Levin
65 Formed a lap

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The Harp
SPECIALS!
Honey Brown, Molson
$2.00 a pint / $6.50 a pitcher
TONIGHT • Trivia Night
WED • Open Mic Night
(all are welcome)
Pizza 'til midnight 7 days a week
Voted best Neighborhood bar
East of the River 2005 & 2006
Valley Advocate Readers Poll
Free wireless Internet!
163 Sunderland Rd N. Amherst
just north of the apartments
413-549-6000 www.theharp.net

Quote of the Day

"Freerange chicken aint free and that aint no range. Chickens are incarcerated; some are more feces-pecking, deathrow toxic than others."
-Ted Nugent

Two Dudes By Aaron Warner

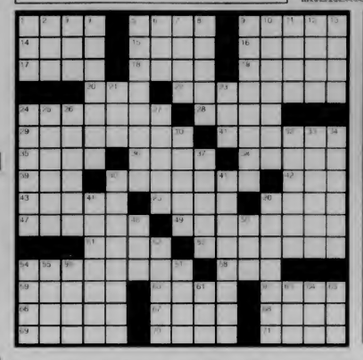
THIS GIRL'S BEEN HITTING ON ME ALL NIGHT, DUDE! WHAT SHOULD I DO?
STROKE HER HAIR, AND ASK IF SHE WANTS TO GO BACK TO YOUR PLACE.
I HAVE BEEN, DUDE. THAT'S WHY SHE KEEPS HITTING ME.

Szajgin's Saga By Ashley Miami

Hard Knocks By Louis Coppola

HARD KNOCKS
MOM, I DON'T THINK I COULD HAVE MADE IT THROUGH NEW YORK IF YOU HADN'T RAISED ME.
YOU KNOW WHAT I MEAN? A LITTLE TOUGH LOVE?
OR MEAN LOVE.
PASSIVE-AGGRESSIVE LOVE.
I GET IT?

Welcome To Falling Rock National Park By Josh Shalek



Submit your comics!
collegiancomics@yahoo.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You are destined to end Oprah Winfrey's lifelong status as a bachelorette.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
If you have even the slightest inkling that Hillary Clinton is a robot, you are right.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Nothing is more upsetting than cracking an egg and seeing a baby chicken plop out.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Rattlesnakes are only angry because no one will ever give them smoochies.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
You will drink more coffee than any bladder can handle and master "the pee dance."

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Today will be brought to you by the number 7 and the letter "s."

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You are hotter than the pink ranger and better with a bow and arrow.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Stay away from that Dalmation! I think he's got chicken pox or something.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
There is a big difference between lying and delaying the truth.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
We are living in a material world yet somehow you remain naked.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Find an Aruban radio station online and fill your room with an auditory tropical breeze.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
There's a rabid squirrel under your bed but don't be afraid, he only wants to snuggle.

BREAKING NEWS:
The crossword solutions are now posted at
www.dailycollegian.com
and this time I'm not even lying!

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

Like no other course, Army ROTC Our Nurses call the shots! Guaranteed 3 ½ to 2 year Full Tuition Scholarships plus $5,000 yearly Call 413-545-2321 www.umass.edu/armyrotc

NEW THRIFT SHOP IN TOWN Threads of life, hospice thrift shop, now open, wed-thur 2-5, fri-sat 10-1 55 University Dr. Amherst, Next to The Hanger. Clothing for all, housewares. Donations accepted, vol needed. 549-8800

Apartment for Rent

Mill Valley Estates APARTMENT FOR RENT 2 bedroom $1125, 3 bedroom $1425, 4 bedroom $2175 Accepting Applications, 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winnco.com

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Apartment for Rent

Center of town, 1,2,3 bedrooms hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Employment

Now Hiring Atkins Farms Country Market 1150 West Street Amherst MA www.atkinsfarms.com (413) 253-9528 Sales Associates: Evenings and Weekends in the Bakery, Deli and Candy Departments. Cashiers: Days Evenings & weekends at the Front Register Area.

Employment

Summer on Cape Cod Rent & utilities paid in exchange for providing transportation for teen. Easy walking distance to downtown & beaches, awenkozma@aol.com

Full time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office, $9.50/hour Applications available at 235 Whitmore and are due April 13th.

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

Employment

Attention All Juniors and Senior! April 6th is the last day to apply to become a legal Assistant with the Student Legal Services Office. Earn 12 undergraduate credits while gaining valuable experience in the legal field! Contact us at 545-1995 or stop by our office at 922 Campus Center!

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Services

Pregnancy Testing. HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992. www.tapestryhealth.com

Summer Sublet

Alpine Commons apartment June-August 15th $2050/month includes utilities. 413.204.9519 or jennaw@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, APRIL 3, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass, Holy Cross square off

Minutemen extend road trip, look to snap five-game slide

BY DANNY PICARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It's been another slow start for the Massachusetts baseball team in 2007. The Minutemen have yet to play a home game this season at Earl Lorden Field, and they are currently on a five-game losing skid.

The schedule hasn't been easy for UMass, however, but this afternoon presents a much easier challenge than the likes of Central Florida or Charlotte.

The Minutemen (4-11) play their first game in the state of Massachusetts today when they travel to Worcester to take on the Holy Cross Crusaders (2-13) at 3 p.m.

Junior right-hander Jim Cassidy will get the nod on the mound for the Maroon and White.

The last time these two teams met was in 2005 when the Crusaders defeated the Minutemen 7-4. This year marks another early-season battle of two northeast teams trying to get into the swing of things.

Today's game against Holy Cross marks a brief stoppage of Atlantic 10 play. UMass has a 2-4 record in the conference, and is coming off a three-game series with Charlotte in which the Minutemen were swept in the first-ever meeting between the two schools.

UMass' first three A-10 games came against Temple almost two weeks ago. The Minutemen were able to take the first two games of the three-game set, but the Owls prevented the sweep by winning the series finale.

See BASEBALL on page 7

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Shortstop Adam Tempesta leads the Minutemen with a .333 batting average. His 20 hits and five doubles are also best on the team.

Senior Candice Molinari's .480 on-base percentage is tops for the Minutewomen, as is her .404 batting average.

Softball continues A-10 play at URI

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts softball team continues its busy stretch of games today with a double-header at Rhode Island. The Minutewomen (15-12-1, 2-0 Atlantic 10) will be playing their fifth and sixth games in seven days as the team digs into the meat of the A-10 schedule.

The Rams (6-14, 1-1 A-10) will host the two-game set today at 3 p.m. in Kingston, R.I. as their home opener. Both the Rams and Minutewomen began their conference schedule against Dayton on the road. UMass swept the Flyers, while URI split their series.

This will be the second time the Maroon and White will play in another team's first home game of the season. UMass coach Elaine Sortino said that the excitement is not as daunting for the road team as it can be motivating for the host.

"We played in Dayton's home opener over the weekend," Sortino said. "A conference game is a conference game, so whether we're someone's opener or closer, they're all important to us. I don't know if it being their home opener means they'll have more people there.

See SOFTBALL on page 7

Cullington named Player of the Week

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Massachusetts junior second baseman Stacey Cullington collected her second Atlantic 10 Player of the Week award on Monday for her performances in the Minutewomen's four games last week.

UMass Softball

In a double-header with Dartmouth last Wednesday, Cullington went 1-for-5 with a run batted in. Against Dayton, in UMass' (15-12-1, 2-0 A-10) first A-10 games of the season, she went 4-for-6 with a two-run home run and four runs batted in.

The dinger came in the first inning of the second game. She drove a 2-2 pitch over the left-centerfield fence to give UMass a two-run lead.

Cullington is on pace to record the best offensive season of her career. Appearing in all 28 of the Minutewomen's games so far this season, Cullington's batting average sits at .299 which is more than 50 points higher than last season's .248 clip. Her 26 RBIs are already a career high and her five home runs put her atop the team.

See NOTEBOOK on page 7

UM dives into Atlantic 10 schedule

BY STEVE GAMES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team is set for a new season. UMass ended its non-conference play last week, finishing 5-5. Now the Minutewomen hope all the practice against the top-ranked competition will pay off when they start Atlantic 10 play.

The Minutewomen have seven games left on the regular season schedule. They played eight of their 10 games on the road (1-1 home, 4-4 road). UMass will have the luxury of hosting four games at McGuirk Stadium against George Washington, Richmond, Saint Joseph's and La Salle.

UMass Lacrosse

The last UMass finished 4-3 in the A-10 and clinched the last playoff berth in the conference. Since A-10 play started in 1999 the Minutewomen are 32-19 in conference play but only have a 3-6 record in tournament play, with one conference title in 2000. They have made the A-10 tournament every year except in 2005 when they finished 1-5, their only losing season in A-10 play.

LOOKING AT THE TOP A-10 TEAMS

The A-10 Preseason Coaches Poll has UMass ranked fourth. The defending conference champion Richmond Spiders are the preseason and mid-season favorite. Last year, the Spiders ended the Minutewomen's season, beating them, 10-5. Richmond has been ranked in the top 20 all season. The Spiders were ranked No. 14 for two weeks but have been humped to No. 20 with a 5-4 record.

UMass and Richmond are the only A-10 teams to be ranked in the nation's top 20. Back on March 13, the Spiders were ranked 14th and the Minutewomen were ranked 20th. It was the first time since 1999 the Minutewomen have been ranked in the top 20. Last season the Spiders defeated the Minutewomen in the regular season, 15-5. UMass will host the Spiders 12 days.

In the brief history of the A-10, the Temple Owls have dominated the conference. From 1999-2006 the Owls are 45-5 with 6 regular season titles and four tournament titles.

Last season the Owls made it to the conference championship only to lose to the Spiders, 13-11. The Minutewomen lost to the Owls, 11-10, last year, showing that they can play with the top teams. The Minutewomen have not been successful against the Owls. They are 3-24-1 all-time, with their last win coming in 2000. These two teams square off on Friday at Temple.

Duquesne was picked to place second along with Temple in the preseason coaches coll. Last season Duquesne finished with the same record as the Minutewomen in A-10 play, 4-3. Duquesne did not make the A-10 tournament because they lost the head-to-head tiebreaker to the Minutewomen with a 12-11 overtime loss.

STATISTICAL LEADERS THROUGH 10 GAMES

Junior attack Kathleen Typadis leads the team in scoring with 36 points (30 goals, six assists). Right now, Typadis is averaging three goals per game and on pace to tie the single-season goal mark

See W. LACROSSE on page 8

Sophomore Holly Drown is UMass' second-leading scorer with 29 points on 24 goals and five assists.

Top 10 sports movie characters of all time

Rob Greenfield

Don't know why I thought about this recently, but since VIII is making a fortune off of Top Whatever lists, I figured I'd take my shot at it. This time, it's Top 10 sports movie characters of all time. This is my humble opinion, and there are countless characters that could be on this list if it were a different person making it, so forgive me if I missed one of your favorites.

Here is my Top 10:

10. KEVIN O'SHEA, LITTLE GIANTS

"YOU'LL NEVER GET ANYWHERE USING YOUR HELMET AS A LUNCH BOX, KID."

Maybe it's because I first saw this movie recently, but Kevin O'Shea, played by Ed O'Neill (formerly Al Bundy, which also makes him awesome) in Little Giants is the quintessential obnoxious youth coach who takes his life way, too seriously. The aviators, the Cowboys' jacket and the short shorts don't hurt either.

9. BILLY HOYLE, WHITE MEN CAN'T JUMP

"YOU GOT A 'Z' IN YOUR RRO, MAN. WHAT ARE YOU, THE BLACK ZORRO?"

Billy Hoyle, played by Woody Harrelson, was the icon for one of the biggest stereotypes/truths in the history of basketball: white men can't jump. He's a little white guy with a backwards hat, some serious attitude and looks like he's been wearing the same clothes for the better part of a month. He also talks waaaaaaayyyyyyyy too much trash for his own good, and it's ridiculously funny. He makes the Top 10 because great basketball characters are extremely hard to come by for some reason.

8. HARRY DOYLE, MAJOR LEAGUE

"JUUUUUSSSSSSSSSSTTTTTTT A BIT OUTSIDE."

Harry Doyle, played by Bob Uecker, is an under-the-radar character in Major League who provides one of the best announcer movie characters in history. As much as I like Orsillo and Remy, I wish I had Harry Doyle and Marty calling the Sox games. It would be non-stop entertainment.

7. THE SANDLOT CAST, THE SANDLOT

"YOU'RE KILLIN' ME SMALLS."

There are just way, too many good characters from this movie to single any one of them out, so I figured just throw the whole bunch of them in there. From Benny, "The Jet" Rodriguez to Smalls to Squints to Ham, from top to bottom it is nothing but a funny baseball classic that brings everyone back to their childhoods and the quirky rules that you had for your makeshift baseball field in your backyard or down at the local park. Some might consider putting a whole cast in here a cop-out, but whatever.

6. NORM DALE, HOOSIERS

"MY TEAM IS ON THE FLOOR."

It is the original sports movie with the original ideal coach in Norm Dale, played by Gene Hackman. Dale teaches the value of team, sportsmanship, effort, and all of the other cliches before they became cliches. He is the original king of coaches and most every coach in movie history after Hoosiers has a little bit of Norm Dale in him or her, and some of his lines are absolute classics. You can't talk about sports movies without mentioning this guy, in the conversation.

5. SHOOTER MCGAVIN, HAPPY GILMORE

"WELL, GOOD FOR HAPPY GILMOH MY GOD!"

Happy Gilmore is nothing without Shooter McGavin. He is the ultimate reference for all things golf and immediately became part of everyday quoting, and not just on the golf course. Played by Christopher McDonald and his ridiculous overacting, Shooter McGavin is the perfect counterpart to the subtle humor of Adam Sandler, and it's nonstop laughs whenever he's on the screen. It's a right of passage in the golf world to quote Shooter McGavin while you're on the golf course.

4. CARL SPACKLER, CADDYSHACK

"HE SAID, 'ON YOUR DEATH BED, YOU WILL RECEIVE TOTAL CONSCIOUSNESS.' SO I GOT THAT GOIN' FOR ME, WHICH IS NICE."

Don't want to beat the golf thing to a pulp, but Bill Murray as Carl Spackler is one of the greatest transformations on the big screen, and he's another character that gives his movie the over-the-top push into Classicdom. Doesn't matter what sport you play, just mention the 'Cinderella Story' scene and people will know who what you're talking about. And here's the icing on the cake: Murray improvised most of the lines in that movie. Amazing.

3. "CRASH" DAVIS, BULL DURHAM

"DON'T THINK. YOU'LL HURT THE BALL CLUB."

So many great lines for this guy. He's been quoted in the mock movies for Sportscenter commercials and some of his speeches are gospel in the baseball world. He's played by Kevin Costner, who does a good job of portraying the hard-nosed, old-school baseball guy who knows the game better than he knows himself. It's a fun contrast with Tim Robbins' goofy character who can't tell his knee from his elbow. My favorite scene is when "Crash" starts tipping pitches because "Meat" won't throw what he asks him to.

2. ROCKY BALBOA, ROCKY

"CUT ME, MICK."

Rocky is the tough guy with a soul and some funny lines up his sleeve. Rocky is the prototype underdog – the man who overcomes all of the overwhelming odds and does the impossible. He's also a certified bad ass. He takes an absolute beating and, as a friend of mine pointed out recently, there's no way that his fight with Apollo Creed should have gone as far as it did, because both guys were bleeding profusely from the face. Awesome movie and awesome character.

1. JIMMY DUGAN, A LEAGUE OF THEIR OWN

"IT'S SUPPOSED TO BE HARD. IF IT WASN'T HARD, EVERYBODY WOULD DO IT. IT'S THE HARD THAT MAKES IT GREAT."

I don't think there's one movie that Tom Hanks isn't great in – maybe You've Got Mail but that's the only one. He's unbelievable as Jimmy Dugan, and puts together a cynical and sarcastic performance for the ages. When I think of him chucking a glove off of Stillwell's face, and the ensuing "Ha ha ha! Got him!", I want to watch that movie immediately. There are many other classic Duganisms, the most obvious being "There's no crying in baseball!", which is probably the most recognizable line in sports movie history. That, among various reasons, is why Jimmy Dugan is No. 1 on the list of the Top 10 sports movie characters of all time.

Honorable Mentions Chubbs Peterson, Happy Gilmore; Becky "The Icebox" O'Shea, Little Giants; Judge Smails, Caddyshack; Rod Tidwell, Jerry Maguire; White Goodman, Dodgeball; Chet Steadman, Rookie of the Year; Dottie Hinson, League of Their Own; Terrence Mann, Moonlight Graham, Field of Dreams; Lou Brown, Pedro Cerrano, Roger Dorn, Willie Mays Hayes, Major League; Shooter, Hoosiers

-Rob Greenfield is a Collegian Columnist. He can be reached at rgreenfi@student.umass.edu

MINUTEWOMEN SWEEP URI PAGE 12 | RESTAURANT OWNER LOOKS BACK PAGE 6

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

SHOWERS : HI: 45 LO: 31 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY, APRIL 4, 2007

Grannies hold anti-war rally in Greenfield

BY DAVID HUMPHREYS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Raging Grannies, a local group advocating peace and government reform, staged a rally to support five members of the group who were arrested while protesting the war in Iraq yesterday.

The protest, which was held in front of the Greenfield District courthouse, included the Raging Grannies and two dozen of their supporters, many adorned with colorful signs, clothes and buttons, and used the power of words and song to protest the war in Iraq.

Singing homemade protest lyrics to melodies of traditional music, the Grannies focused mainly on criticizing President George W. Bush and the war in Iraq, and also sang about what their group is and why they protest.

"We're the Raging Grannies," they sang, "and we're here to make a stand against the raging killing in Afghanistan."

Linda Sarage, a Grannies supporter, said "the Raging Grannies is a wonderful outlet for the rage against a government not listening to its people and against Constitutional violation People listen to the Grannies."

"The Raging Grannies are here to do anything we can to expose the lies of the Bush administration and to end this war," said Paki Wieland, another member of the group who was previously arrested. "Today's rally is one consequence of our act of civil disobedience [at the Army recruitment station]."

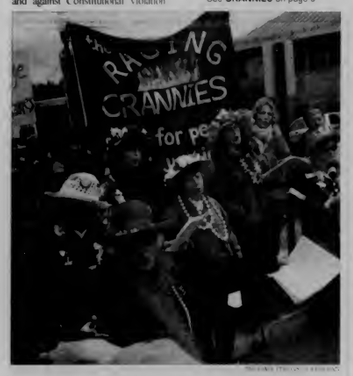
Ellen Graves, a former Vietnam protester and civil rights worker, says being part of the group helps her keep her sense of humor when dealing with such serious issues.

The arrests took place on Nov. 15, 2006 following a sit-in and protest at the Greenfield U.S. Army Recruiting station and charged the five Grannies with trespassing in a government building.

Just before 4 p.m. on Nov. 15, members of the Raging Grannies entered the station with a basket of oatmeal raisin cookies and voiced their opinions on the war in Iraq. Sgt. First Class Stanley Farley said.

Wieland said they went to station because, "we believe the recruiter's

See GRANNIES on page 3



A local peace group, The Raging Grannies, protested the arrest of five of their members in front of the Greenfield District courthouse, Monday.

Food and terrorism don't mix

Frank F. Busta, Director of the National Center for Food Protection and Defense, spoke at UMass about the threats of terrorism and the possibility of intentional contamination of the country's food supply yesterday. This lecture is the third part of the UMass Spring 2007 Environmental Lecture Series.

UMass grad student falls to his death

29-year-old remembered for his devotion to engineering

BY KATE OLESIN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute was the place where Anson Tripp had spent some of the best days of his undergraduate life – and it was also where he spent his last minutes of it.

A University of Massachusetts graduate student in the Transportation Engineering department ended his life last Thursday when he plunged to his death in a stairwell on the RPI campus.

Tripp, 29, climbed to the ninth floor of the tallest building on the RPI campus in Troy, N.Y., and jumped into the stairwell to his death, police told the Albany Times Union after the incident.

A 2000 graduate of RPI, Tripp was a Computer Science and Mathematics major who brought his love of numbers to the UMass campus.

"His death was a real shock to those of us here," said John Collura, a Transportation Department professor and Tripp's graduate advisor at UMass. "He was one of the brightest students we've ever had in the program over the last 30 years. I think it's important to note that he will be missed and he is a person who I think would have made a significant contribution to the Transportation Engineering field."

According to Collura, Tripp had finished his coursework about a year ago and intended to complete his thesis within the next three or four months. The subject of his thesis focused on planning and designing transportation for university campuses.

Police told the Albany Times Union that Tripp's body was discovered around 10 a.m. last Thursday morning. Based on wounds found on the body, police initially suspected foul play. Public safety and the Troy police secured the building, and the RPI campus was promptly closed to all but a few staff members. SWAT teams investigated the building and secured each room.

Family members said that Tripp had always been interested in science and mathematics.

"He loved math, numbers and patterns. He had a mind like a steel trap," said his aunt Mimi Harrington, an Amherst resident in a phone interview. Socially and academically, Tripp was a bright student who was a "great friend" and had a "great sense humor," according to Harrington.

In addition to aiding the transportation field, Tripp "was hoping for a world where there were no cars," according to Harrington. As an advocate for alternative forms of transportation, he worked at IBM Corp in Austin, Texas, where he did not own a vehicle.

He was also a member of the student chapter of the Institute of Transportation Engineering on the UMass campus.

According to the organization's Web site, "[1] members are traffic engineers, transportation planners and other professionals who are responsible for meeting society's need for safe and efficient surface transportation through planning, designing, implementing, operating and maintaining surface transportation systems worldwide." The chapter remains active throughout the year attending conferences, hosting guest speakers and engaging in community outreach projects.

Collura also said Tripp worked hard at a job at Trader Joe's in Hadley, and that his work there prevented him from being on campus full time like many other graduate students at UMass. Trader Joe's declined to comment.

Kate Olesin can be reached at kolesin@student.umass.edu

Vigil to be held for MLK Jr.

BY MATT BELLIVEAU
COLLEGIAN STAFF

On the 39th anniversary of the death of Martin Luther King Jr., the brothers of the Alpha Kappa Chapter of Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity along with the sisters of Alpha Kappa Alpha sorority of the University of Massachusetts will hold a candle light vigil on campus tonight.

The vigil will be held at 7:30 p.m. outside of the Campus Center, where students will begin their silent walk to the Southwest Residential Area.

"We feel that this event is important because it will educate the campus community about a man whose sacrifices have benefited us all," said Alpha Kappa member Daniel Cole.

The purpose of the walk is to celebrate the life of not only Dr. King, but also the contributions of his wife, Coretta Scott King, a prominent member of the Alpha Kappa sorority.

This week also marks Alpha Kappa's Second Annual Women's Appreciation Week, which will be kicked off by giving yellow long stem roses to women throughout the Pioneer Valley.

At the age of 35, Dr. King was the youngest man to have received the Nobel Peace Prize. When notified of his selection, he announced that he would turn over the prize money of $54,123 to the furtherance of the civil rights movement.

On the evening of April 4, 1968, while standing on the balcony of his motel room in Memphis, Tenn. where he was to lead a protest

See VIGIL on page 3

Members of the Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity and Alpha Kappa Kappa sorority will be holding a candle light vigil to honor the anniversary of Martin Luther King Jr.'s death, which occurred on April 4, 1968.

67 percent of students don't care about illegal downloading

BY CITRIS HYNES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Even with the risk of becoming involved in legal trouble with the Recording Industry Association of America (RIAA), it seems college students nationwide are overlooking the repercussions of illegal downloading.

According to a survey conducted last week by SurveyU – a Brooklyn-based group of technologists and researchers with expertise in creating interactive survey research dialogue for the modern college student – 67 percent of students on college campuses are still not concerned with the with their illegal downloading habits.

The survey, which was conducted during the weekend of March 24, polled students on how many songs they own and how they received them, whether or not they side with musicians and the music industry, the government or other college students and how informed they are on legal issues surrounding digital rights.

Five hundred online interviews were conducted between March 24 and March 26 throughout college campuses nationwide.

The results showed that 53 percent of college students in the country are actually aware of the issue, but only 35 percent of that group are familiarized with their legal rights.

This rash of illegal downloading has led to drops in revenue throughout the music industry with factors like single-song purchases and file-sharing networks acting as contributors. When respondents were asked to guesstimate the amount of music purchased in their collection versus the amount that was not purchased SurveyU found that only 57 percent of people's total libraries had been bought.

"Clearly there's a sense among college students that once a song has been digitized, it's free," said Dan Coates, Co-Founder of SurveyU. "This is a generation that has grown up around digital media and is living on the fault lines of a digital rights issue."

Although revenues in the music industry are decreasing, students don't appear to believe that affects the well-being of musicians whose files they are sharing. When asked if they agreed with the statement, Brooklyn-based research group SurveyU conducted the poll.

"Musicians don't suffer since their growing fan base buys concert tickets and makes other financial contributions to their success," 60 percent agreed.

Facts show the average ticket price rose 62 percent from 1996 to 2001, while the Consumer Price Index increased just 13 percent. The price of sporting events, movies and shows rose 24 percent according to figures

See RIAA on page 3

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 110

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Eric Athas
MANAGING EDITOR Rob Greenfield
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sheryl Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jameson Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COMICS EDITOR Adam Szajgin
EDITORIAL EDITOR Tucker Merrick
NEWS EDITOR Matt Belliveau
SPORTS EDITOR Danny Picard
SPORTS EDITOR Jon Pelland
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Perez
FINANCE MANAGER David Valade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Puddester
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Sydney Towne
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Dolianitis
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonpakuksol
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Brendan Hall
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeremy Rice
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS' CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCENE IN 1907, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADCASTING SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Eric Athas

COPY EDITOR
Callie Williams

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Amanda Allen

Woman gets DUI while on horseback

SYLVANIA, Ala. — A woman who went for a horseback ride through town at midnight and allegedly used the horse to ram a police car was charged with driving under the influence, police said Tuesday.

He said DUI charges can apply even when the vehicle has four legs instead of wheels.

Police in the northeast Alabama town received a call around midnight Saturday about someone riding a horse on a city street, Gregg said.

Officer John Seals found Melissa Byrum York, 40, of Henagar on horseback on a nearby road and attempted to stop her. Seals kept trying to kick the animal to make it run, the chief said.

After ramming the police car with the horse and riding away, the woman tried to jump off but caught her foot in a stirrup, Gregg said. The officer took the woman into custody and discovered that she had crystal methamphetamine, a small amount of marijuana, pills and a small pipe, the chief said.

Associated Press

Researchers predict active hurricane season

By Dan Elliott
Associated Press

DENVER — The 2007 Atlantic hurricane season should be "very active," with nine hurricanes and a good chance that at least one major hurricane will hit the U.S. coast, a top researcher said Tuesday.

Forecaster William Gray said he expects 17 named storms in all this year, five of them major hurricanes with sustained winds of 111 mph or greater. The probability of a major hurricane making landfall on the U.S. coast this year: 74 percent, compared with the average of 52 percent over the past century, he said.

Last year, Gray's forecast and government forecasts were higher than what the Atlantic hurricane season produced.

There were 10 named Atlantic storms in 2006 and five hurricanes, two of them major, in what was considered a "near normal" season. None of those hurricanes hit the U.S. Atlantic coast – only the 11th time that has occurred since 1945. The National Hurricane Center in Miami originally reported nine storms, but upgraded one storm after a postseason review.

Gray's research team at Colorado State University said an unexpected late El Nino contributed to the calmer season last year. El Nino – a warming in the Pacific Ocean – has far-reaching effects that include changing wind patterns in the eastern Atlantic, which can disrupt the formation of hurricanes there.

A weak to moderate El Nino occurred in December and January but dissipated rapidly, said Phil Klotzbach, a member of Gray's team.

"Conditions this year are likely to be more conducive to hurricanes," Klotzbach said Tuesday. In the absence of El Nino, "winds aren't tearing the storm systems apart."

The team's forecasts are based on global oceanic and atmospheric conditions.

Klotzbach advised coastal residents along the Atlantic and Gulf of Mexico to have hurricane plans and preparedness kits in place, but he added, "You can't let the possibility of a hurricane coming ruin your summer."

The Atlantic hurricane season, which runs from June 1 to Nov. 30, averages 9.6 named storms, 5.9 hurricanes and 2.3 intense hurricanes per year.

The devastating 2005 season set a record with 28 named storms, 15 of them hurricanes. Four of those hurricanes hit the U.S. coast, the worst among them Katrina, which devastated New Orleans and leveled parts of the Gulf Coast region.

Gray has spent more than 40 years in tropical weather research. He heads the Tropical Meteorology Project at Colorado State.

Federal government forecasters plan to release their prediction in late May.

Norm Wright, an advisor from Cascadia Community College in Bothell, Wash., works to open a window as he helps gut a home in New Orleans during his spring break to help the relief effort for residents after the hurricane.

Couple fights to name baby 'Metallica'

STOCKHOLM, Sweden — Metallica may be a cool name for a heavy metal band, but a Swedish couple is struggling to convince officials it is also suitable for a baby girl.

Michael and Karolina Tomaro are locked in a court battle with Swedish authorities, which rejected their application to name their six-month-old child after the legendary rock band.

"It suits her," Karolina Tomaro, 27, said Tuesday of the name. "She's decisive and she knows what she wants."

Although little Metallica has already been baptized, the Swedish National Tax Board refused to register the name, saying it was associated with both the rock group and the word "metal."

Tomaro said the official handling the case also called the name "ugly."

The couple was backed by the County Administrative Court in Goteborg, which ruled on March 13 that there was no reason to block the name. It also noted that there already is a woman in Sweden with Metallica as a middle name.

The tax agency appealed to a higher court, frustrating the family's foreign travel plans.

"We've had to cancel trips and can't get anywhere because we can't get her a passport without an approved name," Tomaro said.

—Associated Press

Workers remove 700-lb woman

By Chris Newmarker
Associated Press

TRENTON, N.J. — It took nearly seven hours, the demolition of a bathroom and a sturdy extension ladder for rescue workers to remove a more than 700-pound woman from her home here, officials said.

Rescue workers arrived at the woman's home about 5:45 p.m. Monday in response to reports she had fallen and injured herself in her second-floor bathroom, said Trenton Fire Department Battalion Chief Qureeb Bashir.

They didn't get her out until after midnight.

The undertaking ended up involving dozens of emergency medical responders and firefighters from Trenton and neighboring Ewing.

Firefighters eventually had to dismantle the toilet and radiator, then saw out part of the bathroom wall and window to create a large enough space to move the woman out.

As the hours went by, the woman was in surprisingly good spirits, Bashir said.

"She actually had a pleasant personality. She was laughing and cracking jokes about the situation," Bashir said.

Initially, firefighters had requested a forklift or some other piece of commercial-style equipment to lower her out. But as the hours ticked away with no forklift, they turned to muscle instead of machines to get her out, Bashir said.

After tying her into a metal-framed basket, about a dozen firefighters and emergency medical workers used ropes to lower her down along a metal extension ladder, reinforced with a wooden frame they had constructed.

After lowering her into the backyard, they lifted her into a stretcher with wheels and pushed it along a path of plywood sheets they constructed.

Rescue workers then carried her into a special oversized ambulance, Bashir said.

The woman was taken to Capital Health System's Mercer hospital in Trenton. A hospital spokesman reported her in fair condition Tuesday.

Bashir said it appeared the woman hadn't been downstairs since the autumn, although she was able to move herself to the bathroom.

A neighbor three doors down, Irene Hunter, who has lived in the neighborhood for more than 40 years, said she only saw her neighbor once early last year. Hunter said the woman drove a van, parked it and quickly walked into the house.

Keith Richards 'snorts father'

LONDON — Keith Richards has acknowledged consuming a raft of illegal substances in his time, but this may top them all.

In comments published Tuesday, the 63-year-old Rolling Stones guitarist said he had snorted his father's ashes mixed with cocaine.

"The strangest thing I've tried to snort? My father. I snorted my father," Richards was quoted as saying by British music magazine NME.

"He was cremated and I couldn't resist grinding him up with a little bit of blow. My dad wouldn't have cared," he said. "... It went down pretty well, and I'm still alive."

Richards' father, Bert, died in 2002, at 84.

Richards, one of rock's legendary wild men, told the magazine that his survival was the result of luck, and advised young musicians against trying to emulate him.

"I did it because that was the way I did it. Now people think it's a way of life," he was quoted as saying.

"I've no pretensions about immortality," he added. "I'm the same as everyone ... just kind of lucky.

"I was No. 1 on the 'who's likely to die' list for 10 years. I mean, I was really disappointed when I fell off the list," Richards said.

—Associated Press

In comments published Tuesday, the Rolling Stones guitarist said after his father's death in 2002, he snorted his ashes mixed with cocaine.

Bush critics 'rooting for failure'

By Andrew Miga
Associated Press

MCLEAN, Va. — Congressional critics of President Bush's Iraq policy "seem to be rooting for failure," former White House chief of staff Andrew Card said Tuesday.

In an interview with The Associated Press, Card said lawmakers' efforts to mandate withdrawal timelines and threats to cut funding go beyond the scope of their duties. And he blamed critics in both parties for putting a negative slant on the war.

"We should be rooting for success," Card said. "I'm very upset that I see many of his critics, who are partisans, Republicans or Democrats, who seem to be rooting for failure. You know, they don't like his plan, therefore they want it to fail."

Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid (D-Nev.), has said he would try to eliminate money for the war if Bush rejects Congress' proposal to set a deadline to end combat. Besides Reid, Card said, "there are several of them who are getting in the way of the president's plans being implemented."

"Their job is to fund it, provide policy guidance through laws, but they're not supposed to be the tacticians," Card said. "I find that far too many members of Congress are trying to be tacticians."

Card rejected any talk that Bush is too secluded as a leader and rarely hears opposing viewpoints.

"It is unfair, during my experience with the president, to tag him as being in a bubble or isolated," Card said. "And he certainly did not receive monolithic counsel and advice during my tenure as chief of staff."

Card was responding to former Bush pollster and strategist Matthew Dowd's criticism in Sunday's New York Times that Bush's "my way or the highway" leadership style and his like-minded inner circle have made him more "secluded and bubbled in" as president.

"I don't see him as Matthew Dowd described him," Card said. "I think there is a myth around the president that allows that definition to have more traction than it should. But I think it's a myth. It's not the George Bush that I know."

Card, who was chief of staff from January 2001 through April 2006, said Bush was eager to hear divergent views before he made a decision.

"There was always a healthy debate," Card said. "The president encouraged a healthy debate. In fact, he used to tell us regularly, 'If you present me one option, you're presenting me with a decision. And I want several options, so that I can make a decision.'"

As for his own future, Card downplayed prospects that he would run for office in his home state, Massachusetts. Some Republicans want him to challenge Sen. John Kerry, who is up for re-election in 2008, or else run for governor.

"If people are waiting around for me to be a candidate, they shouldn't waste their time," Card said.

He said his close Bush ties would make it hard to run in Massachusetts, a Democratic-dominated state.

"It's a tough state to run as a Republican," he said. "It would be an especially significant challenge to run as a Republican who is not afraid to be associated with a president named Bush."

Position Notice
University Helpline
Full or Part Time

The University Helpline Staff will be trained in all aspects of Bursar, Financial Aid, and Housing Assignment Office policies and procedures and will be called upon to interpret those policies and procedures for prospective students, residents, and parents. In addition to policy training in the three areas, staff will receive extensive training in the areas of telephone etiquette and customer service. This position requires a very high level of commitment from the candidates chosen.

Starting Salary: $7.75/hr
Work Schedule: Monday - Friday: 9:00am - 5:00 pm

Starting Date: June 18, 2007
Ending Date: August 31, 2007
Work Location: Telecom Trailer
Application Deadline: Tuesday, April 17, 2007

Desired Qualifications

- You must be presently enrolled and in good standing
- You must be energetic and self-motivated
- You will need excellent oral communication skills
- You must be able to project a congenial and competent image on the telephone
- You should have experience living in the residence halls (not required)
- You may be a "Work Study" or "Non-Work Study" student
- You may be a full-time or part-time undergraduate student

Application Procedures

Applications are available in the Students Affairs Office, 319 Whitmore Building. Applications are due to the Student Affairs Office by 5:00pm, Tuesday, April 17, 2007. If you have any questions, please contact Sylvia Langford, Special Assistant to the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs at 545-2300.

Martin Luther King remembered at UM

VIGIL from page 1

march in sympathy with striking garbage workers of that city – he was assassinated.

On April 5, President Lyndon B. Johnson decreed that Sunday, April 7, 1968 be a day of national mourning in honor of Dr. King.

His body was viewed by mourners on the campus of Spelman College in Atlanta, Ga, April 7, 1968. His funeral was eulogized at Ebenezer Baptist Church in Atlanta two days later, and his body was laid to rest at the South View Cemetery. More than 300,000 people marched through Atlanta with his mule-drawn coffin that day.

Matt Belliveau can be reached at mbbelliv@student.umass.edu.

Thirty-nine years ago today, Martin Luther King was assassinated. More than 300,000 marched through Atlanta on the day of his funeral.

Gay marriages blocked by Romney recorded

BOSTON — Massachusetts' governor ordered state officials to record the marriages of 26 out-of-state gay couples whose unions were blocked by his predecessor, Republican presidential candidate Mitt Romney.

"I think that the previous administration was using a gimmick to make what I feel was a discriminatory point," Gov. Deval Patrick, a Democrat, said in announcing the move. "It's a simple gesture to include the information on the register. Keeping it out was the gimmick."

Registering the marriages in Massachusetts' vital records won't change the legal marriage status of the couples in their home states.

About 8,000 same-sex couples have wed in Massachusetts since the Supreme Judicial Court ruled in 2003 that the state Constitution guarantees gays the right to marry. A few other states offer civil unions with similar rights for gay couples, but only Massachusetts allows gay marriage.

Last spring, the Supreme Judicial Court ruled that Romney could use a 1913 law to prohibit out-of-state couples from marrying in Massachusetts if their home states explicitly prohibit same-sex marriage.

The 26 couples affected by Patrick's decision had obtained marriage licenses in four towns where clerks defied Romney's order not to issue marriage licenses to out-of-state gay couples.

Romney spokesman Eric Fehrmstrom said the former governor was right to refuse to record the marriages because Massachusetts law does not recognize marriages between same-sex couples from outside the state.

"It was Governor Romney's enforcement of this law that stopped gay marriage from being visited on every other state in the country," Fehrmstrom told The Boston Globe. "Now that Governor Romney is out of office, we are seeing an erosion of the previously strong defense of traditional marriage coming out of the executive branch."

State Department of Public Health Commission John Auerbach said Monday he will move quickly to act on Patrick's request. He called it "fitting and welcome that our state will now treat the recording of all marriage certificates equally."

Associated Press

Republican presidential candidate Mitt Romney refused to record the unions of 26 gay couples during his administration because Massachusetts law doesn't recognize same-sex couples from outside the state.

Woman shot at CNN complex

By Maryann Mrowca
Associated Press

ATLANTA — A domestic dispute erupted in gunfire at CNN's headquarters complex Tuesday, killing a woman and critically wounding the ex-boyfriend who pulled a gun on her, authorities said. The man and woman were arguing near the main entrance of the complex when the man shot her, police officer James Polite said. The armed man was then shot by a CNN security guard.

The woman was pronounced dead on arrival at a hospital, authorities said. The man was in critical condition.

The woman, who checked and stocked honor bars at a hotel attached to CNN Center, was Clara Riddles, 22, of College Park, said Caryn Kboudi, a spokeswoman for the Texas-based Omni Hotel chain.

Police described the man as the woman's ex-boyfriend. Kboudi said the hotel was not aware of any of the woman's domestic troubles.

The victims were seen being carried out of the building on stretchers. The man's face was covered in blood and his shirt was removed.

CNN reported that the offices of its Internet operations, CNN.com, were immediately evacuated. Video footage also showed police pointing guns at a man lying on the ground at the bottom of an escalator inside the building.

An announcement over the building's public-address system said there had been gunfire "with potential casualties." Police corded off an area by the escalators near the main entrance, facing Centennial Olympic Park.

The park was the site of a bombing that killed a woman and injured more than 100 people during the 1996 Summer Olympics.

"I heard four or five shots I really didn't see it. I got out of there quick," said Jas Stanford, 27, who had been helping take down a temporary stage in the park used for college basketball's Final Four festivities.

Besides the Omni Hotel, the CNN complex also includes a large atrium and a food court. It is connected to Philips Arena, the home of the NBA's Atlanta Hawks.

In the food court, Trina Johnson, 44, of Atlanta, was with her daughter on a family outing.

"All of a sudden we heard a big boom. We thought it was an explosion," Johnson said. "We didn't see the gun. Everybody just started running."

Soon afterward, CNN coverage of the shooting was being shown on large-screen televisions inside the atrium, near where the shooting had taken place.

A message seeking comment was left with CNN officials.

On Monday, a woman was shot and killed at the University of Washington in Seattle by an ex-boyfriend on whom she had sought a restraining order, police said. The man killed himself afterward.

Group conducts RIAA survey

RIAA from page 1

written by Eric Olsen of blogcritics.org.

Jeff Rabhan, a manger for artists such as Jermaine Dupri and Kelis said in the Wall Street Journal, "Sales are so down and so off that, as a manager, I look at a CD as part of the marketing of an artist, more than as an income stream. It's the vehicle that drives the tour, the merchandise, building the brand and that's it. There's no money."

"Concerts have been booming with double-digits growth, but the record companies aren't in on the profits made at concerts," Coates said.

The RIAA was most startled by the statistic that 98 percent of the 500 students interviewed said they had at least one song that they acquired without payment.

"If you ask me, 98 percent of people are doing it – it's not just a group of bad kids. It's like we have to punish an entire generation," explained Coates. "It's small things, like the subtle change in words, from file-sharing to piracy. Those two phrases conjure up very different images. What I'm saying is that you'd have to do a lot of talking to convince me that these kids are profiting off these files."

Coates also touched upon the dichotomy between the Baby Boomer Generation in opposition to the Millennial Generation (those born between 1982 and 2002).

"Boomers started out seeking to redefine society by focusing on the injustices of their time: race relations, the Vietnam War and the role of women in society," he explained. "Two generations later, their children, the Millennial Generation, are seeking to redefine society as well, but this time the injustices they perceive are digital in nature. The irony is that the generation that sought societal change is now 'the man,' and they are defending digital rights with the same force that was used in the '60s to thwart their own efforts."

SurveyU is an organization recruiting students to become panel members eligible to participate in their surveys. Their research data has been purchased by groups from the public and private sectors, foundations and academic institutions. More information can be found on their Web site at www.SurveyU.com.

Chris Hynes can be reached at chynes@student.umass.edu

Grannies hold anti-war protest

GRANNIES from page 1

job is to fill the ranks of soldiers who are being sent to Iraq to kill and be killed for war profiteering, not for any noble cause."

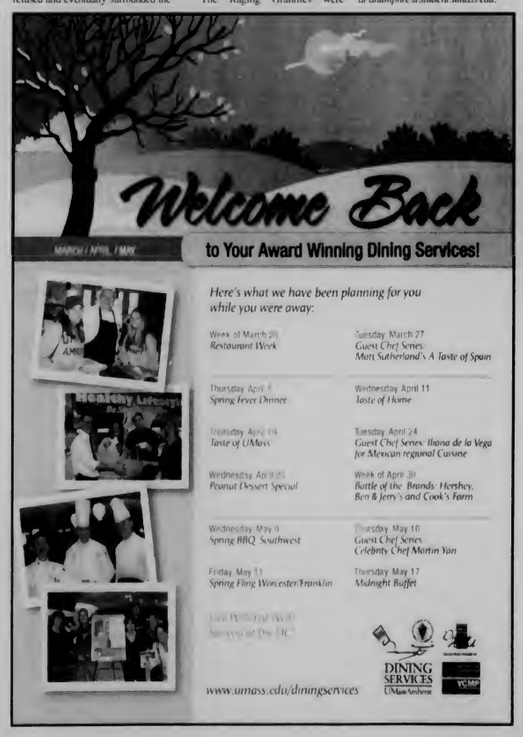
When asked to leave, the Grannies refused and eventually surrounded the recruiting station, Farley said.

"They were very polite, but we were still conducting business. After asking them to leave twice, we called the Greenfield police and closed the office for the day. When the Greenfield police got here, they still refused to leave and were arrested," said Farley.

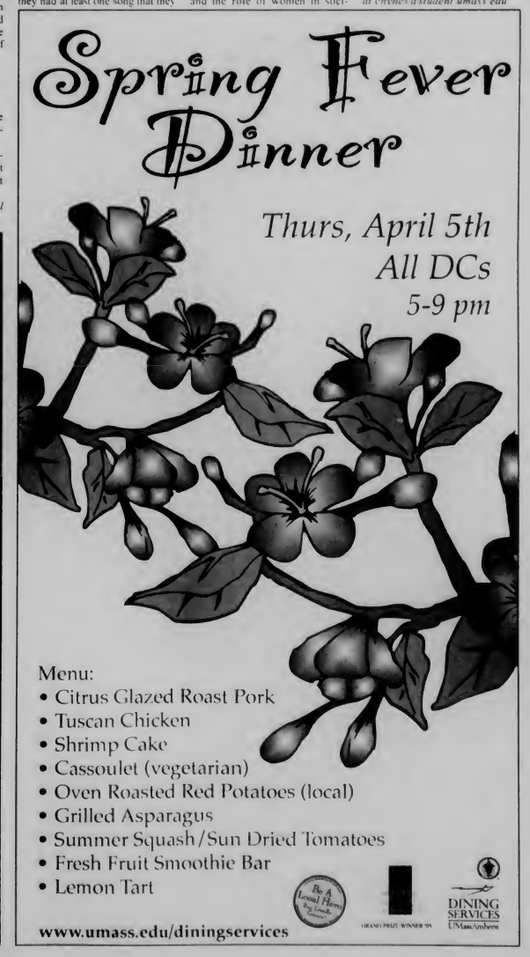
The Raging Grannies were found not guilty of the charges at the Greenfield District courthouse yesterday, Wieland said.

"I believe this is a victory for justice," Wieland said of the sentence. "It was a necessity to trespass and protest a greater evil, the War."

David Humphreys can be reached at dhumphre@student.umass.edu.



Welcome Back
to Your Award Winning Dining Services!
Here's what we have been planning for you while you were away:
Week of March 26 Restaurant Week
Tuesday March 27 Guest Chef Series: Matt Sutherland's A Taste of Spain
Thursday April 5 Spring Fever Dinner
Wednesday April 11 Taste of Home
Tuesday April 24 Guest Chef Series: Iliana de la Vega for Mexican regional Cuisine
Week of April 30 Battle of the Brands: Hershey, Ben & Jerry's and Cook's Farm
Wednesday May 9 Spring BBQ Southwest
Thursday May 10 Guest Chef Series: Celebrity Chef Martin Yan
Friday May 11 Spring Fling Worcester/Franklin
Thursday May 17 Midnight Buffet
DINING SERVICES
UMass/Amherst
www.umass.edu/diningservices



THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

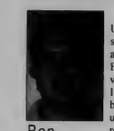
EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 4, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it."
Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Playing the enlistment card



Ben Duffy

I was walking past the Student Union steps last month, when I stumbled upon a mob of antiwar activists demonstrating on behalf of Ehren Watada, the Army lieutenant who has refused deployment to Iraq. I recognized most of their faces, because it's the same dozen or so usual suspects who harass ROTC recruiters and organize ridiculous "die-ins" on campus. As I walked past, I couldn't resist yelling out, "Ehren Watada is going to jail!" The speaker stopped speaking for a moment and just looked at me, unsure of what I meant. "Ehren Watada is going to jail, but he should be going for a lot longer!" I yelled. "Why don't you go enlist?" said the antiwar speaker.

Actually, I did enlist. It seems like ages ago when I got on that bus to basic training back in 1999. I served my four-year contract with honor, and was even involuntarily retained ("stop-lossed") for an additional four months and two days.

So I climbed the campus steps and produced my Veterans of Foreign Wars membership card from my pocket. The protestor had nothing to say after that.

"Why don't you go enlist" has become a debater's crutch for intellectually lazy antiwar activists. I call it the "chicken-hawk" argument. I used to find that the antiwar movement played the chicken-hawk card only after they had argued for a while and found themselves on the losing side of the debate. Increasingly, I've found that the antiwar Left cries "chicken-hawk" as some kind of "preemptive strike" to insure that they will never have to debate. What used to be their last line of defense is now their first mode of attack.

The chicken-hawk argument stacks the deck in favor of the antiwar movement because it permits only veterans and those currently serving to disagree with them. Military service is a prerequisite for supporting the war effort, whereas absolutely anyone can oppose it. If you have no military service, you can either agree with them or you can shut up. Forcing the other side to shut up is, in fact, the goal of the movement.

The chicken-hawk argument stacks the deck in favor of the antiwar movement because it permits only veterans and those currently serving to disagree with them.

I have an idea. What if we made it so that military service was a prerequisite for having any opinion at all on the current war? That would probably disqualify 99 percent of the Campus Antiwar Coalition, Radical Student Union and International Socialist Organization. Seeing as how neither Michael Moore nor Noam Chomsky has ever served in the military, both of those men would have to quit their asinine yapping as well. Once we've told all the civilians to butt out of the debate, military folks and veterans, such as myself, can figure out what to do from there.

Some people are physically or otherwise disqualified from joining the military. My father, for example, tried to enlist in the Navy during the Vietnam War, but was rejected because of old football injuries. A friend of mine really wants to enlist, but she has ruptured discs in her back and a soccer-related knee injury. But I guess my father and my friend are not really qualified to support the mission in Iraq, because they've never "been there."

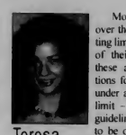
The chicken-hawk card works particularly well when played against the elected officials who agreed to send our troops to Iraq in the first place. Let me be the first to say that military service is a desirable quality in any elected official, especially if that elected official happens to be the commander-in-chief. One of the reasons that I support the candidacy of Duncan Hunter for president in 2008 is his exemplary military career. Even if he is a long shot, it would be nice to have an old Army Ranger and Vietnam veteran in the White House.

Our current president is not exactly a war hero, having spent the Vietnam War in the Texas Air National Guard. Bush has no combat experience. Although I would consider actual combat experience to be a plus, it is not a requirement for the office. Before Abraham Lincoln became our Civil War commander-in-chief, he achieved the rank of captain in the Illinois militia, a position that could be compared to that of Lieutenant Bush. Lincoln fought in the chronologically short Black Hawk War of 1832, in which the Illinois and Michigan militias chased a bunch of Sauk Indians around the plains and killed them. It was more like a four-month massacre than a war. Woodrow Wilson and Franklin Roosevelt led us through the First and Second World Wars respectively, and they didn't have a day of military service between them.

It is the knee-jerk reaction of the Left to bat away real arguments with the stale response of "why don't you go enlist." It systematically disqualifies most of the population from holding a particular point-of-view, and essentially shames them into silence. I don't have to worry about the chicken-hawk argument, because I almost always have more honorable military service than the person commanding me to "go enlist." Other people, however, should be free to support the war effort, whether or not they have actually served.

Ben Duffy writes on Wednesdays. He can be reached at bduffy@student.umass.edu

Finally a fashion to follow



Teresa Franco

Model agencies all over the world are setting limits to the figures of their models. No, these are not restrictions for models to be under a certain weight limit – these are new guidelines for models to be over an 18 percent Body Mass Index (BMI).

Spain originated this trend when a runway model fatally collapsed of heart failure due to an eating disorder after her strut on the catwalk. Other countries started creating weight minimums for their models when a second model in Brazil lost her agonizing battle with an eating disorder. The delicate looking Brazilian model, Ana Carolina Reston was 5 feet 8 inches and only 88 pounds at the time of her death. In the time leading up to her passing, her diet consisted of solely apples and tomatoes.

The United States has not yet fully adopted this new BMI policy, but is on its way to picking up the idea. Council of Fashion Designers of America brought up the topic at New York's fashion week in January, and their actions are coinciding, for the most part, with other countries. Though not quite as strict as Spain's, the U.S. has taken steps to improve the health of models who are not eating right by providing more nutritious food options backstage at shows.

Some fashion experts disagree with this ban of underweight models, arguing that 30 percent of today's top models will be shooed off the runway. Naomi Campbell, for example, would be forbidden to walk the stage since her body fat percentage is a mere 16 percent. Many designers say this policy would cause models to become even more obsessive about their appearance – that posing this new weight limit is taking away the "control" they have over their bodies – they should be free to decide for themselves how thin they should be.

The U.S. has taken steps to improve the health of models that are not eating right.

Making sure models are eating healthy and taking care of themselves is in no way stripping away the rights a woman has over her body. It's along the lines of the precaution high school sports team take of making sure every player has an up-to-date physical exam before they can participate. This tactic of monitoring models' weight would not only improve the well-being of those in the fashion world, but also young women in general.

Since runway models are a main source that movie stars and celebrities turn to for up-and-coming styles, their impressionable looks are even more consequential. If celebrities are taking cues from models, and young women cues from celebrities, then we have a problem. Having a minimum weight requirement will dam up the ripple affect of the pressure to have the ultra-skinny image that bleeds its way from the catwalk all the way down to American girls on the brink of adolescence.

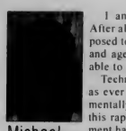
This policy, made for safety reasons, is comparable to weight restrictions in peewee football. Peewee football players are grouped into categories by weight – it's a precaution so that a 90-pound 11-year-old won't go up against a six foot 150 pound 12-year-old. It seems far and away, but the same idea applies to setting minimum requirements for models. It's a way of preventing health issues from arising, just as peewee football players prevent injuries to their players.

There's only one catch to these new rules – two young women in the height of their careers had to die in order for it to take effect. It's no illusion eating disorders are abundant in the fashion business, which makes it even more disheartening that death is the catalyzing reason for society to take action against it. It's hard to avoid the progressive development of celebrities evaporating into their own bodies. It was impossible to not to be appalled by the pictures on the covers of People magazine of every single rib outlined in Mary-Kate Olsen's skin when word first surfaced of her battle with anorexia. It would be assumed the fashion industry would have taken a glimpse of their models and realize they look no different.

Improvements have already started to arise as a result of the healthier weight guidelines that have been established. Fashion is taking a leap in the right direction to heighten the way not only models see themselves, but for the young girls watching them as well. As 22-year-old model Raquel Zimmerman told Glamour magazine about the new guidelines, "I don't see the super-skinny models from last season—and there's more food backstage!"

Teresa Franco can be reached at tfranco@student.umass.edu

It's all about me



Michael Cartwright

I am selfish, but that's OK. After all, I think it's how I'm supposed to be nowadays. In this day and age, it almost seems acceptable to be a tad self-centered.

Technology is advancing as fast as ever and I guess that's fundamentally how it should work, but this rapid technological advancement has caused a noticeable shift in control, placing it in the hands of the individual as opposed to the institution.

Now, it's all about us. It's all about you, and most importantly, it's all about me.

After seeing the cover of Time Magazine's Person of the Year issue at the end of 2006 (You), I congratulated myself with a pat on the back and lit up a Havana victory cigar.

I have always taken things step-by-step, day-by-day (similar to Sasha Mitchell, minus the spousal abuse), and so it came as a shock when I realized after four years of college debauchery, Time Magazine had elected me, of all people, its Person of the Year.

It was difficult accepting the fact I wasn't exactly Time Magazine's Person of the Year.

Although I was curious as to why the magazine didn't notify me of its decision, I quickly shrugged it off.

I called my parents and told them I had miraculously heaten out Pope Benedict, Bill Gates and Bono. They were proud.

My mother responded by saying, "Of course ya did hun. You dressed up as the Pope for Halloween, Bill Gates never says anything worthwhile, and Bono never shuts up, but you, my son, write a newspaper column that continually gets tossed and scattered on lecture hall floors all over campus."

I didn't say much in response, and it wasn't because I couldn't refute this brilliant point. I was still ecstatic over my national magazine cover debut.

During the past three months, I selfishly strutted around campus with an arrogant confidence. Being the single most recognized person in the world, I decided to hit on any girl who didn't appear to be a Women's Studies major. After the last feisty female cursed me out, I struggled to understand how I hadn't yet reached universal pimp-status. That is, until yesterday, when it all became clear and my self-assurance was sucked dry.

A concerned group of friends sat me down and informed me there was actually a mirror on the Person of the Year issue of Time Magazine, and as such, I was being recognized no more than anyone else who glanced at its reflective cover. I sobbed all day and drowned myself in pancake batter.

It was difficult accepting the fact I wasn't exactly Time Magazine's Person of the Year. But after overcoming my acerbity, I realized the decision to elect a collective "you" was a sensible one even though the tech revolution is plainly double-sided.

Facebook is a fine connector tool but it also creates a disturbing parallel social network. Everyone can think of someone whose Facebook personality is suspiciously dissimilar from their real-life one. The virtual world is expanding at an almost uncomfortable rate, and now, one can't help but ask, what is reality?

To quote one of pop music's biggest posers, why'd you have to go and make things so complicated?

It almost makes me yearn for the days when everyone actually remembered your phone number, and they used that number to call your house.

And, of course, these all-powerful social networks serve as a fantastic way to ruin relationships. Maybe some of our parents might have never tied the knot if they had lived during the Facebook MySpace era?

You think tagged Facebook photos are bad? Wait until your 10-year-old brother goes off to college in 2015 and his girlfriend comes across a tagged YouTube video of him at a golf pros and tennis hos extravaganza.

Google purchased YouTube for nearly two billion dollars last year, realizing this unfortunate reality would bank billions upon billions.

There is no denying it. It's all about YouThat, MyThis, and iThat. In a few short months, you will be updating your MySpace page via iPhone. Like before, you will take your iTrip adapter in the car to charge your iTunes-filled iPod.

Now, despite the fact I was nearly voted Person of the Year by Time Magazine, I am oddly enough, not with "the times."

I drive around in a dented 1996 Mercury Cougar. It contains a tape deck and a non-functional radio. I don't own anything starting with the ninth letter of the alphabet.

Maybe I'm not that selfish after all?

However, I am desperately trying to get with "the times." I recently joined Facebook, and might sell my ear to pay for roughly half of a new iPod. If I join MySpace, I might be able to make an appearance on NBC's "To Catch a Predator." This would make up for the fifteen minutes of fame that was stripped from me yesterday. Time Magazine will then come to realize its grave mistake.

Michael Cartwright can be reached at mcartwri@student.umass.edu

A call for rationality

Will someone please explain to me how two young men, neither of whom is gay, fighting over a girl constitutes a hate-crime?

The facts of Feb. 28, as reported in the Springfield Republican, are that two men and three women associated with the women's hockey team were in a parked car on Sunset Avenue. As it was after midnight, my guess is that they were coming back from a party and thus likely weren't exactly sober. Numerous published sources state that two men, quite intoxicated, came stumbling up to the car and mentioned that they were going "to a fight."

Words were exchanged, none friendly.

A young lady gets out of the vehicle and a young man, her coach and possibly her boyfriend, gets out as well, escorting her into the building. Physical violence ensues between this man, listed on a cached version of the team's Web site as their coach, and the other man who is a member of the swim team. There are a lot of concerns raised by this incident, but I fail to see how homophobia is one of them.

First, this incident fits into a pattern, that being of drunken late-night brawls on Sunset Avenue. Last fall, three young men in a vehicle exchanged words with other young man walking on the sidewalk. Again, I doubt any were sober and the situation devolved into multiple assaults including a student being struck in the face with what court documents describe as a "silver colored baseball bat." (His injuries were so severe that the ambulance went straight to the regional trauma center in Springfield.) And even though arrest reports identify the perpetrators of that incident as being of a race other than that of their victims, that was not a hate crime – and I fail to see how this one is either.

Both incidents, and countless others, are reflective of a general level of violence on this campus that the administration seems somehow unwilling or unable to address. There are young men on this campus whose idea of nightly entertainment consists of a drunken pugilistic brawl; no one seems to be able to fathom how such hooliganism is inherently inconsistent with the mission of the land-grant University. This is supposed to be a college, not a war zone.

Second, even if anti-gay slurs were exchanged (and that is disputed) that alone does not constitute a hate crime. Section 39 of Chapter 265 of the General Laws is quite clear, the assault must be "with the intent to intimidate" the victim "because of" the victim's sexual orientation. Unless the Commonwealth can prove that the perpetrator (1) had intent to "intimidate" the victim and (2) sought to intimidate the victim because of his victim's sexual orientation, this is not a hate crime.

This incident fits into a pattern, that being of drunken late night brawls on Sunset Avenue.

Words have both literal and figurative meanings. When campus activists chanted "F*ck the First Amendment" a few years back, they weren't advocating having sex with a then 216-year-old piece of parchment, instead, using the figurative meaning of the verb, they were encouraging Dr. Gargano to ignore the right of certain conservative students to draw a political parody.

So too when one states that a certain professor "sucks;" it is a commentary about the nature of the course and has no reference to a certain sexual act. And in the vernacular of Eastern Massachusetts, a homophobic insult is an incitement to fisticuffs and has nothing to do with sexual orientation.

Two drunken young men challenge each other to a fight for reasons incoherent and then proceed to try to smash each other's head in. This sort of thing happens with disturbing frequency on this campus and, while some significant social justice issues are raised by this senseless violence, homophobia simply should not be one of them. Particularly if it involved two heterosexual males fighting over a young lady, as I somehow suspect it might well have been...

And thus I challenge the campus activists to either publicly explain how this incident constitutes a "hate crime" as defined by the Mass General Laws or to stop crying wolf. This is a question of academic integrity and I am calling you on it.

Ed Cutting of the School of Education can be reached at ed@educ.umass.edu

WRITE LETTERS TO THE EDITOR!

RESPOND TO WHAT WE PRINT!

(350 WORD LIMIT)

Send letters to:
editorial@dailycollegian.com

Applaud by snapping

Dan Nicastro

Since 1996, April has been National Poetry Month, an event which was created in order to increase awareness and appreciation of poetry throughout the nation. Now, to help the Academy of American Poets achieve their goal of spreading poetry to the masses, I have taken it upon myself to show what a Bush Press Conference would look like if it were held in verse.

How can you answer that charge in haiku when the solution to the problem is long overdue?

BUSH: Good evening.
To loyal Americans near and far, I call so you may hear our charge. Alberto Gonzalez is a man of moral direction, yet the Left-wing media focuses only on "imperfections." I know he's a good man, who wants the best for this nation:
the firing of attorneys was some needed discrimination. On to other fronts, the Iraq War is going fine, but brother Congress, could you please spare a dime? You talk of withdrawal and pulling out troops, but we all really know that would be a large "oops." I promised to veto and veto I shall, now I'll get to your questions so don't have a cow... man.

REPORTER: Mr. President, you've supported Gonzalez through and through, but don't you think a firing is due? The evidence is mounting; the reasons are clear, the dismissals were political and won't disappear.

BUSH: I see what you're saying, really I do, but the truth of it is, these allegations aren't true. He was a patsy, a man played, given faulty advice – I know from experience how that can put you on thin ice My administration is guilty of committing no wrong-doing, so I advise all those attorneys out there to stop suing...the government

REPORTER No. 2: Mr. President, it seems that the situation in Iran has gotten quite tense, have you considered strategic options with the Secretary of Defense?

BUSH: I've looked at Iran and all the trouble it's causing and I know it I led Britain, I'd bomb without pausing. We need to be a stabilizer, to spread Democracy worldwide, because I know if this happened the insurgents would decide...uh, that Democracy is a much more stable form of government.

REPORTER No. 3: For long I've wept at the state of affairs.
Iraq falls apart while the nation just sighs.
We sit here idly and offering prayers,
While young soldiers die, not expressing final goodbyes.

Something must be done
and it must be done fast,
Before we lay one more soldier down to die.
You can do something sir
for the time has not passed.
You have the power to change the course of events.

How in good conscience
can you veto this bill,
which would bring home the troops and end this campaign?
By fighting an unnecessary war with Capitol Hill,
To the people of America you have brought shame.

I'll wait for your answer while you stand there and think,
About how you may have brought this country to the brink.

BUSH: Uh...Well, I...Damn-it, that doesn't rhyme. Ok, ok, ok:
Iraq is lovely.
Oil flows freely like black gold.
A beautiful place.

REPORTER No. 4: How can you answer that charge in haiku when the solution to the problem is long overdue? A measly seventeen syllables cannot be your answer to charges that your administration is spreading war like a cancer. It's time you come clean and finally respond. will you bring the troops home or have we been conned?

BUSH: All I can say is we've already won, but the troops are now needed to make Iraq...fun. With the bombing and torching and insurgent attacks, Iraq needs the army to help counteract...uh, any further attacks by enemy insurgents who are looking to destroy our way of life.

REPORTER No. 5: Sir, your meter is failing and you have to admit, that lame explanation is really the pits. If "to make Iraq fun" is the army's only goal, then ambiguous virtues you certainly extol.

BUSH: I don't know what that means but I'm sure it's not nice, because the left-wing liberal media is definitely not...nice.

REPORTER No. 6: I'd like now to talk about global warming with you, as the nation's Highest Court ruled...

BUSH: La, la, la can't hear you. I've decided to end this once and for all, for I realized I hate rhyming and the rest of y'all. I have one thing to say before I must go, wait I forget what it was...well here's Tony Snow.

Dan Nicastro is a poet and didn't even know it. He can also be reached at dnicastr@student.umass.edu.

What rhymes with igloo?

A league of their own

Andrew Freeman

When we think of America, some of us think of ideals like freedom, justice and equality. Others think of Westerns, apple pie and baseball. The Bush administration has committed itself to spreading one of these things: baseball.

According to a press release from publisher Savas Beatie, Taliban and Al Qaeda detainees at the United States naval base at Guantanamo Bay (GTMO) may begin playing baseball against military personnel this month.

Efforts have been made to expose GTMO detainees to American culture.

Purportedly, a guard named Pete Merrick floated this idea to his superiors. The press release cited an unnamed Pentagon official, who claimed that the president had heard of the idea and approved it.

Obviously, this story deserves some skepticism, as it originated in a public relations department. However, it is certainly conceivable. Other efforts have been made to expose GTMO detainees to American culture. Three teenage inmates in a separate detention facility called Camp Iguana were shown American films such as The Call of the Wild and played sports with their guards, according to a November 2003 Time Magazine article.

The true purpose of the GTMO detention center is acquiring information from the detainees, not cultural exchange. An FBI report declassified earlier this year details the methods interrogators used.

One FBI agent from Boston frequently saw detainees "chained hand and foot in a fetal position" in interview rooms. They were held in this stress position for over 18 hours, and often urinated and defecated upon themselves. In other instances they were exposed to extremes of heat and cold, and forced to listen to loud music.

Another agent related how an interrogator had employed a German shepherd to frighten a detainee. The same agent learned of a detainee whose head and beard were wrapped in duct tape. These are only two accounts from the 244-page FBI report.

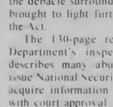
In addition to dehumanizing treatment and torture, GTMO detainees face indefinite detention. The Supreme Court refused to hear cases on the legal status of the detainees this week, in effect affirming their current status: unprotected by US or international law. The government can continue to hold detainees without furnishing evidence of their guilt and without trying them in a court of law.

Bringing baseball to GTMO would do little to instill pro-American sentiments among detainees. So long as Guantanamo Bay remains a place of torture and illegal detention, it will be a symbol of American brutality and a blight on this country's reputation.

Unfortunately, the Bush administration cannot realize this, because for them "freedom" and "liberty" are applause lines, not mandates. America is nothing more to them than a collection of symbols – the flag, apple pie and baseball – to pretty up whatever grotesque policy they wish to pass. Yet until we renounce their program of torture, hypocrisy and criminality, it will define our nation.

Andrew Freeman writes on Wednesdays. He can be reached at adfreema@student.umass.edu

Time for a swan song



John Gruenenfelder

The Patriot Act is making headlines again, and as usual, not in a positive way. A recent report issued by the Justice Department has found a great many abuses of powers granted to the FBI by the Act. At the same time, two neighbors to the north in Canada have opted to use means their own Patriot Act to stop terrorism found that they can effectively combat terrorism with these new overreaching powers. Even more recently, the debacle surrounding the Attorney General has brought to light further abuses made possible by the Act.

The 130-page report issued by the Justice Department's inspector general, Glenn Fine, describes many abuses of the FBI's ability to issue National Security Letters to acquire information on suspects with court approval. Prior to the Patriot Act the FBI was able to use this ability only in very limited circumstances. With the Act's provisions in effect, the FBI can issue these letters at virtually any time on any person even if they are not a suspect themselves. Because people and organizations who receive these letters must comply, there exists a new and unchecked power which the FBI seems all too eager to take advantage of.

There exists a new and unchecked power which the FBI seems all too eager to take advantage of.

It is hard to guess what the ramifications of this might be. Fine's report states that abuses were generally the result of mistakes and sloppiness on the part of the FBI and its agents and that no intentional abuse took place. Still, it is heartening to see that Congressmen in the House Judiciary Committee from both sides of the isle are not at all happy with these abuses, finding that this undermine public support for the job the FBI is doing.

In the report, Fine also says that most of the information that was collected illegally could have been obtained legally if proper procedures had been followed. Even if that is true the report states that 142,000 records have been requested by the FBI – a truly staggering amount in just a few short years.

Adding insult to injury is the newly uncovered willingness of administration officials to use powers granted under the Patriot Act in ways entirely unintended by Congress. In particular, the recent release of many Justice Department e-mail messages has shown a casual disregard for the mean ing of the law by focusing on the exact wording. In one e-mail, Kyle Sampson, the former deputy chief of staff to Alberto Gonzales, writes that "...as a matter of administration policy, we utilize the new statutory provisions that authorize the [Attorney General] to make [U.S. attorney] appointments." Here, he is referring to a provision in the Patriot Act which allows the Attorney General to bypass congressional confirmation and appoint the attorneys himself.

Why does the AG even have this power? When the Patriot Act was formed right after 9/11, this provision was added so that the government could be quickly rebuilt and re-staffed in the event of a catastrophe where part of the government was destroyed. That scenario alone, where special cases are needed to give the AG new appointment powers in a time of crisis, seems altogether unlikely. And, in light of the callous disregard of the intent of the provision, it should not be there at all.

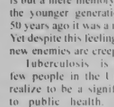
There are multiple departments and agencies within the government abusing multiple provisions of the Patriot Act, yet it still stands. Fortunately, some semblance of sanity can be found in Canada. Canada's anti-terrorism laws, which were passed after the September 11 attacks, are rather like a Canadian Patriot Act, though not nearly as sweeping. More importantly, these laws were given a five year limit and expired on March 1, as the Canadian parliament chose not to renew them. They found that in the past five years, even with increased attention on terrorism, these new laws were never actually used. Taking the responsible path, an unused law was not renewed thus preventing the possibility that it might be abused later.

These abuses are only the latest to come forward in what has been a string of problems with the Patriot Act. It is a massive piece of legislation and was passed in record time after the attacks, giving members of Congress almost no time to read, let alone comprehend, what was inside. In the end it represented a free-for-all in which the administration and law enforcement agencies could toss in whatever they fancied at the time with a virtual guarantee that the bill would pass. Congress may have renewed the Act when its time limit expired, but that does in not mean their hands are tied. It's not too late to gut the Act or, preferably, scrap it altogether.

John Gruenenfelder can be reached at jgruenen@student.umass.edu

OREGON MAY BECOME FIRST STATE TO REQUIRE MOUNTAIN CLIMBERS TO CARRY LOCATOR DEVICES
I DON'T CLIMB MOUNTAINS BUT MY WIFE MAKES ME CARRY ONE ANYWAY!
STAYSKAL TRIBUNE MEDIA SERVICES '07

A breath-taking threat



Nick Milano

The life-saving effects of modern medicine are felt everyday, whether it be on the battlefields of Iraq or the neighborhood clinic here at home. Diseases that used to destroy lives have been wiped from the public eye. Polio is but a mere memory for most of the younger generation, but just 50 years ago it was a major threat. Yet despite this feeling of security, new enemies are creeping up.

Tuberculosis is a disease few people in the United States realize to be a significant threat to public health. Thankfully, TB's potential for danger is not ignored by everyone. The Stop TB Partnership, created in 2000, is striving to have the incidence of TB cut in half by 2015. For this to happen, it is necessary for the U.S. to take its position as the world's most powerful country and proudly proclaim its support of the mission.

At the turn of the 20th century, TB was one of the main causes for death in the U.S., but has since plummeted to the opposite side of the spectrum. Here in the U.S., just 13,767 people tested positive for it last year, the fewest total since numbers have been kept. Representative of the lack of public conversation on TB, March 24 was World Stop TB Day – it obviously passed unnoticed. Yet on a global scale, TB is still a very real threat – it is found in one-third of the world's population and 200 million carriers have it progress to the actual disease. Compounding the problem is HIV/AIDS, which weakens the immune system thus facilitating more cases of TB and making it deadlier.

Because non-profit groups, drug companies and many nations have attempted to fight TB, delivering more antibiotics to people around the world. While this helps to treat people with the disease, TB can build resistance to the drugs when they are not taken properly or completely. These mutations in the genetic make-up have given rise to very new strains of tuberculosis. The first was multi-drug resistant TB which did not respond to first-line drugs. In the beginning, people with this form of TB were deemed to have a very low chance of survival so they were not even treated, but as the problem became more widespread a solution was developed by Dr. Paul Farmer and Dr. Jim Kim.

The second and more frightening strain of tuberculosis is called extensively-drug resistant TB, or XDR-TB. This strain does not respond to both first-line drugs and three of the second-line drugs. This is the version that poses the bigger threat to human health and underscores the general threat of drug resistant diseases. XDR-TB is considered the second biggest story of 2006 by the Center for Global Development, writing that it is "essentially untreatable" and has upstaged "its now tame-sounding predecessor, multi-drug resistant TB." Proof of its danger is how it killed 52 of 53 patients who first contracted it in South Africa in 25 days. Another indicator of the widespread fear of XDR-TB is how a man has been legally imprisoned in Phoenix, Arizona, not for a crime but because he is sick with XDR-TB. Hopefully, a movement to stop TB in its tracks today will prevent it from ever causing major destruction.

There are a couple of major programs whose goals are to eradicate TB specifically or include its eradication in their mission statements. The Stop TB Partnership's mission is clearly stated. Made up of a variety of organizations who wish to see TB dismissed as a threat to human life, it has set in gold-specific targets which it hopes it can accomplish. The step-by-step listing of what it will do and how, is very exact, inspiring hope that it they receive the necessary funding all will be well.

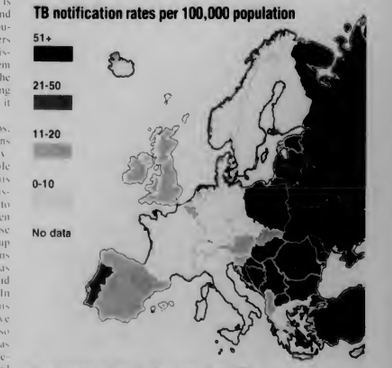
Here is the only problem. There is currently a $30.8 billion gap in spite of the $28.8 billion already raised and allocated to be spent. If the total amount of money is raised, 50 million patients will be treated and 14 million lives saved. Another international program to bring relief to third-world countries where TB is extremely prevalent is the UN Millennium Development goals. This too has lacked funding and only five countries, all in Europe, have fully appropriated the full amount necessary to fulfill their commitment.

There are organizations like Eli Lilly and Co., one of the largest pharmaceutical companies in the world, who have donated $120 million to fight XDR-TB have been proactive in attempting to stop XDR-TB. The U.S. should take the message and begin to highlight the need for TB awareness. Even though the U.S. clearly cannot support the funding of the Stop TB Partnership and the Millennium Development goals entirely on its own, it can make a statement by making it an international issue everyday. Too often diseases that no longer affect the West go unnoticed, despite the havoc wrecked on poor countries. TB used to be a bad memory (for some time, it was not even found in the United States), but now it's back, guns blazing.

Nick Milano can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu

Multi-resistant tuberculosis

Drug-resistant strains of tuberculosis (TB) in Eastern Europe are putting EU states at risk of a deadly outbreak.



THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 4, 2007 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Where's Trebek?

Students take part in Drug Jeopardy, hosted by Public Health, in MacKimmie Hall. Public Health is one of the programs offered by University Health Services.

Eating beyond the dining halls

By Mary-Frances Heck
Collegian Columnist

When Judie Teraspulsky moved from Indiana to Amherst, Mass. after college, she had no idea what was in store. When being a waitress at the Lord Jeffery Inn stagnated after six years, some loyal customers offered her a restaurant of her own.

"I'm a people person," Teraspulsky said. "I have loved food since I was 10-years-old. As long as I could be around food for the rest of my life, I would be OK."

She gladly accepted the position as partner of Judies Restaurant.

Thirty years later, Judies is one of the longest running and most successful restaurants in Amherst.

"Food is such a creative thing," says Teraspulsky. The menu at Judies proves it. "Popovers are a New England thing that came over from England. It's really Yorkshire pudding in a cup. It puffs up in the oven and then falls and is perfect to fill with dinner." Whether slathered with apple butter, sandwiching chicken salad or filled with gumbo, popovers have proven a staple at Judies.

Another innovation, albeit 30 years ago, was having the same menu for lunch and dinner. "You can eat lighter at night and heavier during the day," notes Teraspulsky. Results of having the same menu all day vary from running an efficient kitchen, thus cutting cost to the customer, and having healthful portion sizes available at all times.

Teraspulsky makes sure her staff is well cared for. Every member of the staff is extensively trained and works their way up from the bottom. Her business partner, Katie Eagan, has been with Judies for 26 years, and the chef, Michael Babb and general manager, Brooke Darden have both worked for 23 years. As a result, customers receive top-notch service with their delicious food.

The staff at Judies works hard to ensure the best dining experience for their patrons. For example, those with dietary restrictions can rest assured that their meal will be prepared according to their needs. In addition to the wide variety of vegan and vegetarian menu choices, Teraspulsky keeps the "food book" on hand. The "food book" is a binder that lists every ingredient used in the kitchen and whether dishes qualify

See JUDIES on page 8

Judie Teraspulsky came to Amherst, Mass. from Indiana. Prior to owning her own restaurant Teraspulsky was a waitress.

Dischereit comes to UMass

German Department hosts bilingual concert at ISOM

By Conor Sullivan

Aaron Sorkin, writer for The West Wing, stated it best through Martin Sheen: "Words, words when spoken out loud for the purposes of performance are music, they have rhythm and pitch and timbre and volume. These are the principles of music. Music has the ability to lift us up, to move us in ways that literal meaning can't." Though the character was, at the time complaining of an inept priest's inability to hold a captive audience the quote aptly describes the fundamental beauty of a spoken-word performance.

Tonight, the German Department of the University of Massachusetts will host such an event, but one distinctly dissimilar to anything the average American student would normally be exposed to, "wordMusic." A bi-lingual English and German experience will feature renowned author/poet Esther Dischereit, accompanied by percussionist/composer Raymond Kaczynski.

Described by the German Embassy in Washington as one of "the most prominent German writers whose work in some way deals with the Jewish identity" and "one of Germany's most well respected feminist writers," Dischereit is a poet, novelist, essayist and stage and radio dramatist, and is credited as being one of the "most intellectual voices" of Berlin.

Dischereit was born in 1952 in Heppenheim-Bergstraße, Germany to a mother who had survived The Second World War in hiding. She was educated in Frankfurt am Main and was trained as a teacher. She worked in the metal industry as a typesetter and for the German trade unions before being able to support herself solely on her writings. Dischereit has been an independent scholar and freelance writer since 1985. Her works include: "Joëmi's Table", "Merryn (prose)", "When My Golem Opened the Door," "Hoarfrosted Mouth" and "Other News," (poems); "Lessons in Being Jewish," "With Eichmann on the Stock Exchange," (essays), through which she is said to "explore the desire to escape the burden of being Jewish, a weight that she feels has been placed on her in part by non-Jewish Germans and by the events of the Holocaust."

She was a fellow at the Moses Mendelssohn Center for European and Jewish Studies and has won stipends from the Hessian Ministry for Science and Art, the Stiftung Preussische Seehandlung in Berlin, the Berlin Senate and the Erwin-Strassmann-Stiftung. She has lectured extensively throughout the United States, including previous times at the UMass.

In 2004, Dischereit was the writer in residence at New York University.

Esther Dischereit was raised by her mother who survived World War II by hiding from the Nazis.

In 1995, Dischereit founded "the wordMusic group" along with the Detroit born, Germany based, percussionist Kaczynski, who has in the past been know to make use of some somewhat unorthodox instruments, namely the "intelligent tests," self-fashioned coils of brass which come as close to being completely novel instruments as he has produced.

Though Dischereit's work, like the work of other contemporary German-Jewish writers living and publishing in Germany, draws on a cultural identity formed by previous generations' memories of the Holocaust and is involved in a search for the meaning of such memories in modern German-Jewish life, it is impossible to determine exactly what sort of subject matter one can expect at tonight's performance.

After all, it is a self-proclaimed improvised meeting of Dischereit's

See PERFORMANCE on page 8

'Sopranos' season 6 now in progress

By Ellen Gray
Philadelphia Daily News

"Is this it?" Carmela Soprano (Edie Falco) asks her mobster husband as they're awakened by a furious banging on their door in the opening minutes of Sunday's "The Sopranos."

Yep, this is it.

Call it the seventh season or the hind legs of the sixth.

Call it anything you like.

But as the final nine episodes of the HBO drama get under way this weekend, know that this is, at last, the beginning of the end.

People who've been longing to see "Sopranos" creator David Chase pull the trigger on one character or another, people who are dying to know if Tony Soprano (James Gandolfini) is going to get out of this alive.

As for those of you still waiting for the Russian to come out of the woods: not gonna happen; folks may not be thrilled to learn that Sunday's episode largely takes place at a cabin in the Adirondacks.

There will also be karaoke.

(Insert your chosen epithets here. Take as long as you like.)

Now, if you're finished screaming, let's talk about why "Soprano Home Movies," which actually begins with a flashback to 2004, is a much better idea than it might sound.

"The Sopranos," after all, has never just been a show about whacking, or about resolving things. It's also not been a show about second chances, even if some of its characters are deluded enough to believe in them.

But we all know that when a post-shooting Tony spouts the rhetoric about every day being a gift, he's indulging in the same sentimentality that keeps him from fully acknowledging that his mother never loved him.

It's still all about mom.

Livia, and sadly, Nancy Marchand, too is long dead, but you can her voice in Sunday's episode: coming both from her daughter Janice (Aida Turturro), and from the son whose years in therapy haven't been enough to erase the poison of his upbringing.

Tony Soprano may be a mobster because his father was. But he's a monster because of his mother.

Beginning with Season One's "College," in which Tony took time out from some father-daughter bonding with daughter Meadow (Jamie

See SOPRANOS on page 7

The second half of season six of "The Sopranos" began this past Sunday. This portion of the series is nine episodes long.

A little taste of southern rock'n'roll

Drive-By Truckers are not your average southern band

By Justin Jarrett

Led by a triumvirate of guitar-slinging singers/songwriters in Patterson Hood, Mike Cooley and Jason Isbell, the Drive-By Truckers are distinctively Southern: the band originated in Muscle Shoals, Ala., and is currently based in Athens, Ga. and they definitely rock.

But for the love of Lynyrd Skynyrd, don't call them "Southern rock." They much prefer the less descriptive and restrictive "rock 'n' roll."

"It doesn't limit you to one thing or another. It's kind of open-ended," Hood said recently. "People say, 'What kind of rock 'n' roll?' And that's kind of the point. One song might show a real strong country influence, one might show a real strong R&B influence and one might show a real strong punk-rock influence. And one song might show all of those at the same time. Those are my favorites, the ones that have a little bit of everything in them."

Hood comes by his musical identity crisis honestly. His father, David Hood, was a legendary session musician who played with everyone from Wilson Pickett to Willie Nelson as part of the Muscle Shoals Rhythm Section.

But some of the Truckers' diversity – and much of their charm – is owed to the band's unique makeup. Hood and Cooley have shared songwriting and singing duties since they first picked up guitars together in 1985 in the band Adam's House Cat; they added Isbell in the same capacity before the 2003 album "Decoration Day," for which Isbell wrote the title track.

Such democratic arrangements can be disastrous. Uncle Tupelo, for example, met its demise because co-founders Jeff Tweedy and Jay Farrar couldn't strike that balance, but Cooley and Hood have been able to make it work, although for his part, Hood can't say why.

"We get along great now, but for years and years, we didn't," Hood said. "Maybe that's kind of the key that we stayed together for so many years when we didn't get along that now it's just kind of easy. It kind of just makes sense to keep it going."

For the next few weeks, though, the Truckers are slowing things down.

It's generally about as easy to see a Truckers concert as a "Law & Order" rerun on cable, the band has averaged more than 100 shows per year since 2001, but this might be the last chance for a while to catch the band's rock show.

With growing family commitments and a slew of projects in the works, ranging from a new DBT album to long-awaited solo releases from Hood and Isbell, the Truckers plan on tak-

See TRUCKERS on page 7

A guide to Drive-By Truckers

Drive-By Truckers may be from Muscle Shoals, Ala., but their sound is nothing like the previous famous southern bands such as Lynyrd Skynyrd. Instead the band believes they have a more unique sound, similar to indie rock.

TRUCKERS from page 6

ing it easy in 2007.

"We want to play enough to keep the bills paid and keep the lights on," Hood said. "But at the same time, we definitely want to be able to not be away so much."

The band's Web site lists 20 tour dates between now and July 19 and 12 of those are part of the "Dirt Underneath Tour," a "semi-acoustic, kind of turned-down tour" that Hood says will emphasize the storytelling that gets lost behind the "wall of guitars."

"Every so often we'll take two weeks off, come back with a new record and start all over with different T-shirts," Hood said.

The next batch of T-shirts hasn't gone to the printer yet, but Hood said the band hopes to start recording the follow-up to last year's "A Blessing and a Curse" by summer. Hood alone has written more than 30 songs since Thanksgiving (he hopes to cut as many as 10 of them for the new album), he got five more in the mail from Cooley last week, and he figures on a handful from Isbell and his wife, Truckers bassist Shonna Tucker.

"We'll just kind of see what happens when we all get it together," Hood said, adding he expects a bit more sprawling record than the lean, mean "Blessing," which featured 11 tracks recorded on the spot in the studio at The Fidelitorium in Kernersville, N.C.

With Isbell in the midst of a solo tour to support the album he has due out this summer and Hood planning to release his second solo effort shortly thereafter, overzealous fans might worry the Truckers' days are numbered, but Hood says there's no reason for concern.

"What's the Mark Twain quote about rumors of my death are greatly exaggerated, or something like that?" Hood quipped.

A BEGINNER'S GUIDE TO THE TRUCKERS

Start your Truckers collection with these key tracks:

1. "Ronnie and Neil" From 2001's epic "Southern Rock Opera," comes the tale of the "feud" between Ronnie Van Zant and Neil Young, distilled into four really loud minutes.

2. "Puttin' People On The Moon" From 2003's "Decoration Day," a Patterson Hood track about an Alabama town ravaged by unemployment and cancer, whose citizens lament that down the road the government is pouring money into rockets.

3. "Dirty Blues" An as-yet unreleased Isbell track about a friend killed in Iraq; like the best Trucker songs, it steers well wide of proselytizing and lets the story do the talking.

4. "Aftermath U.S.A." Hood riffs on a wrecked morning-after scene: "Car was in the carport sideways, big dent running down the side" but the tricks little reveals he's talking about remorse over something much bigger than a hangover.

5. "The Living Bubba" One of the earliest Trucker songs, it finds Hood paying tribute to Gregory Dean Smalley, a Georgia singer-songwriter who fought his HIV by keeping up an unbelievable touring schedule: "I can't die now," Hood sings as Smalley, "'cause I got another show to do."

6. "A World of Hurt" The grand finale on 2006's "A Blessing and a Curse" has Hood recalling suicidal tendencies before ending the album with the line, "It's great to be alive."

7. "Cottonseed" If Alan Jackson had released this dark, Mike Cooley classic, it would have swept the CMAs.

8. "Outfit" The second song Isbell wrote for the Truckers, it captures the moment of a heart-to-heart between father and son, but it includes a little advice for everyone.

9. "The Company I Keep" Imagine "Friends in Low Places" with more attitude and more rock.

10. "Heathens" The first line finds Hood drawling: "Something about the wrinkle in your forehead tells me there's a fit about

Cast gets ready to say goodbye to series

SOPRANOS from page 6

Lynn Sigler) to strangle a mob snitch, the show's finest episodes have been the ones that focused on the hopeless divide between its central character's highest aspirations and his worst instincts.

I've been re-watching Season one, and what strikes me now about "College" though isn't the divide itself, but how much it's widened since.

The snitch, after all, was a snitch someone, who'd presumably been as bad as Tony, then turned on former friends and fled to a new life and a new identity in Maine.

Moreover, he had recognized Tony and was fully prepared to kill him.

Shocking at the time for the personal way the violence played out, the episode's almost a quaint artifact now.

Not only have we seen Tony do worse things since, but we've seen him do them for far worse reasons.

On Sunday, he does something truly despicable to one of the few people in his life who can still lay any claim to innocence.

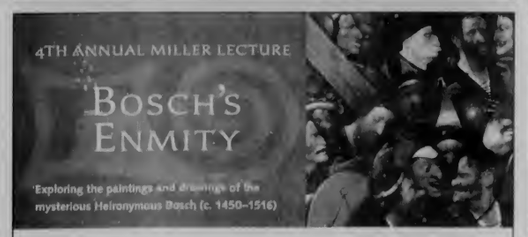
He does it out of anger, out of wounded pride and out of a deep well of meanness that it doesn't require Tony's shrink, Dr. Melfi (Lorraine Bracco), to trace directly to his mother.

And what he does, doesn't require him to lay a hand on his victim.

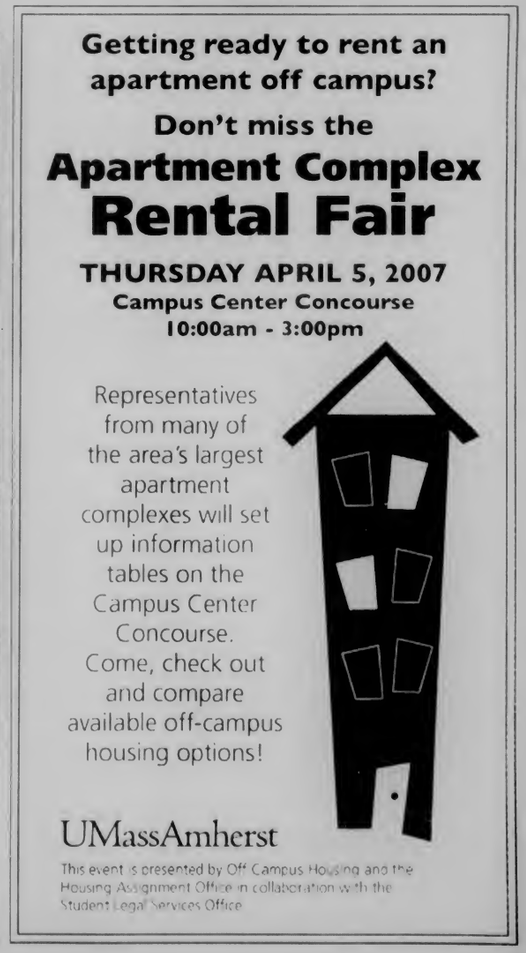
I can't pretend to know where any of this is going. Tony's thoughts on his own final exit, expressed in a conversation with his brother-in-law Bobby (Steven R. Schirripa), don't seem out of line.

But as I listen to Bobby and Janice's young daughter singing about "four little ducks," echoes of the birds whose leaving triggered Tony's first panic attacks all those years ago? I'm satisfied, at least, that "The Sopranos" hasn't lost touch with its roots.

James Gandolfini stars as mob boss Tony Soprano. Each week the character recounts his issues to a therapist.



4TH ANNUAL MILLER LECTURE
BOSCH'S ENMITY
Exploring the paintings and drawings of the mysterious Hieronymous Bosch (c. 1450–1516)
JOSEPH LEO KOERNER
Renowned scholar of Northern Renaissance art and currently a John Simon Guggenheim Fellow in Florence, Italy
WEDNESDAY APRIL 4 7PM
Weinstein Auditorium
Wright Hall Smith College
Free and open to all
No reservations necessary
413 585 2760
SMITH COLLEGE
MUSEUM OF ART



Getting ready to rent an apartment off campus?
Don't miss the Apartment Complex
Rental Fair
THURSDAY APRIL 5, 2007
Campus Center Concourse
10:00am - 3:00pm
Representatives from many of the area's largest apartment complexes will set up information tables on the Campus Center Concourse. Come, check out and compare available off-campus housing options!
UMassAmherst
This event is presented by Off Campus Housing and the Housing Assignment Office in collaboration with the Student Legal Services Office

Ingram discusses fatherhood

Jack Ingram releases new LP

By Mario Tarradell
Collegian Staff

AUSTIN, Texas – Jack Ingram sits in a nearly empty conference room at Capital Sports & Entertainment, the offices of his manager George Couri. Every few minutes, his tall, brooding-blond frame moves to turn a can of Red Bull.

It's not like Ingram needs it, though. He is the most intense, focused and driven person I've appeared in 12 years of interviews. There's a fire raging inside him, one unlike one that's been there since the Southern Methodist University graduate released his original songs at a local session in Dallas during an open-mike night in the early '90s.

That fire is now a different shade of hyper-intensity and his career is on the rapidly burning red hot.

This is Jack Ingram's prophetically titled new CD, which has the national buffet-table spread for more than a decade. The CD includes his No. 1 hit, the ultra-catchy "Wherever You Are," the sarcastic follow-up hit, "I Love You" and the current Top-20 staple, a cover of Hinder's "Lips of An Angel."

Jack Ingram moved to Austin, Texas from Dallas to be part of the music scene. Austin has one of the larger scenes in the country.

He's the flagship artist on Nashville's new Big Machine Records, a label founded by industry heavy hitter Scott Borchetta. He is the label's precedence, the guy they're banking on for success and quick industry acceptance.

That's a dramatic change of scenery considering Ingram spent years languishing at imprints that were either short-lived (Rising Tide Records in the late '90s) or that didn't care to promote him (Sony's defunct boutique Lucky Dog Records).

"I'm now with a management company that daily comes to work for me," says the 36-year-old former Dallas resident who now lives in Austin. "When the people at my record label go to work, I'm a priority.

"They have to sell my records or else they will not be in business, to some extent. There are people's jobs on the line if they don't get my song played at their stations. It's the difference between being a priority at a label and not."

The popular music pendulum finally swings in Ingram's direction. It took an epiphany to alter its course, one that came to him shortly after the release of 2002's sharp, searing "Electric," his final studio album for Sony and the record he thought would catapult him to the masses.

"I got a lot of acclaim, and I got dropped from the label immediately. I mean within a month of the release of that record. And then, a month after that, I split ways with my management company. They fired themselves.

"So I'm sitting there with a record that I thought I'd finally broken through to something artistically, and the results of that record were I had no record deal and no management contract and a baby on the way."

Ingram, now the father of three kids Ava Adele – four, Eli – two and Hudson, 10 months with Amy, his wife of 10 years, began rebuilding the broken pieces of his sagging career. The man who played almost every honky-tonk dive in Texas, released a couple of independent CDs and sold them from the trunk of his infamous beat-up Ford, finally found the maturity to be honest with himself about where he wanted to steer his career.

"I figured out why I kept running into the same walls," he says. "One of the epiphanies that I had was that I wasn't clear with people. I wasn't clear with the people that I was working with about what I wanted out of this career. They thought that I just wanted to make a cool record. ... Yeah, I do want to make cool records. I want to make great records.

"But the second part of which I never really spoke up and told anybody until we were releasing records was, 'Hey, man, I want to sell a lot of these, too.'"

With Couri's help and a crystallized game plan, Ingram began searching for the label that would jump onboard his promise train. They found Borchetta, an industry honcho responsible for more than 100 radio hits.

"I want to make records that I can care about and I would sell on my own out of the truck like I did at Adair's all those years," Ingram says. "I also want to make singles and make a record that we can go sell a ton of. I want to make you money and me money."

It was Borchetta who sent Ingram "Wherever You Are" among a batch of some 75 songs, most of which Ingram rejected. As the chief songwriter of the bulk of his oeuvre, Ingram knew he might have to record an outside tune that had that right amount of radio sheen. It was his only way in the door. It was his way to play the game he spent so long watching from the stadium's parking lot.

"It's a matter of trust," he says. "If I can find something that he thinks is a hit that works for me that I believe in, then we're off to the races. We're starting at a point where we're both going to be getting what we need out of the deal. I found 'Wherever You Are.' I can do that song, and I like it, it fits me."

By Christmas 2005, after Ingram had circled the country during a radio promotion tour, "Wherever You Are" reached the pinnacle, and the stage was set.

"That song has changed the landscape of my career," he says with a steely stare, "and pointed me in the direction that I desperately wanted and needed."

Still, the overdue success comes at a time when his personal calendar is mighty full. He's a family man now, no longer the college graduate, bungeoning Texas country singer-songwriter who could roam the Lone Star highways in his dilapidated blue Ford. Today he still has a Ford truck, but it's a much shinier F-150 model. On the floor by the passenger seat is a glittery red paper heart, a handmade gift from daughter Ava Adele.

Does being married with three kids change the panoramic view?

"The only thing it changes is my schedule," he admits. "My desire to be with those kids and my family, that's the only thing I would drop everything for. I told my family that. I have two jobs. One is that I go to work and the other is that I get back home immediately and hang with my family. But that juxtaposition has nothing to do with my desire to be an artist."

Yet he's already made adjustments. The reason for moving from Dallas to Austin almost two years ago is twofold. On the one hand, his wife has a sister who lives in the Texas capital. So there's a support system there. But it's also logical from a business sense.

"And my manager is out here," he says. "It's the fourth music city in the country. Logistically it worked best. I miss Dallas, I really do. I didn't know I'd miss it so much. But it makes more sense to be here."

Everything gels purposefully for Ingram these days. He's mature enough to nurture his marriage and be a loving father to his children. He's also grownup enough to be honest with himself about the prospects of his career.

Local restaurant owner looks back

JUDIES from page 6

as vegan or vegetarian or may contain allergens. Recently, a customer asked for a vegan dinner roll. Unsure if flour listed as "enriched" meant it contained animal products, Terapulsky got on the phone to speak with a PETA representative. Ultimately finding out that the flour was animal-product free, the gentleman was able to enjoy his roll.

Upon walking into Judies, it is impossible to ignore the artwork that surrounds you. On one wall, an imposing elephant guards the bar. Elsewhere, actually everywhere, hangs the artwork of Donna Estabrook. Her works are an eclectic mix of painting and multi-medium collage. The colorful pieces are all for sale, with upwards of 90 works at any one time.

Art is not restricted to the walls. All of the tables are hand-painted by one of Judies employees. He received his MFA from the University of Massachusetts. They are primarily of bright flowers by Georgia O'Keefe's but there are a few Matisse's here and there. If you look closely, you will notice that they are, in fact, painted on canvasses which have been stapled to the tabletops and polyurethaned.

In marketing to the college crowd of Amherst, Judies' menu has remained affordable over the years. One way to attract students after classes, when other restaurants are advertising happy hour, is with "Half-Price Munchies." Between three and six in the afternoon, Tuesday through Friday, all appetizers are half price. "Munchies," as they are referred to, range from potato skins to shrimp tempura and are substantial enough to be a meal.

Terapulsky has made it her mission to provide "amazing food and service to Amherst for three decades. Through friendly staff, catering to customers' desires and knowing her market, she has come up with a recipe for success. "My mom used to always say, 'I'm not a restaurant,'" laughs Terapulsky. "Well, I am a restaurant, and we can do our best to make anything to peoples' tastes."

The one downside, waiting in the long line for a coveted table, is soon to be history. Judies is expanding over the summer to accommodate a larger capacity and the new digs will include a fireplace and a much larger bar where couples can cozy up in bar stools for two.

Mary-Frances Heck can be reached at mheck@student.umass.edu

Judies offers a variety of menu options for both vegetarians and patrons who eat meat.

Kaczynski adds flavor to German concert

PERFORMANCE from page 6

words and Kaczynski's percussion, intending to "flow through the room, stick to chairs and shut the door" creating an interwoven fabric of music. The performance is also said to express "The language of music and the sound of language" and will contain both English and German, providing what should be an interesting experience to an American audience, German speakers or not, as the German language itself is today rarely heard musically outside of the opera house or through industrial techno or hard rock music.

The performance begins tonight at 7 p.m. in the Isenberg School of Management room 133; admission is free to the public.

Connor Sullivan can be reached at cwhitesi@student.umass.edu.

Composer Raymond Kaczynski will be performing percussion during tonight's German Department concert at the School of Management.

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS BOSTON
The courses are challenging. Everything else is a breeze.
At UMass Boston, summer learning is about stretching your mind, not your patience or your pocketbook.
Over 500 courses offered days, evenings, or online
Small classes taught by distinguished UMass Boston faculty
Easily accessible Boston Harbor campus
World-class education at a real-world price
Registration Starts April 2. summer.umb.edu UMASS BOSTON 617.287.6000

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL - W. SPFLD
Special Student Rate
Local-National Placement
Includes Certification
1-800-357-3210
BostonBartender.com

WRITE FOR ARTS!!!
E-mail us at
Arts@dailycollegian.com
or Collegianarts@gmail.com

Rental Office
1180 N. Pleasant St. #410
Amherst, MA 01002
Phone #: (413) 549-0145
NEW PUFFTON VILLAGE
Serving all Your Rental Needs
Now Accepting applications for summer/fall 2007
www.pufftonvillage.com

FRUSTRATED?
PUZZLED?
DO YOU HAVE:
A grade dispute?
Teacher, roomate or job concerns?
Billing problems?
...or any other University related problems?
THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course)
Serving the students, faculty, and staff of the Umass Community
823 Campus Center
Office Hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
Telephone: 413 - 545 - 0867
fax: 413 - 545 - 9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

RSOs:
Put Your Advertisement in the Daily Collegian!
RSOs receive a discounted rate for advertising.
Advertise your group's events at low cost.

UMass holds off Holy Cross

BASEBALL from page 12

The sophomore reliever struck out the side, all looking, but the two unearned runs allowed put Holy Cross right back in it.

Stone brought in closer Aaron Smith for the bottom of the ninth, and he hit Brendan Akinhum on the very first pitch. Smith battled back from a 3-0 count to Tyler Stampone, and UMass caught a break when he lined into a double play on a hit-and-run. Smith retired Kyle Lister to close out the game and register his third save of the season.

"It was a win, but it wasn't a pleasant win," Stone said. "We had so many chances to blow them out, and we didn't. We struggled to finish, but we held on. It was an uphill battle, but it shouldn't have been."

Senior Kevin Beglane made his first career start for Holy Cross, allowing just one run (unearned) in his three innings. Chris Blanchard took the loss for the Crusaders, surrendering two runs in his 2/3 innings of work in the seventh.

The Minutemen scored the game's first run in the third inning, thanks to two errors by the Crusaders. Andy Tuetken led off with a bloop single, and Travis Munsey reached when his bunt was misplayed. Lou Prisetti hit a an easy double-play ball, but the second baseman threw it away when he tried to rush the throw to second, and Tuetken scored.

Holy Cross threatened in the fifth inning after a leadoff single by Stampone and another single by Lister on a perfect hit-and-run. With runners on the corners and no out, Cassidy thwarted the threat when he induced Tim Hughes to hit into a double play. The run scored, but further damage was averted.

"Cassidy threw good pitches when he had to," Stone said. "We just needed to get the win, one way or another. That was a very important win."

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@student.umass.edu. Log onto the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.

Whitney Williams didn't do much at the plate for the Minutewomen yesterday, one hit in five combined at-bats with two strikeouts, but took advantage once she reached the basepaths. She had one steal to increase her season total to five – good for third on the UMass roster.

UMass 4, Holy Cross 3

Score by Innings	R	H	E
UMASS	001	000	300 - 4 10 1
HOLY CROSS	000	010	020 - 3 5 4

HOLY CROSS 3 (2-14)

Player	AB	R	H	BI	BB	SO	SB	PO	A	LOB
Jamar Aldrich lf	3	1	0	0	1	1	2	1	1
Matt Perron rf	4	0	1	2	0	0	3	1	0	0
Norm Roth rf	1	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Brendan Akinhum cf	2	1	0	0	0	0	0	3	0	0
Steve Sutdp p	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Tyler Stampone 2b/ss	4	1	2	0	0	0	3	4	0	0
Kyle Lister 1b	4	0	1	0	0	1	6	1	1
Tim Hughes c	3	1	1	0	0	2	0	5	0
Joe Moore ss	1	0	0	0	1	0	2	4	0
Matt Perry 2b	1	0	0	0	1	0	0	0	0
John Sella 3b	3	0	0	0	0	1	5	0	0
Kevin Beglane p	0	0	0	0	0	0	1	0	0
Dan Seip p	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Chris Blanchard p	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Ryan George p	0	0	0	0	0	1	0	0	0
Mike Thaur p	0	0	0	0	0	0	1	0	0
Totals	30	3	5	2	2	8	27	12	3

Blanchard (L, 0-1)

UMASS 4 (5-11)

Player	AB	R	H	BI	BB	SO	SB	PO	A	LOB
Ryan Fraserak 2b	4	1	1	0	1	0	1	5	0
Lou Prisetti ss	4	0	1	2	0	0	1	0	2	5 0
Adam Tanpreta dh	5	1	1	2	0	0	0	0	4
Bryan Ademski lf	5	0	1	0	1	0	0	0	0
Bryan Garrity c	3	0	1	0	1	0	2	0	0
Jim MacDonald 3b	4	0	1	0	0	0	1	1
Bill Rankin rf	5	0	0	0	1	4	1	1
Andy Tuetken 1b	3	1	2	0	1	0	11	0	0
Travis Munsey rf	3	1	2	0	0	1	0	3
Jim Cassidy p	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	1	0
M. Eslanbouly p	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Aaron Smith p	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Totals	36	4	10	2	5	2	27	12	12

Cassidy (W, 1-1)

Pitching surrenders one run to URI

SOFTBALL from page 12

the rightfield fence, trotting home with UMass' fourth run of the game.

Bailey Sanders entered the game in the bottom of the fifth for Balschmiter, who went four innings with three hits and one run allowed on no walks. The sophomore also rang up four Rams in the game.

In the day's first game, she allowed two hits and fanned 11 batters in a complete-game shutout.

UMass added one more run in the sixth when senior Amanda Morin grounded out to second base, bringing in Jessica Serno, who laced a double to rightfield and moved to third on a perfectly-placed bunt single by freshman Whitney Williams.

Sanders finished the final two innings with five strikeouts, one walk and one hit allowed.

In the first game, senior co-captain Candice Molinari had to be removed from action after being struck by a pitch on an attempted swing as the second batter of the game. While attempting to slap a ball high and tight, the center fielder took the pitch on the hand.

Sortino said after the game that Molinari suffered a bruise is day-to-day.

Davina Hernandez took her place with a 1-and-2 count. The sophomore worked the count full before striking out swinging for the second out of the game.

Proctor got things started in the top of the second when she took an outside pitch and punched it through the hole on the left side.

The next batter, Acampora, put the game's first runs on the board when she socked one over the centerfield fence. The home run – Acampora's fourth on the season – put the Maroon and White up 2-0.

With one out in the top of the sixth, junior Stacy Cullington hit a ball that one-hopped the wall in center. Proctor brought her classmate home on the next pitch, as she roped a double to center field of her own. The junior crossed the plate herself when Salato knocked a ground-ball single past the mound and into center.

The score remained unchanged until the top of the sixth when Cullington sent a double over center fielder Stefani Poedubicky's head. Proctor then contributed another double behind Poedubicky. The relay to the plate was not in time and Cullington tallied the Minutewomen's fourth run.

Proctor finished the day 5-for-6, with four RBIs and four hits.

"It felt good. The last couple game I struggled a little bit," she said. "I kind of just let that all go today and watch the ball hit the bat. It's nice to come out with a win."

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu.

daily collegiansports.blogspot.com

Proctor leads UM offense

PROCTOR from page 12

Lauren Proctor led the Minutewomen's offense in their sweep of the Rams. She had five hits in the two games including a home run.

"I tend to get into my own head and think about things," Proctor said. "But I've been concentrating on just seeing the ball hit the bat and not letting anything get to me."

The home run Proctor hit came in the fifth inning of the back end of yesterday's action. While the solo shot came with the game already well in hand, it provided her with one of the lighter, and more memorable, moments of her career at UMass.

"Coach actually told me [when I was rounding third base] to slow down," Proctor joked. "When you hit a home run, it kind of feels like butter and I didn't even know it got out."

The success that the Minutewomen enjoyed last season netted some of the team's more visible stars a lot of exposure. The stellar campaign put together by Mollica in her rookie year – along with being the granddaughter of Don Zimmer – made her the focus of several interviews. While everyone enjoys a little publicity, it's certainly not something Proctor relies on or affects the way she approaches the game.

"[Mollica] had tons of media focus on her last year, which was great. She's very deserving of it, she's an amazing player," Proctor said. "So it's nice to not have that pressure and someone saying, 'You have to hit a homer today.' I don't mind operating under the radar. It's just nice to come out and play. If the press comes, that's fine. And if it doesn't, that's fine too."

That's not to say her efforts go unnoticed. Sortino never hesitates to toss Proctor's name into the discussion when asked who her best hitters are. Once again, it's not the hits themselves, but the timeliness of them and her approach.

"Look at the big hits she comes up with," Sortino said. "She's quiet and sneaky and nobody notices her and everybody else gets the headlines. She did a great job. I don't know how many RBIs she had today but she sure was outstanding.

"On that home run, it was middle-in and she took it over that right-center field fence. That was a good piece of hitting."

Despite yesterday's dinger, the home run isn't part of Proctor's game. They'll always come because she is a good hitter, but never like they do for some other Minutewomen. That's OK though, not many of her teammates have .344 career batting averages either.

Joe Meloni can be reached at jmeloni@student.umass.edu. Log onto to the Daily Collegian's sports blog for more coverage of all UMass sports.

UMass 4, Rhode Island 0

Score by Innings	R	H	E
UMASS	020	002	0 - 4 8 0
URI	000	000	0 - 0 2 2

RHODE ISLAND 0 (6-15, 1-3)

Player	AB	R	H	BI	BB	SO	LOB
Stefani Poedubicky cf	3	0	0	0	0	1	0
Tara Hitzman rf	3	0	0	0	0	2	0
Alyssa Martino ss	3	0	1	0	0	0	1
Melissa Wilson c	3	0	0	0	0	1	0
Danielle Quamby 2b	3	0	0	0	1	0	2
Christine Gentile 3b	2	0	1	0	1	0	1
Shelly Petersen lf	2	0	0	0	1	0	0
Leah Dibenedetto 1b	2	0	0	0	0	1	0
Darci Borden dp	1	0	0	0	0	0	0
Jill Andersen p	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Totals	23	0	2	0	3	5	4

Andersen (L, 1-7)

UMASS 4 (16-12-1, 3-0)

Player	AB	R	H	BI	BB	SO	PO	A	LOB
Amanda Morin 1b	4	0	1	0	0	0	10	1	0
Candice Molinari cf	1	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
D. Hernandez cf	3	0	0	0	0	0	2	0	0
Whitney Mollica 3b	4	0	0	0	0	0	3	1
Stacy Cullington 2b	2	1	1	0	0	0	1	1	0
Jill Andrews pr	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Lauren Proctor lf	3	2	2	1	0	0	0	0	2
A. Acampora dp	3	1	1	2	0	0	0	0	0
N. Salato rf	3	0	2	1	0	0	0	0	0
Jessica Serno c	1	0	0	0	0	0	10	1	0
Sarah Reeves ph	1	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	1
A. Williams ss	1	0	0	0	0	0	2	0	2
H. Balschmiter p	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	1	0
Totals	28	4	5	4	0	4	21	8	5

Balschmiter (W, 12-8)

UMass 6, Rhode Island 1 (6 innings)

Score by Innings	R	H	E
UMASS	112	011	- 6 9 0
URI	000	100	- 1 4 1

RHODE ISLAND 1 (6-16, 1-3)

Player	AB	R	H	BI	BB	SO	LOB
Stefani Poedubicky cf	3	0	0	0	1	2	0
Tara Hitzman rf	3	1	2	0	0	1	1
Alyssa Martino ss	3	0	1	0	0	0	1
Melissa Wilson c	3	0	0	1	0	1	0
Danielle Quamby 2b	2	0	0	0	1	1	1
Christine Gentile 3b	1	0	0	0	1	0	1
Leah Dibenedetto 1b	2	0	0	0	0	2	1
Shelly Petersen lf	2	0	1	0	0	1	0
Jackie Kampmeyer dp	2	0	0	0	0	2	0
Katie Halcomb p	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Totals	21	1	4	1	3	10	5

Halcomb (L, 4-3)

UMASS 6 (17-12-1, 4-0)

Player	AB	R	H	BI	BB	SO	PO	A	LOB
Amanda Morin 1b	4	0	1	0	0	4	9	2
Whitney Mollica 3b	3	1	1	1	1	0	0	1	0
Michea Holbrow pr	0	1	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Stacy Cullington 2b	3	0	0	1	2	2	1	2
A. Acampora dp	4	1	1	0	1	0	0	0	2
Lauren Proctor lf	3	2	3	3	0	0	0	0
Samantha Salato rf	3	0	1	0	0	2	1	0	0
D. Hernandez cf	2	0	0	1	0	0	0	0	1
Jessica Serno c	2	1	2	0	1	0	10	0	0
Sarah Reeves ph	0	0	0	0	1	0	0	0	0
Jackie Leeman pr	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
A. Williams ss	2	0	1	0	0	0	2	3	0
H. Balschmiter p	0	0	0	0	0	0	1	0	0
Bailey Sanders p	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Totals	26	6	9	5	5	10	24	7

Balschmiter (W, 13-8)

Mill Valley ESTATES
HUGE
INSANELY
AWESOME
APARTMENT DEALS
Housing Fair Only
April 5, 2007
Campus Center 10-3

UMass' key to success

SCHNEIDER from page 12

at what our defense has done all year, we're only giving up eight goals a game and today we gave up five against a really good offensive team."

Perhaps Schneider's finest display of the season came in the Minutemen's latest contest, a 6-5 overtime win over Penn State at Garber Field. He stopped 75 percent of the shots the Nittany Lions fired on net, making 15 saves. He was honored as an ECAC Co-Defensive Player of the Week for his effort.

Penn State forced Schneider to set that new career-high saves mark as counterpart Drew Adams played just as well for the visitors. It was already the fifth time this season that Schneider made at least 10 saves.

After the excitement of senior Brett Garber's game-winner died down, Schneider deferred most of the credit for the win to the play of the defense in front of him.

"The defense played awesome," he quickly said as if his own performance was a non-factor. "It allowed me to make some saves. Everyone played great defense individually and as a team. It's all for them."

The two goalies battled back and forth all afternoon, trading spectacular saves. The Nittany Lions insisted on trying to beat Schneider with bounce shots, firing the ball at the turf just inside the crease causing it to short-hop the goalie.

But Schneider was up to the challenge of Penn State's plan, diving down to keep the ball from reaching the net. Schneider's style is to get as low as he can by bending one knee while keeping the other straight out to the side and getting the head of his stick in the vicinity of the shot. His splits are almost in the fashion of a hockey goaltender.

UMass' game plan called for point-blank attacks on Adams. The Minutemen swapped around the cage and sent cutters to the crease to set up shots directly in front of the Penn State goalie. Oftentimes, as the scoring total shows, Adams was quick enough to get himself in position to block the shots with his chest.

Adams stopped a total of 20 Minuteman shots on the afternoon.

One such occasion where each goalie made a nice save following his counterpart ... it happened a few times ... was midway through the second quarter. UMass' Rory Pedrick fired a sidearm shot from top left side of the box, but Adams stoned the junior. He then led the clear up the field and immediately the Nittany Lions put the ball on net. It was another low shot, but Schneider got down and stopped the attempt.

This sequence is when the crowd realized what they were witnessing, and began cheering loudly for their respective goalie ... quite a few Penn State fans made the trip up from Happy Valley in RVs.

Schneider compared the back-and-forth between Adams and he to another area of lacrosse where the teams' best players square off against one another.

"It's almost like an attackman, he's going to play the best defenseman," Schneider said. "I'm sure [Adams] feels the same way. You're matching up with one of the best and it's great to play against one of the best."

Cannella obviously revels in Schneider's physical abilities, but praised the young goalie more so for his leadership abilities. Schneider has become a leader on the field, in just his second year in the program ... shouting out commands to his defense, as well as setting an example off the turf.

"I think it's great to have Doc in there. He's a tremendous leader as well," Canella said. "I think it's more important that we have that."

Schneider says he takes pride in being a leader of the Minutemen despite being just a sophomore. He uses what he learned from this team's upperclassmen, along with what the 2006 seniors taught him, to get himself and the team mentally prepared for each game.

Should the problems the Minutemen face on the offensive side of the ball persist, the rest of the 2007 season may rest on the stalky shoulders of their talented goaltender.

Jon Pelland can be reached at jpelland@student.umass.edu. Log on to the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.

Amid all the question marks the Minutemen faced entering the 2007 season, the goaltending position was not one of them. Sophomore Doc Schneider has carried over his stellar play from his freshman campaign into this season.

Heim nominated for Senior Class Award

ECAC LACROSSE from page 12

Sophomore Alex Peaty made the game-saving stop for Loyola in net ... the crowning achievement of his 12-save performance. The conference awarded him Co-Defensive Player of the Week honors for his strong play against the Syracuse attack.

Without a doubt, Penn State's offense is led by Gil Pearsall. He sits atop the Nittany Lions' scoring list with 10 goals and three assists in seven games this season, including a goal and an assist Saturday against UMass.

SENIOR CLASS AWARD

Despite being one of top conferences in collegiate lacrosse, only one ECAC player was named a finalist for the Lowe's Senior Class Award. The award is designed to honor an individual who excels both on and off the field, naming midfielder Pat Heim of Penn State one of the 20 national finalists.

The senior ranks third on the team with nine points on seven goals and two assists. He is also one of the captains of the Nittany Lions and was named to the Iwasaruton Watch List. Last season, he made the All-ECAC First Team and All-American honorable mention status.

The award also honors student-athletes in softball, baseball, basketball and hockey, but this is the first year it will be given to a men's lacrosse player. This year's winner will be announced during the NCAA Lacrosse Championships in Baltimore, Md., at the end of May.

Daryl Veltman of Hobart leads the league in goals per game, averaging 3.25. He is also the only player in the conference with more than 20 goals ... scoring 26 this season ... One of Veltman's teammates on attack, Jamie Kirk, earned ECAC Co-Offensive Player of the Week honors. The junior scored two goals and four assists in the team's 11-10 victory over Fairfield (5-2, 1-2 ECAC) ... Massachusetts goalie, Doc Schneider, has been the ECAC's best statistical goalie this season. The sophomore owns the best goals-against average (7.65) among goalies that have played more than two games. However, Drew Adams of Penn States sports a slightly better save percentage with 0.594 compared to Schneider's 0.585. Schneider also earned ECAC Co-Defensive Player of the Week honors ... Since winning faceoffs is very important to success in lacrosse, it's no surprise that the league's best performer in the circle this season plays for Loyola. Dan Kallaugher owns the top percentage (0.612) among players who have taken more than 10 attempts.

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu

Adam Mills has pitched Charlotte into the NCBWA National Rankings. He is currently 7-1 with a 1.20 ERA for the 29th-ranked 49ers.

Charlotte breaks into national poll

By Scott Feldman
Collegian Correspondent

The Charlotte 49ers baseball team cracked the National Collegiate Baseball Writers Association Top-30 Poll after completing a sweep of the Massachusetts last Sunday.

Charlotte, which boasts a 22-5 overall record and a 5-1 mark in A-10 conference play, is now ranked 29th overall by the NCBWA. The 49ers are also receiving votes for a slot in the USA Today/ESPN Coaches' Poll.

The 49ers' record is the best in school history. Their top pitcher, Adam Mills, leads the league with a 1.20 ERA, while their top hitter, catcher Kris Rochelle, has a league-leading .464 batting average. Charlotte has dominated nearly every opponent it has faced, scoring 206 runs, while allowing only 88 runs against them.

Despite having such a dominating team, at this juncture of the season Charlotte does not lead the A-10. The major blemish on Charlotte's record is a shocking 6-5 loss to A-10 cellar-dweller St. Louis, which has an abysmal 5-24 overall record and a 1-5 conference record, back on March 25.

The Xavier Musketeers are leading the A-10 with a 6-0 record in conference play although it is only 11-18 overall. Xavier swept both of its series within the A-10, beating Dayton at home three games in a row, as well as taking three straight road games at St. Louis; that gives the Musketeers their perfect 6-0 A-10 record.

RICHMOND PITCHER HONORED

Richmond's lefty freshman pitcher, Matt Zielinski, was voted the A-10 rookie of the week after pitching seven scoreless innings in a victory against George Washington.

Zielinski struck out a career-high 10 batters for the game, while allowing only five hits, including two infield singles. Zielinski is 3-2 for the season with a 3.63 ERA. He has also held opposing batters to a .218 average.

Zielinski has been even better against opponents within the A-10, going 2-0 with a 2.08 ERA against conference foes.

The Richmond Spiders are 17-11 overall and 5-1 in league play. Their record puts the Spiders among the top teams in the A-10, looking up at only Charlotte (the best overall record) and Xavier (the only team not to lose a game within the conference).

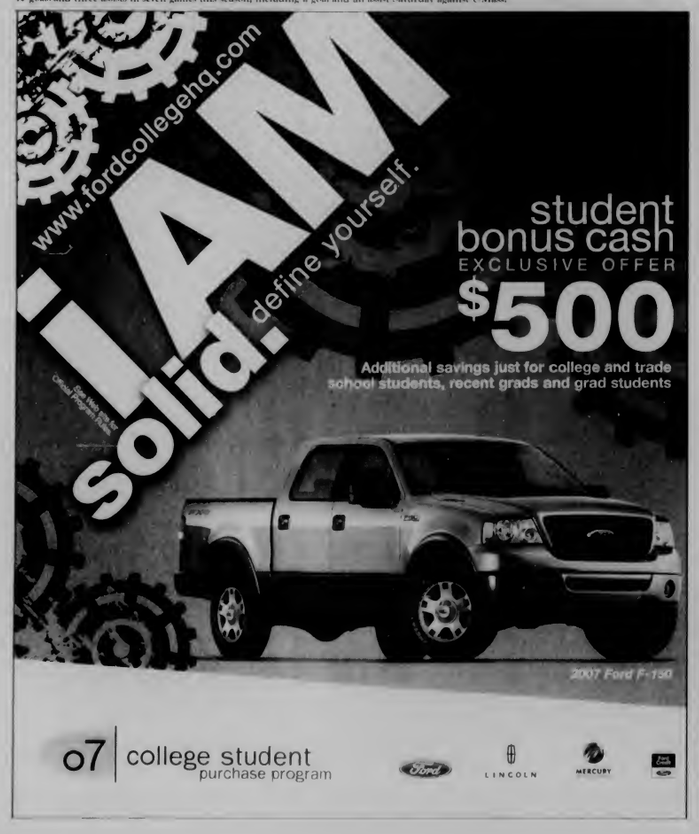
This Friday the Richmond Spiders will have the chance to snap the Xavier's undefeated streak within the A-10 when they begin a three game homestand against the Musketeers.

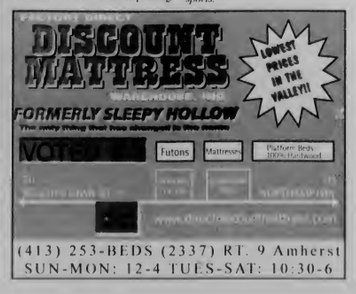
FORDHAM RAMS BONNIES

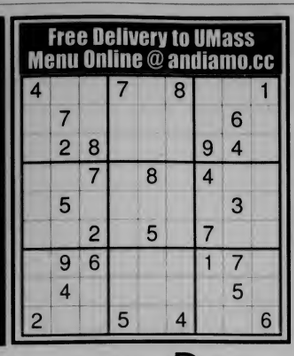
The Fordham Rams crushed the St. Bonaventure Bonnies in their three-game series, winning by scores of 9-0, 12-1 and 2-0 on March 30-31. Fordham pitchers Cory Riordan, Tom Davis and Peter Kennelly combined to allow only eight hits and one run against the Bonnies for the entire series.

Fordham Shortstop Rich Goulian had a career-high four RBIs in the first game against the Bonnies, finishing with five in the series. First baseman Bobby Dinardo and second baseman Jordan Lert each hit four RBIs over the course of the series.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu. Log on to the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.







QUOTE OF THE DAY

"I hump the wild to take it all in, there is no bag limit on happiness."

-Ted Nugent

PAUL By Billy O'Keefe

MAN, I CAN'T BELIEVE IT'S BASEBALL SEASON AGAIN ALREADY!
MUM, THAT'S WEIRD. DID YOU MIX YOUR BLACK T-SHIRTS IN WITH SOME BED TOWELS OR SOMETHING?
NO, WHY DO YOU ASK?
OH, JUST BECAUSE THAT LOOKS LIKE A ST. LOUIS CARDINALS SHIRT, AND I COULD'VE SWORN YOU WERE WEARING A WHITE SOX T-SHIRT AROUND THIS TIME LAST YEAR.
WHITE SOX? DON'T YOU MEAN RED SOX? HA, WOMEN. THEY KNOW NOTHING ABOUT SPORTS.
SERIOUSLY

TWO DUDES By Aaron Warner

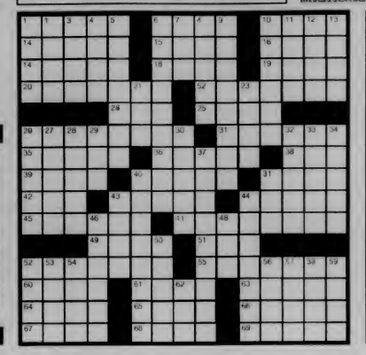
HAVE YOU NOTICED HOW EXPENSIVE STUFF IS, DUDE?
MY MOM'S BIRTHDAY IS NEXT WEEK AND I CAN'T AFFORD TO BUY HER ANYTHING.
WHAT DO YOU USUALLY GIVE YOUR MOM?
HEADACHES.

A COLLEGE GIRL NAMED JOE By Aaron Warner

I STARTED TEACHING SO I COULD MAKE THE WORLD A BETTER PLACE.
...AND NOW THINGS ARE WORSE THAN EVER AND I WONDER WHY I'M EVEN HERE.
I COULD'VE BEEN SOME PLACE WARMER AND JUST AS UNSUCCESSFUL.

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Josh Shalek

Hey coyote
Hello fellow predator
Eaten anything good lately?
Not since breakfast
Seriously- the only thing better than talking about eating is eating meat
I hear you



THE HARP

SPECIALS!
Honey Brown, Molson
$2.00 a pint / $6.50 a pitcher
THURSDAY • Scrambled Porn
SATURDAY • Hi8us
Pizza 'til midnight 7 days a week
Voted best Neighborhood bar
Last of the River 2005 & 2006
Valley Advocate Readers Poll
OLMC & All Credit Cards accepted
Free wireless Internet!
163 Sunderland Rd • N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net

Continuing & Professional Education
UMass Amherst Summer 2007
Get an early start on your summer plans!
- New online GenEds
- Same great faculty!
- Smaller classes
- Two Sessions:

I: June 4 – July 2
II: July 6 – August 22
(Variable date classes available)
Register now!
By visiting us @
www.UMassUlearn.net/dc

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
The smaller the door, the cooler the room is on the other side.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Join the world in celebrating the national treasure that is Ted Nugent.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
If you want to feel more powerful, try hanging up on someone. It's empowering.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
At the end of the day, the only soul mate you need is at the end of your right arm.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
The people with the least friends check their e-mail and phone most often.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
No matter how loud you quack, it will not help you ice skate.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Don't participate in a date auction because you will push people deep into debt.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
The good news is, you're reading. The bad news is that it's at a second grade level.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Buy a coconut and spend your whole night trying to extract its succulent nectar.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
No one wants to eat a meat product that makes a snapping noise. i.e. the Slim Jim.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Tan M&M's are the dinosaurs of the candy world. Only their fossils remain.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
If you haven't learned to play xylophone already, you missed your chance.

Townehouse of Amherst Condominums
Walk to Campus!
Hurry,
Get 'em before they're gone!
50 Meadow St. Amherst, MA
Tel: 413.549.0839
Fax: 413.549.8487

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Like no other course, Army ROTC Learn, Lead and Succeed Be and do something bigger than yourself. Full Scholarships plus $5,000 yearly Call 413-545-2321

New Thrift Shop in Town Threads of life, hospice thrift shop, now open, wed-thur 2-5, fri-sat 10-1 55 University Dr. Amherst, Next to The Hanger. Clothing for all, housewares. Donations accepted, vol needed. 549-8800

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Mill Valley Estates APARTMENT FOR RENT 2 bedroom $1125, 3 bedroom $1425, 4 bedroom $2175 Accepting Applications, 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winnco.com

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

EMPLOYMENT

Attention All Juniors and Senior! April 6th is the last day to apply to become a legal Assistant with the Student Legal Services Office. Earn 12 undergraduate credits while gaining valuable experience in the legal field! Contact us at 545-1995 or stop by our office at 922 Campus Center!

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

EMPLOYMENT

Full time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office, $9.50/hour Applications available at 235 Whitmore and are due April 13th.

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

EMPLOYMENT

Summer on Cape Cod Rent & utilities paid in exchange for providing transportation for teen. Easy walking distance to downtown & beaches, awenkozma@aol.com

SERVICES

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

SERVICES

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992. www.tapestry-health.com

SUMMER SUBLET

Alpine Commons apartment June-August 15th $2050/month includes utilities. 413.204.9519 or jennaw@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 4, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Welcomed change of scenery

Second game called due to darkness

By Dominik Poli
Collegian Staff

With Rhode Island's softball field not yet ready for action, the location of the Massachusetts softball team's game versus the Rams (6-16, 1-3 A-10) was moved to the UMass Softball Complex at the last minute.

The Minutewomen (17-12-1, 4-0 A-10) used the familiar setting to their advantage as they swiped both games from the Rams – a 6-1 two-pitcher performance that was called early due to darkness, preceded by a 4-0 solo flight by sophomore Brandice Balschmiter.

UMass	4
URI	0
UMass	6
URI	1

Due to the sudden change in location, the Maroon and White batted as the away team, despite the home-field advantage.

"[It felt] great, because they're a good team," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "I know on paper they don't look so hot, but I think they're a really good hitting team."

Sophomore Whitney Mollica did not wait long before contributing to the scoreboard as she sent a 2-and-1 pitch over the wall in left-centerfield in the top of the first.

In the top of the second, junior Lauren Proctor needled a single between the first and second basemen. She later scored on a double by sophomore Samantha Salato.

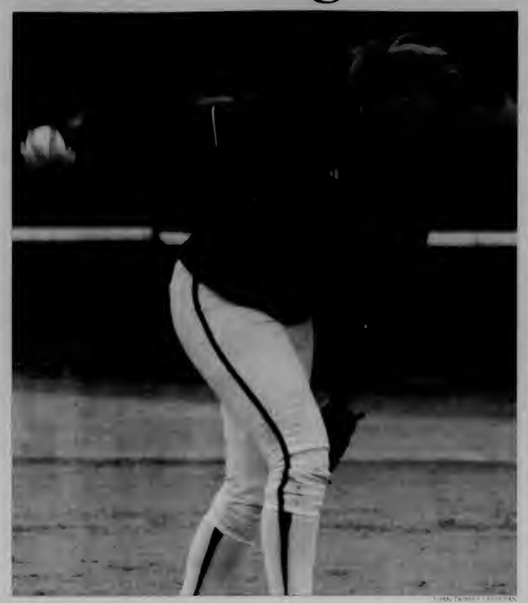
One inning later, Mollica again stood at the plate and reached base thanks to a throwing error by the Rams' third baseman. Senior captain Amanda Acampora – in the game as the designated player – roped a single off the wall in left-center.

Proctor drove her teammates in, punching another double into the gap, scoring Mollica and Acampora to make it a 4-0 game.

In the bottom of the fourth, URI generated its only run when senior Alyssa Martino knocked a double to left side to drive in outfielder Tara Hiteman, who had hit a two-bagger of her own to the same dimension of the park, one at-bat earlier.

But the Minutewomen had a few more runs up their sleeve as well. In the top of the fifth, Proctor pulled a home run over

See SOFTBALL on page 9



Brandice Balschmiter was terrific for the Minutewomen in their two-game doubleheader sweep of Rhode Island. She started both games, giving up just five hits and one run while striking out 11 Ram batters.

Proctor displays rare power in stellar outing

By Joe Meloni
Collegian Staff

Lauren Proctor can hit.

The junior left fielder proved why Massachusetts softball coach Elaine Sortino counts her among UMass' best hitters with a 5-for-6 combined performance, raising her season batting average to .378, in yesterday's two-game sweep of Atlantic 10 rival Rhode Island. She also scored four runs while driving in four more.

URI's pitchers tried to work both sides of the plate against Proctor, but failed no matter where they threw it. The left-handed Proctor began her day lining an 0-and-1 pitch between the third baseman and shortstop and ended it by tattooing an inside fastball over the right-center field fence for her first home run of the season.

Instead of trying to pull the steady diet of outside fastballs provided to her by the Rams, like so many hitters try to do, Proctor went with the pitches placing them brilliantly. This is something she's grown accustomed to and never hesitates to take advantage of.

"I've always kind of hit to the opposite field," she said. "A lot of pitchers pitch me outside. So it's something I've tried to work on. [Sortino] has always really emphasized throwing my hands to hit the ball to the left field gap."

Having a player who possess the talent and experience of Proctor, who typically hits in the five-spot of UMass' lineup, protecting hitters like sophomore Whitney Mollica and junior Stacy Cullington is invaluable for Sortino and the Minutewomen.

It's not the hits and statistics that make Proctor the threat she is, it's the ability to thrive at any point in the game with no regard to the pressure of the situation.

In the third inning of yesterday's second game, Proctor came to bat with runners on first and second. The Minutewomen held a 2-0 lead, which could've been more if not for some nifty defense from the Rams.

A less-experienced player may have failed mentally before she even stepped into the batter's box. Not Proctor, she promptly lined yet another outside pitch to the left-centerfield warning track, plating two more UMass runs, for a double.

See PROCTER on page 9

Don Cahoon coached the Minutemen to their first NCAA Tournament berth in program history in 2006-07, his seventh season in Amherst.

Writers recognize Cahoon, Quick

After coaching the Massachusetts hockey team to its best season in program history, Coach Don Cahoon is being recognized for his team's accomplishments.

The New England Hockey Writers Association announced yesterday that, when it hands out its annual awards on April 11, the honor of New England Coach of the Year will go to Cahoon. This is the second time in his career that Cahoon has received the award. He was last honored in 2003, the same year he won Hockey East Coach of the Year.

UMass has seen an increase in both overall results and recruiting since Cahoon came to Amherst before the 2000-01 season. This season's record was a vast improvement over last year's disappointing 13-21-2 mark of a season ago.

After being selected to finish seventh in the Hockey East Preseason Coaches' Poll, UMass finished the 2006-07 regular season in fourth place earning its second-ever home-ice advantage in the conference tournament.

The Minutemen then swept Maine in the quarterfinals, giving them four wins in two weekends over the Black Bears, before bowing out in the semifinals to New Hampshire. UMass took the top-seeded Wildcats into double overtime before losing.

Cahoon's squad then traveled to Rochester, N.Y., for its first-ever NCAA Tournament victory. The Minutemen beat Clarkson in the first round, but then lost to Maine the following day.

Although the Leonard Fowle Award, New England MVP, went to Boston University's John Curry, former UMass netminder, Jon Quick, was recognized by the New England Hockey Writers as well. They announced Quick was named to New England All-Star Team.

Quick shined in his first season as the Minutemen's No. 1 goaltender. He posted an overall record of 19-11-5 with a 2.16 goal-against average and .929 save percentage. Those numbers were good for 11th and fifth-best in the nation, respectively.

The sophomore left the Minutemen and signed an entry-level contract with the Los Angeles Kings, the team that selected him with the 72nd pick in the 2005 NHL Draft. He will be joining the Kings' AHL affiliate, the Manchester Monarchs, some time this week.

—Jon Pelland

Jim MacDonald is enjoying his second season with UMass. He's second on the team with a .327 average and leads the Minutemen with 14 RBI.

Sloppy play by HC leads to UMass win

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts baseball team took a 4-1 lead into the eighth inning courtesy of sloppy play by Holy Cross, but nearly let the game slip away with erratic play of its own. The Minutemen survived the scare and held on for the 4-3 win yesterday at Fitton Field.

UMass	4
Holy Cross	3

UMass starting pitcher Jim Cassidy was terrific, recording his first victory of the season with seven strong innings. Cassidy entered the game with the worst ERA on the team – 11.57 – but the junior hurler allowed only one run on three hits in his seven frames.

"Jim Cassidy pitched a very good game, and that's really what it was all about," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "He's got a lot of ability. He has a very sharp fastball, hitting 91 [mph] when he's strong, and he has a good curveball. He just had good command today. We just needed a good outing, and we got it."

The Minutemen (5-11, 2-4 A-10) failed on numerous occasions to break the game open, stranding 13 base runners on the day. With the score tied at one-apiece, UMass finally broke through and took the lead for good in the seventh inning. After two consecutive infield singles and a double steal, Adam Tempesta rapped a two-run base hit.

In one of the rarest plays you'll ever see on the diamond, the Minutemen tacked on another run when both the third baseman and the left fielder committed errors on a grounder by Bryan Adamski.

The Crusaders (2-14) got two of those runs right back in the eighth inning, thanks to a miscue by the new UMass pitcher, Mitchell Eilenberg. With a runner on second and two out, Eilenberg bobbled a come-backer and that kept the inning alive for Matt Perron – who promptly delivered a two-run double.

See BASEBALL on page 9

Sophomore Doc Schneider made 15 saves (on 20 shots) to keep the Penn State offense in check. The five goals ties PSU's season-low.

Schneider shines amid uncertainty

By Jon Pelland
Collegian Staff

With all the inconsistency and lack of production plaguing the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team, the Minutemen can take comfort in the fact that those problems aren't affecting a key component – goaltending.

So far this season, sophomore Doc Schneider has carried over the success of his rookie campaign. While wins are hard to come by for UMass (3-5, 1-1 ECAC), Schneider's consistent play in net has kept the Minutemen in all of their games.

Almost every UMass game this season has been a defensive struggle, thanks to Schneider's athletic abilities and diving saves in front of the cage. He's held opponents under 10 goals on five occasions this season.

Not only is the goalie a major factor in the tremendous defensive year UMass is having, but his performance is helping the three players directly in front of him. The confidence of knowing Schneider is behind them has given the likes of David Von Voigt, Brian Danvers and Sean Krygier confidence to do their jobs.

"I think it's great. It's great for our defense," UMass coach Greg Cannella said Saturday. "Look

See SCHNEIDER on page 10

ECAC frontrunners becoming clear

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

It was a big weekend for a pair of ECAC teams – and there is a good chance that the conference champion will be decided when No. 6 Georgetown (5-2, 2-0 ECAC) and No. 8 Loyola (5-2, 3-0 ECAC) meet on April 14. Regardless, each team put themselves in good position for an at-large bid to the NCAA Tournament with wins over opponents ranked in the Top 20 of this week's edition of the Nike Inside Lacrosse Media Poll.

The Hoyas knocked off No. 7 Navy (8-1) last Saturday, handing the Midshipmen their first loss of the season. Georgetown maintained a two-goal lead for much of the fourth quarter to hang on for the victory, 10-9.

Junior Brendan Cannon led the Hoya attack, scoring three goals and registering three assists. He earned Co-Offensive Player of the Week honors for his performance.

Georgetown is also at the tail end of a difficult non-conference schedule. It has already beaten No. 10 Maryland (7-3) and No. 14 Delaware (6-3), but lost close games to No. 4 Duke (8-2) and No. 15 Syracuse (3-4). However, Georgetown's final non-ECAC matchup should be the easiest game on its schedule. The Hoyas face lowly Mount St. Mary's (1-5) on April 10.

Not to be overshadowed by Georgetown's victory, Loyola had a solid win of its own – handing Syracuse its fourth loss of the season. The Orange, though a perennial power in college lacrosse, is struggling through a rebuilding period. In fact, the team had its consecutive Final Four streak of 22 broken just two seasons ago, losing to Massachusetts in the first round of the 2005 tournament.

Syracuse plays many of the teams from the ECAC every year since it has no conference affiliation. The Orange already defeated Hobart (4-4, 1-2 ECAC) and Georgetown earlier this season and faces Rutgers (2-4, 1-2 ECAC) and UMass (3-5, 1-1 ECAC) in the coming weeks.

In a weekend filled with close games, Loyola defended its home turf and beat the Orange, 11-10. The Greyhounds withstood a late-game rally from the Orange attack, including saving a close-range shot during the final seconds that would have sent the game into overtime.

See ECAC LACROSSE on page 10

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

CLOUDY : HI: 42 LO: 24 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, APRIL 5, 2007

DROWN EMERGES AS A LEADER PAGE 10

TOUBAB MAKES THURSDAY FUN PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

Faculty Senate polls UMass students on calendar change

By Alyssa Montalbano
Collegian Staff

Undergraduates at the University of Massachusetts are hoping for the possibility that summer vacation will start earlier in the near future.

Nearly two weeks after the UMass Faculty Senate released a survey about a proposal that would have the campus' spring semester begin and end two weeks earlier, a second survey was taken polling UMass students for their opinions.

There was a striking difference in the results from the students compared to the results from the faculty and administration. They stated that more than three-quarters of UMass' first- and second-year students support the calendar change proposal.

In the recent poll taken by the Faculty Senate Office, 88 percent of the students responded saying that starting summer vacation earlier would give them the opportunity to begin internships, jobs and co-ops earlier.

More than 85 percent of students said that they thought moving the spring semester up would give them an advantage in getting positions.

Only 25.4 percent of students were against the proposal, saying that they valued the current opportunity to take winter session classes in January.

The proposal, suggested by UMass Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs and Campus Life Michael Gargano, states that the fall semester will begin the Tuesday after Labor Day and end on Dec. 23.

The spring semester would begin around Jan. 15 and graduation would be no later than the second weekend in May. It would be put into effect in the 2009-2010 academic year.

Many faculty and administration members oppose the calendar change, saying that having a shorter January break would cut back on teaching preparation for the second semester. Changing these dates would also throw UMass out of sync with the other schools in the Five College group.

The students who responded to this survey were 18, 19 or 20 years old, and 78 percent were Massachusetts residents.

Alyssa Montalbano can be reached at amontalb@student.umass.edu.

SGA elects new president

Aaron Buford won the title of SGA president with 1,414 votes, Ruth Thompson took the Student Trustee position with 1,616 votes and the MassPIRG Referenda question had a total of 1,395 votes for 'yes.'

Trustee reacts to criticism

By Amber Vaillancourt
Collegian Staff

In front of a packed conference room in the Campus Center at the 1,552nd regular meeting of the University of Massachusetts Student Government Association (SGA) on April 4, Ruth Thompson addressed her fellow Senators and reiterated previous explanations she made concerning her viewpoints on homosexuality and racism.

"I appreciate people who came out and supported these issues, because people don't support them enough," said Thompson.

Thompson expressed concern that the discussion of racism and homophobia did not enter regular conversation; it only came up when she was running for the position of Student Trustee. "For me, these conversations need to continue to happen, but these issues should not have come up just because I was running," she said. "When we don't support each other, we divide each other."

Former Student Trustee Mishy Leiblum offered congratulations to Thompson and Aaron Buford, who both ran for the positions of Trustee and SGA President, respectively. Leiblum also criticized the SGA, saying that in terms of supporting the Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual and Transsexual community on campus, the SGA "has not been doing enough."

Leiblum also reported that the United States Student Association chose the state of Massachusetts as one of the states to support this upcoming year with resources like training and expanded staffing.

The USSA is a national student organization whose motto is 'education is a right.' Massachusetts was selected because potential was seen in the state to achieve affordable and free public

See SGA on page 3

Weathering the storm

Junior midfielder Rory Pedrick and the UMass Minutemen host St. John's on Saturday at 1 p.m. at Garber Field. The Minutemen are coming off a 6-5 overtime win over Penn State last week.

Modern morals affect rape reporting

By Andy Boyle
Daily Nebraskan (U. Nebraska)

LINCOLN, Neb. – It's sexual assault awareness month, and even though police officers don't usually receive a large number of assault reports on campus, officials say that doesn't mean it's not happening.

The University of Nebraska-Lincoln had one reported case of first-degree sexual assault in 2005, according to the most recent statistics from University Police.

Marla, the UNL victim advocate who preferred her last name not be used, said she's had people come into her office who say they were raped but never reported it.

"The national statistics estimate that only 16 to 30 percent of sexual assaults are ever reported to law enforcement," she said. And with only one reported in 2005 to University Police, she said she thought UNL was close to being at that percentage.

She said about one in four college women are raped. Women ages 16 to 24 are at the highest risk, she said.

Jan Deeds, director of the Women's Center, said it's important to remember most people don't sexually assault others.

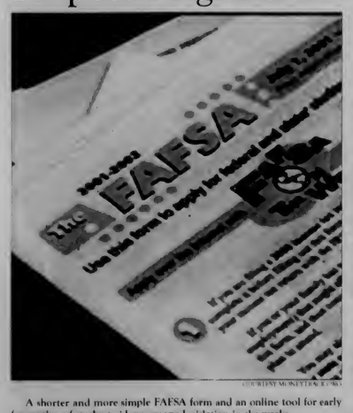
She said some behaviors in American culture make it seem Ok.

"They don't get a strong enough message from other men that they're going down the wrong path," she said. "There's jokes about date rape, jokes about roofies, and when you do that sort of thing, if someone in your group is a predator and doesn't recognize no means no, you're kind of giving them permission."

Deeds added that 90 percent of the time, the victim knows the assailant, so it's not necessarily a "stranger jumping out of the bushes."

Sgt. Dave Dibelka of University Police said most of the cases reported to his department involved an acquaintance.

Proposed legislation to make filling out FAFSA easier



A shorter and more simple FAFSA form and an online tool for early forecasting of student aid are among legislation in the works.

By Tiffany Frasier & Billy Wellock
Daily Collegian (Penn State)

UNIVERSITY PARK, Pa. – When it comes to filling out the FAFSA, Olakunle Orogbemi's engineering education does nothing to help him get through the form – especially when dealing with the tax information.

"Everything else is fairly easy," Orogbemi, a junior in petroleum and natural gas engineering, said, but "it's almost like you have to be a tax expert to fill that part out."

Orogbemi and other students may have an easier time filing for federal student aid soon if proposed changes are passed.

A shorter and more simple FAFSA form and an online tool for early forecasting of student aid are among legislation in the works that would improve "college access and affordability," according to a House Committee on Education and Labor press release. FAFSA – the Free Application for Federal Student Aid – is the form students use to apply for federal student aid. For the 2005-06 academic year, 51,000 Pennsylvania State University students applied for financial aid.

Rep. George Miller, D-Calif., chairman of the House Committee on Education and Labor, and Rep. Rahm Emanuel, D-Ill., introduced the "College Aid Made EZ Act" on March 20. According to the press release, the legislation would cut the FAFSA from five pages to two pages and allow the Internal Revenue Service to share tax information with the Department of Education.

The plan may also improve the number of first-generation and low-income students attending college.

"The more [the form] is simplified it will certainly be a benefit to the students and their families because it is a complex form to complete," Penn State Director of Student Aid Programs Bob Snyder said. "In recent years the form has been filled out online and has cut down on the number of errors, but it is still a lengthy form to complete."

The complexity of the current financial aid form is often cited as a barrier to attending college.

"That's the big issue," Snyder said. "It is a very complex process, and it can deter many students and families from filling out the form."

A report released last year by the American Council on Education estimated that 1.5 million aid-eligible students, particularly low-income students who have a greater difficulty compiling necessary financial information, didn't fill out a FAFSA form.

Simplifying the form is also expected to save colleges money in verification costs. With data being sent directly from the IRS, financial aid offices nationwide could save about $400 million in verifying the financial aid documents families send in.

"It's too early to say what the form would look like, but we are hoping that families giving permission to IRS to give data will make [the process] easier," Snyder said.

The College Aid Made EZ Act also suggests creating a "pre-FAFSA" form. The U.S. Department of Education Secretary, Margaret Spellings already released a new online tool called the FAFSA-caster on March 21 to give students estimates of financial aid awards earlier in high school.

Spellings' tool, already available in English online, will be available in Spanish on April 29.

Students can enter financial information on the department's Web site before their senior year to answer 51 of the 102 questions on the current FAFSA, which are then stored until the financial aid process is completed.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVII
Issue III

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Eric Athas
Managing Editor Rob Greenfield
Business Manager Dan Conti
Production Manager Amanda Allen
Night Supervisor Sherel Wolnik
Advertising Manager Jamieson Porter
Advertising Production Molly Eggleston
Arts & Living Editor Morgan Rousseau
Copy Editor Adam Szajgin
Editorial Editor Tucker Merrick
News Editor Matt Bellineau
Sports Editor Danny Picard
Sports Editor Jon Pelland
Circulation Manager Jeff Pentz
Finance Manager David Valade
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Nicole Puddester
Asst. Arts & Living Tim McCall
Asst. Arts & Living Sydney Towne
Assistant News Anna Dolianitis
Assistant News Nicole Boonjakuakul
Assistant Editorial Brendan Hall
Assistant Sports Jeremy Rier
Web Editor James Hale
Photo Editor Toan Trinh

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the Collegianससेन in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been sponsored free since January 1994 for advertising, news and information. Call 545-3500 between 8:30 AM and 3:30 PM.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Rob Greenfield

COPY EDITOR
Nicole Boonjakuakul

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

If you see news happening, call us at 545-1809 and snap a photo with your cell phone, then send it to news@dailycollegian.com

Half of college students over-consuming booze, drugs

By Marielle Segarra
Brown Daily Herald (Brown U.)

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — About half of full-time college students abuse drugs and alcohol, according to a March 15 report from Columbia University's National Center on Addiction and Substance Abuse.

The study, titled "Wasting the Best and Brightest," which polled 2,000 students and 400 administrators between 1993 and 2005, found that 49 percent of full-time college students – nearly 3.8 million students – binge drink and abuse drugs. About 23 percent – or 1.8 million – "met the medical criteria for substance abuse and dependence," almost triple the proportion in the general population.

"It's time to take the high out of higher education," Joseph Califano, the center's chair and a former U.S. secretary of health, education and welfare, said in a statement.

The study found that, since 1993, binge drinking has increased 16 percent and the number of students drinking to get drunk has risen 21 percent. It also said the number of students who drink 10 times or more in a month has increased 25 percent.

At Brown, some students said the drinking problem is partly due to the country's legal drinking age of 21.

Corne Tan '10, a self-described "social drinker," said the legal drinking age in her home country, Singapore, is 18 – and students abuse alcohol less there because it is more prevalent.

"Underage drinking is not an issue in Singapore," Tan said.

Tan said students in the United States often drink to get drunk, but young adults in Singapore drink for the taste or for the "warm, fuzzy high," while not going over their limits.

"The drinking age being 21 encourages binge drinking," Meaghan Caulfield '10 said. "The thrill comes from the illegality of it."

The culture was completely different when Caulfield visited Europe, she said. In Spain, she could just "sit around and have a beer" with a group of people without getting drunk.

"Americans, by making the drinking age 21, put this forbidden stigma on it. It's not that way in Europe," Caulfield said.

"I think some students drink as a reaction to the drinking age," said Kristina Jackson, assistant professor of community health at the Brown's Center for Alcohol and Addiction Studies. Because alcohol is more difficult to obtain for those under 21, underage drinkers consume alcohol less frequently but more heavily than those over 21, she said.

Universities sometimes create programs for incoming students to stress the dangers of drugs and alcohol, she said, but most of the prevention comes in "restricting access and cracking down on bars that have cheap drinks."

In his statement, Califano blamed college administrators for facilitating alcohol abuse.

"College presidents, deans and trustees have facilitated a college culture of alcohol and drug abuse that is linked to poor student academic performance, depression, anxiety, suicide, property damage, vandalism, fights and a host of medical problems," he said.

"By failing to become part of the solution, these Pontius Pilate presidents and parents, deans, trustees and alumni have become part of the problem," Califano said.

Caulfield said she thinks drinking is a big part of Brown's culture, mostly because of the large size of its campus. Caulfield was surprised at the lack of alcohol on campus when she visited her sister at Skidmore College, but she said that the scarcity was due mainly to the school's small campus and students' inability to use fake IDs in the area, where students face the harsh penalties for being caught.

"Alcohol certainly has made a leap," said Andre Burnier '10. "There is definitely a difference between now and previous generations – we consume it for the ends and not for the taste."

Burnier said alcohol has become his generation's "drug of choice," compared to the prevalent use of marijuana in the 1960s. Also, he said, it is a "way of breaking the law," though he said it is easy to gain access to alcohol – much more so than when he was in high school.

Along with the increase in alcohol abuse, the study said marijuana use has doubled since 1993 and other illegal drug use has increased 52 percent.

Use of prescription painkillers such as Percocet, Vicodin and OxyContin has increased by 343 percent, and use of tranquilizers like Xanax and Valium has gone up 450 percent, the study found. And prescription stimulant abuse – including use of Ritalin and Adderall – has risen 93 percent, though one student thinks this figure could be misleading.

Overnight fire in Acton kills 2

ACTON, Mass. — A three-alarm fire moved quickly through an Acton home early Wednesday morning, killing two occupants, officials said.

The victims, described by broadcast outlets as an elderly couple who had lived in the home for a long time, were found dead on the second floor of the single-family house on Captain Forbush Lane, state Fire Marshal Stephen Coan said.

Their identities were not immediately made public. The medical examiner is conducting autopsies to determine the cause of death.

Firefighters, alerted to the blaze by a neighbor at about 1:30 a.m., arrived on the scene to find the home fully engulfed.

The fire's cause is still under investigation but does not appear to be suspicious, Coan said. Coan said he is also trying to determine whether the home had smoke alarms.

Coan said he is concerned because 26 people have died in fires in Massachusetts already this year, far ahead of the five-year average. There were 43 fire deaths in the state all of last year he said.

"We've done a good job in recent years of driving fire fatalities down with the widespread use of smoke alarms, laws that require new construction to have smoke alarms, and getting out the educational message, telling people not to overload electrical outlets," he said.

The rash of fire deaths early this year are "a call for people to take the time to make sure that smoke alarms are in place and good practices are being observed," he said.

—Associated Press

Amherst Police log

Maxim Magazine reported stolen

Tuesday
April 3

12:25 p.m.

The owner of three dogs was fined $50.00 after one of the dogs bit another dog. The bit dog faced an automatic 10-day quarantine. The reporting party has had five previous incidents with the fined owner.

5:31 p.m.

A breaking and entering occurred at 237 Sunset Avenue. The residence was left unsecured while two laptops worth an estimated $2,300 were stolen.

5:36 p.m.

A large truck crashed into and knocked over a crossing light on Amity Street. The driver of the vehicle was gone by the time police arrived.

7:57 p.m.

Three vehicles, a Toyota Camry, Isuzu Rodeo and a Jeep Cherokee, were all broken into while parked on South East Street sometime between 1 a.m. and 8 a.m. An Ipod, wallet with an I.D., and an issue of Maxim Magazine were reported to be stolen from the vehicles.

8:51 p.m.

An animal complaint was reported on North Pleasant Street when a dog and an possum began attacking each other. After fatally wounding the possum, the dog was properly licensed and vaccinated.

Wednesday
April 4

1:14 a.m.

Michael London, 25, of Hampton, VA, was arrested for operating a vehicle without a license. London was driving in a Plymouth Voyager on North Pleasant Street when he struck another vehicle and tried to flee. The vehicle was towed and London was brought to the Amherst Police Department.

- Compiled by Holly Seabury

Bill would cap tuition, fee increases at state colleges

BOSTON — Bills being considered by the House and Senate would cap tuition and other fee increases at the state's public colleges, where charges have nearly doubled in the past six years.

"Our student charges are off the chart because the Commonwealth hasn't stepped up to the plate to provide what it should be for funding," said Sen. Stanley Rosenberg, D-Amherst.

Tuition and fees have risen 92 percent at the University of Massachusetts since the 2001-02 school year to an average of $9,000 this year, according to the state Higher Education Board.

Tuition and fees at the nine state colleges have climbed 98 percent to an average of $5,855 this year, while they have climbed 55 percent at 15 community colleges to an average of $3,526 this year in the same span, according to board statistics.

Some state leaders have been expressing concern public higher education is becoming too expensive.

The Senate proposal would limit future increases to the three-year average of the consumer price index, which was about 3.2 percent last year.

The House version calls for freezing tuition and fees in years when the state meets its funding obligation for public higher education, but allowing increases when funding falls short, up to the average increase of the higher education price index. That index, 5 percent this year, gauges the annual cost of running a college.

The cap proposals are part of larger House and Senate bills that would provide an additional $400 million over the next seven years to help build endowments and hire more faculty at public colleges and universities.

Position Notice
University Helpline
Full or Part Time

The University Helpline Staff will be trained in all aspects of Bursar, Financial Aid, and Housing Assignment Office policies and procedures and will be called upon to interpret those policies and procedures for prospective students, residents, and parents. In addition to policy training in the three areas, staff will receive extensive training in the areas of telephone etiquette and customer service. This position requires a very high level of commitment from the candidates chosen.

Starting Salary: $7.75/hr
Work Schedule: Monday - Friday: 9:00am - 5:00 pm

Starting Date: June 18, 2007
Ending Date: August 31, 2007
Work Location: Telecom Trailer
Application Deadline: Tuesday, April 17, 2007

Desired Qualifications

- You must be presently enrolled and in good standing
- You must be energetic and self-motivated
- You will need excellent oral communication skills
- You must be able to project a congenial and competent image on the telephone
- You should have experience living in the residence halls (not required)
- You may be a "Work Study" or "Non-Work Study" student
- You may be a full-time or part-time undergraduate student

Application Procedures

Applications are available in the Students Affairs Office, 319 Whitmore Building. Applications are due to the Student Affairs Office by 5:00pm, Tuesday, April 17, 2007. If you have any questions, please contact Sylvia Langford, Special Assistant to the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs at 545-2300.

SKYPLEX
SPRINGFIELD'S HOTTEST NIGHTCLUB
3 CLUBS & 3 DJ'S ALL UNDER ONE ROOF!!!
"LA & NYC NIGHTLIFE COMES TO SPRINGFIELD"

Thursday - 18+ College Night "Hot Body Contest"
Friday - 18+ "Underground Electronic Dance Party" Downstairs
"Top 40" Upstairs
Saturday - 21+ "Party VIP Style"

WANTED: Hip Young Promoters/Hosts • Earn $$$$

Calling all DJ's

Do you do campus and house parties? Looking for a chance to work at the HOTTEST Nightclub? Here's your chance to become a Club DJ! Signup online at www.info.skyplex.us

18+ $2.00 off admission before midnight with this ad
21+ FREE admission before midnight with this ad
code:umass

10 Stearns Square Springfield, MA 413-827-9000

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is hiring copy editors for the Fall 2007 semester

if interested please pick up an application at the Daily Collegian Office, located in the Campus Center basement or contact Sheryl Wolnik at swolnik@student.umass.edu.

12.3% of campus votes in SGA election higher education.

SGA from page 1

Peter Barros, who acted as President for the time between the end of former SGA President Chris Mendez' term and the start of the newly elected SGA President, extended a gracious thank you to Mendez who was not present at the meeting due to an academic conflict. Barros said that during his years at UMass, he had never seen someone work as hard as he had seen Mendez work.

Senator Karina Martinez reported on her Faculty Senate Committee, academic matters and explained that the Faculty Senate was looking to survey more upperclassmen on the issue of the new proposed academic calendar.

She explained that while a majority of the professors and the Five College community opposed the calendar, a majority of the students supported it. She further explained that they were hoping to survey upperclassmen, because a large portion of the nearly 500 students surveyed were sophomores and freshmen.

Senator Martinez also reported that the Finance Committee still has a little more than $16,000 remaining in its budget, even after allocating money to such groups as the Cannabis Reform Coalition, Navigators and Student Valley Productions.

Motion 2007-S38 was passed, which approved the allocation of $1,894 to Student Valley Productions for their 11th Annual Comedy Jam, which will take place on April 20 and 21. A large majority of the members of SVP were at the meeting for the presentation of the motion to the Senate in support of the group's Chair, Natalie Baserman.

"It's in our constitution that everything be free," Baserman said, and that was SVP's reasoning for asking for money from SGA, so that the event could be free for all of the UMass community.

The 2007 Spring Election results were also ratified by the Student Senate last night. Only 12.3% of the student body participated in these elections, which "exceeds the amount specified in Title VIII," Chapter 9, Section 2 of the SGA By-laws mandates that "five percent … of the SGA membership shall cast a vote in a General…Election in order for said elections to be ratified," the official election report claims.

Aaron Buford won the title of SGA President with 1,414 votes, Ruth Thompson took the Student Trustee position with 1,616 votes and the MassPIRG Referenda question had a total of 1,395 votes for "yes."

Write-In Candidate for the Southwest Area, Adam Gentile, won with just 25 votes, Chris Faulkner won the seat of Lt. Governor with 332 votes and Stephanie Marchese won the position of Secretary with 328 votes. There was a two-way tie for the position of Treasurer, both Shannon McCarthy and Robert Petrie received five votes.

Elizabeth Sweeney won the position of Governor for Sylvan Area Government with 107 votes and Amanda Sceusa won the title of Lt. Governor with 109 votes. There was a three-way tie for the position of Secretary, each candidate received two votes, and those people are: Daren Nichols, Alon River and Alan Chow. Brian Hueter won the seat of Treasurer for the Sylvan Area Government with three votes.

Timothy Alden won the position as Governor of Orchard Hill Area Government with 236 votes, Pearline Nguuy won the title of Lt. Governor with 184 votes, Jen Sherman won the Secretary seat with 14 votes and Marissa McGarry became Orchard Hill Area Government's Treasurer with 230 votes.

Sahil Shangaui won the title of Governor for Northeast Area Government with 17 votes, Nekelle Lemoine won the seat for Lt. Governor with 116 votes, Stephen Brown become the Secretary with 108 votes and Rishab Mehira joins Northeast Area Government as the Treasurer with 17 votes.

Michael Megaro won the position as Governor of Central Area Government with 349 votes, Bilal Janjua took the seat as Lt. Governor with 212 votes and Emily Cho collected seven votes to become the Secretary. There was a two-way tie between Sean Monroe and Craig Carpenter for the position of Treasurer of Central Area Government with each candidate receiving four votes.

The on-campus Area Government positions in the North Apartments were filled with Sean McNair taking the title of Governor with just two votes. Both positions of Lt. Governor and Secretary had 10-way ties, with each of the candidates receiving just one vote. The position of Treasurer had a 12-way tie, also with each of the candidates receiving one vote.

The Commuter Government was also full of ties, for all positions except Governor, which was won by Jean Foster with six votes. The race for Lt. Governor had an eight-way tie, Secretary had a five-way tie and Treasurer had a four-way tie.

All positions resulting in a tie will be decided at the next Student Senate meeting which is on Wednesday, April 11.

Senator Matt Giancola presented Motion 2007-S39, which called for the SGA's support in "the concept of universal single-payer health care." The motion says the "system is in need of reform in order to guarantee the right to life and health for all citizens."

The motion said one of the benefits of the SGA supporting the motion is that "current UMass students would save money through lower fee because of less expensive health care." The motion was approved by all but one of the 31 Senators present for last night's meeting.

Lecture claims Facebook is bad for couples

By Laura Smith
The Pitt News (U. Pittsburgh)

PITTSBURGH — Facebook.com is the death of college relationships. At least that's what a small group of students decided Monday night in the William Pitt Union at a lecture and discussion session presented by the University Counseling Center focused on maintaining healthy relationships.

The event was the second in a three-part lecture series designed to help students begin and maintain healthy relationships and, when necessary, end the ones that are not so healthy.

The students' qualms with Facebook arose when Jamie Bromley, a licensed social worker and one of the speakers for the evening, asked the group to share which things make maintaining relationships hard.

Attendees offered many traditional relationship difficulties, such as continuing communication, resisting sexual temptation and differing levels of commitment between the two partners. University of Pittsburgh student Phillip Gallagher even suggested that the key to maintaining a good relationship is "that she doesn't act up." But the challenges presented by Facebook soon became the focus of the discussion.

Facebook provides too much access to information about others, the group decided, like friend requests and details, picture-tagging, wall-postings and gifts.

The worst part of it all is its news feed," a student chimed in, speaking of the Web site's feature that informs the user, upon login, of dozens of actions involving the user's friends that have taken place on the site in the last few hours.

A lecture held at the University of Pittsburgh claimed that the Facebook social network is detrimental to the success of college relationships.

Energy experts debate usefulness of Ethanol

President George W. Bush proposed cutting America's dependence on gasoline made from foreign oil by 20 percent by increasing Ethanol production

By Mark Durment
Daily News (Ball State U.)

MUNCIE, Ind. — At his Jan. 23 State of the Union address, President George W. Bush proposed cutting America's dependence on gasoline made from foreign oil by 20 percent by increasing production of ethanol. Bush's proposed budget called for halting a land conservation program in order to increase corn production, according to the Associated Press.

Since Bush declared that America was "addicted to oil" in his 2006 address, biofuels such as corn-based ethanol and soybean-based biodiesel have become one of the fastest-growing industries in the country. Ball State University's shuttles run on biodiesel, as does Tom Mitchl Daniels' tour bus. General Motors Corp. has begun marketing flex-fuel cars that run on both normal gasoline and E85, a blend of 85 percent ethanol and 15 percent gasoline. According to the Renewable Fuels Association, the United States has 113 ethanol refineries, which produce almost 5.6 billion gallons of the fuel per year, with eight planning to expand and 76 under construction.

U.S. Ethanol Holdings, LLC announced last September that it would build a 100 million gallon ethanol plant north of Muncie and near Eaton, according to a Muncie-Delaware County Economic Development Alliance press release. Jason Hill, a research associate at the University of Minnesota's Department of Applied Economics, approaches the hype with skepticism.

Hill conducted a study in 2006, partially sponsored by the University of Minnesota's Initiative for Renewable Energy, to investigate the full life cycles of ethanol and biodiesel. The study found that while both fuels supplied more energy than was required to produce them, neither would meet America's energy demands.

Despite the University of Minnesota study's findings, marketing director for Ron Lamberty of the American Coalition for Ethanol, a trade organization that also lobbies on behalf of the ethanol industry, remained optimistic. He said that without changes to infrastructure, ethanol could offset use of gasoline by 10 percent.

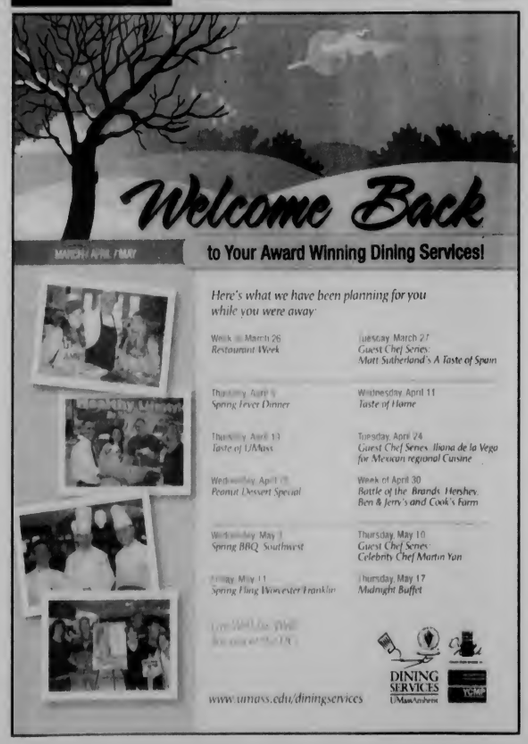
Hill, however, said he wasn't so sure.

"If we dedicated every kernel of corn in the country to producing ethanol, we would offset use of gasoline by 12 percent," he said. "I even achieve levels of 10 percent will be a challenge."

Likewise, if every ounce of soybean oil was dedicated to producing biodiesel, it would offset diesel usage by 6 percent.

Want to write for News?
Come down to the Collegian and let us know!

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)



Welcome Back
March/April/May
to Your Award Winning Dining Services!
Here's what we have been planning for you while you were away:
Week of March 26 Restaurant Week
Tuesday March 27 Guest Chef Series: Matt Sutherland's A Taste of Spain
Thursday, April 5 Spring Fever Dinner
Wednesday April 11 Taste of Home
Thursday, April 19 Taste of UMass
Tuesday, April 24 Guest Chef Series: Iliana de la Vega for Mexican regional Cuisine
Wednesday, April 25 Peanut Dessert Special
Week of April 30 Battle of the Brands: Hershey, Ben & Jerry's and Cook's Farm
Wednesday, May 3 Spring BBQ: Southwest
Thursday, May 10 Guest Chef Series: Celebrity Chef Martin Yan
Friday, May 11 Spring Fling Worcester/Franklin
Thursday, May 17 Midnight Buffet
DINING SERVICES
UMassAmherst
www.umass.edu/diningservices

A graduate business degree.
Just the way you want it.

BENTLEY
PORTFOLIO 360
Comprehensive Graduate Business Programs

Presenting the new Bentley Portfolio 360 – Integrating business, technology, ethics and global understanding, focused through experiential learning.

Flexible. Customize your program around your career goals and academic background. Focus your degree with multiple concentrations and dual-degree options.

Personal. Participate in classes on campus and online. With courses offered primarily in the evening, our programs accommodate your schedule.

Powerful. Accelerate your career with a degree from one of the country's top-ranked business schools.

Business majors earn an MBA in as few as 12 courses.

Apply now for September enrollment
Visit www.bentley.edu or call 1.800.442.GRAD

BENTLEY
McCALLUM GRADUATE SCHOOL of BUSINESS

The Bentley MBA • 6 MS programs • MBA & MS Dual Degrees

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

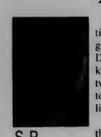
EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, APRIL 5, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." -Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Making the wrong headlines



S.P. Sullivan

For an evolutionary biologist, Richard Dawkins sure knows a thing or two about how to create a headline.

Dawkins, for the unfamiliar, is an Oxford University professor and popular science author – think Carl Sagan with a chip on his shoulder. Dawkins made his way into the public eye with his 1976 book, "The Selfish Gene," and has most recently stirred controversy with his newest work, "The God Delusion." He's been referred to as "Darwin's rottweiler," due to his staunch defense of evolutionary theory.

He's also kind of a jerk.

Dawkins often raises eyebrows with his inflammatory anti-religious remarks, which never fail to aggravate the zealots of the right and always make for good TV. He's been quoted as referring to theism as a "cop-out," and suggesting that threatening a child with eternal damnation is about as damaging as sexual abuse. He's also become the unwitting leader of the New Atheist movement, a collection of atheists with attitude.

But as crass as his assertions may be, his views are shared (a little more humbly) by most of the atheist population, which has escalated in recent years. Representative Pete Stark, D-Calif., recently made headlines when he came out as the first admitted atheist to serve Congress and other authors – bolstered by Dawkins' success – have come out with similar works of religious skepticism, such as Sam Harris' "Letter to a Christian Nation."

However, the growing support on non-theistic beliefs has also been met with some resistance, namely in conservative Christians' insistence that "alternative" theories to evolution be taught. These arguments are made on the basis that Darwinian evolution is "just a theory." (It should be noted, though, that plate tectonics is also just a theory, but no one insists children be taught that earthquakes happen because God is bowling).

What Dawkins fails to recognize is the good that religious organizations can accomplish.

Most of the criticism Dawkins receives stems not from his skeptic sensibilities, though, but from his rather holier-than-thou (pun intended) attitude. Critics come from both religious and skeptic camps, the former finding his statements to be blasphemous and offensive and the latter just wishing he'd take it down a notch.

Dawkins, however, is undaunted by the criticism. In a much YouTube'd argument between Dawkins and headline-grabbing evangelical preacher Ted Haggard, in the Dawkins-narrated documentary, "The Root of All Evil?" on British Channel 4, Haggard insisted that time will tell who's right in the evolution vs. creation debate. "Your grandchildren might listen to the tape of you saying that and laugh at you," says Haggard, to which Dawkins replies, "You want to bet?"

But even those in the nonbelieving community – although generally in agreement with Dawkins' theories – wish he'd be a little more gracious about it. If you're after getting the honey, as the old cliché goes, then you don't go killing all the bees. And if you're looking to get the bees to accept scientific theory over religious dogma, you don't go telling them they're deluded.

Because it seems implausible that believers, who constitute well over 90 percent of the human population, are simply deluded. To refer to God as a "delusion" is to attack a belief (or misconception, depending on whom you ask) at its most fundamental level. Dawkins might as well be screaming, "The Soylent Green is people;" Christians and other believers aren't going to take the message to heart.

The late Carl Sagan, an astrophysicist most famous for hosting the Cosmos series on PBS in the 1980's, also recently released a book. "The Varieties of Scientific Experience: A Personal View of the Search for God," released posthumously by Sagan's widow Ann Druyan, takes a milder approach at "disproving" God. Where Dawkins outright refuses the existence of a higher being, Sagan tries to explain the phenomenon of faith through scientific means, rather than writing it off as "delusion."

So if the late Sagan – with all his talk of the immeasurable human capacity for good – could be compared to an evangelical preacher, Dawkins – with all of his fire-and-brimstone foreboding – would be Jonathan Edwards, puritanical preacher and author of "Sinners in the Hands of an Angry God."

Dawkins' fervent objections to theism have also provided ammunition for those growing tired of religion's hand in political activities across the globe. I think it's safe to say that issues like gay marriage and stem cell research wouldn't be quite as controversial if politicians and voters didn't have to cater to their religious sensibilities. Subjugation of women in the Middle East and tensions between Israel and Palestine also have roots in religious doctrine.

What Dawkins fails to recognize is the good that religious organizations can accomplish. Organizations like the Salvation Army and other faith-based charities provide a common good motivated by a belief that charity is God's will. When humanity benefits from an action, whether or not the guy calling the shots is a chief executive officer or the Guy Upstairs becomes sort of irrelevant. It's when God starts telling you to smite your neighbor that things get ugly.

For all his pomp and the controversy he stirs, Dawkins makes some very valid arguments and raises serious objections to the existence of a higher power. He may be crass, but as Alan Rickman said in the movie Dogma, "Noah was a drunk – look what he accomplished."

S.P Sullivan can be reached at spsullivan@student.umass.edu.

OREGON MAY BECOME FIRST STATE TO REQUIRE MOUNTAIN CLIMBERS TO CARRY LOCATOR DEVICES
I DON'T CLIMB MOUNTAINS BUT MY WIFE MAKES ME CARRY ONE ANYWAY!
STAYSKAL THE IRVINE MESA SERVICES '81

Misdirecting the spotlight

Melissa Garber

In a front page article titled, "For Girls, It's Be Yourself, and Be Perfect Too," New York Times writer Sara Rimer struck one of the biggest issues affecting education today. Perhaps Rimer wasn't intending to tackle anything in her puff piece about the plight of wealthy attractive girls, but it was hard to ignore the underlying issue – the role economics plays in the disparity between our nation's public schools.

In Dec. 2005, Congress cut $13.7 billion from education spending, marking the first time in decades such a cut that has been made on education. Now more than ever, public schools around the country are routinely being under-funded and understaffed.

Yet for the girls profiled in Rimer's piece, who attend the affluent Newton North High School, these budget issues are unheard of. Just six miles west of Boston, Newton is a wealthy suburb where the median house price is $730,000 – in this community, it's fairly safe to say that typical education concerns fall under a much different genre.

Some girls don't even have the means to take the SAT's more than once, much less spend hundreds on tutoring.

The trials and tribulations of Newton North senior Esther Mobley are the centerpiece of Rimer's article. Rimer's writes that Mobley is: "a standout in Advanced Placement Latin and honors philosophy/literature who can expound on the beauty of the subjunctive mood in Catullus and on Kierkegaard's existential choices. A writer whose junior thesis for Advanced Placement history won Newton North's top prize. An actress. President of her church youth group."

What Mobley isn't, she explains, is an athlete, which apparently is her biggest setback.

Rimer notes that girls like Mobley, "struggle to navigate the conflicting messages they have been absorbing, if not from their parents then from the culture, since elementary school. The first message: Bring home A's. Do everything. Get into a top college – which doesn't have to be in the Ivy League, or one of the other elites like Williams, Tufts or Bowdoin, but should be a 'name' school," and, "The second message: Be yourself. Have fun. Don't work too hard."

For girls in the rest of the country, the story is much different. Instead, many are juggling school work with jobs, substandard public education facilities, a turbulent home life, lack of parental support, and if accepted how to pay for the rising costs of college tuition – for them, this is the norm.

While Mobley can decide against taking a SAT prep course because as she explains, "Why do I deserve a leg up?" Some girls don't even have the means to take the SAT's more than once much less spend hundreds on tutoring.

But the girls at Newton North are not the norm. In fact, in Rimer's piece they are labeled "amazing girls," the criteria being that they are smart, well-rounded and as Kat Jiang, one of Mobley's peers noted in the piece, "effortlessly hot."

Jiang disturbingly explained, "It's out of style to admit it, but it is more important to be hot than smart."

While the pressure is on at Newton North to be an "amazing girl," for the rest of the country life gets more complicated than looking good and getting accepted into an Ivy or equally as good a private school.

With America having the widest gap between the rich and poor in the industrialized world, it's hard to imagine how an article detailing the struggles of the upper class is relevant.

Five hundred and thirty-two words are spent describing Mobley's relationship status, single thanks to the advice of mom, Grey's anatomy character Cristina, who Mobley explains, "when she's taking off her scrubs, she's always wearing cute lingerie," and fashion – True Religion jeans are what's trendy at Newton North, according to Mobley.

Rimer's approach to her subjects is superficial and her article isolating. She addresses the "profound anxiety in the young people, but perhaps even more so in their parents' about the ability of the next generation to afford to raise their families in a place like Newton."

But according to the U.S. Census, the real median household income in America in 2005 was $46,326. Meaning the average American could not even afford to live in Newton, and it's doubtful their children's biggest concern will be affording to live in a place like Newton as adults.

There are thousands of high schools through out the country, with thousands of seniors preparing for college. Why Newton North? Why Esther Mobley? How is a wealthy pretty girls' teen angst newsworthy?

Where is the story explaining that in America, Newton North is the exception in public education? There certainly is a story at Newton North, but it is not in the struggles of the privileged.

Melissa Garber can be reached at mhgarber@student.umass.edu.

Bilingual consequences

Greg Collins

If any one policy trivializes and patronizes immigrants, it is bilingual education. Possible presidential hopeful Newt Gingrich re-ignited this issue recently when he spoke to the National Federation of Republican Women in Washington last week, saying, "The American people believe English should be the official language of the government.

We should replace bilingual education with immersion in English so people learn the common language of the country and they learn the language of prosperity, not the language of living in a ghetto."

As immigration reform has risen to be one of the leading and most contentious political topics confronting current politicians and presidential candidates, bilingual education deserves to be re-examined. Continuing to enforce this policy is counterproductive towards encouraging assimilation among immigrants, which hurts both themselves and the future of the United States.

The goal of bilingual education programs that teach students mathematics and reading in their native language, like Spanish, is to ensure they do not fall behind their classmates in these subjects. But attempting to keep pace with their classmates in this regard stunts their growth in learning the most important subject of all, which is of course English.

We are all aware of the benefits of becoming proficient in English, as it strengthens communication among all Americans and provides a deep bond to convey our feelings in a mutually comprehensible fashion. Taking into account tangible, real world benefits, mastering English enables immigrants to acquire the necessary skills to work at higher-skilled jobs to improve their socioeconomic status and to become financially independent. Immigrants will be able to start families and provide for them without depending on government programs.

But bilingual education supporters gloss over these facts by sacrificing long term ramifications for short term benefits. In the short run students will not face the difficulties and high expectations of mastering English. But when these people encounter situations in which proficiency in English is a necessary prerequisite to fulfill the task at hand, whether it is writing an essay in college or responding to a customer's request at a restaurant, they will be left behind by people who already know the language.

Bilingual education supporters claim that they want to ease the transition of immigrants from their homeland to America. However, enforcing programs that de-emphasize the significance of a skill proven to be a crucial factor in earning high grades or getting hired does more to inhibit this transition than bilingual educators would care to admit.

One must be reminded that enforcing mastery in English does not devalue or denigrate the language and customs of immigrants' past.

We shouldn't lambaste employees or students who do not speak English very well when educators and politicians enact policies to reflect a concern for feeling good about other people rather than having a genuine concern for helping immigrants transition to America in the quickest possible fashion. It is entirely logical why immigrants would not absorb the English language as quickly as they would normally when politicians and School Board members discourage assimilation into American society. Why would individuals feel the need to learn English quickly when programs are designed specifically to inhibit this growth? Progressives claim their policies reflect the needs and wishes of immigrants and the poor, but it is programs like bilingual education that explicitly promote laziness and irresponsibility for failing to adapt to a new culture.

One must be reminded that enforcing mastery in English does not devalue or denigrate the language and customs of the immigrants' past. There are many language programs in the U.S. available for people who want to learn their native language.

But feeling neutral about whether or not to enforce proficiency in English undermines the roots which have provided the foundation for the rise and maintenance of America as the most unified nation in the world. Our Founding Fathers and the Puritans who formed the original communities of this country would have found it reprehensible if they were told that this nation's educators were subsidizing education primarily taught in Spanish or any language besides English.

Instead, mandating education taught exclusively in English affirms the uniqueness of a country that enables people of all different backgrounds to not only embrace the most commonly spoken language in this country. It also allows legal immigrants to enter into an implicit but deeply powerful covenant with other Americans who will help their newly assimilated Americans in times of need. This would be the seminal milestone for an immigrant who was attracted to America because of its freedoms and national unity.

Bilingual education is a tacit way of saying that only a certain group of people have the capabilities of becoming completely immersed Americans, and that immigrants should not be held up to the same standards as American-born children who also face the expectation of learning English.

The issue is not whether immigrants will struggle to learn English, because most assuredly they will. However, countless immigrants, including many of our descendents, have admirably confronted and conquered this challenge. Through the adaptation of learning English, immigrants have embraced American conceptions of morality, virtue, and liberal democracies. To expect anything less from immigrants is insulting and patronizing to their souls.

Greg Collins can be reached at gcollins@student.umass.edu

Iran testing the west

George Kennedy

On March 20, 15 British sailors were taken captive by Iran, which claimed that they ventured into their territorial waters. The sailors were released after 16 days in what Iranian president Mahmoud Ahmedinejad called, "a gift to Britain." British Prime Minister Tony Blair called the release of the hostages "a profound relief." However, we are being given a glimpse at the ugly future of this region.

Once our troops leave Iraq, civil war in this region is inevitable. The government that has been put in place is too weak and the newly-formed Iraq police forces will be overrun by those who oppose what critics call a "puppet administration." This civil war will surely be marked by the taking of hostages, which has become characteristic of developed insurgent organizations as a means of leverage.

To clarify, I am against the war in Iraq. I am merely being a realist and speculating as to the future of the region in a pragmatic manner.

The kidnapping coalition has been generally associated with factions and rouge groups; however this latest action by Iran has been the first major hostage-taking by a sovereign nation. Motivationally, this act by Iran could be retribution for the capturing of five Iranians believed to have been teaching insurgents in Iraq how to make more effective roadside bombs. This is purely speculation, however, even if Iran kidnapped the sailors in response, they have become hypocrites in the process. By meddling in the affairs of the U.S.-Iraq conflict, Iran has done exactly what Iranian president Ahmedinejad has criticized the U.S. for doing.

It has become more than obvious that Iran has been making a habit out of provoking the U.S. and coalition forces.

It has become more than obvious that Iran has been making a habit out of provoking the U.S. and coalition forces. Iran probably wants it to play out like this: Iran continues to build up its nuclear program and attempt to provoke the U.S. while saying they are merely doing what they believe is right. Iran will finally do something that the U.S. simply cannot just ignore and be forced to take action. Iran will respond by claiming atrocities on the part of the U.S., and once again we will be engaged with a country in the Middle East. Having just gotten out of Iraq, which will be in a bloody civil war at this point, we will be further labeled an imperial power and will be hard pressed to find allies – well, true allies and not yes-men like Tony Blair.

Perhaps these are not the intended results that Ahmadinejad and Iran wishes to achieve, however their current course of action undoubtedly makes this inevitable. The capturing of these British sailors could have been avoided, was unnecessary and does nothing to abate tensions in the region. Iran is wise to have released the hostages, and it appears that they are all in good health. Iran is already under the magnifying glass not only from the United States, but also from the UN for their refusal to cease the development of its nuclear program. With heightened tensions, Iran earned itself an olive branch by this latest development.

The stance of U.S. is to not deal with terrorists under any circumstances. There is the risk of American blood being shed while the administration sits and does nothing.

The argument is if we give into their demands, whether it be withdrawing from Iraq, stopping support for Israel, or ceasing the hunt for Osama Bin Laden, other groups would be encouraged to take part in similar behavior. The taking of hostages will most likely characterize the civil war destined to take place once U.S. and coalition forces leave the region. Extreme groups that claim to be representing the wishes of Sunni leaders will capture Shiite leaders in exchange for the other's surrender of leadership in Iraq. An underground group with ties to Shiite leadership will take hostage Sunni's as a means of retribution – no peace will be reached.

This is how the U.S. operates with respect to hostage situations; however countries that may be open to negotiations or countries that are not as militarily endowed do not bring about the same kind of stalemate issues that dealing with the U.S. presents. Therefore, the incentive for hostage taking still exists in the world at large.

If Iran wanted America out of the region, it would behoove them to steer clear of drastic actions like taking hostages that perhaps accidentally wandered into your territorial waters. Letting something like a slight intrusion slide will play far better in the minds of world leaders. If Iran's intentions are to build up its military and take on the world powers, the U.S. leadership has no qualms with engaging Iran.

Just remember, Bush's regime outed a C.I.A. agent, gave up its search for Osama Bin Laden, and disrespected the wishes of the UN because they wanted to invade Iraq. Bush does not even have to go through all that this time. Iran may have lessened tensions with the release of the hostages, but slowly, they are making their own case for war.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, APRIL 5, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Toubab makes Thursday fun

N.C. quintet brings African-infused sound to Northampton

Toubab Krewe is a North Carolina quintet that, by traveling to Africa, has picked up interesting sounds, music styles and instruments that are not typically found in American music today.

By Matthew Solomon
Collegian Staff

The little, sleepy town of Northampton is going to be hosting a very special guest tonight. Toubab Krewe, a self described blend of "Malian, Surf and Dirty South" music is going to be performing at the Pearl Street Night Club at 8:30 p.m. Don't miss this smoking hot band for it is sure to be a wild musical journey.

This explosive quintet is guaranteed to get the club rocking with their smooth and sultry rhythmic vibrations. Their eclectic blend of West African and rock music is molded quite precisely into a revolutionary and energizing creation of authentic sound. For a group of Americans, they are able to play this very distinct African music with an impressive degree of accuracy.

They've been on numerous trips all over Africa where they've soaked up the rays of its exotic culture and learned the intricate and beautiful musical styles known as Manding and Wassoulou. These excursions, however, were not just vacations they were grand opportunities to study with the masters of African music, masters such as Lamine Soumano, Vieux Kante, Madou Dembele, and Koungbanan Conde. Some of these musicians would become their heroes and still are to this day.

While Toubab Krewe could have taken this amazing form of music straight to America unchanged, they decided to put their own spin on it. What's amazing is how they were able to take bits and pieces of material from different musical styles and blend them all into an original creation.

Toubab Krewe has had the opportunity to travel not only to Africa, but also all over the continental United States. Their busy tour schedule has taken them to the Bonnaroo music festival, the Blue Note, the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts, the Black Repertory Theater, Moe Down Music Festival, and much more. They are steadily creating a group of dedicated, diehard fans wherever they go.

This is one of those bands that really deserve to be huge. Their raw musical talent is uncanny. They've got something special, and they certainly know how to make people get down and groovy. They have the power to

See TOUBAB on page 6

TOUBAB KREWE

PEARL STREET NIGHT CLUB

TONIGHT 8:30 P.M.

ADV. $10
DOOR $13

Add a little spice and make your relationship nice

By Jasmine Monteiro
Collegian Columnist

There is a belief that after you've been in a relationship long enough, you're basically married. I think one of the reasons why we fear the idea of marriage (other than the prenup) is because we love being and acting free. We want to enjoy our youth while we still can. So what do you do when you've been with someone for a long time – and no, two months isn't a long time – and you feel you're in a rut? Spice it up.

For all you married couples, think way back to yester year when you and your significant other first started dating. There has to be some reason that you two stayed together, and that's most likely the impression you made on one another within those first few months. The reason you're together is probably for the same reason so many people like the dating scene – the infatuation. Now, those early desires have faded a bit, and you two have become comfortable with each other, and that's not a bad thing. I know, however, that sometimes comfy can get a little boring.

Sometimes the best thing for couples to do who are connected at the hip is to spend some time away from each other. Go out and have a good time hanging out with your single friends who still know what fun is. This is an especially good idea for couples who live together. This way not only do you have time to miss them, but you'll have some new and interesting things to talk about. You may even find that missing them is the best part of going out in the first place.

For all the other couples who have already learned how to breathe without their boyfriend/girlfriend, congratulations. Now you may want to try spicing things up a little differently. One idea may be to go on a double date with one of your friends who is in a new relationship. Let them make the plans, and you can just tag along – almost like being a third wheel except much better. You can see the differences between your relationship and theirs.

They may even remind you of something you haven't

See SPICE on page 6

Bon Savants rocks Iron Horse tonight

By Corey Charron
Collegian Staff

One of the best parts of living near towns like Amherst and Northampton is the musical opportunities that are available weekly. The Pioneer Valley gives opportunities to refreshing and exciting music rarely found elsewhere. Future shows range from established bands like Spoon, who will play on April 27 at the Pearl Street Ballroom, to legends like Yo La Tengo, who will play on April 20 at the Academy of Music.

The region also lends a hand to up-and-coming bands, offering great locations like the Flywheel in Easthampton and the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton. At the Iron Horse tonight the Bon Savants, a rising band from Boston, will play alongside Pere Ubu, a legendary group from Cleveland, Ohio.

Thom Moran, lead singer of the Bon Savants, graduated from UMass in 2001 with a degree in physics and now works at MIT in Boston part-time as a rocket scientist. The primary songwriter of the Bon Savants, Moran writes smart, interesting lyrics about living in Boston, working in Germany post-Cold War, and the problems facing the scientists who split the atom.

BON SAVANTS AND PERE UBU

IRON HORSE MUSIC HALL

TONIGHT 8:30 P.M.

ADV. $15
DOOR $18

Stephen Merritt of the Magnetic Fields shares vocal comparisons with Moran. Influenced by Spoon, Pulp, and even David Bowie, the Bon Savants create unique three-minute pop songs with impressive post-rock instrumentals.

The group began in the mid-1990s when Moran and guitarist Kevin Haley were living in

See BON SAVANTS on page 6

John Eddie strums country-rock sound

Iron Horse hosts Memphis man

By Sydney Towne
Collegian Staff

"Who the Hell is John Eddie?" That's a good question, but it's the title of the latest album from John Eddie. A musician who counts Bruce Springsteen as a fan, Eddie has been on the edge of fame for a long time, but he seems to have nailed his sound with this album. This Saturday he'll be performing at the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton and showing off his distinct, Memphis-influenced sound.

The album has two separate stories each told with a country rock twang. One is about raw romances and the other is a humorous account of the struggle Eddie has faced over his 20-plus years in the music business. The first has a poignancy that resonates with the listener that the second doesn't.

His songs about love and heartbreak have some clichéd themes, but the delivery is uniquely Eddie. He focuses on imperfect people and the imperfect relationships they have, with songs like "If You're Here When I Get Back" and "Let Me Down Hard." They talk about two very different endings to a relationship but are united with Eddie's rough vocals and gritty guitar playing.

"When I Get Back" is a wishful tune that speaks to those relationships where the break-ups feel constant, but neither person's ready to throw in the towel. "Down Hard" is Eddie demanding a break-up worthy of the disaster of a relationship that's ending. He says, "Don't sweet talk me baby, don't sugar coat, this bitter little pill you're shoving down my throat." All his songs about love have a bitter edge to them. It's as if Eddie has been involved with a lot of unstable women, and it's taken its toll.

The most touching ballad on "Who the Hell is John Eddie" is "Everything," a song that documents the dawning realization that more than his relationship is over, his girlfriend has left him. Eddie's voice is full of resigned sorrow as he lists the things his lover has deserted in moving out. He then says, "I'm the only other thing you left, and you won't be back for me. Pour some truth on a cut that stings, yah you won't be back for me."

The music on the album that Eddie intended to be humorous doesn't quite work. It seems to grow out of Eddie's decades of working in clubs and interacting with a crowd. Perhaps a live concert would be more suitable for him to give the life in his music that they lack in recordings. Eddie's music seems perfectly suited for a small concert at a local club, and the Iron Horse Music Hall should be a great fit.

John Eddie has been playing clubs all over America for 20 years despite never having commercial recording success.

JOHN EDDIE

IRON HORSE MUSIC HALL

SATURDAY 7 P.M.

ADV. $17.50
DOOR $20

His opening act is the John Cate Band who will start the show at 7 p.m. Lead singer John Cate returned to music in 1996 after a 10-year break. Since then he's recorded seven albums and written 300 songs, which gives him enormous depth from which to pull his set. Tickets for the show are $17.50 in advance or $20 at the door.

Sydney Towne can be reached at stowne@student.umass.edu

Jazz Faculty keeps crowd thrilled at Bezanson Tuesday

By Kerri DeMello
Collegian Correspondent

Chair dancing has never seemed like much of an art form. During Tuesday in Bezanson, however, Jeffrey Holmes and the jazz faculty had the crowd literally dancing in their seats. While the hall wasn't filled, the mix of instrumentals and vocals brought forth a great performance for jazz fans who ranged in age from students to the elderly.

The show started off with a performance by the entire faculty (excluding Catherine Jenson-Hole.) The introductory piece titled, "The Eighth Element," written by Jeffrey Holmes was a great way to start off the night. The piece got the crowd moving in their seats, looking forward to the rest of the show, every foot was tapping.

As the show progressed the faculty proved themselves time and time again. The guitarist Robert Ferrier, a crowd favorite, was full of skills and personality. His facial expressions showed how much Ferrier loved the guitar and the music. When the musicians were introduced and the name Ferrier was mentioned the crowd erupted, and he simply winked as a gesture of gratitude.

Catherine Jenson-Hole's amazing vocals and presence did not go unnoticed. She created a feeling of New Orleans and jazz in its prime, making the men in the audience want to grab a fedora and start smooth-talking the ladies. Jenson-Hole used her experiences to assist in the writing of her pieces. She traveled halfway around the world in a yacht and found herself writing a truly inspired song titled, "Alive." The song showcases Jenson-Hole's true appreciation of life stating, "So glad am I to be alive."

While "Alive" was good, it was not enough to overshadow her two other performances. Jenson-Hole

See BEZANSON on page 6

Cleveland icons share stage with Alum

BON SAVANTS from page 5

Frankfurt, Germany. The two returned to the United States and began making music under the moniker, The Bon Savants. David Wessel was soon added as bassist in 2003, then Andrew Dole on drums in 2005. Keyboardist Brian Hamilton fills out the remaining spot in the five-piece Boston band.

The Bon Savants, French for "good scientists," have recorded one album called, "Post Rock Defends the Nation," that was self-released in November 2006. The debut received much critical acclaim, including positive reviews from such publications as Spin.com, Billboard Magazine, and NPR.org. The band remains unsigned.

A tour soon followed their debut album's release with opening dates for indie-rock greats Pretty Girls Make Graves, the Wrens, Menomena, and Do Make Say Think. The band also performed in November at New York's CMJ Music Marathon for the Big Shot Touring Showcase, sharing time with another emerging artist, the French Kicks. The Boston natives were also in this year's South by Southwest festival in Austin, Texas.

New material will be available starting in June, with digital releases of three songs and two videos each month through the end of the year.

The other group playing tonight, Pere Ubu, has been a hugely influential band for progressive thinking musical artists. Pere Ubu has inspired bands such as the Pixies, the Talking Heads, and Mark Mothersbaugh. The name Pere Ubu comes from the protagonist of the French surrealist play, "Ubu Roi," written by Alfred Jarry.

The group is mostly built upon lead singer David Thomas who describes the band's music as being avant-garde, inspired by a mix of blues and garage rock. Thomas is the only original member, as the project has cycled through a wide variety of musicians throughout the years. Over 18 albums have been released under the Pere Ubu name since its inception in 1975.

Thomas' vocals can accurately be portrayed as a yelping or a bark, much like Frank Black's of the Pixies or Isaac Brock's of Modest Mouse. Musically, the form has changed over the years, including phases of art rock, post-punk, and even pop. In 1989 Pere Ubu hit number 6 on the American Modern Rock charts and even gained airplay on MTV for their single, "Waiting for Mary," off the album "Cloudland."

The 1995 release of "Ray Gun Suitcase," was supposed to be Pere Ubu's final album. Then in 1996 a five-disc box set, "Datapanik in the Year Zero," was released, celebrating Thompson's legacy. The collection inspired new interest in Pere Ubu, causing Thompson to create yet another album, "Pennsylvania," put out in 1998. Last year saw the release of the project's most dark and theatrical album, "St. Arkansas, Why I Hate Women."

The band will continue to tour the country, with three more dates in the States, before heading to Europe until the end of May. This show at the Iron Horse is all an all-ages event and will start at 8:30 p.m. Tickets are $15 in advance and $18 at the door.

Corey Charron can be reached at ccharron@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY THE BON SAVANTS

UMass Physics alum Thom Moran sings lead for the Bon Savants, which means "good scientists" in French.

Long-term couples can keep it steamy done in a while, or something you would like to do together. Or you can laugh at the fact that they're dealing with jealous tendencies with one another. You and your partner may realize that you'd like to heat things up more often. In doing so, you can simultaneously appreciate each other and your relationship all over again.

SPICE from page 5

There's also another rut that some long-term relationships tend to fall into – a sexual rut. This is often frustrating for couples because a lack of intimacy can leave some people feeling a little unfulfilled. It seems as if many couples get comfortable enough where they don't feel a need to succumb to sexual pressures. This can be called the stereotypical TV married couple effect. You shouldn't deprive each other from sexual pleasures because, after all, it's the one thing we're supposed to get only from our partners. Instead, try something a little different.

Pretend like you're in high school again. Remember those days – when you wanted to fool around so badly but you couldn't because mom and dad were home? Try and capture that feeling again. Sneak off together and take a ride in the car. Take a trip down to a local park and get a little crazy. And if you get caught with your pants down, well that just makes for a good story to tell your single friends. Now who's the one who knows how to have fun?

The point is things don't have to get boring when you get comfortable. Take advantage of the fact that you know each other so well and appreciate the relationship you have together. You just don't have that level of understanding when the relationship is new. So embrace what you have, and don't let it fizzle. Find some time to add a little spice, and see what you can come up with.

Jasmine Monteiro can be reached at jmonteir@student.umass.edu.

Band produces worldly sound

TOUBAB from page 5

bring masses of people out of their chairs and onto the dance floor, and they do this on a consistent basis, night after night. They are a group that epitomizes what music is supposed to be about – spreading good vibes and making people happy.

Most members of the group either hail from or have spent time in Asheville, N.C., with the exception of the talented and self-taught bassist, David Pransky, a Vermont native. Pransky spent his younger days playing mandolin with Brad Corrigan of the band, Dispatch.

The other band members include Ieal Brown on drums, who has received a balanced musical education, obtaining a degree at the University of North Carolina-Asheville, as well as taking numerous trips to Africa to learn this unique art form. Drew Heller plays guitar and has learned to cleverly blend all of his many influences, which include gypsy swing, traditional Appalachian banjo/fiddle music, rock 'n' roll, Manding, and Wassoulou into electrifyingly soulful melodies.

Drew has also studied Soku, the Malian fiddle, during his trips to Africa, which sounds kind of like a screaming monkey at first, but somehow manages to fit into the ensemble perfectly. The Soku is an extremely powerful instrument with its eerily high pitched tone, so don't be fooled by its simple looking one string structure.

Justin Perkins is another drummer in the group who picked up the Kora – the African harp – during his African excursions. This amazing instrument has a sound unbeknown to most of the western world, yet its amazingly classic, almost godly sound and will give you goose bumps from the first note onward. Justin also plays a Fender Stratocaster guitar, which complements Drew very well and creates a slightly more rocking sound as opposed to the African sound that still lies not too far beneath the surface.

Lastly, rounding out the group is Luke 'Speedy Hands' Quaranta who plays African hand drums and percussion at an unbelievably fast speed. Don't be fooled by the simplistic appearance of Luke's chosen instrument, for this guy is just as talented as any of the other band members. He is a driving force that gives this band the fuel they need.

Their show is in the Clubroom starting at 8:30 p.m. Tickets are $10 in advance and $13 at the door.

Matthew Solomon can be reached at msolomon@student.umass.edu.

Performance features works by favorites and faculty members

BEZANSON from page 5

mentioned that she tends to write the melodies first and is usually puzzled as to what the song is actually going to be about. She put it together perfectly with "Luck May Find You Any Day Now," a song about discovering money on the ground.

In Jenson-Hole's third and final song she mesmerized the crowd with a song about memories. The song titled, "Dust on the Sea," had the recital hall completely silent as the audience recalled their own personal memories.

Adam Kolker followed Jenson-Hole on bass clarinet and flute. He performed "Brakes Sake" by Thelonious Monk, who is one of his favorite composers. Following "Brakes Sake," Kolker eventually made his way to "Koo Koo," a song written for an ex-girlfriend. Kolker described the song as being "recyclable," which gave the audience cause for laughter – a much appreciated opportunity. Kolker kept the crowd involved with his laid-back style and relaxed approach to the performance. He appeared in the majority of the recital, much to the crowd's delight.

Jeff Holmes captivated the audience with his piece, "Smiles," written for his wife and his late father. From the dedication the audience was glued to his performance. When wrapping the piece up the crowd and his fellow performers showered him with praise.

Tuesdays in Bezanson's Jazz Faculty recital was a solid success with nearly every audience member returning after the intermission – a surefire way to measure a hit. It is unnecessary to be a music student to enjoy the evening; all that was required was an interest in enjoying a nice night. While it may have been difficult to compete with Fox's "American Idol" on Tuesdays, the recital certainly achieved a respectable audience, and it appeared that everyone went home satisfied.

Kerri DeMello can be reached at Kademell@student.umass.edu.

Need Advice? Have a Question?
Send it to Veronica Garrett, Advice Columnist
vgarrett@student.umass.edu

"Results you can feel ...without the side effects."
• headaches • neck pain
• back pain • sports injuries
• auto injuries • and more...
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractor
Participating provider for HMO's Student Insurance, Blue Cross, GIC, Car Insurance & most others
www.AmherstFamilyChiro.com
Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health
Most insurance accepted.
228 Triangle Street
Amherst, MA
(near Bertucci's)
549-1500

Plan Ahead for Next Year
Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments--1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include heat, hot water, and cooking gas
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.
Puffton Village
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

Spring Fever Dinner
Thurs, April 5th
All DCs
5-9 pm
Menu:
• Citrus Glazed Roast Pork
• Tuscan Chicken
• Shrimp Cake
• Cassoulet (vegetarian)
• Oven Roasted Red Potatoes (local)
• Grilled Asparagus
• Summer Squash/Sun Dried Tomatoes
• Fresh Fruit Smoothie Bar
• Lemon Tart
www.umass.edu/diningservices
DINING SERVICES UMass/Amherst

Draft status still up in the air

LASME from page 10

NBA team considering his somewhat in-between size.

He is 6-foot-8, 215 pounds but plays on the interior and doesn't have much ball-handling ability. He has developed somewhat of a midrange game this year and that has helped him become more attractive to professional scouts.

Ford insists that Lasme plays more like a 7-footer when his length and leaping ability is taken into account, but no one knows if NBA general managers will see it that way.

All early indicators point to either a late second-round draft for Lasme, or no draft at all.

Web sites like collegehoops.net have Lasme slipping through the draft, while others, like NBADraft.net, have Lasme in the late second round. NBADraft.net has Lasme going to the Trailblazers as the 53rd pick in the draft.

On March 15, after the Minutemen's victory over the Alabama Crimson Tide in the first round of the NIT at the Mullins Center, DraftExpress.com posted a player profile on Lasme that includes a breakdown of his basketball ability and where he could possibly go in the draft.

"Though he still relies mainly on his brute force in the post, Lasme is beginning to develop some basic touch around the basket," says DraftExpress.com. "His go-to move down low is his hook shot, but he's becoming better at using his pivot foot to get position when the first option is taken away."

It goes on to talk about Lasme's potential issues in the NBA, his height being the main obstacle.

"Some doubts start to creep in when referencing Lasme's size," it says. "At 6-foot-8 and with his leaping ability, he just barely has the height to play power forward at the next level."

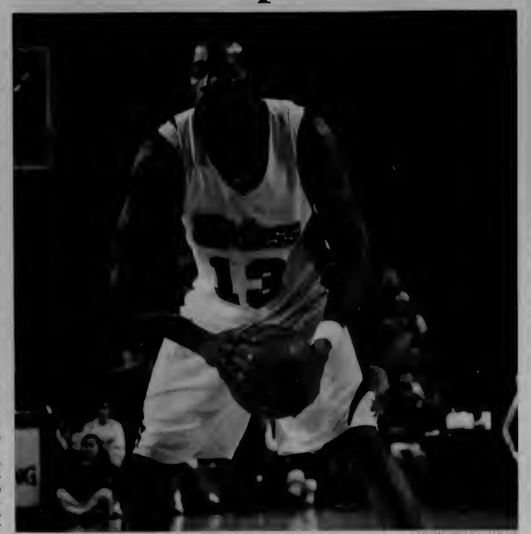
On NBADraft.net, there are similar praises and criticisms. Both sites mention Lasme's age. At 24, he will be one of the oldest players coming out of this year's draft, which apparently is making some teams wonder how much room he has left to improve.

Under strengths, NBADraft.net cites his mobility and athleticism and says that he can "run the court like a guard and shows rare lateral quickness for a player his height."

It states his height and weight as weaknesses and that it will be difficult for him to add body weight with his frame. It also criticizes his inability to score with his back to the basket on a consistent basis.

Lasme will be either a late second-round pick or a free agent signing sometime after the draft.

Rob Greenfield can be reached at rgreenfi@student.umass.edu.



COURTESY THE BON SAVANTS

Stephane Lasme received several accolades after this past season. He was named an AP Honorable Mention All-American, Atlantic 10 Player of the Year and Defensive Player of the Year.

MASS MEDIA RELATIONS

UMass field hockey coach Justine Sowry has announced the signing of three players for next season. Jaime Bourazeris, Katie Kelly and Courtney Mayerick are all part of Sowry's first freshman class for next fall. The Minutewomen finished the 2006-07 season with a 6-14 record under Patty Shea.

Jaime Bourazeris is one of UMass' newest recruits for next year's field hockey team. She was a second year All-Long Island selection this season.

Sowry announces first recruiting class

By Joe Meloni
Collegian Staff

Two months after she took over the Massachusetts field hockey program, Justine Sowry announced the signing of her first recruiting class and the hiring of United States National Team member Kelly Dostal as assistant coach.

Sowry had many issues to address in recruiting. While the Minutewomen lost several games due to poor play in the midfield, the offensive and defensive performances also struggled. With that in mind, Sowry brought in three players, all of whom play different positions. The Minutewomen signed only three players, but all three are talented enough to contribute as freshmen.

"Even though it is small in size, it is certainly big in talent," Sowry said. "This class has an opportunity to make an immediate impact and be part of the resurrection of UMass field hockey."

Sophomore midfielder Erin Parker missed most of the season with a broken leg. Her presence on the field next season should improve the overall play of the team. But the addition of Jamie Bourazeris to the midfield unit should pay large dividends for the Minutewomen.

Bourazeris' defensive instincts pair with her natural athleticism to make her a solid all-around player. She started all four years at New Hyde Park Memorial High School in Hyde Park, N.Y. She also appeared on several national all-star teams and played in the National Futures Tournament.

"The beauty in Jaime joining the team is her versatility," Sowry said. "I have the view that she could play both through the defense and the midfield, depending on the combinations available to us and the balance of the team."

Her playmaking abilities caught Sowry's eye immediately.

"As a defender, she anticipates the play like a seasoned veteran, while providing attacking power when she gains possession."

Bourazeris chose a career at UMass over national powerhouse and two-time defending NCAA Champion, Maryland.

To bolster the UMass offense, Sowry brought in Dedham native Katie Kelly. She leaves Dedham High School as the all-time leading scorer in school history. The program also produced current UMass player Kara Murphy.

"We must continue to work on our efficiency and effectiveness in the goal circle," Sowry said. "Katie joining the forward line will increase the competition within the team and, in turn, push each player to be the best that they can be."

Her biggest strength as a player is her raw ability to score goals. In 2006 the Minutewomen had just one player score more than 10 goals.

In the backfield, the Minutewomen return 2006 First Team All-Atlantic 10 defender and team captain Erin O'Brien and Kristina DeRosario. O'Brien was stellar all season for UMass and DeRosario's performance improved as the year went on. The loss of Paula Verma and Kwlyan Jaggassou to graduation along with the departure of Ann Desanctis who transferred to conference rival Richmond left the Maroon and White handicapped defensively.

With this in mind, Sowry pushed hard for Courtney Mayerick to attend UMass. Standing 5-foot-8 and possessing great defensive instincts, Mayerick looks like the perfect candidate to play the third spot in the UMass backfield.

"Courtney has great size and strength and will be an immediate presence in the backfield," Sowry said. "She has the ability to read the play, make great tackles and penetrate the opposition's defense with her impressive hit."

UMass also welcomes Kelly Dostal to its coaching staff. Dostal comes to UMass after a playing career at Wake Forest where she won three national championships. She also won the Honda Award as the best collegiate field hockey player in 2004. The 23-year-old is a native of Hatfield and played four years at Smith Academy in Hatfield where she was named a First Team High School All-American as a senior.

"The hiring of Kelly Dostal is monumental. She is a proven winner," Sowry said. "She knows how to win as both an individual and being part of a team."

"Her knowledge of the game, accomplishments and personality will have an immeasurable impact on the team and future UMass field hockey athletes."

Joe Meloni can be reached at jmeloni@student.umass.edu.

Net yourself some points with the new Sports Blog www.dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com

Goten OF JAPAN STEAKHOUSE
FAMOUS FOR CAPTIVATING CUISINE PREPARED AT YOUR TABLE
Early Bird Specials
Tues.-Thurs. 5-6 PM
Saturday 12-3 PM
Sunday 4-5 PM
Hours of Operation
Monday Closed
Tues.-Fri. 5-9 PM
Saturday 12-10 PM
Sunday 4-9 PM
104 Old Amherst Rd. Sunderland off Rt. 116
413-665-3628
www.gotenofjapan.com

Tired of the Dorms?
IT'S NEVER TOO EARLY TO LOOK FOR AN APARTMENT WITH LINCOLN REAL ESTATE
Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant St.
253-7879
www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
Now accepting applications for June 2006

BEACH CLUB TANNING STUDIOS
BUY 1 GET 1 free
PACKAGES LOTIONS ACCESSORIES
APRIL 5, 6, 7
U CONN 1244 STORRS RD STORRS, CT 06268 PH (860) 487-HOTT (4688)
WESTFIELD 459 EAST MAIN ST WESTFIELD SHOPS PH (413) 564-0TAN (8826)
U MASS 65 UNIVERSITY DR AMHERST, MA 01002 PH (413) 549-HOTT (4688)

LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO LIVE?
KAMINS
SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS
PRESIDENTIAL APTS
COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS
PERRY APTS
177 N. PLEASANT ST.
COLLEGE INN APTS
LANTERN COURT APTS
MILL HOLLOW
CRESTVIEW APTS
55 S PLEASANT ST 253-2515 AMHERST
LARGEST SELECTION OF APARTMENTS IN TOWN

Miller returns as coach of St. John's

By Jon Pelland
Collegian Staff

If there is one thing Massachusetts men's lacrosse coach Greg Cannella wants his assistants to know, it's that they aren't locked into the program. Cannella encourages his coaches to think about the next step in their careers because he doesn't expect them to coach below him forever.

So that's exactly what he did with Jason Miller when the head coaching position opened at St. John's last summer. After being hired by the Red Storm in September, Miller makes his first trip back to Amherst this weekend when the Minutemen (3-5, 1-1 EACC) and St. John's (3-5, 1-2 EACC) square off in a league contest.

Saturday's game is set for a 1 p.m. start time at Garber Field.

"I encouraged him to take it," Cannella said of the opportunity. Miller had in front of him. "Initially Jason came to me and said, 'What do you think?' I said, 'I think you're crazy if you don't apply because it's an excellent job, it's a great school.'"

Prior to the St. John's job, Miller assisted Cannella for the previous three seasons – at the height of UMass lacrosse's successful run. He handled a defense that helped the Minutemen reach the national championship game a year ago. That defense also produced All-American Jack Reid.

The timing of Miller's departure left UMass scrambling to find a coach for the fall practice season, but it wasn't until November that Cannella brought in Kevin Burns. He joined a coaching group that already included Cannella and Jake Coon – who has since taken over the defensive coaching duties.

Even after they don't roam the same sidelines, Cannella says he continues to support all his former assistants. That's what makes it so difficult to face his old coaches. It's not that he's afraid the opposition will know what's coming.

"I don't actually like it, honestly," Cannella said. "I'm always rooting for those guys and [when we play each other] I can't root for them. That part of it's not fun. But then obviously as a league opponent [St John's], we have to play."

Miller has taken over a program that is still in its infancy. St. John's reinstated the men's lacrosse team as a varsity sport just three seasons ago in 2005. Since then, the Red Storm have competed in the competitive EACC, a factor that gives their players valuable experience, according to Cannella.

They reached a milestone last weekend, picking up the program's first-ever EACC win. Miller's squad took out Rutgers, 6-4, in Queens.

While St. John's has already matched its win total from all of last season (four), Miller has yet to have a distinctive impact on the defensive production of his team. Right now, opponents are scoring slightly more goals per game than last season (8.47 last season compared to 8.56 this season), but have a lower shot percentage (24.5 percent this season, 29.8 percent last season).

In Amherst, the play of the Minutemen's defense has reacted as if no coaching change ever took place. UMass improved in both the aforementioned categories. It has allowed fewer goals per game this season (8.36 in 2006, 7.61 in 2007) and decreased its opponents shot percentages (23.8 percent last year, 23.5 this year).

Cannella can't help but be pleased with the job Coon is doing this year with the Minutemen's defensive unit.

"Jake has done very well," he said. "Jake worked under Jason last year and was able to help Jason in that regard. I'm sure he learned a lot from Jason."

Jon Pelland can be reached at jpelland@student.umass.edu Log onto the Daily Collegian's sports blog for more coverage of all UMass sports

Let the Frozen Four begin

Hockey East represented well by Boston College and Maine

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

Living up to its reputation as the best conference in college hockey, two teams will represent Hockey East in tonight's semifinals of the Frozen Four. Boston College (28-11-1) and Maine (23-14-2) both survived formidable competition in their NCAA regionals and will look to face each other in Saturday's final. But before a national champion from the HEA can be crowned, the Eagles must defeat North Dakota (22-13-5), while the Black Bears need to eliminate Michigan State (22-13-3).

Boston College won the Northeast Regional as a No. 2 seed, defeating St. Lawrence (23-13-2) and Miami of Ohio (23-13-4) to survive the bracket. But BC did more than just win – it dominated the competition, allowing only one goal and scoring eight. Of course the Eagles had the benefit of not playing No. 1 seeded New Hampshire (26-11-2), but the team soundly defeated the Wildcats by three goals for the Hockey East Championship only one week earlier.

Maine, on the other hand, took a much more unconventional route to the Frozen Four. With a tournament bid in question after losing four times to Massachusetts (20-12-5) to close out the regular season and the first round of the Hockey East playoffs, the Black Bears were given the three seed in the East Regional.

The team benefited from a selection process that places significant weight on road victories over good teams. In October, when the Black Bears were playing their best hockey, they defeated two of the WCHA's top teams: Minnesota (31-10-3) and North Dakota twice. Those victories propelled Maine into the NCAA tournament, despite stumbling to the finish with a 2-6 record in its final eight games (including two home wins against Merrimack).

But instead of allowing people to question the tournament committee's decision, the Black Bears made its members look like prophets. Maine dominated No. 2 seed St. Cloud State (22-10-7) in the semifinal with three goals in first period, including two on the power play. The Black Bears then outlasted UMass in the regional final by taking advantage of strong special teams play.

BC vs. UND

In a rematch from last year's Frozen Four, Boston College and North Dakota are undoubtedly the two hottest teams in college hockey. The Eagles are riding a 12-game winning streak – the longest in the nation. Meanwhile, the Fighting Sioux are 7-1-1 in their last nine games, with the only loss being a 3-2 overtime loss to Minnesota in the WCHA final.

For the Eagles, it's hard to single out their best strength since they ever excel at each aspect of the game. Certainly BC has no difficulty putting the puck in the net. The Eagles sported the conference's third best offense while averaging 3.34 goals per game.

In fact, the BC offense has enough weapons to allow senior Brian Boyle to switch from forward to defense. It's much more impressive when you consider that the hard-hitting Boyle ranks sixth in the nation in total points. However, Boyle still plays in front of the net during the power play while attempting to shield opposing goaltenders and take advantage of rebound opportunities.

Goaltender Cory Schneider owns the seventh best goals-against average (2.10) in the nation, but also benefits from playing behind an excellent defense. In addition, he relies on positioning to make plays in the net and take opportunities away from shooters.

But Schneider will have his hands full with the North Dakota offense – more specifically, UND's first line. The threesome of sophomores Ryan Duncan, Jonathan Toews and T.J. Oshie is arguably the best in the nation. The line is responsible for nearly half of the team's total offensive production of 3.55 goals per game. But after those three forwards, UND's offensive depth is questionable.

In net, junior Philippe Lamoureux has struggled at times and he owes a lot of credit for his 2.37 goals-against average to the physical defenders playing in front. One of North Dakota's advantages over BC is its size, especially on defense. The Fighting Sioux have a crop of talented bluelinersthat are capable of scoring goals and neutralizing BC's speed with physical play.

Expect this game to showcase the offensive talent of both teams. It's more likely than not that the amount of the scoring will reach the 11 total goals scored in this same game last season.

Maine vs. MSU

With goalie Ben Bishop back from a groin injury, Maine is simply a much better team. Not only do the Black Bears appear to be more confident with Bishop in net, his presence allows the Maine offense to be more aggressive and focus on scoring. The team has a deep set of forwards and several talented, offensive minded defenders, all of whom are capable of making plays and scoring goals.

But Maine's true strength is its power play unit. The Black Bears led Hockey East in power play efficiency and rode strong special teams play to their two victories in the East Regional.

However, Maine's strength may play into one of Michigan State's weaknesses. Although the Spartans finished third in the CCHA in least amount of penalty minutes, the team must spend less than its average of 14.5 minutes shorthanded if it wants to avoid falling behind early.

But the Spartans have two quality scoring lines that are capable of making up any deficit. Their leading scorer and playmaker, sophomore Jim Kennedy, produced 40 points this season, including nine power play goals. However, the team lacks offensive depth after its first two lines – something that could be an issue in a close, hard fought game.

Demonstrating that size truly does not matter for the goaltending position, MSU's Jeff Lerg surrenders 13 inches to the 6-foot-7 Bishop. Since each goalie only allowed two goals in their respective regionals, it's difficult to declare an advantage for either squad. But their play in net will undoubtedly go a long way in determining who advances.

The bottom line is that Michigan State needs to stay out of the penalty box and keep Maine's power play unit off the ice as much as possible, while proving that it has enough scoring depth to wear down Bishop and the Black Bears.

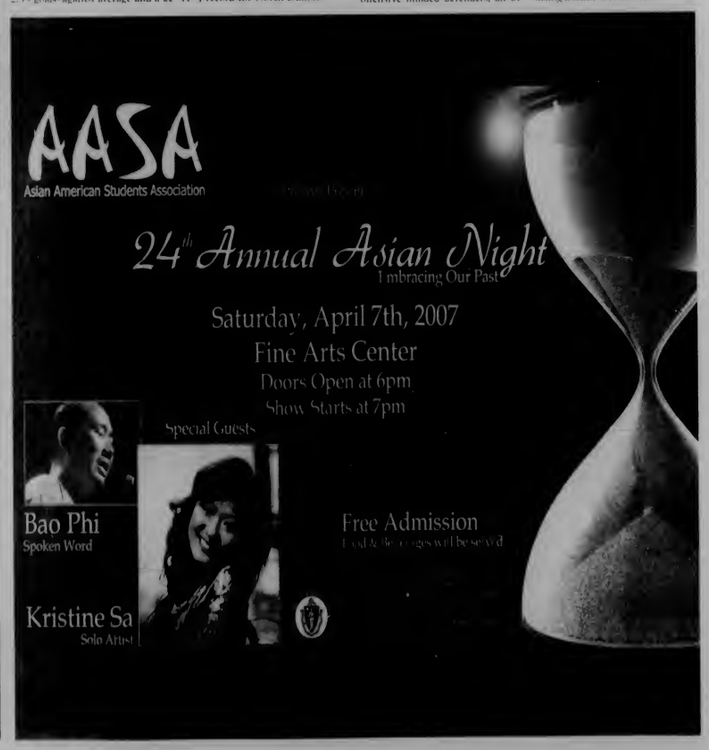
Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu

Joe Rooney and the Boston College Eagles carry a 12-game winning streak into the team's seventh Frozen Four appearance in the last 10 years.

Junior goaltender Philippe Lamoureux finished the season with a 2.39 goals-against average and a 20-11-4 record for North Dakota.

RSOs:
Put Your Advertisement in the Daily Collegian!
RSOs receive a discounted rate for advertising. Advertise your group's events at low cost.

over jeans
ZANNA
downtown Amherst



Seven O's
Every Wednesday:
♦ KARAOKE ♦
♦ LIVE BANDS ♦
Friday, April 6th, 2007:
MacDonald Coal Co.
Saturday, April 7th, 2007:
Soul Sensation
♦ Student Band Wanted ♦
Need a place to play? Come to Seven O's!
Route 116, 330 Amherst Rd, Sunderland, MA 01375, (413) 665-8788
3 PM to 1 AM M-F
1 PM to 1 AM Sat&Sun
Next To Cutters Apts

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

8				9		5	6
			8				9
	1	2				4
			2	6			4
	8	7				6	2
	5			8	9
		1				3	7
	2				5
	7	8		3				2

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Kniver or Nader
6 Caspian Sea feeder
10 Scrambled order
14 Sureloosed
15 Au naturel
16 Wry face
17 Twangy
18 Rugged rock
19 Magnet and 20 Thousand dollar hit?
22 Chicken comment
23 Mrs. Fred Mertz
24 Fidelities
25 Captive GI
26 Owns
29 Sailor's hail
30 Put to shame
32 "My Cousin Vinny" star
36 Recurrent theme
37 Org. of Flames
38 Spanish Miles
39 First residents
41 "Valley of the Dolls" writer
42 Marsh bird
43 Cowpoke's assent
44 Fetch
45 Element
48 Houston's state
50 Studio caution
51 Trinity part
55 "You Know Me Al" writer Lardner
56 Sound of rippling water
57 One who points
58 Beehive State
59 Shells and such
60 Cockamamie
61 Grain beverage
62 Expel forcibly
63 Like computer geeks

DOWN
1 Crumed
2 Gelatin substitute
3 Da Vinci's Mona
4 Carpentry tool
5 Filibustered
6 Dad's brothers
7 Bucolic
8 Eden resident
9 Trousers part
10 Hirers
11 Leave home
12 Arroyo
13 Tries to discover
21 Roe source
22 Recurs unexpectedly
24 Definite article
25 Dowdier and Tibbs
26 Double reed instrument
27 Power measure
29 Popular ISP
31 Waits things out
32 Learning inst
33 Mules only
34 Bamboo stem
35 ___ It a Pity
37 Gun owners' grp.
40 Make a blunder
41 "Da Ya Think I'm ___?"
43 Jaundiced
45 Open discussion
46 Singer Baker
47 Conduit
48 The Velvet Fog
49 Buff
51 Camelback
52 Moreno or Epps
53 Transmit
54 Low-str. card
56 Pops

The Moan and Dove
When you go to other bars, you dishonor yourself
themoananddove.com
460 West St. • Rte.116
Amherst, MA • 256-1710
3pm 'til 1 am every day

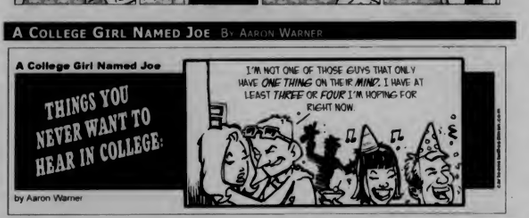
QUOTE OF THE DAY

"I have busted more hippies' noses than all the narcs in the free world."
-The Ted Nugent

LABRAT By Richard Martell

AH, SPRING... AND YOU KNOW WHAT THAT MEANS...
...WITH WARM DAYS AND HUMID NIGHTS COME...
...NECK PAIN... AND, LET'S FACE IT, DEPRESSION. MASSIVE DEPRESSION.

HARD KNOCKS By Louis Cornicola



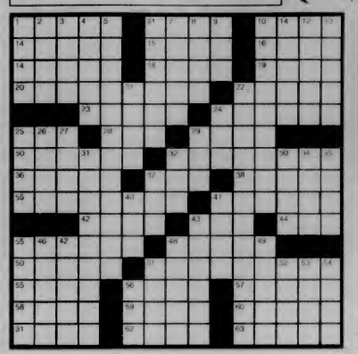
HARD KNOCKS
KNOW, YOU BROUGHT YOUR FRIENDS TO LIVE WITH US?!
WHAT, PAPA? IT'S JUST FOR LITTLE BIT. IT'S NO BIG DEAL, I'LL CLEAN UP AFTER THEM.
SO, YOU'RE JUST GOING RUN AROUND THE HOUSE CLEANING YOUR FRIENDS' MESS LIKE YOUNG CINDERELLA?
I'VE ALWAYS FELT LIKE CINDERELLA.
DON'T SAY THAT TO YOUR MOTHER.

A COLLEGE GIRL NAMED JOE By Aaron Warner

A College Girl Named Joe
THINGS YOU NEVER WANT TO HEAR IN COLLEGE:
I'M NOT ONE OF THOSE GUYS THAT ONLY HAVE ONE THING ON THEIR MIND. I HAVE AT LEAST THREE OR FOUR I'M HOPING FOR RIGHT NOW.
by Aaron Warner

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Josh Shalek

When you get old, there's no mystery in life. Only politics and money
I'm getting older, but I still have mystery
I'm not talking about that dumb horse
Does Mystery want an apple?



HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Smile and the world smiles with you, cry and you cry alone in a dark, wet corner.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
There is something extremely humerus about your upper arms.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
The best chili takes a long time to cook so be patient and the flavor will evolve.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Despite popular belief, mothballs are not actually made out of dead moths.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
If you mix tomatoes and Elmer's Glue you will get tomato paste.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Hiring a bagpiper to follow you around all day will put a sprightly jig in your step.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
When you shave, save the hair and sell it for profit to your many adoring fans.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Imagine what beavers could build if they had more tools than just giant teeth.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Mix things up. For example, walk into the opposite gender's bathroom.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Instead of making one big sandwich, make seven tiny ones. You'll feel like a giant.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
If you are anxious for the sounds of summer, buy a jar of crickets at the pet store.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
If Lex Luther was born as a girl, his parents would have named him Lexi Luther.

Chicago Pizzaria
Free Delivery!
PIZZA - CALZONES - SUBS - WRAPS
SALADS - PASTA - DINNERS
RIBS - SEAFOOD - SLICES
PARTY SIZE PIZZA NOW AVAILABLE!
CALZONE SLICES...LIKE NO OTHER!
Now Open for Lunch!
Hours
Sun-Wed: 11am-2am
Thurs-Sat: 11am-3am
Order For DELIVERY or PICK UP
(413) 549-6073
150 Fearing Street
Next to Patterson Dorm
Amherst, MA 01002

Submit your comics!
collegiancomics@yahoo.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Like no other course, Army ROTC Minor in Leadership and get paid for it! Graduate as an Army Officer full time/ part time after college www.umass.edu/army-rotc

APARTMENTS FOR RENT

Mill Valley Estates APARTMENT FOR RENT 2 bedroom $1125, 3 bedroom $1425, 4 bedroom $2175 Accepting Applications, 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winnco.com

APARTMENTS FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

EMPLOYMENT

Summer on Cape Cod Rent & utilities paid in exchange for providing transportation for teen. Easy walking distance to downtown & beaches, awenkozma@aol.com

EMPLOYMENT

Full time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office, $9.50/hour Applications available at 235 Whitmore and are due April 13th.

Line-cooks needed Full-time Part-time available. Apply in person Amherst Brewing Co. 24 N. Pleasant st.

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

EMPLOYMENT

Attention All Juniors and Senior! April 6th is the last day to apply to become a legal Assistant with the Student Legal Services Office. Earn 12 undergraduate credits while gaining valuable experience in the legal field! Contact us at 545-1995 or stop by our office at 922 Campus Center!

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

FOR SALE

English Bulldog Puppies AKC, Champion Bloodlines and come with health certificate, wormings, updated shots. Available at this time 4 males and 5 females. $550 each, ready to go to their new homes, selling fast. Puppies available now. For more information and pictures please contact Jessie Young on her email address: jyoungpetcare@yahoo.com Health

HEALTH

APPLE PATCH DIET Take control of your life. Visit us at www officialdiet.info

SERVICES

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992. www.tapestryhealth.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, APRIL 5, 2007

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Under the radar

While Kathleen Typadis gets most of the glory, Holly Drown continues to emerge as a leader

BY KEVIN DOOLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Junior attacker Kathleen Typadis has had an invaluable partner in leading the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team's resurgent offense in 2007.

While Typadis has garnered the majority of the highlights and interviews for the team-leading 30 goals and weekly rewriting of the UMass record books, sophomore midfielder Holly Drown has quietly amassed 24 goals through 10 games, ranking second on the team in goals scored and 10th in the Atlantic 10 Conference in goals per game (2.40).

In her second go around donning the Maroon and White the Nashua, New Hamp., native has emerged as a consistent threat to find the back of the net and has solidified her spot as a mainstay in the UMass offensive attack. Until recently, that same attack was averaging just shy of 12 goals per contest, a three-goal improvement from its average goals scored in 2006.

And you don't have to look any further than Drown as one of the key reasons the search for goals is easier in 2007 than a season ago.

"I think the biggest thing is that I have more confidence this year," Drown said. "I just have a different mindset when I'm playing the game as opposed to last year. I kind of felt I was more of a role player last year, but this year I feel like I have a lot more to do on the field as a leader.

Drown leads the Minutewomen in draw controls with 27 this season. She is also tied for second on the team with 16 groundballs.

"The new coaching staff has brought in a whole different realm to my game this season," Drown added. "They've taught me so much that I didn't know about the game. They bring in so much experience. Just watching [UMass assistant coach] Sarah Albrecht every day, I watch everything she does and I try to mimic her because she is the best player I've ever seen."

"Holly had a great fall season and much of her great play has come from her own personal confidence," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said. "She came in great shape and really plays with great intensity and the other players feed off it."

One of her 24 goals was a game-winning tally in overtime against the Boston College Eagles on March 25. And heading into Friday's conference-opener with the Temple Owls in Philadelphia, that one goal is the reason why UMass doesn't own a 0-4 record in its latest voyage from Amherst and is still treading water in the win-loss column.

"It was a very refreshing feeling," Drown said about her second game-clinching goal this season. "We really needed that game because there was no way we could lose to BC. I wouldn't be able to accept that. No one was stepping up to take the shot and I knew that was a game we had to have."

"Holly is playing more fearless and I think she is realizing that being a midfielder that she has the potential to take control of the game playing both offense and defense," Venechanos said.

But it hasn't been necessary for Drown to light up the scoreboard constantly to make her presence felt on the field. Drown has proven to be one of UMass' most versatile players, leading the team in draw controls (27), and is second in ground balls behind freshman defender Ashley King. Ten of those 27 draw controls came in just one game vs. Vermont earlier in the season and Drown is now just 12 draw control wins shy of the all-time single season record.

"The draw control honestly controls the whole game," Drown said. "We have a girl [sophomore midfielder] Meghan [Reddy] who is good at getting them to me. It's kind of a mental thing with the player next to you. You have to box out and it's also a timing thing. You just have to fight in order to win them."

In what is a microcosm of her versatility this season, Drown had a career-high five points on four goals and an assist, along with three draw controls in a 15-7 win over Albany on March 10.

Drown's breakout year in 2007 comes after an injury-riddled freshman campaign. But despite the rib-cage injury Drown dealt with for a majority of last season, she was still able to start in 16 games, tallying eight goals with 33 groundballs and 20 draw controls.

"Anytime you get injured it's the worst feeling in the world," Drown said. "It was bad not being able to play in two games last year. It effected my running a lot and it hurt every time I breathed in. But you only have 17 games in a season so you have to be able to battle through injuries."

The injuries are gone for Drown in 2007, but so is one of her biggest mentors, her older sister Tracy, who served as an assistant coach at UMass last season before becoming the assistant coach at Boston University. Even though she no longer has her older sister and "biggest critic" around everyday, Holly sees that as an advantage in the long run.

"It's actually not a bad thing," Holly said. "Actually, it's a much better situation this season from last year. It's teaching me to grow up more. Last year I always had her if I needed anything, but this year I've had to learn to do things on my own.

"I do miss her though because she was my best coach and gave me a lot of insight. She knows me so well. She teaches me everything. She can watch one game of mine and tells me five things I need to change. She watched our game against Holy Cross and she told me five things I needed to change and when we played BU in our next game I made those changes and I ended up playing a lot better. She's my biggest critic."

The older Drown sister may have given Holly too much advice before UMass hit Beantown. Drown made it a point to have her coming out party in Boston, notching her second career-hat trick along with two helpers and four draw controls.

And while Tracy may no longer be around, it seems like the lessons she imparted to Holly have translated well onto the field thus far in 2007.

Kevin Dooley can be reached at kdooley@student.umass.edu

Lasme draft status still up in the air

BY ROB GREENFIELD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With the NBA Draft a little more than 84 days away, the mock drafts and rumor mills are in full swing. And for the first time in a while, there is a legitimate prospect coming out of Amherst: Stephane Lasme.

Lasme is currently participating in the Portsmouth Invitational along with his fellow teammate and co-captain, Rashaun Freeman. The tournament hosts some of the best college basketball prospects from around the country and every NBA team – along with United States Basketball League, College Basketball Association and American Basketball Association teams – will be there to scout the participants.

Lasme showed up on televisions all over the country this season when he averaged 13.5 points and 9.5 rebounds per game while totaling 168 blocks. Lasme also turned in four triple-doubles. He is just the third player in NCAA history to have four triple-doubles in one season.

While Lasme continued to improve his resume, NBA scouts took notice, as personnel from several different professional teams, including the New York Knicks and San Antonio Spurs, attended UMass basketball games throughout the year.

Lasme has the build of an NBA player. He is strong, lanky and can jump through roof. He also has a nice touch around the basket. But there are doubts to where he can fit in on an

See LASME on page 7

Senior Stephane Lasme is currently playing in the 55th annual Portsmouth Invitational Tournament with former teammate Rashaun Freeman.

UMASS SPORTS LOG

FORD AMIDST JOB RUMORS

There is a lot of traffic on the rumor highway during this young basketball offseason, and UMass coach Travis Ford continues to play a lead role in the speculations. It was always assumed that Ford was on his way up the college basketball food chain, and UMass was a footnote in the big picture. The Kentucky head coaching job opened up once Tubby Smith left, leading some to wonder if Ford could land his dream job. But now it seems that Ford has dropped down that list because of all of the other qualified candidates, including Tom Crean and Tom Izzo.

But Tommy Amaker's recent removal from the Michigan head coaching position has created another avenue of rumors leading back to Ford. West Virginia head coach John Beilein, after his team won the NIT, took the Michigan job.

That leaves another vacancy for Ford to take a hard look at, and the West Virginia job is perhaps the most enticing of them all. WVU is returning most of its players – despite losing leading scorer Frank Young to graduation – and the Atlantic 10 to the Big East wouldn't be as drastic a leap as the A-10 to the Southeastern Conference.

Ford is rumored to be interested in the Mountaineers' coaching position. The Charleston Daily Mail's Andrew Beckner published an article on April 2 about the issues facing West Virginia's program next season, and No. 1 was the head coaching job. This was before Beilein took the Michigan job, but Beckner said that "If [Beilein] goes, expect names like Eastern Kentucky's Jeff Neubauer and Massachusetts' Travis Ford to crop up."

On the NCAA Basketball Blog from AOL sports, Charles Rich posted this insight into WVU's future after Beilein had announced his intent to go to Michigan.

"Travis Ford's name is getting mentioned," he said, "A former player at Kentucky and Rick Pitino protégé . . . He has steadily improved the Minutemen in two years and is another young coach on the rise. Despite no ties to the program, his name is coming up and he is reportedly interested. The knock is that his ambition is more of a stepping-stone view towards the job."

NEW FOOTBALL ASSISTANTS

The Massachusetts football team will welcome two new members to its coaching staff next year, as UMass coach Don Brown has announced Brian Crist and Jason Brooks as two new additions for the 2007 season.

Brooks will serve as the defensive backs coach and Crist will be the wide receivers coach.

Crist served as an assistant in the UMass program from 1996-2001 and participated in the 1998 national championship run. After his time with the Minutemen, Crist spent five seasons at the University of Louisville at Lafayette as the Passing Game Coordinator/Wide Receivers coach.

Crist helped Louisiana-Lafayette to a Sun Belt Championship in 2005 and also guided the Cajuns to consecutive six-win seasons, the first time in over 10 years that the program had accomplished that feat.

Brooks, son of Clarence Brooks who is currently on staff with the Baltimore Ravens, will be the defensive backs coach for the Minutemen next season. Brooks comes to UMass after coaching Middle Tennessee State for one season. Clarence Brooks was an offensive lineman for UMass from 1970-72 and coached the Minutemen's defensive line from 1976 to 1980 in his first coaching stint.

-Rob Greenfield

HOME OPENER FOR UMASS
PAGE 10

SUNDAY TAKES ON MULLINS CENTER
PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

CLOUDY : HI: 43 LO: 23 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, APRIL 6, 2007

Students volunteer in Kenya

Engineering students aid water system crisis in Kenya

BY LORAINE BURGER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Engineers Without Borders (EWB) returned to Amherst this January after a two-week trip to Africa to improve water systems.

The Engineers Without Borders is a group of engineers – both students and professors – that travel the globe in hopes of making a difference in people's lives. University of Massachusetts engineering students that are part of this program did the same, traveling to Kenya, Africa. The group consisted of Professor of the Engineering Department John Tobiason, professional engineer Eric Lehan of Even Flow Engineering Inc., and six students, both graduates and undergraduates: Tom Chase, Chris Arsenault, Molly Cronin, Julie Gagen, Elsbeth Hearn, and Mary Serdakowski. The group left Jan. 7th and returned home Jan. 23.

On Jan. 10 the team arrived in Namawanga, a village in Kenya. Kenya is located in Eastern Africa bordering the Indian Ocean. Some of the most current issues Kenyans face are water pollution from urban and industrial waste, the degradation of water quality from the increased use of pesticides and fertilizers, and water hyacinth infestation. The average age of a Kenyan villager is eighteen-years-old.

Members of UMass' Engineers Without Borders (EWB) program traveled to Kenya on Jan. 10 to help improve the water systems and aid in the efforts against the water-contact disease Schistomiasis.

Though AIDS is still their dominant mortality issue, Kenyans still suffer from Hepatitis A, Typhoid Fever, and the water-contact disease known as Schistomiasis. EWB's mission was to design a plan that would provide the villagers of Namawanga with clean drinking water.

"Our chapter personally, especially with Kenya, has two goals," said Chase, president of the EWB-UMass chapter, "To work on development, in Kenya being water resources, improving existing water systems and developing more, and to translate information to the community."

Chase continues, "The final clean water design that we settled on was to improve the springboxes and making them secure from animals polluting them. We didn't increase the existing amount of water, but focused on making sure the water caught by the springboxes is clean and healthy."

The springboxes are concrete walls

See KENYA on page 2

PHENOM supports law to close $400 million 'funding gap'

BY HOLLY SEABURY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A statewide organization will host a rally and lobby day to show support for public higher education. The Public Higher Education Network of Massachusetts (PHENOM), located in Amherst, will sponsor the event set for April 25 at the State House, and will also provide free transportation from both the University of Massachusetts and Holyoke Community College.

PHENOM, the first-year coalition that developed out of a discussion with Governor Deval Patrick at UMass on Dec. 1, 2006, urges students, staff, and faculty to participate in the lobby day to help improve public higher education.

According to the PHENOM Web site, participants will be supporting passage of legislation that would strengthen public higher education by closing the $400 million "funding gap" identified by the Senate Task Force on Higher Education; improving affordability and access by speaking to the MASS Grant financial aid program, a loan forgiveness program, textbook costs, and in-state tuition guidelines; and passing a major bond bill for much needed repairs and construction.

This week and next week, PHENOM will be holding teach-ins, where representatives will go into classes and give 10 minute presentations about the problems in public higher education, and possible solutions.

"It's a chance to both educate people on why and how our work is valuable," said PHENOM member Kerry Shields, "and to get more people on board on this campus particularly through our signature campaign" (the delivering of thousands of signature cards to the legislature on April 25 to show support).

According to PHENOM, "Massachusetts deserves the finest, most affordable, and most accessible public higher education system in the country." In hopes of accomplishing this, PHENOM pledges to work to achieve five specific goals.

PHENOM vows to fund public higher education so it can serve the Commonwealth, to make higher education affordable, to make higher education accessible to all, to hire more teachers, researchers, and staff, and to honor and expand democratic institutions of governance for public higher education.

"Despite having invented the idea of universal public education, Massachusetts has, for a generation or more, lagged behind other states in funding its public institutions of higher education," said Max Page, president of the Massachusetts Society of Professors, "There are many reasons for this, but one key reason has been that advocates for public higher education have never had an organization designed to bring all the constituents of public higher education – the half million students, faculty, staff, parents,

See PHENOM on page 3

International students have 'rendez-vous'

BY WES RAHN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Students from around the world met last night in the University of Massachusetts Student Union Ballroom for the "cultural rendez-vous," an event organized by the International Cultural Experience, a group that seeks to give a chance for international students attending UMass to meet and socialize.

Last night there were students present from fifteen countries who sat in groups of three or four. Visitors went to each table to talk for five or ten minutes and then rotated to another table. At one table there could be students from Albania, Italy, Vietnam, or Bulgaria; at the next, students from Israel, Nepal and China.

Ellen Simon, a graduate student from Gent, Belgium, is studying phonetics. She first became interested in UMass after meeting a professor in the Netherlands who advised her to study linguistics in the U.S. Simon is studying English language acquisition on the Dutch-speaking children of a professor. "I visited here last year and I really liked it," she said.

Daniella Schmeider is from a small town in the black forest in Germany. Like Simon, she came to UMass to do graduate research. She studies biology and mammals and is on exchange from her university in Tübingen. Both students spoke of the hardships of moving away from home.

"You're taken away from your family and social networks," said Simon, "at first it's hard but you learn to adapt."

"It's the same as moving to a different city in your own country," said Schmeider, "but eventually you always meet new people."

Wang Cong is from China and is studying information engineering at UMass. This is his first time in the States, and he is attending UMass for one semester. Wang has been learning English for twelve years. He notes there are differences between Americans and Chinese young people.

"In China, partying is not a big part of the culture," he said, "we don't sit around and drink and smoke pot, drinking is not a part of Chinese culture. My friends go out shopping and sing Karaoke for fun."

A Russian student studying computer science who asked not to be named, spoke of why he moved to the States ten years ago from St. Petersburg, Russia.

"It was not clear how to get a job, how to move ahead in life," he said. "Life was ambiguous for lower middle class and poorer people." He said he first learned German in Russia, and it took about two years for him to acquire English once in the U.S.

Maw Maw Khaing, a four-year international student from Myanmar and president of the ICE, conceived the idea of the cultural rendez-vous. "It would be fun for people who want to learn about culture and meet new people," she said.

The International Cultural Experience also has coffee houses once a month and organizes pot luck dinners for international students.

Elvis recruits residents for the Boulders

Representatives of local apartment complexes set up tables in the UMass Campus Center yesterday, in an effort to provide students with information about various residential communities.

Professor lectures about electronic voting

BY ANDREW TRULL
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

As the United States approaches the 2008 presidential election, voting systems across America are under scrutiny. Controversy over electronic voting machines in past elections has led to skepticism over their reliability. Professor Ron Rivest of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology Electrical Engineering and Computer Sciences Department addressed an audience in the University of Massachusetts Computer Science building Wednesday on problems facing the system and potential improvements.

Electronic voting machines do not produce paper records of cast ballots and the absence of a tangible record can lead to tougher security issues regarding tampering and tallying accuracy.

For Professor Rivest and fellow electrical engineers and programmers, there are two main issues facing U.S. voting systems. The first is ensuring votes are "cast as intended" that the voter can easily cast and submit a correct ballot. The second issue is ensuring votes are "counted as cast" – that the votes are tallied correctly.

According to Professor Rivest, "electronic voting machines are easy

See VOTING on page 3

Professor Ron Rivest of the MIT Electrical Engineering and Computer Sciences Department spoke at UMass Wednesday.

Multicultural film festival held at UMass

BY EMILY REYNOLDS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Every spring for the past 14 years, the Interdepartmental Program in Film Studies at the University of Massachusetts has presented the Massachusetts Multicultural Film Festival at UMass and the other schools in the five college system. The theme for the program this year is "Encuentros/Encounters: New Cinema of Latin America and Spain."

"Our mission is to bring new film and video from all over the world," said Nancy Inouye, Assistant Curator of the program. "It's a wonderful opportunity. For the most part, they are films that can't otherwise be accessed."

"You're not likely to see this media in your local cinemas," said Interim Director and Curator Jaqueline Urla.

Although only one film is shown at the MMFF usually, there were clips from four different films shown Wednesday night. All four were made through the Global Action Project (GAP), based in New York City with partners all over the world. Each film built to retain ground water and are built into the sides of hills. They generally come two to three feet out from the ground, and have a pipe that sticks out for people to access water. The problem is that a large portion of this is drinking water and does not travel far enough through the ground to be naturally purified and is contaminated with human and animal waste.

See FILM on page 3

Engineering students aid in Kenyan water system crisis

KENYA from page 1

Often behind the concrete wall, further uphill, is a depression that collects water, where bugs can reside and breed, making the goal to keep surface water from getting into water resources vital.

"We work with the women's literacy group – who are the ones who applied for this project," said Julie Gagen, vice president of EWB-UMass. "Women and children are the ones who get water anyways, so this is particularly relevant to their lives."

Namawanga is a farming community where manure is spread across the fields, and water is picking up bacteria from the fertilizer and going into the water supply.

"There are two basic things we did to improve springboxes," explained Chase. "We put up barb wire fencing so free range, particularly cattle, can't get directly behind and on top of the actual springbox, and the other thing was drainage control by making a mound on top and behind the box and ditches to keep run-off to keep from coming downhill creating puddles."

The next step for the team is to return to the sight to drill wells. EWB expects to return to Kenya as a larger group by January 2008 to continue their project, although a smaller group may return late this summer. Their return depends on the amount of money raised that will be put toward drilling wells.

"We hope to raise close to $30,000 to cover transportation and all drilling costs," said Mary Serdakowski, "including necessary permits and labor costs, when we do go and drill."

With the costs of drills ranging from $10,000 to $15,000 a piece, and travel expenses costing a few thousand dollars per student, fundraising is crucial, considering the team aims for drilling at least three wells when they return.

"The student chapter will have been given donations through the development office and the college of engineering's alumni," said Professor Tobiason. "We speak with groups such as rotary clubs in various communities about donating for water projects."

The team's two-week trip wasn't all labor and teaching. In fact, they learned about as much as they taught.

"I had gone [to Kenya] last March as well," stated Gagen, "and I guess our expectations of the village were completely different than what it actually was. We expected a close-knit community, on one main street, a few hundred people. What we found was this village. We were expecting them to not have water, and they did have water. It's a very fertile area, everything's green, people are scattered everywhere; it was just the opposite of what I was expecting, anyways, going into it."

"Kenya was very fertile, tropical, and lush in terms of growth," said Tobiason. "The people there were very friendly and wanted our help."

The village of Namawanga is located within the Bokoli district in Kenya. In it resides 23 villages and about 12,000 residents. Of the 23 villages, EWB is involved with four for the duration of this project: Namawanga, Sahilita, Namuninge, and Miendo.

"I loved the curiosity of the villagers," said Serdakowski, "We would often get questions varying from how to protect their water better to American history to what the world looks like from an airplane. They never stopped asking questions, which is a good thing because learning that knowledge is helpful for the continuation of the project for many years to come."

All of the team members agreed that teaching the villagers their techniques was just as important as coming to help in the first place.

"We really focus on community development and working with them, said Gagen, "because in order for our project to be sustainable, they need to be able to repeat it themselves. Tom focused on teaching locals about construction improvements for their current water sources. We're trying to create a library – a large source of information for them so that 10 years down the road our work sustains itself."

"We're basically giving them the means to help themselves as opposed to helping them," added Elsbeth Heamer.

When asked what their favorite memory or experience was for the duration of their trip, the answers varied greatly.

"I'd say for me the best experience was the sense of trust that you can see develop in the locals after working with us for a couple weeks," recalled Chase. "They were a little bit nervous that we wouldn't come back again and fulfill our promises. So just showing up first of all the second time was a big step in the right direction building our trust, but after the full week and a half this time that we actually had been in the community working with the village members, I personally really felt trust develop on their behalf by the end of the trip."

Most of the team agreed that the most rewarding experience was working side-by-side with the members of the village to fix the water problem. Every decision made was discussed with the village before it was executed.

"I enjoyed interacting with the people there," said Tobiason. "There is such a difference of day-to-day living there as opposed to here. You realize the basic needs that we take for granted."

"My best memory of the trip was working with the elder men in order to help protect the village's springboxes from bacterial contamination," said Molly Cronin, the project manager for the trip, "and being called capable and being allowed to use a local tool [a post-hole digger], which had been taken away from us, and the men would show us how to use them properly."

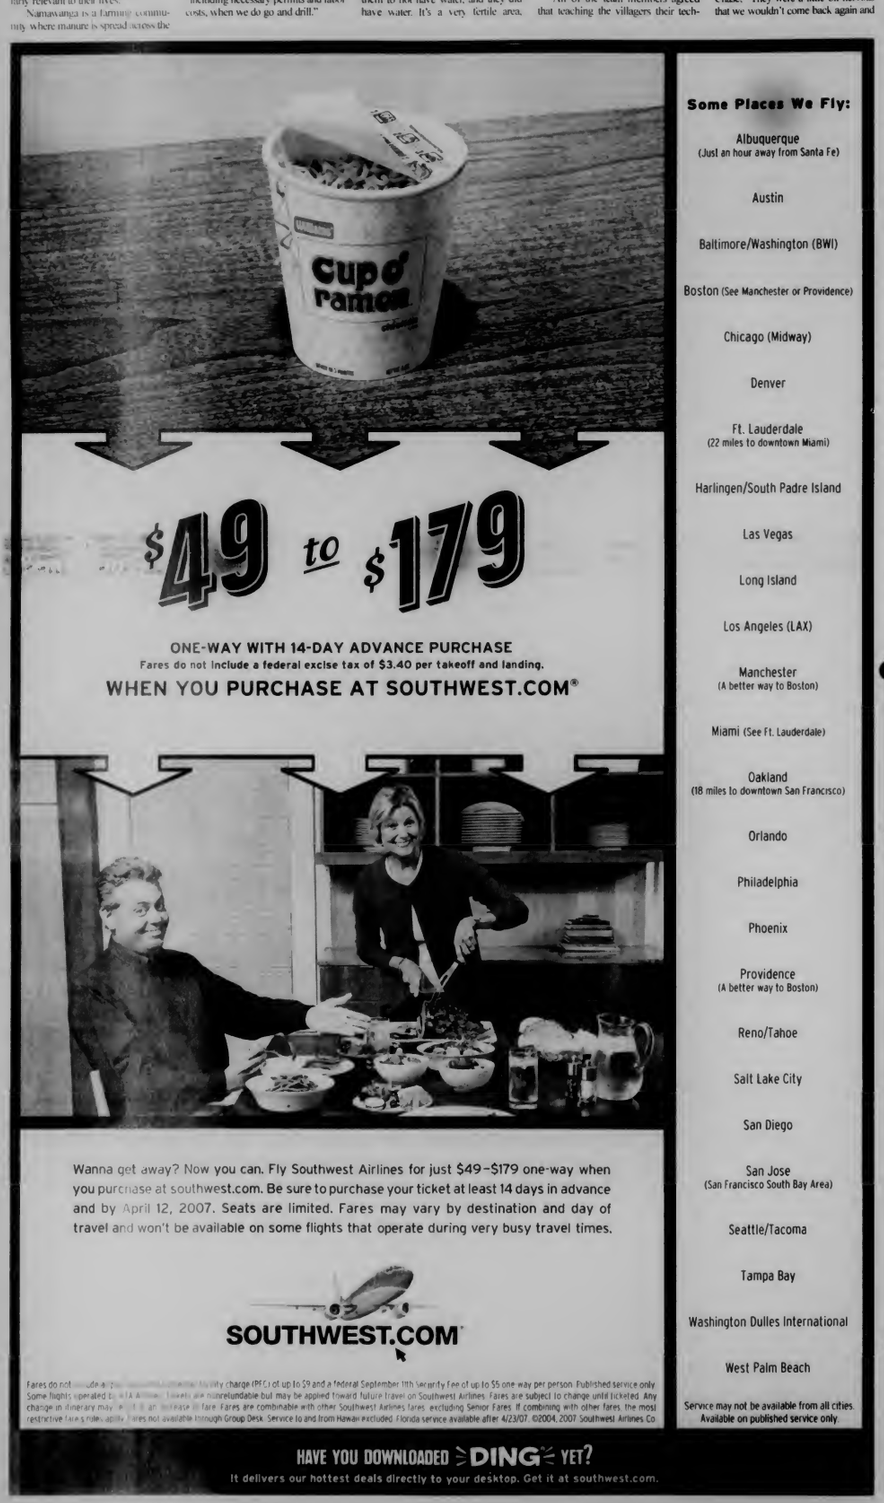
When the engineers aren't halfway across the world helping foreign communities, they're right here helping our own. In the past, EWB has worked with a developer in Boston doing green design options for affordable living families, and a project known as "Revision House," a women's shelter in Dorchester, Mass., where the students designed a drip irrigation system and upgraded a three story green house. They are presently still working with "Revision House."

The next thing the EWB has to look forward to is an Engineers Without Borders Conference. Between Apr. 12-14, about 500 people from across the country are coming to the UMass campus center to attend dinners, lectures, and various activities that extend from 8 a.m. to 11 p.m. each day. The lectures are open to the public but there is a registration fee. Information about the conference and EWB in general can be found on their Web site www.ewb-usa.org.

The EWB welcomes students who are interested in being a part of their team. They work best as a group, according to Gagen, if they are very diverse. It isn't just engineering students who are part of the team.

"We're looking for people – not necessarily engineering majors – but people interested in helping communities to get involved with our group. We're kind of a professional business so if we had marketing majors that'd be awesome; art majors, business majors."

Anyone interested in joining Engineers Without Borders can contact them at Ewb.umass@gmail.com or ewb@umass.org.



Cup o' Ramen
$49 to $179
ONE-WAY WITH 14-DAY ADVANCE PURCHASE
Fares do not include a federal excise tax of $3.40 per takeoff and landing.
WHEN YOU PURCHASE AT SOUTHWEST.COM®
Wanna get away? Now you can. Fly Southwest Airlines for just $49–$179 one-way when you purchase at southwest.com. Be sure to purchase your ticket at least 14 days in advance and by April 12, 2007. Seats are limited. Fares may vary by destination and day of travel and won't be available on some flights that operate during very busy travel times.
SOUTHWEST.COM
HAVE YOU DOWNLOADED DING YET?
It delivers our hottest deals directly to your desktop. Get it at southwest.com.
Some Places We Fly:
Albuquerque (Just an hour away from Santa Fe)
Austin
Baltimore/Washington (BWI)
Boston (See Manchester or Providence)
Chicago (Midway)
Denver
Ft. Lauderdale (22 miles to downtown Miami)
Harlingen/South Padre Island
Las Vegas
Long Island
Los Angeles (LAX)
Manchester (A better way to Boston)
Miami (See Ft. Lauderdale)
Oakland (18 miles to downtown San Francisco)
Orlando
Philadelphia
Phoenix
Providence (A better way to Boston)
Reno/Tahoe
Salt Lake City
San Diego
San Jose (San Francisco South Bay Area)
Seattle/Tacoma
Tampa Bay
Washington Dulles International
West Palm Beach
Service may not be available from all cities. Available on published service only.

Get the experience you need by working for one of the LARGEST daily college papers in the country.
THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

Multicultural film festival presents 4 short films at UMass was made in Spanish with subtitles. The showing was titled "Youth Media and Social Movements."

FILM from page 1

The first film of the night was "Notes from Porto Alegre," a 30-minute documentary about three students' visit to a World Social Forum held in Brazil. They were joined by organizations from all over the world, coming together to explore different political, social, and economic ideas.

Much of the visiting public agreed on a few main ideas that they thought needed change, including jobs, and an end to hunger, war, and poverty. The film was produced by three students who went down to South America with Diana Coryat, the director of GAP.

"GAP is an intersection between social justice and the arts," said Coryat. Coryat was at the screening to introduce the films and the students who were present.

The second film of the night was a clip from the documentary "Venezuela Bolivariana People and Struggle of the Fourth World War." The film showed the multiple Bolivarian Model revolutions that have been put into place by the citizens in the past twenty years in Venezuela.

The film captured the first revolution in 1989 through interviews with people who were present at the time, revealing reasoning behind the riots. Carlos Andres Perez, the president at the time, created an economic situation that led the citizens to revolt against him. He was replaced by Hugo Chavez in 1998, after a 1992 attempted coup d'etat by Chavez, when the country changed its government.

The last two films were both short clips filmed by two young Venezuelan filmmakers involved in GAP – Nataly Mendoza Bastidas and Alfredo Sanoja Gonzalez. "Portraits of La Vega" included several stories about the violence and poverty in the city of La Vega. It included an account of when the city banned police for unnecessary brutality.

The last film was only a six-minute clip entirely in Spanish with no subtitles. The short was about celebrating San Juan, a saint for African Venezuelans entitled "Meeting of the Saints of the Black People of Las Casitas."

Both of the visiting Venezuelan filmmakers answered questions after the films with the help of a translator. Also there was Coryat and two students from the area involved in GAP, Karina Hurtado of Mount Holyoke College, and Sara Reichel from Hampshire College. The four answered questions ranging from how they came up with the ideas to what Venezuela was like as a country.

The MMFF is sponsored by several programs and departments at UMass and throughout the Five College system.

"We do research on what is appearing in film festivals and we talk to specialists in the valley who know about the film," said Urla about choosing the films that are shown.

"We try as often as we can to bring filmmakers so that students can have a discussion," said Inouye.

Urla added, "If we had the budget, we would bring them all."

Films for the MMFF can be seen every Wednesday night at 7:30 p.m. The location alternates between the five colleges, but next week, the film will be presented at UMass' Isenberg School of Management.

Lecture offers possible solutions to avoid voting controversy

VOTING from page 1

until you get to security."

Unfortunately, there are a number of "adversaries" to the voting system such as "political zealots," "the sale of votes," and "partisan election officials," according to Rivest. Designing systems to tally votes may not be difficult, but keeping the system clean is.

The most formidable obstacle in designing a sufficient system is doing so without jeopardizing voter privacy, according to Rivest. "Privacy is the most important aspect of any voting system," said Rivest. With the complexities of a system run on "hundreds of thousands of lines of programming" ensuring absolute accuracy of the tally while maintaining no record of who voted for who sounds nearly impossible.

A number of possible solutions were introduced and the use of paper seems unavoidable. Although election officials "hate managing all that paper," it is the only reliable method of ensuring accuracy.

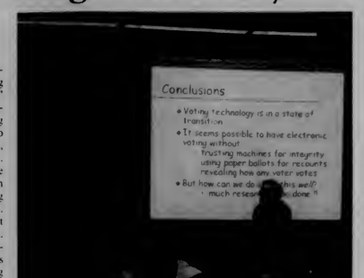
"VVPATs" or "voter verified paper audit trails" are the leading proposal to improve the direct-recording electronic voting machines (DREs) that comprise the current trend in voting systems. Machines with VVPAT produce a receipt immediately upon casting the ballot. The voter then inspects the ballot and submits it to election officials. With this system the machines tally is backed by a voter verified paper trail to serve as the official source in a dispute.

VVPATs will not solve every problem associated with DREs. Although VVPATs will ensure votes are "cast as intended" they won't necessarily ensure they are "counted as cast."

Verifying that votes are counted correctly is much more difficult as votes must still remain unconnected with the voter. To approach this problem, Rivest must delve into complex cryptography. The most well-known system is known as "mix nets" a concept initially introduced by cryptologist David Chaum. Using "mix nets," votes are cast into the electronic system, encrypted, and then randomly reassorted while being fed through a number of proxy servers. The voter would receive a copy of the encryption and would be able to verify their vote by checking it on a public bulletin without sacrificing privacy.

This and other methods are very complicated and introducing them to lightly trained poll staffers may be unreasonable. According to Rivest, "for all the technology surrounding voting poll workers are the hearts and souls of the systems."

Another problem facing Rivest is the lack of mandatory federal standards. Each state sets its own standards and voting technology varies significantly from county to county. The "Holt Bill" or "Voter Confidence and Accessibility Act of 2007" is due to go before Congress. The bill would require voter-verified paper ballots on all machines – but according to Rivest – it is "likely not to pass."



Conclusions
• Voting technology is in a state of transition
• It seems possible to have electronic voting without trusting machines for integrity using paper ballots for recounts revealing how any voter votes
• But how can we do this well?
much research to be done"
CHRIS MCKAY/COLLEGIAN

MIT professor Ron Rivest concluded that the most formidable obstacle in designing voting systems is maintaining voters' privacy.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVII
Issue 112
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Eric Athas
Managing Editor Rob Greenfield
Business Manager Dan Conti
Production Manager Amanda Allen
Night Supervisor Sheryl Wolnik
Advertising Manager Jaimeson Porter
Advertising Production Molly Eggleston
Arts & Living Editor Morgan Rousseau
Comics Editor Adam Scagin
Editorial Editor Tucker Merrick
News Editor Matt Bellisseau
Sports Editor Danny Picard
Sports Editor Jon Pelland
Circulation Manager Jeff Pentz
Finance Manager David Valade
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Nicole Poddester
Asst. Arts & Living Tim McCall
Asst. Arts & Living Sydney Towne
Assistant News Anna Dellanzo
Assistant News Nicole Boonjakuakul
Assistant Editorial Breendan Hall
Assistant Sports Jeremy Rice
Web Editor James Hale
Photo Editor Toan Trinh

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1907, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

Night Editor
Sheryl Wolnik

Copy Editor
Courtney Souza

Production Supervisor
Chris Martin

Comments? Questions? Concerns?
E-mail us at newsedailycollegian.com

Group to attend Boston lobby day and alumni who on a daily basis have a connection to a public institution – together to fight for the kind of funding we need to be a top public higher education system."

PHENOM from page 1

While UMass took the lead role in forming the organization, PHENOM hopes to have representatives from all 29 public college and university campuses across Massachusetts at the State House on April 25.

"That is what PHENOM is about," said Page. "We just have to show up, and speak with one voice for well-funded, affordable, accessible, well-staffed, and democratic public higher education in Massachusetts."

Holly Seabury can be reached at hseabury@student.umass.edu.

Low-SAT legacies receive lower GPAs

By Aditi Balakrishna
Harvard Crimson (Harvard)

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. — A study by two Princeton University sociologists has found that students admitted to colleges primarily because of their legacy status are more likely to face academic difficulty than students admitted primarily because they are athletes or members of ethnic minorities.

Legacy students whose SAT scores are below the average scores of their peers earn consistently lower grade point averages in college – a phenomenon not experienced by minorities or athletes, according to the study.

The study did not, however, show that legacy admits tended to perform worse overall. The disparity applies only to those admitted with lower-than-average SAT scores.

At Harvard University, SAT scores for Harvard legacy students are "virtually identical" to those of the rest of the student body, Harvard College Dean of Admissions William R. Fitzsimmons '67 said. He said that the admissions committee looks beyond SAT results in deciding whom to accept.

"There are always students from all types of backgrounds," he said. "Test scores are only one of many criteria we use to admit people."

Fitzsimmons said that legacies comprise about 12 to 13 percent of recent classes admitted to Harvard College. Their admission rate is between 34 and 35 percent, he said, in contrast to a rate of nine percent for the Class of 2011 as a whole.

According to Fitzsimmons, having a parent who graduated from Harvard or Radcliffe will tip the scale slightly in the admissions process. He added that legacy status is not the only factor explaining their higher success rate in admissions. Children of alumni often recognize the difficulty of gaining admission because of their parents' familiarity with the University, and thus are "self-selecting," he said.

"Many might decide based on this knowledge that they might choose not to apply unless they are particularly strong academically," he said.

Veteran patient files claim after wrong testicle was removed

An Air Force veteran has filed a federal claim after an operation at a Veterans Administration hospital, during which a healthy testicle was removed instead of a potentially cancerous one.

Benjamin Houghton, 47, was to have had his left testicle removed June 14 at the West Los Angeles VA Medical Center because there was a chance it could harbor cancer cells. It also was atrophied and painful.

But doctors mistakenly removed the right testicle, according to medical records and the claim, which seeks $200,000 for future care and unspecified damages. He still hasn't had the other testicle removed.

"At first I thought it was a joke," Houghton told the Los Angeles Times. "Then I was shocked. I told them, 'What do I do now?'"

Houghton, his wife, Monica, and their attorney, Dr. Susan Friery, said they hoped to get the VA's attention by going public with the situation.

Dr. Dean Norman, chief of staff for the Greater Los Angeles VA system, has formally apologized to Houghton and his wife.

"We are making every attempt that we can to care for Mr. Houghton, but it's in litigation, and that's all we can tell you," he said. The hospital changed practices as a result of the case, he added.

Associated Press

Online hoax strips home

An online ad offering everything in the house for free left one landlord with quite a shock. By the time she realized what was going on, the house had been stripped of its light fixtures, hot water heater – even the kitchen sink.

Laurie Raye said she traced the damage to a fake ad on craigslist.com, a San Francisco-based Internet site for classifieds.

"The instigator who published this ad invited the public to come in and vandalize me," Raye told Seattle television station KING. She said the rental home wasn't occupied at the time because she had recently evicted a tenant, but it had other items inside.

Even the front door and a vinyl window were pilfered, Raye said.

"In the ad, it said come and take what you want. Everything is free," she said. "Please help yourself to anything on the property."

Raye said she contacted craigslist and received an e-mail saying officials would need a subpoena or search warrant to release information about who posted the ad.

The online hoax isn't unusual, investigators said.

"We've had a lot of scams," Tacoma police Detective Gretchen Ellis said. "We've had prostitution things happen, rental scams, fraudulent activity. In this case, it appeared the items were going to be given away, but they were not."

The Associated Press

Uganda does away with adultery law

Uganda scrapped an adultery law on Thursday that campaigners said discriminated against women.

Uganda's Constitutional Court ordered the changes to the Penal Code, under which it was legal for a married man to have an affair with an unmarried woman but against the law for a married woman to have an affair with an unmarried man.

"Section 154 of the Penal Code Act which penalizes married women on the offence of adultery is discriminatory," the Constitutional Court said in its ruling.

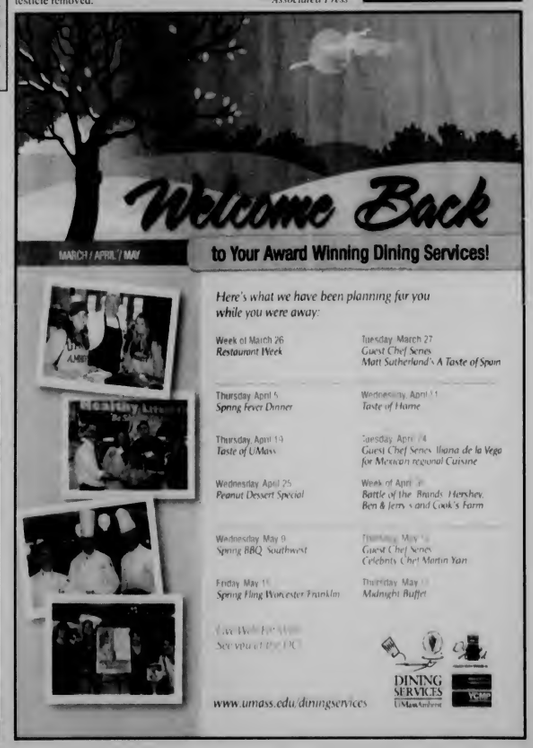
Women found guilty of the offence had previously faced a fine or up to a year in jail.

The ruling came after a legal challenge filed against the east African country's attorney general by a group of female lawyers.

Their lawyer, Ladislaus Rwakafuzi, said the old rules had given cheating husbands a green light to pursue single women.

Associated Press

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
Is looking for new
Graphic Designers
for the Fall 2007 semester
Daily Advertising Designers
Nightly Production Supervisors
Advertising Production Manager
Major can apply. Previous design experience not necessary, but encouraged.
Visit our office in the Campus Center Basement
10am - 4pm for applications.



THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

FRIDAY, APRIL 6, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

This lobby plays an odd tune

Brendan Hall

Cruel joke?

No, not that frivolous SGA Election plagued by apathy on both sides (lazy campaigning, 14 percent voter turnout); not the lackluster, all-over-the-place lineup for the spring concert (but Talib Kweli is worthy); not even the pathetic new attempt by our University to kick UMass-Lowell out of Hockey East because, why, we think they're stupid?

As most of you may have seen, our chairman Stephen Tocco, along with our humble and loyal president Jack Wilson, sent out a mass e-mail on Monday to inform the student body that Mar. 14 – the same day the Board of Trustees voted to hike next year's tuition by 3.4 percent, and the pay raises of Chancellor John Lombardi and Vice Chancellor Mike Gargano – the same Board also passed a resolution to encourage participation by the student body in civic engagement.

Among other things, Tocco and Wilson are urging for "a lobby day for public higher education advocacy." Some other highlights include such gems as "an increase in student voter-registration drives," "campus-based colloquia and symposia on issues of access and affordability," "invitations to legislators to such events," and, my personal favorite, "peer strategies to encourage positive media for student activities."

Anyways, this e-mail says nothing about the tuition hike or the fact that we are rewarding some of our administrators – well, the jury's still out – which leaves us to wonder what to think of this e-mail. Is this "lobby day" some sort of trick?

What's the real reason for this strange email – spin? Or has the administration taken another step further away from the campus?

"I don't think the e-mail was intended to go over everything that took place that day," said Bill Wright, director of public information for the President.

But can you see why some would perceive this as a cop-out because of the failure to include the budget issues?

The meteoric rise of college tuition is the greatest story not being reported in this country right now, and it's a shame.

"I can see how someone would feel that way, but I don't think that was the intent," said Wright.

Actually, this resolution was initially suggested by two student Trustees, UMass Boston's Alex Kulenovic and our very own Mishy Leiblum. The "lobby day" before the state house is scheduled for the morning of April 25 by Leiblum.

And let it be known for the record: Mishy's not down with the whole pay-raise thing. Or the tuition increase. Or a lot of things in regards to public higher education in this state, for that matter. And she's going to let her voice be heard, challenging not only Deval Patrick, who himself has claimed to be a "champion of public higher education," but everyone involved.

"Nobody should be let off the hook," she said.

And to those who perceive this whole debacle as a cop-out?

"They should participate in public higher education lobby day. They should contact the Student Government Association. This isn't targeted at just the Board of Trustees, because the fact of the matter is that at every level [there are problems]. Decision-makers are in power to make decisions. If they feel like the Chancellor and Board of Trustees should take more responsibility, they should stand up."

The meteoric rise of college tuition is the greatest story not being reported in this country right now, and it's a shame. People can talk all they want about the war budget and whether its increase is for the good or the bad, but the fact of the matter remains: the new trend is that when finances get sticky, to cut back on education. Both the state and federal are putting dents in the education ALM.

And it stinks.

The cycle isn't going to end, either. Some better-known private universities here are already in the $50,000-a-year zone, and soon that will be par for the course for most, if not all, private schools. To catch up with the privates, the publics will have to raise the bar on its potential customers, and to attract the best faculty they're going to have to make it rain.

Don't get it twisted, though. Lombardi and Gargano still have work to do.

And by omitting the well-known budget changes in its own backyard in this release, the administration is inadvertently giving off mixed signals. So while it can claim its intents are all good – and it seems that way – by showing only half the picture it is essentially encouraging you to stand up and fight this atrocity, but passing the buck when it comes to that 3.4 percent hike and pay raises for our Chancellors.

Administrators proudly claim their 3.4 percent hike is 0.2 under the inflation average, stress that it's well below what other schools are doing – increasing anywhere from five to eight percent – and want the state to share some of this blame.

So go ahead and join Mishy and others in their quest to stick it to Boston and get them to ante up on their campaign issues. It'll probably be a rockin' time, and you might make a name for yourself. But don't lose sight of the fact that the problem is as significant on the state and federal level, as it is in our own backyard.

Brendan Hall is a Collegian editor. He can be reached at editorial@dailycollegian.com

Unwarranted secrecy

Andy Smith

It's situations like these that make the American public wonder exactly what it is we're fighting for. As the debates over withdrawing troops from Iraq continue, stories surrounding the death of Army Ranger Pat Tillman make us wonder what we got ourselves into in the first place.

For those of you unaware of who Pat Tillman is, just know he was a man of honor, integrity, and a strong desire to fight for his country. At one time, he played on the Arizona Cardinals of the National Football League. After Sept. 11, 2001, instead of signing a contract extension worth 3.6 million dollars, he chose to enlist in the Army. His family had a history of fighting in the armed forces, which compelled Pat to defend his country, as he thought was his duty. He embodied everything right about our post-9/11 society. Unfortunately, he died in the line of fire in 2004.

Recently, his story has been a controversial one, not because he died, but instead, how he died. Since 2004, there have been reports that Pat was killed by friendly fire, but the government has never acknowledged that. Tillman's parents have been following every lead to find the true story behind who killed their son. There have been four investigations into the cause of his death, but never once had it turned up a result of friendly fire. Until now.

The government failed to use the friendly fire excuse because it would have made the war in Iraq look bad.

On Mar. 30, a memo was found by the Associated Press that stated Tillman's death might have been caused by friendly fire. According to the AP report, the memo was intended to go all the way to President Bush. So this begs the question: who in the government didn't know about this and why is this only coming out now?

In addition to these documents, there was a revealing story regarding Tillman in the Sept. 11, 2006 issue of Sports Illustrated. The story reveals that his uniform and body armor were burned within three days of his death and an Army coroner told Pat's mother that, "he did not sign an initial casualty report that stated her son had been killed by enemy fire, because he knew the enemy, at their distance away from the platoon, wasn't skilled enough to send three bullets that close together through a man's forehead." According to the SI story, the burning of the clothes and body armor was done "only because the bloodied gear was considered a potential biohazard and hygiene issue." Sure, that makes a lot of sense. Then why isn't every dead soldier's clothes and body armor burned too?

The question still remains: why was this covered up? It's very simple. The government failed to use the friendly fire excuse because it would have made the War in Iraq look bad.

Unfortunately for them, this looks even worse. There has even been some suspicion that Tillman's platoon mates may have even shot him on purpose, but of course, they will never tell us if that is true or not. The unfortunate fatality of such an honorable and selfless man became propaganda for the government's own agenda. This is all happening while people like Mary Tillman, Pat's mother, wait around for months – even years – wondering if their child will come home safely from fighting a war not all soldiers believe in.

"You try to picture, How did my child die? and it keeps changing," she said in the SI story. "It's like Pat had died seven times in my head. You think you're losing your mind for months. They attached themselves to his virtue and then threw him under the bus. They had no regard for him as a person. He'd hate to be used for a lie."

The one thing Pat Tillman's mother wanted to know was how her son died. They could not even tell them the truth. In war, I hate to say it, but death is expected. Instead of being respectful to the memory of a man who represented everything right with this country, they pushed their own agenda. Some form of justice can be found in the recent recommendation by the Department of Defense Inspector General's Office that nine Army officers be held accountable for the cover-up of Tillman's death. However, no solace can be found in the death of a son. Especially when it takes years to figure out who killed him. All Pat Tillman's parents wanted was the truth, but no one would give it to him. After years of waiting, they got it. Now they can be happy to know Pat died fighting for something he loved: his country.

Andy Smith can be reached at ajsmith@student.umass.edu.

Army Ranger Pat Tillman died in the line of duty in 2004. Why is his cause of death a mystery in 2007?

The Learning Commons bytes

Caroline Moretti

There are many situations on this campus that I would call "out of control." The constant fee increases that grace our annual bill without fail, the endless construction that disrupts our classes while older buildings crumble beneath our feet, and most of the student body on a Friday night are all things that I would deem "out of control." For me, personally, the most "out of control" and frustrating situation on campus today has to be, without a doubt, the computer availability at the W.E.B. Dubois Library.

Take Wednesday, for example, a typical rainy afternoon. When I arrive at the library, I already know I shouldn't bother going to the Learning Commons, so I hop on a crowded elevator bound for the seventh floor. The Learning Commons has been a great promotional tool for the University: "Come on down to the sleek, shiny Learning Commons! It's a hip new place to study!"

Unfortunately, way too many people listened, and the area has become a place rather unfit to do work in at all. It's noisy, it's crowded, and if you want to use a computer, you better be prepared to stand in a slow moving line, twenty people deep to use it. I've become heavily dependent on the computer labs on the sixteenth and seventh floor to find a place to get my assignments done.

Too bad these floors have even bigger potential drawbacks. They're almost always congested with classes. This wouldn't be so bad, if you could find out when the classes were being held before you made the trip up there, but you can't. You have to make an epic trek to find out for yourself. You end up wasting at least twenty solid minutes going up to the seventh floor, hopping back up in an unpunctual elevator to the sixteenth floor, only to walk away empty handed. Because if it's a day like it was Wednesday, all four computer labs will be closed at the exact same time for classes.

This annoyance could be easily solved for the entire student body if the W.E.B. Dubois staff would do what I and numerous other students have been suggesting for months. Put something in the lobby to indicate when the upper floor computer labs will be closed during the day. It doesn't have to be fancy, electronic, or expensive. A simple white board would actually do the job just fine. All you have to do is put this little sign by the elevators, and it would save so many people the effort and exasperation of wasting precious time traversing these floors for nothing. It's really not that difficult.

There just aren't enough computers in the library to sustain the number of students who go there to study.

Instead of this much needed placard, we have been graced with the presence of brand spankin' new, flat screen TV that tells you where available computers are in the Learning Commons. This is an admirable (yet probably expensive) attempt to help the appalling computer situation. However, this little tool doesn't really help when there's only one available computer down there, and who knows how many people already abandoned their precious place in line to go on the hunt. Maybe you decide to risk it, and try to find this fabled available PC that the magic screen directs you to. It's possible (and actually quite probable in my experience as a computer hunter) that you'll just hit another dead end, in the form of a jerk who just sits in front of an idle computer reading, or drops their bag there and wanders off, or plugs their laptop in, leaving the desktop dormant. The directory screen doesn't account these possibilities, and leaves the average worker-bee UMasser frustrated and bamboozled out of a good place in the computer line.

There just aren't enough computers in the library to sustain the number of students who go there to study, especially on a rainy day, when all the computer labs (even my ace in the hole, the Caliban room) are closed for classes at the same time. The flood of undergraduates, increasing yearly, are all trying to call the Learning Commons home, and there just aren't enough PC's to go around. Maybe if we took all the money from administrative pay raises, we could afford to equip more floors with student computers and Internet access.

Yet, somehow, I don't see that happening in the near future. I suppose in the meantime I'll hike over to SOM in the rain to write my columns. The labs are quiet, they're clean, and they even have little signs outside saying when the labs will be closed for classes in the upcoming week. Amazing!

Caroline Moretti can be reached at cmoretti@student.umass.edu.

Piousness or propaganda?

Lauren Modisette

During my extensive effort to get to Sicily for spring break, I came to a realization. In addition to the blizzard and 26 hours of traveling I had forgotten my toothbrush.

Now this is only part of my realization (but let me tell you no toothbrush is no fun). And luckily, my professor had an extra toothbrush. He agreed to give it to me on one condition; that I behave.

I thought to myself, "behave?" The idea of an additional rule cast upon me was a bit disgruntling. Now, I have been labeled as a trouble-maker and a rebel before. So it didn't surprise me that my professor was requesting good behavior. Unfortunately, a toothbrush wasn't enough to smother my sense of adventure. But this got me thinking about the rules that people choose to follow. For example, people who are prescribed in religions.

Fear is the most effective way to gain conformity. We classify people who use fear to gain power as terrorists. Religions could be considered to be a form of terrorism and even a form of propaganda. Catholicism is the first religion that comes to mind, simply because I was brought up under its strict hand. This religion uses the natural fear of death to reach a level of conformity with the threat of eternity in a fiery hole somewhere.

What happens in death is still a mystery. If you think about it, most religions are based around death. What you do in life reflects what happens to you when you die. This goes for other religions, too. Hinduism promises a step up on the social ladder in your next life if you are a good person in this one. They are not threatened with Hell, but they are taught that if they do wrong in their lives now they will descend the socioeconomic ladder in their next life.

Propaganda is defined as a message created with the intent to influence the behavior or opinion of others. I was brought up with the conception that if I stole, lied, cheated, talked back to my parents, had premarital sex, believed in some other "God," etc. I was going to burn in this place called Hell. Personally I don't think children should be brought up with this understanding because quite frankly, it's pretty scary.

As a child I was always questioning the Catholic ways. How do we know the things we are taught really happened? And what if there is no heaven or Hell? Is everyone just living a lie?

Honestly, the idea of the quality of your afterlife directly reflecting the way you live is genius.

Is it plausible that the behavior of mankind got so out of control that something needed to be done in an attempt to get people to "behave"? Before Christianity began to spread through the Romans, there was an incredible amount of sodomy, infidelity, murder, death, and corruption that was shameless and very common. Watch Caligula if you don't believe me. It's said to be historically accurate. It would be foolish to claim that these "sins" don't happen today, but when these new religions began to spread, morals became important. But who decided what is moral?

So where did these monotheistic morally-based religions come from? Who made them up? It seems nearly impossible to manipulate the actions of other people simply by requesting them to "behave." In my opinion, there needed to be some sort of incentive or bribery.

Since society couldn't say, "if you be good then we will give you a toothbrush," they (whoever "they" are) had to find an alternative. And what could you promise an uncountable amount of people in return for conforming?

Honestly, the idea of the quality of your afterlife directly reflecting the way you live is genius. Incorporating the human fear of death brings power. "Be good or when you die you will burn up in a fiery pit of despair." I don't think this could have been a selling point for the majority, so there would have to be some reasoning behind it.

If I may speculate for a second – just imagine this – maybe "they" decided that a being needed to be created who had an enormous amount of power and invoked fear at the same time. A being you will never meet, converse with, or see but will sentence you upon your death: God. Since this would most likely not be embraced, more of the story would have had to be established including creation stories, witnesses, prophets, miracles, etc. Easy enough. Can you tell me that it isn't at all possible that a book like The Bible wasn't just the result of some creative writing?

Now, you are probably labeling me as ignorant or Atheist. Sure I'm Atheist. But for a moment look at the idea of religions as a whole. If only one God exists, what about the next person's? If different cultures believe in different Gods, how can there be only one? Is there some kind of astronomical competition between these "forces" that are struggling to see which will have a stronger influence on our lives? Are you sure that your religion isn't simply propaganda to get you to live your lives in a specific way?

Lauren Modisette writes on Fridays. She can be reached at lmodiset@student.umass.edu.

WRITE LETTERS TO THE EDITOR!

(550 WORD LIMIT)

Send letters to:

editorial@dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, APRIL 6, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Alternative rock concert covers varied acts

Taking Back Sunday, UnderOath, and Armor for Sleep bring their own sounds to UMass

By Tim McCall
Collegian Staff

There are two kinds of alternative rock bands in the music world today. The first kind is angst-filled, overly dramatic and perfect for listening in your room as you waste the night away while the rest of your friends are out having fun. The second type is more pretentious, artsy and typically found only on Pitchforkmedia.com.

The concert last night at the Mullins Center featuring Armor For Sleep, UnderOath, and Taking Back Sunday was a presentation of the latter. This is by no means a bad thing. If the atmosphere is right the concert can easily be memorable.

Armor For Sleep started the night off well. Waiting for two songs to introduce themselves to the crowd, they put enough angst into the atmosphere to fill an entire Hot Topic. Their set was a combination of songs from both their albums "Dream To Make Believe" and "What To Do When You Are Dead."

It didn't matter what album the songs were from (whether it was "The Truth About Heaven" or their debut albums title track "Dream To Make Believe,") the songs all had similar themes of depression and death. Front-man and lead guitarist Ben Jorgensen gave the audience exactly what they wanted even though most of them did not come specifically to see his band.

The majority of the crowd did, however, come to see Florida-based sextet UnderOath. UnderOath's performance gave the impression that the band was still enjoying themselves, even though they have now been on tour for six weeks. The band moved around the entire stage, at times running back and forth to entertain all sides of the arena. They performed songs from their latest album "Define The Great Line," and a couple crowd favorites from "They're Only Chasing Safety."

Lead screamer (yes, screamer) Spencer Chamberlain's screeching vocals at first came across as a gimmick, but one could understand the lyrics through his yelps. Drummer Aaron Gillespie sang the remainder of the bands material creating an interesting contrast for the bands sound.

The most interesting moment of UnderOath's set came when Chamberlain confessed the band's love for Jesus Christ.

"I would like to dedicate this set to Jesus Christ, without him this band would not be here right now. You don't have to agree with us, but thank you

See SUNDAY on page 6

UnderOath's bassist accompanies lead singer Spencer Chamberlain, in the background, during their rousing set at the Mullins Center last night.

Fans anticipate HBO show's final season

Sunday marks the beginning of the end of 'The Sopranos'

This poster for the sixth season of 'The Sopranos' hints at the strained relations between Tony Soprano and the New York mobs. The final season begins Sunday after a nearly 10-month hiatus.

By Anthony David Rueli
Collegian Staff

"You have a beautiful home," gushed AJ's new girlfriend, Blanca. After a short pause, Carmela proudly replied, "Thank you...we do."

So ended the last episode of "The Sopranos," entitled "Kaisha," all the way back on Jun. 4 of last year. For almost a year, fans have been waiting with bated breath to see how their favorite family will conclude its final chapter.

Now, with the first of the final nine episodes airing this Sunday, the wait is more intense than ever. I can't concentrate on school work. I can't focus in class. My mind wanders when I'm hanging out with friends. When I put on a movie, I can only think of how much better it would be to be watching "The Sopranos."

So, the goal here is to do three things. First off, this will serve as a friendly reminder to loyal, but absent-minded "Sopranos" fans to tune in this Sunday at 9 p.m. on HBO.

Secondly, to anyone who has never watched (or, God forbid, heard of) "The Sopranos," this is an encouragement to go out and rent the DVDs. Seasons one through six, part one are available wherever you go, and they're available inexpensively used on Amazon or eBay.

If you've never seen the show, tuning in on Sunday would probably not be the best thing for you to do, as "The Sopranos" is one of those shows where it's necessary to watch from the pilot, lest you be immensely confused. It's never too late, however, to pick up the series from the beginning – trust me, it's worth it.

The third goal here is to get people caught up. June was indeed quite some time ago, and many things have occurred since then – the Colts won the Superbowl, Anna Nicole Smith died, and the window of the Pita

See SOPRANOS on page 6

The Book Nook

New graphic novel plays with ideas of embroidery

By Amy Calandrella
Collegian Columnist

What happens when eight Iranian women (one of whom has a taste for opium) get together to talk about sex, men, marriage, and divorce? The result is played out for us in Marjane Satrapi's graphic novel "Embroideries." If you took Dean's Book this semester, you're familiar with the stylish hand and dark humor of Satrapi through her first books "Persepolis I" and "II." "Embroideries" takes us further into the world of Satrapi's Iranian female characters, and skips right to the good stuff.

"Embroideries" opens as Satrapi prepares the Samovar to be enjoyed as a post-meal tea by her wide array of female guests. It is perfect timing, for who can gossip about the lives of others without tea? Although Satrapi's Grandma prefers to call it "a ventilation of the heart," this is exactly what ensues for the remaining length of the book.

From this point on we hear stories from each female character present, most of whom we met in Satrapi's earlier writing. We hear stories about pre-marital sex, plastic surgery, marriage at 13, cheating husbands, the virtues of mistress-hood, and of course, embroideries.

While some may be slightly inaccessible to American women, such as the pain of an arranged marriage, many can understand the difficulty of re-marrying after a divorce or the double standards invoked in male and female sexuality. Who can't laugh at a woman who has taken fat from her behind and placed it in her chest to spite a husband who, in a sense, is "kissing her ass?"

As the women tell their stories, Satrapi's provocative positions on sex, men, divorce, and especially the fantasy of virginity became more and more clear. In "Persepolis I" and "II" we were introduced to a very political Marjane, struggling to somehow align her Iranian identity with her stubborn and liberal nature in the aftermath of the Islamic Revolution. In "Embroideries," however, Satrapi bypasses these identity and religious politics in lieu of the equally if not more interesting topic of gender politics.

That is, while "Embroideries" can be read as a comical book about Iranian women and sex, it can also be read through the lens of a transnational Iranian author discussing both universal and local issues of femininity. It addresses the virgin fantasy, the image of divorced women, sexual double-standards between men and women all with a dose of humor. Furthermore, it functions to allow for connections to be made between American and Iranian women on the basis of their gender.

Often when Iranian women are discussed we imagine a woman covered head-to-toe and terribly, inescapably, oppressed. It is nearly impossible to identify with this conceptualized image representing "The Iranian Woman." Satrapi's work functions (quite literally) to give these women

See BOOK on page 6

'Planet Earth' highlights beauty of the natural world

By Christina Fong
Collegian Staff

With 200 locations and 2,000 days of shooting the majestic planet's vast expanse of elegance and ferocity, the Discovery Channel has produced a mesmerizing eleven-part miniseries in conjunction with the British Broadcasting Company. Each episode captures various domains and habitats of Earth still untamed. This eye-opening event is a must-see for all who inhabit this ever changing planet.

Spending about $1 million on each episode, the Discovery Channel spent a fortune on seeking out and capturing the planet's hidden wonders. They employed Sigourney Weaver to narrate the series, who adds a certain sense of wisdom and maternal grace to the stories in each episode. It was produced by Alastair Fothergill, responsible for the channel's 2001 piece "The Blue Planet" and filmed by top-notch cameramen in the business. With the aid of a camera called a Cineflex heligimble, the team managed to get amazing close-ups from as far as a mile above the action. Each scene is an artistic snapshot of nature's greatest creations.

The dedicated team's extensive travels took them from exotic jungles to frigid ice worlds. They captured never-before-seen shots of animals in realms too dangerous and too remote for most to have even dreamt of exploring. They followed families for weeks only to gain their trust for a few shots. A highly sought after shot of the prized snow leopard hunting her native habitat can be seen in all its splendor in the second episode "Mountains."

In Antarctica, the camera crew was the first humans to have stepped foot there in twenty-five years. They braved the blistering cold in order to film scenes of emperor penguins huddling together in amazing team efforts to keep themselves, as well as their eggs warm in "Ice Worlds." They managed to breed emotion and beauty into many simple scenes of animals' basic survival instinct, which is all most of them know.

Even the most mundane activities of the smallest creatures are turned into highly intriguing moments. Precision and attention to detail are what make it all the more appealing. Countless chase scenes are capable of building up more excitement than clichéd car chases that are so often used in action sequences in movies. The camera crew was able to film a chase scene from start to finish, which is a difficult task to accomplish.

Most of the clashes filmed are about an animal's own survival or more importantly, the survival of their offspring. Human nature has an impulse to take sides. This series clarifies that both sides have understandable reasons for doing what was necessary. Still, it doesn't help diminish feelings of sympathy for the losing side.

It's amazing how nature can be this thrilling and awesomely fantastic, all without the need for the special effects that the entertainment world so heavily relies on. There is an entire world still basking in primal complexities, many parts of which are in the backyard. There is a jungle begging curious minds to venture deeper into their world.

There is a great deal of beauty, but at the same time a painful reality exposed about the effects of humans' habits on the rest of the world's inhabitants. Some deaths filmed didn't result from nature's touch, but from the great imbalance humans have created. Although it wasn't the purpose of the team to make a statement about the steady decline of the natural world, it certainly does add to the growing concerns about what it is that humans have put into motion.

It began airing on Mar. 25 and will continue to be shown every Sunday at 8 p.m. until the final episode on Apr. 22. Re-runs can also be seen on The Science Channel. Don't miss a minute of what is the greatest documentary about the natural world created so far. It's never been shown in a light this revealing. Prepare to view the world as never before.

Christina Fong can be reached at cfong@student.umass.edu.

The Discovery Channel and the BBC joined together to create 'Planet Earth.' This series of specials focuses on untouched spots around the globe.

Dean's Book pick sticks with Iran individual faces, lives, and stories. As the provocative group bursts into laughter at their friend who has never actually seen a penis, only dealt with it to have children ("bam! bam! bam! And voilá, I was pregnant!"), a barrier is somehow broken. If only for a moment, the characters cease to be preceded by their nationality and are understood simply as individual women.

BOOKS from page 5

Like Satrapi's earlier work, "Embroideries" is written in the form of a graphic novel. This time around, however, Satrapi has chosen to forgo the comic strips and to insert text in full page pictures. For those unfamiliar with the form, a graphic novel is a novel-length comic book usually aimed at a more grown-up audience than Archie readers.

For Satrapi's purposes, the illustrations allow her to insert humor into topics that are otherwise inaccessible and hard to handle. Often times it is easier to translate an experience in pictures than it is to translate Persian or French into English. In this case, the graphic novel format does not at all take away from the severity of the topics; rather, it brings them to life.

In the course of the book, we eventually learn that the title does not signify the perfectly feminine vision of a Grandma embroidering a pillow but, rather, of the re-virginization (so to speak) of women by "embroidery." Through Satrapi's illustrations we witness a conversation between two women about "relaxing morals" and how "today's girls are no longer virgins before marriage…they do everything like men and get sewn up again to get married!"

By titling her book as such, Satrapi prepares the reader for her re-conception of traditional femininity. The image of a docile, embroidering homemaker has dictated the feminine image for many years. By uncovering and discussing this lesser-known embroidery, Satrapi brings into light the way many women have had this fantasy of a true, chaste, woman literally stitched into their beings.

However, for all its hilarity and pointedness, "Embroideries" somehow falls short of having a lasting effect upon its reader. Yes, it is an entertaining and very quick read for anyone looking for a laugh about sexual relations between men and women in an international context. Sadly, the vignette format takes away from much of the power of the issues that arise. Satrapi presents her feelings on gender in a very hit-and-run manner through her characters, who often seem interchangeable and are lost in the fast-paced storytelling. The stories really are very charming and funny, and do bring up interesting issues about gender to consider. Satrapi fails only where she cuts herself short, preventing the voices of her characters from resonating beyond their individual experiences.

Amy Calandrella can be reached at acalandr@student.umass.edu.

3 bands show off at Mullins Center for listening," Chamberlain said before leading the band into the final two songs of their set. Surprisingly there was no mixed verbal reaction from the audience.

SUNDAY from page 5

When Taking Back Sunday hit the stage the entire floor of the arena lit up with cell phones to record their image and songs. Front man Adam Lazzara ignored the waving cell phones and launched right into the music.

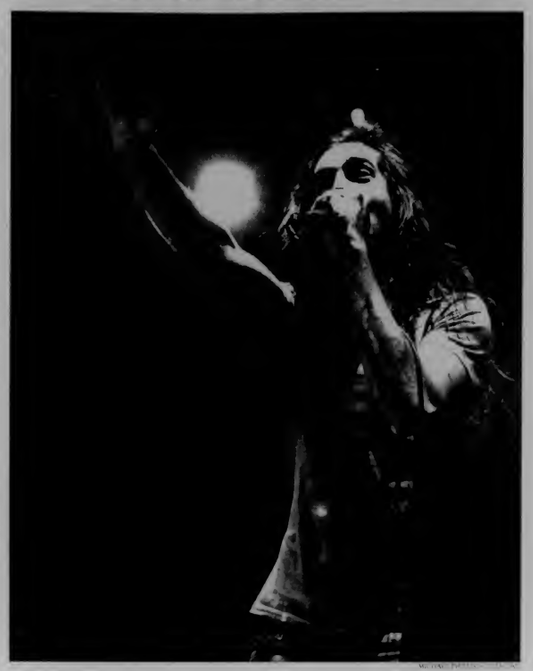
It was obvious that Lazzara has improved his arena performance since the band's first big-stage headlining tour in 2005. His trademark of swinging the microphone was at first left to a minimum, but after launching into crowd favorites such as "There's No 'I' Team" and "Set Phasers to Sun" the swinging was in full force.

At one point during their set Lazzara went off onto a tangent about today's rock 'n' roll and how most bands are jokes in today's music world. He quickly followed that up by saying that his band is also a joke.

Maybe he is right, but when he came out to start the encore and started performing the song "Divine Intervention" acoustically with a harmonica strapped to his chest, he proved he was more than just a singer of a pop-rock band out of New York. He proved he could entertain with nothing more then just a simple melody and disco ball that lit up every time he played a note on the harmonica.

This troubadour moment was the highlight of the night, showcasing another side of a band that has rarely changed throughout their past.

Tim McCall can be reached at tmccall@student.umass.edu.



UnderOath's lead singer Spencer Chamberlain brought soul into his performance by declaring his love of Jesus Christ between songs.

DVDs hide special features for those who know what to do and where to look

By Zach Cannon
FSView & Florida Flambeau
(Florida State U.)

(U-WIRE) TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Sometimes when you buy your favorite films on DVD, you're paying for more than you realize. Tucked away in the main menu, the special features, languages and whatever other sections you can imagine are Easter eggs, a bit of cinematic candy that, after searching for a little while, can provide a few minutes of added entertainment.

Most times, they're more akin to that green egg that was always underneath the wheelbarrow that you didn't find until dad did the lawn three weeks later. You have to search the DVD menu, pressing directional buttons in odd sequences until a secret option reveals itself. Easter eggs can be insightful, supplying brief "How did they do that?" documents.

On disc two of Batman Begins Widescreen DVD, you can find a reflection of Batman in a puddle by pressing down, and then left on the main menu, which will lead you to a video of stunt tests of the tank-like Batmobile. In the interactive comic book on the same disc, you can highlight a wall on the second page by pressing down. Press enter to select it and you've just found a secret feature in which co-writer David Goyer talks about scripting the film.

Deleted scenes make innumerable appearances on these digital eggs. On the seventh season of "Seinfeld," you can watch a cut shot from the episode "Engagement" by pressing right and selecting the ring that appears in the "Deleted Scenes" section on disc two. On the first disc of the set, a "lost scene" can be found in the episode setup area if you press down twice to highlight Elaine. If you take that you're going back to the main menu on the Click DVD and press right instead, you can find a lightning bolt icon which will show you what wound up on the floor of the editing room.

You can often find little extras that give you a closer look at a part of a film. The moving paintings from Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban are the subject of a video buried in "Sir Cadagon's Quest" under "The Great Hall" option on the second disc. If you press left during the intro to the knight's journey, you'll be treated to a tour of Hogwart's paintings.

Others add something extra just for the DVD that's not in the film. Jim Carrey's character from Eternal Sunshine of the Spotless Mind, Joel, supplies a short cartoon that can be found when you press up on "Inside the Mind of Michel Gondry." A tiny menu will pop up on the bottom of the screen and you can press enter on it to see the animation. Some even help you see the movie completely differently.

On disc two of the Limited Edition of Memento, a feature allows you to watch the film in chronological order. To unlock this though, you have to do a complicated test, but you can solve this puzzle easily by taking the clock path on Question six and putting the pictures in order from fourth to first. Then the film's credits should roll backward and the film will play from start to finish.

Then there are those eggs that weren't hard-boiled at all, but are plastic and filled with a thousand colorful jelly beans rather than a bad tasting yolk. Dr. Evil gets his own secret section on Austin Powers: The Spy Who Shagged Me. Clicking on the Special Features option on the main menu will bring about some normal extras at first, but then if you wait about a minute, Dr. Evil's spaceship will fly by and drop off his symbol. If you press enter on that symbol, another special features" area entirely dedicated to the hairless mastermind himself will appear.

Sometimes they're not very hidden at all, like the eggs your parents used to leave on the patio table in plain sight. If you mosey over to the languages menu on the DVD for Borat, you'll find an option to watch the film in Hebrew. However, if you click on said option, a red flashing warning screen will appear and announce that you've been trapped as a Jew. On the widescreen edition of Billy Madison, if you go to Adam Sandler's filmography under the "Cast and Crew" section, you can find trailers unadvertised but not particularly concealed for Bulletproof and Happy Gilmore.

Remember those few times when your grandparents hosted the Easter egg hunts in their backyards? Well DVD Easter eggs represent elderly movies as well. Citizen Kane's Special Features" menu allows you to access a hidden interview if you press right and highlight a sled while on any item that's on the left of the screen. You can watch a montage of "Plan 6" from Stanley Kubrick's Dr Strangelove or "How I Learned to Stop Worrying and Love the Bomb" if you press down on the main menu until the double globe on the bottom of the screen illuminates. On the disc for Charlie Chaplin classic The Gold Rush, a short clip on the scoring of the film can be accessed by pressing right when your cursor is on the option to view the original film and clicking the music note that lights up.

You can scour your DVDs for these features, pressing random directions until something lights up, or you can cheat and use the Internet. The Internet Movie Database (www.imdb.com) often offers Easter eggs in the "Trivia" section of a movie's details. The most comprehensive Web site though, and the easiest to search, is http://MovieWeb.com/DVD-eggs. It provides alphabetically organized listings for hundreds of films, even ones that all the DVD extras in the world wouldn't make entertaining.

So this April 8, if you feel like having a movie day but miss your childhood Easter egg hunts, get out your DVDs and find some of these bells and whistles that come with them. The good thing is that after this hunt, if you have too many eggs, you won't have a stomachache or bad breath.

HBO show returns to eager fans Sunday

SOPRANOS from page 5

Pit got smashed in during a riot, among other things. So, if your memory is a little hazy about where we left off in the world of Tony Soprano, never fear; help is on the way.

In the first episode of season six, everyone will recall that Tony was shot by his Alzheimer's-ridden Uncle Junior and was comatose until the third episode. Following his awakening, Tony appeared to have a new outlook on life. "Every day is a gift," he told his sister Janice and his therapist, Dr. Melfi.

Throughout the season, however, many events unfold that put his new outlook to the test. Imprisoned New York Boss Johnny Sack is hassling Tony to take out New York Capo Rusty Millio. New York Acting Boss Phil Leotardo is still sore about the murder of his brother by Tony's now-deceased cousin. Tony's son has vowed vengeance against Uncle Junior and attempts to murder him in his psychiatric ward. Christopher, Tony's nephew, persists in meddling in the movie business, much to Tony's chagrin.

To top it all off, one of Tony's own Capos, Vito Spatafore, has been outed as a homosexual – a big no-no in the Mafia world. Vito fled to New Hampshire while tensions reached an all-time high back in the Garden State.

Tony, as part of his new outlook, wants to forget about Vito and carry on with life, but Phil won't hear of it. He tracks down and murders Vito in cold blood, infuriating Tony and prompting him to retaliate against New York.

In a heated debate about Vito, Fat Dom Gamiello, one of Phil's New York soldiers, is killed by a couple of Tony's Jersey guys. Shortly after, Phil's wire room is exploded, nearly killing Phil and his maid goomar.

Butch Deconcini, a no-nonsense New York Capo, is pushing Phil to whack Tony, but Phil is hesitant. Butch wouldn't dare make a move without Phil's permission. Then Phil is put in the hospital after suffering from a heart attack.

Tony visits him, and they have a heart-to-heart about no-show jobs and grandkids that ends with Phil in tears. He appears to let bygones be bygones with Tony, but Butch doesn't seem to feel the same way, as he lets Tony know in the hallway of the hospital.

Will Phil recover? Will Butch let his hatred for New Jersey get the best of him? Will Christopher go through with his Hollywood plans? Will Paulie finally snap? After the final nine episodes, will the Sopranos still have "a beautiful home"?

To find out, tune in this Sunday, April 8, at 9 p.m. on channel two in the dorms. Make sure to tune in, everyone, and have an amazing Sunday night with your favorite mob boss.

Anthony David Rudi can be reached at arudi@student.umass.edu

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

is hiring copy editors for the Fall 2007 semester

if interested please pick up an application at the Daily Collegian Office, located in the Campus Center basement or contact Sheryl Wolnik at swolnik@student.umass.edu.

Love Ann Landers and Dear Abby?

Ask Veronica Garrett, Collegian Advice Columnist

vgarrett@student.umass.edu

SUMMER JOBS

Are you a creative, energetic, and nurturing person? Would you enjoy spending the summer in a beautiful natural environment working with children ages 5-13? YMCA Camp Norwich, just 20 minutes from Northampton, is now hiring Counselors, Lifeguards, and Instructors for Nature Study, Arts & Crafts, Athletics, Boating, Wood Working, Ceramics, and Music.

Call the Camp Registrar or stop by the HRYMCA for a camp brochure and camp staff application.

Hampshire Regional YMCA
286 Prospect Street
Northampton, MA 01060
413-584-7086 • www.hrymca.org

Photos Courtesy of M

Stone's 500th may come today

BASEBALL from page 10

club from last year and we feel we're improved. Things change, so I'm not concerned about that as far as how the two teams will do against each other this year. It's a new season, a new year and a clean slate. We'll see how it goes."

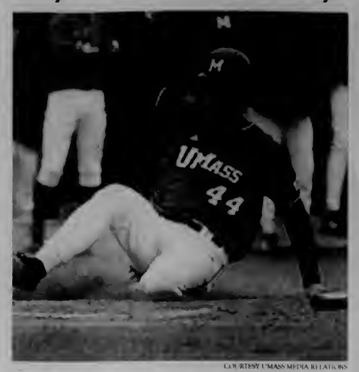
Unlike the Rams, the Minutemen aren't entering the series with an extended winning streak, but their 4-3 win over Holy Cross on Tuesday did snap a five-game skid and has the team going in a positive direction. Stone is hoping for more of the same this weekend.

"We just need to play well, get good pitching and play good defense," he said. "We need to play hard, be focused and execute."

The UMass pitching staff faces a solid, veteran Rams lineup, featuring five upperclassmen with batting averages above .285 – including seniors Eric Larson and Ryan Cunningham who are both hitting better than .350. URI has hit at a .282 clip collectively, compared to the .265 team average compiled by the Minutemen. Despite the lower team average and some of their recent struggles at the plate, the Minutemen – similar to URI – still feature four hitters hitting greater than .300.

Jim MacDonald has led the offensive attack for the Minutemen so far this season, in what has been a bit of a revelation. The sophomore third baseman hit just .221 last year with 16 RBIs in his 38 starts, and in just 14 starts in 2007, he already has a team-high 14 RBIs to go along with his .322 batting average – which is just one point behind team-leader Adam Tempesta.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@student.umass.edu. Log onto the Daily Collegian Sports Blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.



COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Senior Bryan Adamski is one of four Minutemen batting above .300 this season. His 24 total bases is third on the team.

Proctor has hot bat going into weekend

SOFTBALL from page 10

junior Lauren Proctor.

The left fielder was 5-for-6 in the two games against Dayton, with a home run, four runs scored and four RBIs.

"LP is LP," Sortino said. "A 5-for-6 day, in a failure activity like hitting, I think that would be an unreasonable expectation. LP has done those kinds of things for us. She's sneaky. She sneaks up, she doesn't get a lot of attention from too many people but she gets it done all the time.

"She's very, very consistent," Sortino continued. "I expect her to give me 100 percent of whatever she's got on Sunday."

Proctor is second on the Minutewomen with a .378 batting average. She leads the team in doubles (6) and is second in RBIs and total bases, with 23 and 45, respectively.

She is also in third place with her marks of 15 runs scored and 34 overall hits.

The two other Minutewomen who went yard on Tuesday were senior Amanda Acampora and sophomore Whitney Mollica.

Acampora is a team captain and has four round-trippers (and 20 hits) on the year to accompany her 10 runs, 17 RBIs and 35 total bases.

She also has a team-leading 20 walks so far.

Mollica – who appeared in Sports Illustrated's "Faces in the Crowd" in June for being the first person to win A-10 Player and Rookie of Year in the same season – has two jacks and 24 hits on the season.

She adds 15 RBIs, 33 total bases and 10 walks.

Sortino stressed, however, that the key to her team's success is in how it acts, not as a group of individuals, but as a team – in addition to playing good, fundamental softball.

"All I ask from them is to give us a good at-bat, that they work their way through the count, that they put good swings on good pitches and then everything else kind of takes care of itself," she said.

Sortino declined to say who would be pitching for UMass on Sunday.

She was unsure yesterday of the status of team center fielder Candice Molinari. The senior suffered a bruised hand in Tuesday's first game when she attempted to slap at a high-and-inside pitch. The captain had to be removed from the lineup for both games and it is unclear if she will be healthy enough to play on Easter.

"I hope [she can play]," Sortino said. "We will do everything in our power to have her in the lineup."

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu. Log onto the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.

A-10 leaders pulling away early on

Fordham, SLU, UM jump out in front quickly in league play

A-10 Softball

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

The Atlantic 10 softball season may still be very young, but the frontrunners in the conference have already begun to separate themselves from the pack.

Three teams – Fodham, UMass and Saint Louis – have started out the season on a tear. The Rams (23-12, 7-0 A-10) are out to the early lead, sweeping their first three series this season.

The Minutewomen (17-12-1) and the Billikens (17-19) stand a virtual game behind Fordham, each with a 4-0 conference record. The only other team above .500 in the conference is Temple (6-11, 2-1 A-10).

Saint Joseph's (7-13) stands at 1-1 early in its conference schedule, splitting its only series with La Salle.

The rest of the A-10 sits at least a pair of games below .500 already. La Salle, Charlotte, Rhode Island, Dayton, George Washington and St. Bonaventure have all stumbled out of the gate, creating a large gap between the haves and have-nots in this early stage of A-10 play.

Disappointing start

One of the bigger surprises thus far is the 1-3 conference record of last year's regular season co-champion, Charlotte.

The 49ers made waves in their first season in the conference (making the jump from Conference-USA) with a 17-3 A-10 ledger, tying UMass for first-place in the conference.

Charlotte was quickly bounced out of the A-10 tournament last year, losing its first two games in the double-elimination format to St. Bonaventure, 4-1 (8 inn.), and then Fordham, 4-0.

The 49ers did not appear to be ready for a let down this season, starting the year with a 20-12 non-conference record before A-10 play began – the best non-conference mark of any A-10 team entering league play.

Since then, the 49ers were swept by Fordham to and then split with George Washington, giving the Colonials their only win this season, and have already lost as many games in the A-10 as all of last season.

However, while the Charlotte bats have remained as hot as last year, the team is struggling in the field and on the mound. The 49ers are second only to Temple in batting average, at .294, but also have the second-highest number of errors in the field (behind Saint Louis) with 49 in 36 games.

They are also miles away from last year's team ERA. Last year, the 49ers boasted a 2.50 ERA good for second only to UMass (1.82).This year's 3.55 ERA – more than a run more per game higher that last year – dropped them to fifth in the league.

Out for revenge

Last year's A-10 Tournament runner-up, Fordham has returned this season looking to get over the hump.

The Rams finished in third place last season with a 13-5 record, behind Charlotte and UMass, who tied for first. Fordham helped oust Charlotte from its first-ever A-10 tourney, but was defeated twice by rival UMass, including in the tournament's final game.

Fordham and UMass have developed quite the rivalry over the past few year. In 2005, Fordham ended the Minutewomen's streak of 14 consecutive regular season title, finishing in first place with a 15-1 record.

Nevertheless, UMass came back in the playoffs, winning the conference tournament and embarrassing the Rams twice, beating them, 8-2, and then 7-0 in the championship game.

After a 6-0 start to its conference schedule, Fordham has put itself in a position to once again unseat the perennial A-10 powerhouse.

The two teams will meet for back-to-back games on May 4-5 during the final weekend of the regular season in Amherst.

Much Improved

One team that is doing better than it did last year is Saint Louis. The Billikens have started the season 4-0, sweeping Dayton and St. Bonaventure in a pair of double-headers.

SLU finished last season in a three-way tie for sixth place with Rhode Island and Dayton at 8-12.

However, the Flyers and Bonnies have one win between them. The true test for the Billikens will come this Sunday, when they take on UMass in a double-header Sunday in Amherst.

If Saint Louis can take even one game from the defending A-10 champs on their on field, it would mean a huge step up as the team tries to keep pace in the conference.

The Billikens split a double-header with the Minutewomen last season, shutting down the powerful UM offense in a 1-0 win before losing the nightcap, 13-3 in six innings.

Jeremy Rice can be reach at jeremyr@student.umass.edu. Log on to the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.

FILE PHOTO / UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Sophomore Samantha Salato is fifth on the team, batting .289 this season with 11 RBIs and one home run.

Minutewomen battle injuries

TRACK and FIELD from page 10

"We're really aiming for the conference meet at the beginning of May. Every meet is a step to prepare us."

Still, although injuries and illnesses have hurt the depth of the Minutewomen, they do have a few top individual performers who will have the chance to shine in Storrs.

Junior Christina DeRosa will attempt to build off her impressive opening meet. Last week, DeRosa scored a second place finish in the 1500 meter run, completing it in 4 minutes, 50 seconds, as well as dominating the 5,000-meter run, winning with a time of 17:23, over 45 seconds faster than the second-place runner.

The competition looks to be much stiffer this week, but Lafreniere thinks the competition can be actually be a benefit.

"I think she's strong enough to come back and challenge and we'll see," said Lafreniere. "I expect that at some point this year, when we start to rest Christina, that she will go under 17 [minutes]."

Freshman thrower Lisa Wilson is another bright spot for the Minutewomen. She comes off a first-place finish in the discus throw, with a long toss of 135 feet, in addition to top ten finishes in the hammer throw and shot put.

Wilson will attempt to repeat her victory in the discus, but also looks to use the UConn meet as a chance to improve her skills in the hammer throw. According to assistant coach Mark Gottdenker, Wilson has the potential to be as good in the hammer throw, as in the discus.

"Right now she is very motivated," said Gottdenker. "Her motivation is not quite at the same level as her technique at this point. That makes it a little bit of a crapshoot, but she's going to do well, before the end of the season things will fall into place and people will see what she's capable of."

Both coaches talked about how the rainy weather this week has impacted practice. Usually the practices are more balanced, but the coaches worked around the rain by pushing their athletes hard on Monday and Tuesday, and used Wednesday as a recovery day.

According to O'Brien, those types of practices aren't ideal, but the teams could not risk injury by running hard on a sleet-covered field. Neither coach believes the weather will seriously affect anyone's performance.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu. Log on to the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.

Temple, GW invade Amherst

W. LACROSSE from page 10

good players in the midfield you can control the game from both ends," Venechanos said.

The scoring trio of junior attack Kathleen Typadis, sophomore midfielder Holly Drown and junior Melynda Zwick account for 72 of the teams 103 goals. Venechanos would like everyone to step up when they have an opportunity to score.

"Looking for our attack to get on track, looking for some people to have multi-goal games," Venechanos said. "We [cannot] just have a couple girls step up, we're looking for more girls to step up and be more balanced."

Sophomore midfielder Meghan Reddy has seven goals on the season but is capable of having a multi-goal game. She recorded a hat trick along with four ground balls against Harvard. Junior Kristina Twichell has six goals but she has been instrumental in hitting the open person for a goal. Twichell is more likely to have a multi-assist game than a multi-goal game. She leads the team with 12 assists.

"She's been doing a good job of finding the open person," Venechanos said of her leading passer.

The Owls play better at home, allowing 11.5 goals per game as opposed to the road, where they are giving up 16 goals per contest. "[Temple's] defense, especially playing at home, is going to be more stingy," she said. "I'm sure they've fixed up a couple of things and we've fixed up a couple of things on the attack so it should be a good battle."

On Sunday the Minutewomen finally return to McGuirk Stadium when they battle George Washington (4-5, 0-1 A-10). UMass leads the all-time series 3-2 in the short history with the Colonials. Last season the Minutewomen traveled to GW and defeated them 11-10, to clinch an A-10 playoffs berth.

"[McGuirk is] a great environment to be a part of here," Venechanos said. "We're looking to build up the success we had against Albany and hopefully well get some flash backs from that game."

The Minutewomen's hosted a home game back on March 10 when they crushed Albany, 15-7, with Typadis scoring a career high six goals.

"They're a very strong team, they have a bulk of their talent in the midfield, she said. "It's going to be a tough weekend."

Junior midfielder Kristin Karcsh ranks fifth with 3.67 points per game. She has 25 goals and eight assists.

"They have been able to see us play for 10 games and we've seen them play 10 games, so both teams are going to be pretty familiar with each other," Venechanos said. "The execution is going to be huge."

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@student.umass.edu. Log onto the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Outside of the "Big Three" (Typadis, Drown and Zwick), Kristina Twichell is the only other Minutewoman to score double-digit points this season. She has notched 18 points on six goals and 12 assists.

SUMMER VACATION PLANS?
PLANNING A SEMESTER ABROAD?
NEED A PASSPORT?
AMHERST TOWN CLERK'S OFFICE PROCESSES PASSPORTS
MONDAY THRU FRIDAY 8 AM TO 4 PM
FOR MORE INFO:259-3035
WE'RE ACROSS FROM NEWBURY COMICS

CINEMARK
The Best ...
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St 413-587-4233
Schedule for Fri 4/06/07 - Thurs 4/12/07
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
The Warriors (R)* 12:01am
Are We Done Yet? (PG)* 1:30 4:40 7:30 9:55
Freshmen Dog (PG)* 1:10 4:05 7:30 10:05
Grindhouse (R)* 1:30 7:00 10:05
The Reaping (R)* 1:45 4:55 7:50 10:15
Premonition (PG-13) 1:15 4:25 7:35 9:50
300 (R) 1:40 4:50 7:35 10:20
Blades of Glory (PG-13)* 1:35 4:35 7:40 10:00
Meet the Robinsons (PG-13)* 1:00 4:00 7:15 10:15
TMNT (PG) 1:10 4:30 7:35 9:30
Wild Hogs (PG-13) 1:05 4:40 7:10 9:40
Premonition (PG-13) 1:10 4:25 7:35 9:50
Reign Over Me (R) 12:55 4:05 7:00 9:55
Shooter (R) 12:55 4:10 7:10 10:10
The Hills Have Eyes II (R) 1:45 4:55 7:50 10:25
The Last Mimsy (PG) 1:25 4:20 5:55 8:20
* no passes or supercinema
• NO PASSES NO SUPERPLAYER
Tickets & showtimes for 3/30 at cinemark.com

NOW SHOWING
APR. 6 - APR. 12
amherst cinema
NOTES ON A SCANDAL
THE LOOKOUT
Fri: 3:15, 5:30, 7:45, 10:00
Sat: 1:00, 5:30, 7:45, 10:00
Sun: 1:00, 3:15, 5:30, 7:45
Mon-Thur: 3:15, 5:30, 7:45
THE LIVES OF OTHERS
JANUS FILMS
THE CRANES ARE FLYING
THE 400 BLOWS
Operation Homecoming:
28 AMITY STREET (413) 253-2547
www.AmherstCinema.org

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

	7	1				4
3				6				8
				7		3	1
		8	5				7	4
		2				8
4	6				8	5
	1	7		5
6				8				7
		3				6	5

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Rough-and-tumble girls
8 Keep up
15 Actor Banderas
16 Make bigger
17 Loyal
18 Bullheaded
19 Contain
20 Stitch
21 Match up
22 Pox root
25 Furnishing scheme
27 Kismet
28 Marriage
30 Dapper fellow
31 Toned down
32 Dwarf tree
34 Hard work
36 Word in partnerships
37 Learned one
39 Pompous fool
42 Town honcho
43 Ethnic
45 Noisy lower
46 Colliers workplace
50 Rustic inn
51 Astronaut Shepard
52 Reagan's attorney general
54 Undesirable plant
55 Public conveyance
56 Brooks or Blanc
57 Singles and doubles: e.g.
59 Mimic
61 Worship as a god
65 Repeat performances
66 Systematic procedure
67 Venus and Serena: e.g.
68 Caught

DOWN
1 Small bit
2 United
3 Videos channel
4 Blubbers
5 Aware of
6 Bow to
7 Covered with new grass
8 Like summer rentals
9 Subordinate to
10 Deli side order
11 Scott's cap
12 Former PLO leader
13 Catch fire
14 Traveled
22 Big brass
23 Some time hence
24 Tough outer covering
26 Dieter's unit
27 Hairy coat
29 Adenoidal
31 Fable lesson
33 Very cold
35 Pub
38 Desperate
39 Diplomat's assistant
40 Common herb
41 Toboggan
42 Boyz II
44 English primrose
45 Pampers
46 School graduates
47 Fundamentals
49 Casual top
52 Poetic measure
53 Duck down
56 Female equine
58 Roman wrap
60 Tyke
62 Mischievous kid
63 Capital of Zimbabwe?
64 Last part

IDENTIFY THIS ANIMAL

HINT: IT IS CAPABLE OF EATING A SMALL HUMAN

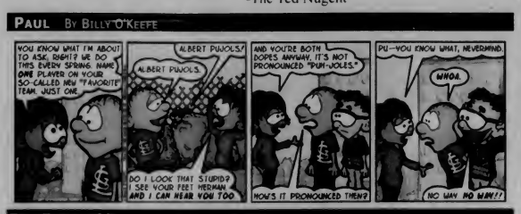
SUBMIT GUESSES TO: COLLEGIANCOMICS@YAHOO.COM

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"If you want to get a sensual thunderbolt then you have got to be cocked, locked and ready to rock, doc. I find that whole milk and lots of Vitamin D help."

-The Ted Nugent

PAUL By Billy O'Keefe



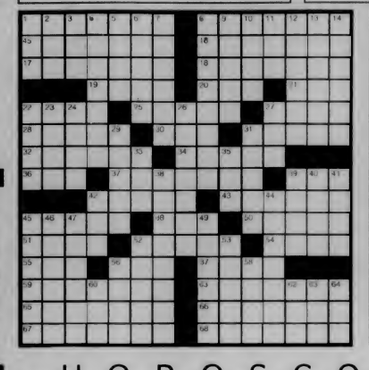
YOU KNOW WHAT I'M ABOUT TO ASK, RIGHT? WE DO THIS EVERY SPRING. NAME ONE PLAYER ON YOUR SO-CALLED NEW "FAVORITE TEAM. JUST ONE.
ALBERT PUJOLS.
ALBERT PUJOLS.
DO I LOOK THAT STUPID? SEE YOUR FEET MEXICAN AND I CAN HEAR YOU TOO.
AND YOU'RE BOTH DOPES ANYWAY. IT'S NOT PRONOUNCED "PUH-JOLES."
HOW'S IT PRONOUNCED THEN?
PU--YOU KNOW WHAT, NEVERMIND.
WHOA.
NO WAY. NO WAY!!

THE FAMILY MONSTER By Josh Shalek

HARD KNOCKS By Louis Coppola

HARD KNOCKS
HEY, I JUST WANTED TO THANK YOU FOR LETTING ME STAY HERE.
AND I DON'T WANT YOU TO THINK I'M A DEADBEAT JUST BECAUSE I'M IN DEBT AND I GOT EVICTED FOR THREATENING MY LANDLORD.
RELAX, IT'S OKAY. YOU'RE JUST NERVOUS. I KNOW WHAT IT'S LIKE TO BE IN DEBT.
YEAH, KNOW SAID YOU'RE SWIMMING IN IT.
DID HE?

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Josh Shalek



Continuing & Professional Education
UMass Amherst
Summer 2007
Here are a few of the many Gen. Ed. classes offered this summer:
Online:
• English 132: Man and Woman in Literature
• Psych 350: Child Psychology
On Campus:
• Math 131: Calculus I
• Art 104: Basic Studio Drawing
I: June 4 - July 2
II: July 6 - August 22
Register Now!
By visiting us @
www.UMassUlearn.net/dc

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
The sounds of you singing is a crime against the ears of humanity.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
It's surprising that the idea of a giant rabbit doesn't terribly upset tiny children.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Everyone will be a monkey's uncle but no one ever wants to be a monkey's aunt.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
It is a proven fact that if you talk as fast as you possibly can you will live longer.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
There is such a thing as life after college, it is called parenthood.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Search the internet for pictures of cats in sinks and you'll shed tears of pure joy.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You are the Krazy Glue that holds our broken planet together.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Spend your weekend on an epic quest to find the elusive "Kosher Pig."

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Every road you travel will be plagued by potholes. Literally and figuratively.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
The economy of MA was built upon cod-fish. This explains why it currently stinks.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Yellow gum drops are derived from the pee of the fruit stripe gum zebra.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Host a teddy bear picnic but please check ID's to make sure no real bears get in.

The week of Ted Nugent may be over... but the ways of Ted Nugent are neverending.

www.dailycollegian.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Like no other course, Army ROTC All money going to school and none for the weekend? We pay you to be a student and learn leadership www.umass.edu/army-rotc

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Mill Valley Estates APARTMENT FOR RENT 2 bedroom $1125, 3 bedroom $1425, 4 bedroom $2175 Accepting Applications, 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winnco.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

EMPLOYMENT

Outdoor Recreation Jobs Rafting guides full or part time Massachusetts or Maine. Will train! Contact www.moxierafting.com 800-866-6943

EMPLOYMENT

Summer on Cape Cod Rent & utilities paid in exchange for providing transportation for teen. Easy walking distance to downtown & beaches, awenkozma@aol.com

Full time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office, $9.50/hour Applications available at 235 Whitmore and are due April 13th.

Line-cooks needed Full-time Part-time available. Apply in person Amherst Brewing Co. 24 N. Pleasant st.

EMPLOYMENT

Attention All Juniors and Senior! April 6th is the last day to apply to become a legal Assistant with the Student Legal Services Office. Earn 12 undergraduate credits while gaining valuable experience in the legal field! Contact us at 545-1995 or stop by our office at 922 Campus Center!

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

FOR SALE

English Bulldog Puppies AKC, Champion Bloodlines and come with health certificate, worm-ings, updated shots. Available at this time 4 males and 5 females. $550 each, ready to go to their new homes, selling fast. Puppies available now. For more information and pictures please contact Jessie Young on her email address: jyoung-petcare@yahoo.com

HEALTH

Apple Patch Diet Take control of your life. Visit us at www.officialdiet.info

SERVICES

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992. www.tapestryhealth.com

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, APRIL 6, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutemen return home

UM hosts first home series of season against Rhode Island

BY ELI ROWENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After a 16-game road trip and a number of postponements, the Massachusetts baseball team finally gets to play at Earl Lorden Field today for the start of a three-game set against Rhode Island.

The Minutemen (5-11, 2-4 A-10) will start senior Chris Lloyd in today's 3 p.m. start time, while freshman Jared Freni gets the call tomorrow. Sunday's starter has yet to be determined.

Rhode Island (6-16, 3-3 A-10) comes into Amherst winners of four straight, including a three-game series sweep against a solid Duquesne team, also from the A-10. Despite completing that sweep on the road, URI has won just 5 of its 16 matchups away from home.

UMass coach Mike Stone enters this weekend with 499 career wins at the helm for the Maroon and White, but he's more excited about finally being able to play in Amherst more than anything else.

"The only time I think about [the 500th win] is when people mention it to me," he said. "I really don't spend much time thinking about it. It's more important for me to put together a good team and a good season each year.

"It'll be great [to play at home]," he added. "We've played 16 games on the road, and we haven't even practiced on the field yet. The snow is melting and we're planning on practicing there [Thursday], so that will be great."

Despite holding a decisive edge in career head-to-head meetings between the two schools, the Minutemen had a difficult time against the Rams last year – losing all three matchups, although by only a total of five runs. Even with that sweep over the Minutemen last year in the final series of the season, URI still trails UMass 56 to 98 in the 101-year rivalry.

Asked whether the suddenly hot play of the Rams or last season's sweep concerned him at all, Stone was quite clear about how much – or how little – either of that mattered to him this weekend.

"I don't really focus or dwell on what the other teams are doing," he said. "If we do what we're supposed to be doing, we feel we will be in good shape. We're a different hall

See BASEBALL on page 8

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Sophomore Adam Tempesta leads the Minutemen with a .323 batting average and five doubles. His nine RBIs are second on the team.

Position filled, Ford not going to WVU

As quickly as the West Virginia men's basketball coaching position opened up, it has been taken – by Kansas State head coach Bob Huggins.

According to an Associated Press article, KSU Athletic Director Tim Weiser announced yesterday afternoon that Huggins had resigned as the KSU head coach to take the West Virginia job.

A press conference is scheduled for Friday and, according the article, Huggins is already in Morgantown meeting with the WVU athletic staff.

So what does this mean for UMass coach Travis Ford? It's one less offer luring him away from the Pioneer Valley. Ford was rumored to be interested in the Mountaineers job according to an NCAA sports blog on aol.com and the Charleston Daily Mail, which had sources close to the situation.

But now that the WVU job opening has closed, there are only two significant and attainable upgrades left for Ford on the market: Kansas State and Arkansas.

The Razorbacks have had a hectic stretch of ups and downs, including Dana Altman's recent double-backing to Creighton after he was nearly signed as the Arkansas head coach.

So now the market opens again for Arkansas basketball and KSU, as both programs have just lost their head men's basketball coaches.

Nothing has surfaced yet about Ford being interested in either KSU or Arkansas.

Florida coach and two-time defending national champion Billy Donovan turned down the Kentucky head coaching job, so that remains open. Ford, however, has fallen down the list of candidates recently. ESPN.com's Andy Katz, when reached via e-mail, said that he "doubts that it gets to [Ford]."

Tom Izzo, the current head coach at Michigan State, and Tom Crean, the Marquette head coach, are still possibilities for the Kentucky head coaching position.

-Rob Greenfield

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

UMass coach Travis Ford has had a number of potential jobs to consider around the NCAA, though none have panned out yet.

Saint Louis visits Amherst for Easter

BY DOMENIC POLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After taking both games of a double-header from Dayton on Tuesday, the Massachusetts softball team (17-12-1, 4-0 A-10) is gearing up to host two games against St. Louis (17-19, 4-0 A-10) on Easter Sunday.

The Maroon and White split an Apr. 23 double-header with the Billikens last year, as they dropped a heartbreaking 1-0 game in the first game, only to bounce back and squash its opponent 13-3 in the second.

It was the first time UMass coach Elaine Sortino saw the Missouri-based team in action – as it was new to the Atlantic 10 Conference – and she says all she can do is prepare for whatever team her Minutewomen face.

"I think they're going to give us a different look this year than what we saw last year. It's really not a team I know," Sortino said. "This year they have a new coaching staff so I think they're going to have a whole different look. On paper they look like they're more than formidable. ..I think it's going to be a big, very competitive double-header for us on Sunday."

One player that has grabbed Sortino's attention is freshman Nicki Jost.

Having gone 34-for-112, Jost has accumulated a batting average of .304. The catcher also has touched 53 bases, scored 22 runs and belted three home runs.

In addition, she leads in her team in both doubles and RBIs – with totals of 10 and 21, respectively.

Jost has already been given A-10 Rookie of the Week honors twice in a row.

Another player making headlines on the St. Louis campus is senior Jill Pursell.

The outfielder is 46-for-112 with a team-leading .411 batting average.

She also heads the squad in three other prime statistical categories – homers (4), runs (28) and total bases (67).

Sortino said UMass must be ready for whatever St. Louis throws in its path.

One of the players she knows she can rely to come through is

See SOFTBALL on page 8

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Junior Lauren Proctor went 5-for-6 Tuesday against URI, raising her batting average to .378, good enough for second on the team.

Minutewomen begin Atlantic 10 play

BY STEVE GAMES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It's a new season for the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team. The Minutewomen (5-5) start Atlantic 10 play against Temple this afternoon and George Washington on Sunday.

The Owls (2-6) finished 5-2 in the Atlantic 10 last season. Temple lost in the A-10 Championship game to Richmond, 13-11. The Owls have struggled in conference play with only two wins. They have allowed teams to average 12.75 goals per game. Temple played a tough non-conference schedule, facing No. 3 North Carolina, No. 5 Virginia, No. 11 Penn State, No. 12 Penn and No. 19 Rutgers. The Minutewomen also struggle against top 20 opponents going 1-4. They defeated No. 16 Boston University back on Feb. 24, 13-11.

The Minutewomen had an eight-day layoff before A-10 conference play. They played four road games in eight days with their only win coming against Boston College, 10-9.

"We've kind of been re-energized," coach Alexis Venechanos said. "We've been stepping up in practices, more competitive, more intense and were just trying to simulate the intensity that we might be seeing in the games."

Last season the Minutewomen finished 4-3 in the A-10 securing the final playoff spot. The goal for them this season is to get back to the playoffs and have another chance at an Atlantic 10 championship. The Minutewomen are going into the A-10 games with a different mind set as these games have more meaning on their season.

"I think the girls are realizing [it], especially the older girls. This is there last A-10s [and] potentially championships," Venechanos said. "We're trying to value each day, that's what were going to need to do because the A-10 games are going to be very intense."

Temple dominates the all-time series, holding a 3-24 record against UMass. Last year, the Owls squeezed out an 11-10 victory. The Minutewomen have not beaten Temple since 2000, when they defeated the Owls in the Atlantic 10 Championship game, 3-2, in overtime.

"They have some great midfielders, great attackers [and] they have a tough defense," Venechanos said of Temple. "From top to bottom they're a great team."

The midfield of the Owls is strong and led by the upperclassmen. Senior midfielder Allison Frengs leads the team with 20 goals and three assists. Senior midfielder Casey Cech is second on the team with 14 goals and three assists. Junior midfielder Hillary Richards has 13 ground balls and 13 draw controls.

"When you have a lot of your

See W. LACROSSE on page 8

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Junior Kathleen Typadis continues to dominate opponents, averaging three goals per game. Her 36 total points and 38 shots on goal lead the Minutewomen this season.

UConn Invitational next up for UMass

BY SCOTT FELDMAN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

It's off to the races once again for the Massachusetts men's and women's outdoor track team. This Saturday, the Maroon and White will travel to Storrs, Conn. to compete in the UConn Invitational.

The meet features eight schools, including Sacred Heart, UConn, Brown, Central Connecticut, Hartford, Northeast, Harvard and UMass. With so many schools competing in the event, the opposition the Minutemen face will be much steeper than their last meet at home.

"I think that competition will be tougher, and hopefully our kids will rise to the occasion," UMass men's coach Ken O'Brien said.

One of the strengths of the men's track team will be the 400-meter dash, led by seniors Manny Harris-Lopes, James Godinho and junior Nathan Barksdale. Godinho and Harris-Lopes had strong performances last week in the UMass Five-Way Meet, finishing second and third respectively. Despite Godinho's high finish last week, O'Brien may have Godhino run the 800-meter dash instead, in an effort to give him more experience running longer distances.

The 1,500-meter run has been a top event for the Minutemen, as they have outstanding depth in that event. Last week UMass had six of the top ten runners in that event. Nils Fischer led the Minutemen with a third place finish.

Sophomore Jesse Regnier is ranked in the top ten for the steeplechase. He will be counted on to score points for the Minutemen as an individual.

"Those [events], along with the relay teams, 4x100 and the 4x400, we should have some pretty good performances," O'Brien said.

The women's track team has had a difficult start to the outdoor season so far. The team has been wracked with illness and injuries, preventing the team from having the season it would prefer. Distance runner Amber Sayer is returning from a stress fracture, and may run the 5,000-meter run to test her ankle. Other performers who are not competing at 100 percent are freshman pole vaulter Molly Chapin (recurring flu), and 800-meter runner Taryn Trap (sinus infection).

According to UMass women's coach Julie Lafreniere, the UConn Invitational will be a chance to build on progress made in practice and prepare for the A-10 championships.

"We're not the most healthy squad right now, but hopefully we can get our legs under us," said Lafreniere.

See TRACK and FIELD on page 8

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

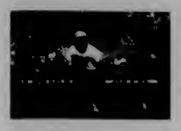
Junior Nathan Barksdale and the rest of the sprinters will anchor UMass at the UConn Invitational after a strong showing last week at home.

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

CLOUDY : HI: 48 LO: 26 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM MONDAY, APRIL 9, 2007



MINUTEMEN DEFEAT RED STORM PAGE 10

BON SAVANTS SPEAK ON UMASS ORIGIN PAGE 5

The Heat is On

Part one of a four-part series on global warming and what students can do about it

U.S. is number one contributor

BY LAUREN MOUSSETTE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Global warming seems to be the last issue on the minds of the American college student. But a recent report by Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change found two things: one is that global warming is real, and two is that our generation is likely to see big changes in the world in the next century.

They estimate a 90 percent probability that humans are the cause of the climate change, and it is doubtful it is occurring due to known natural causes.

University of Massachusetts Resource Economics Professor Barry Field said that college students have a good reason to learn all they can about global warming.

"[College students] are young, growing up and will be alive in 50-70 years," Field said. "If we are feeling the effects now, imagine them 50 years from now." He mentions the idea that prosperity will be suffering for our neglect. "Not attending to the problem is irresponsible," he said.

The political activism of the college student has decreased dramatically over the past 30 years, Field said. Political involvement among college students was more active in the past because issues like civil rights and the Vietnam draft directly affected their lives. Now that society is causing the problem, people need to start being more active and responsible.

Already the global temperature has increased a degree or two. But the IPCC predicts that if it increases by 3.6 degrees Fahrenheit, up to 30 percent of the planet's species are at risk of dying out and will be forced to relocate in search of more suitable environments. Out of the top 12 warmest years that have been recorded with scientific instruments, about 92 percent of them have occurred in these past 12 years.

Al Gore's film, "An Inconvenient Truth," also mentions potential hazards that global warming and climate change can instigate. It is mentioned that the current running from the African coast and up by

See ENEMY on page 3

Contributions to Global Warming
Areas are proportional to historic carbon dioxide emissions from fossil fuel combustion, 1980–1999
INDUSTRIALIZED DEVELOPING

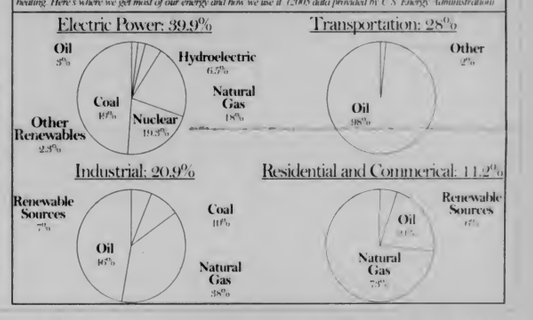
GLOBAL WARMING BY THE NUMBERS

Most of the energy used in the United States goes toward electricity generation, industrial use, transportation and household heating. Here's where we get most of our energy and how we use it. (2005 data provided by U.S. Energy Administration)



UMass professor stresses urgency of immediate action

BY SOPHIA BRUNEAU
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

"The future is going to look quite grim. Glaciers will melt, sea ice in the Artic will continue to recede, snow cover will decrease, dry periods will increase," said Frank Keimig, geosciences professor and manager of the Climate System Research Center at the University of Massachusetts. He notes that the mean temperature of the globe has been rising dramatically and has been changing over the past 20 years.

In a recent interview, Keimig discussed the world impact of global warming. He talked of some alarming developments affecting everything from the Arctic ice cap to migrating birds in New England. And he called for the public to get educated and take action for change.

"This is happening as we speak," Keimig said. "Glaciers are receding around the world and sea levels are rising."

In a report by the Artic Climate Impact Assessment in 2005, global average sea level rose between 0.1m and 0.2m during the 20th century, primarily because of thermal expansion of warming ocean waters.

"Small nations in the Pacific as well as coastal cities will be gone due to melting glaciers, which over time will cause the sea levels to rise," he said.

Keimig noted that some of these small islands in the Pacific, as well as many coastal cities, are only a few meters above sea level. Keimig said that though many Third-World regions do not contribute much to greenhouse gases, many people in these regions would be highly affected.

"In the United States and other Western nations, when it gets hot,

See URGENCY on page 3

SGA reports show two double vote attempts in elections

BY DEBBIE FRIEDMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Last week, the Student Government Association at the University of Massachusetts released its official 2007 Election results report, putting to rest claims of alleged voter fraud.

According to the report, "there have been no formal complaints submitted to the Elections Commission." However, the report does document two accounts of attempted double voting by unnamed members of the SGA. Chancellor of Elections Sara Morgan says these two votes were discovered and discarded during an extensive examination process that SGA election commissioners are required to do following an election. Morgan also says she does not believe these double votes are any cause for concern.

"It doesn't look like any sort of sabotage was intended. I assume it was just an accident," said Morgan.

The SGA allows students to vote by one of two ways. They can either bring their UMass ID to campus polling stations, where their name is crossed off a master list at the time the ballot is cast. Otherwise, students may vote by absentee ballot. Therefore, a double vote can potentially take place if a student tries to vote both ways. But Morgan said she's confident in the election process and assures the student body that officials spent hours checking ballots and cross-referencing lists to ensure no one had voted more than once.

See SGA on page 3

MRC to hold emergency medical drills

Students step up to become involved in meningitis drill

BY RYAN RICHARDSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

This Thursday, the Mullins Center will go from concert venue to disease ward – but it's no cause for panic. The University of Massachusetts Medical Response Corps, with the help of a coalition of local boards of public health, plans to run an emergency drill.

The drill, which coincides with tests of emergency communications throughout Western Massachusetts, simulates an outbreak of meningitis on campus. The MRC – a group of staff, faculty, students and local officials – will set up an emergency dispensing site similar to the distribution of the appropriate meningitis drugs and will also be taped for later presentations and analysis. The drill serves a number of important roles at UMass.

"If we look at the University as a community, then this is emergency preparedness and we're doing that practical work," said Ann Becker, the MRC coordinator and Public Health Nurse at the University Health Services. At the most basic level, the drill helps the MRC learn about the strengths and weaknesses of their emergency plans without having to wait until the last minute when a real crisis comes. The drill will also educate students and help them become involved with emergency preparedness and public health at many different levels.

"A lot of students are stepping up to get involved. They want to be conscious of what happens in their community and take part," Becker said. Students from the School of Nursing, the Student Health Advisory Board as well as ROTC have been involved with many of the planning stages of the drill and will help to administer the logistics from triage to administration.

The MRC is looking for students to volunteer as victims of the outbreak. In a drill, volunteers are given a list of symptoms to act out as they move through the process. Last year there weren't enough victim volunteers to simulate the crowds that might gather during an emergency situation, which is why this year the MRC is trying hard to recruit as many volunteers as possible throughout campus. With a pizza party for the largest group, raffles and pastries provided by Panera Bread in Hadley, it may pay to pretend to be sick for a few hours.

Preparation for the drill will begin at 7 a.m. for the MRC volunteers who will receive some "just-in-time" training to familiarize them with what's going to happen during the course of the scenario and just what their role

See MRC on page 3

UMass School of Nursing students, the Student Health Advisory Board and ROTC will help conduct the meningitis drill simulation this Thursday.

News analysis: media ignores purpose of Karl Rove protest

BY MIKE DEEHAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

WASHINGTON — A small group of political activists at American University made national news Tuesday night when they protested outside a private appearance by White House deputy chief of staff Karl Rove.

But it wasn't the passionate message of the demonstration that caught the media's attention; it was amateur video of the confrontation – a garbled, low quality mess of pixels and noise – that got the protesters' tactics, not their

See ANALYSIS on page 2

AP

The College Republican Club of American University in Washington invited Karl Rove to speak to students about his experiences in politics as a youth.

B&N honors local author's book

BY DAVID HUMPHREYS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Barnes & Noble has selected a book by a local author for its May online book club.

The store will use Kris Holloway's first book, "Monique and the Mango Rains: Two Years with a Midwife in Mali," in its online book club featuring author-led discussions. Holloway said that during the discussions she will talk about such issues as international service, women's health, children's health, international development and cross-cultural friendship and relations.

Holloway, who currently lives in Northampton, said she wrote "Monique and the Mango Rains" as a memoir about a midwife she met while volunteering with the Peace Corps in Mali, West Africa, told through the eyes of a westerner.

The midwife, Monique Dembele, served as the primary healthcare worker for a village of 1,400 people.

"Monique worked in a place where the life-time risk of a woman dying during childbirth or pregnancy is one in 12, one of the highest maternal death rates in the world," said Holloway. "She was completely committed to her work and was delivering these babies safely with no electricity, no running water and no medical equipment," she said.

Monique, who died in 1998 during childbirth, motivated Holloway to tell the world about her.

"I had to find out how this wonder-

See MONIQUE on page 2

"Monique and the Mango Rains" is Kris Holloway's first book.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVII
Issue 113

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Eric Athas
Managing Editor Rob Greenfield
Business Manager Dan Conti
Production Manager Amanda Allen
Night Supervisor Sherel Wolnik
Advertising Manager Jaimeson Porter
Advertising Production Molly Eggleston
Arts & Living Editor Morgan Rousseau
Comics Editor Adam Stagin
Editorial Editor Tucker Merrick
News Editor Matt Belliveau
Sports Editor Danny Picard
Sports Editor Jon Pelland
Circulation Manager Jeff Penta
Finance Manager David Vidale
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Nicole Paddester
Asst. Arts & Living Tim McCall
Asst. Arts & Living Sydney Towne
Assistant News Anna Dolianitis
Assistant News Nicole Boonjakuakul
Assistant Editorial Brendan Hall
Assistant Sports Jeremy Rice
Web Editor James Hale
Photo Editor Toan Trinh

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar year. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life; became the College Signal in 1903; the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Many homosexuals struggle at black colleges

By Dionne Walker
Associated Press

HAMPTON, Va. — So lured was April Maxwell by the promise of the black college experience, with its distinct traditions and tight-knit campus life, that she enrolled at Hampton University in 2001 without even visiting the waterfront campus.

A lesbian who is open about her sexual orientation, she arrived eager to join the extended Hampton family.

Instead, "I felt like I was the only gay person on campus – it seemed like nobody was really out," said the now 24-year-old Maxwell.

She channeled her isolation into organizing a gay support group, but a panel of students and faculty denied it a charter. The panel recently denied a second attempt at chartering Students Promoting Equal Action and Knowledge, or SPEAK, headed by underclassmen after Maxwell graduated.

It's a tug-of-war that's emerging at other black schools, where students say outdated rules and homophobia block them from forming the gay campus voice common at majority white institutions.

At Hampton, where rules govern everything from overnight guests to student dress, officials insist they don't discriminate against gays. They say they're simply enforcing the regulations on student groups, and there just isn't space for another one.

But some students here see more than a conservative approach to the regulations. They, and many others at the nation's more than 100 historically black colleges and universities, say that a broader suspicion of homosexuality keeps gays in the shadows at these tradition-heavy schools.

"You've got to recognize the history of HBCUs," said Larry Curtis, vice president for student affairs at Norfolk State University, where students recently formed a gay-straight alliance. "Most of them were founded by religious organizations."

Church leaders are often cited as setting the tone regarding homosexuality across the black community.

Nationwide, black pastors have opposed gay marriage and shot down comparisons between the struggles for civil rights and gay rights; others have attacked "down low" bisexual men for contributing to the rising AIDS rates among black women, though the topic is a matter of debate in the public health community.

On historically black campuses, those tensions make life uncomfortable for gay students.

Hampton University graduate, April Maxwell, left, and a current Hampton University student tried to organize a gay support group on campus, only to be denied a charter by the school.

"It's kind of hard to be out on campus and still be successful," said Vincent Allen Jr., head of Safe Space at Atlanta's Morehouse College. "As an out gay man, if I wanted to pledge, that door is pretty much shut to me. That's just the way it is."

But just as gay students can rightfully request campus inclusion, so too can black college administrators deny it, argued the Rev. William Owens, an HBCU graduate and head of the Coalition of African-American Pastors in Memphis, Tenn.

Those administrators may cite the Bible, or simply personal beliefs — and they don't have to be politically correct, Owens said.

"They can say 'no' and I don't think they have to give a lot of reasons," said Owens, who joined other black pastors worried that, along with dismal marriage rates, socially accepted homosexuality "is a threat to the black family."

In 2002, the issue of gays on black campuses grabbed the attention of the Human Rights Campaign, an advocacy group that organizes annual "coming out" days.

"We would send out information to all the colleges and universities about getting national coming out packets, and for some reason the only institutions they were not hearing back from at all were the historically black colleges," said the group's diversity manager Brandon Braud, who began calling campuses.

He learned of gay groups at two historically black schools: Washington's Howard University, and Spelman College, in Atlanta.

Administrators elsewhere denied having gay students, or said that while gays attended, "they're very underground," Braud said.

He later spoke to students alleging outright hostility. Some were required to find an adviser to form gay groups — unrealistic on many small campuses, Nashville AIDS educator Dwayne Jenkins said.

Through his Brothers United Network, Jenkins mentored upstart groups at Tennessee State and Fisk universities.

"Finding an adviser was always hard because nobody wanted to be associated with the gay-straight alliance – it was the thinking that 'Oh my god, are they going to think I'm gay?'" He said.

The most esteemed schools earned a reputation for students with impeccable manners and clean-cut behavior.

"So much of our campus is focused on this ideal of 'the Hampton man' and 'the Hampton woman,'" said Michael, a transfer student and SPEAK member who, like the group's president, is closeted and refused to let his last name be printed. "Men walk women home traditional Southern values."

But students are changing.

The Gay, Lesbian and Straight Education Network counts more than 3,000 gay-straight alliances at American high schools. Those youth will apply to colleges that can ensure their safety and will provide support, said Kevin Rome, vice president for student services at Morehouse, where a student was beaten in 2002 for an alleged same-sex pass.

"Society is changing," Rome said. "Students aren't coming here experimenting with their sexuality, they're coming here knowing.

"Our schools have to accommodate. It's inevitable."

Gay students have enjoyed far greater visibility at Virginia's large, majority white institutions.

Virginia Tech's gay alliance group hosts support meetings and social outings. The University of Virginia recently hired a coordinator for its gay resource center, a hub for 2,000 gay students at the Charlottesville campus.

At historically black schools, change is gradual. Braud has nudged along groups at 20 schools through a special black college-aimed Human Rights Campaign program.

At state-supported institutions such as Norfolk State, Curtis said it's easier to prompt change because other state universities in Virginia already have gay support groups.

At private Hampton, April Maxwell said she knew lots of gays and found support among pockets of students, regardless of sexuality.

But school officials say competition is stiff on campus, where a moratorium has limited the number of student groups to 90 — and unchartered groups can't meet. New groups are chartered when other groups become inactive.

Only four spots were available during the 2006-07 school year. Forty-four organizations have applied for charters over the last two years, and 11 received them.

Noho author writes about Peace Corps

Monique from page 1

ful friend and fabulous midwife could herself die in childbirth with her baby. That was the impetus to write the book," she said.

Holloway said the creation of "Monique and the Mango Rains" lasted five years from start to finish.

"It took two and a half years to get an agent, one year to sell the idea and one year to actually write it. It's like the little engine that could," Holloway explained.

Research for "Monique and the Mango Rains" involved collecting letters, journals, recordings or anything Holloway and her husband John Bidwell gathered during their Peace Corps trip. Holloway said on moniquemangorains.com, the book's Web site. After getting this initial research, Holloway and Bidwell went on a return trip to Mali to visit Monique's clinic and gather her prenatal records and conduct more interviews.

A percentage of the proceeds go towards Cabinet de Soins Monique, or "Clinique Monique" for short – a healthcare clinic for families dedicated to Monique, which began in 2004 by Monique's cousin.

According to moniquemangorains.com, for her next project, Holloway said: "I'd love to do more work in Mali and write about other aspects of the people and of life there. I'd also like to write about other great women who are too humble to write their own stories.

"If I can meet this really fabulous woman and write a book about her, how many other women are out there that we can learn from and get to know?" Holloway said.

Last Thursday night, Holloway read an excerpt from and spoke about "Monique and the Mango Rains" in the Isenberg School of Management building.

David Humphreys can be reached at dhumphre@student.umass.edu.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt O'Rourke

COPY EDITOR
Callie Williams

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Amanda Allen

BEFORE GRADUATION FREE SPIRIT

AFTER GRADUATION WEIRDO

Find a job before you outstay your welcome.

Post-grad careers, part-time jobs and internships.
Go online or text "CBcampus" to 68247.*

cbCAMPUS.com

*Standard text messaging rates may apply.

Media treatment of protest varies message, noticed by the general public. The video and pictures of the event have been used by sensational media outlets to portray the activists as, at best, undemocratic extremists, and, at worst, violent lunatics.

Analysis from page 1

If a demonstration of free speech motivates a college campus of around 10,000 students but generates a much larger backlash in public opinion towards liberal-minded students, is the net result positive or negative for the pursuit of justice?

The protest itself was dramatic with slogans like, "Karl Rove to justice," and "put him on the gallows," shouted by a mostly gleeful crowd. The climax of the night came when around 15 individuals lay in the roadway and blocked Rove's chauffeured car from exiting the area. While American University public safety officers and Secret Service agents physically removed the prone demonstrators from the road, many of the activists kicked at the car as it slowly passed by.

In the past few days, media treatment of the event has varied widely. Print media coverage from the Washington Post and the Associated Press, unable to capitalize on the misleading video footage, briefly reported the event without much fanfare. Local television stations broadcasted only the few seconds of the grainy footage caught during the assault on Rove's vehicle, and followed it with comments from both student activists and representatives from the College Republicans – the group hosting Rove's visit.

Even Fox News' Bill O'Reilly got into the act by repeatedly showing the chaotic amateur footage while an American University student reporter and college Republican spokesman unevenly debated what went on. Describing the demonstration as "anti-democratic," O'Reilly grilled AU's Allie Feras over what far-leftist groups the protesters belonged to. According to a 2006 New Yorker profile of the controversial broadcaster, The O'Reilly Factor's reaches an audience of two million people. These millions saw only the briefest glimpse of the protest over and over again, learning nothing of the activists' cause other than a brief mention of what the activists claimed were Rove's crimes.

The protesters sought and received media coverage, but their message was drowned out by the sensationalism surrounding the video of the night's most drastic event. When the students dove into the road in front of Rove's car, it was the culmination of hours of anticipation and growing anger. Instead of the signs and slogans making the evening news, it was the perceived violence of the "attack" on Rove – as one Christian news source put it – that was absorbed into the collective consciousness of the American audience.

Rove was the invited guest of American University's College Republican Club, an organization he himself had led the national arm of during his youth. The speaking engagement was informal, with Rove briefly relating anecdotes of his youth and life in politics before answering questions from the crowd. This reporter agreed not to publish the particulars of his speech or responses, but the truth is there was very little said outside of the normal administration rhetoric or anything that could be considered "news."

In the casual assembly meeting before Rove arrived, the activists gathered in a circle outside the venue to discuss their course of action. The premise of the demonstration was that the students, many claiming to be a "deputy sheriff," according to their paper badges, would perform a citizen's arrest on Rove for violating the 1978 Presidential Records Act.

"If the cops try to talk to us, act like you're on their side," said Joshua Goodman, one of the student organizers, encouraging the group to maintain the theatrics in front of authority. Detective costumes, mostly old fashioned hats and ties, were distributed to those who wanted to not only act, but look the part as well. One sign help by an AU student read, "Hot Damn! It's a citizen's arrest!" The atmosphere before the event was jovial and the plan carried the group's message with humor, not the physicality that later occurred.

To many that were there, the protest was a blow to right-wing policy and a triumph of free speech, but the much larger audience saw only the ravings of a few thrashing lethes going over the edge. In the YouTube age, an awareness of how the media will treat a story is crucial to the decisions activists need to make about how they want to be perceived. The students at American University, passionate as they are, failed in this regard.

Mike Deehan is a UMass senior interning in Washington D.C. and can be reached at mwdeehan@gmail.com.

Fifteen individuals laid on the road, blocking Rove's chauffeured car from leaving the area before AU public safety officers and Secret Service agents physically removed the protesters.

U.S. emits most pollution

Enemy from page 1

Northern Europe will begin to slow and eventually stop. Rising sea levels will cause the currents from the equator to stop and, in turn, will discontinue the warming of the northern oceans. The decrease in temperature in the northern hemisphere could cause a new Ice Age.

The IPCC has also found that sea levels are rising more rapidly in recent years, from 1.8 mm a year in 1961 to 3.1 mm a year in 1993. Although the increase is minute, if it continues to rise, it will cause enormous damage to the life forms on Earth and the coast lines of the continents.

Weather patterns will also begin to shift. Colder days will be less common as warmer days infiltrate the winter months. Northern climates can say goodbye to frequent snowfalls but will find themselves welcoming earlier frosts.

The emission of greenhouse gases like carbon dioxide, methane and nitrous oxide are causing the temperature and sea-level shifts. When these gases are emitted into the Ozone, they trap the infrared rays that are projected from the sun. Usually they would simply bounce back out into space, but the layer of greenhouse gases is preventing the rays from leaving the Earth's atmosphere and is causing the increase in temperature. The recent report by the IPCC explains that the use of fossil fuels is contributing to the higher carbon dioxide concentration in the atmosphere.

The United States alone emits 5.8 billion metric tons of carbon dioxide and other hazardous gases into the atmosphere every year. That's more than any other country on the planet. Countries like Israel and Argentina emit about 120 million metric tons of greenhouse gases, the equivalent of the state of New Jersey.

So what can be done in the U.S. about global warming? Most experts are calling for a drastic reduction in carbon dioxide emissions, from 50 to 80 percent. Environmentalists were encouraged last week, when the Supreme Court ruled that the Environmental Protection Agency could regulate carbon dioxide emissions. This finding ran contrary to a Bush administration argument that the agency could not take action.

U.S. Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.), along with U.S. Sen. Barbara Boxer (D-Calif.), introduced the Global Warming Pollution Reduction Act. This bill is designed to cut America's carbon emission by 80 percent by 2050.

Barry Field discussed the administrative issues involved in global warming and what needs to be done to reduce carbon emissions.

"In the next administration," said Field," the political energy will be directed toward Cap and Trade."

The federal government and the Bush administration have stalled actions on carbon emissions reduction, according to Field.

"We are going to have to wait for a new president," Field said. "The Bush administration's focus is in other places at the moment and so alternative initiative has to be considered in order to address this issue now.

"Regulations need to be made," he continued. "The production of better cars that have a higher gas mileage along with pollution control equipment and technology are the first steps. There is no reason why cars aren't being produced with better gas mileage."

Fields said he believes that a carbon tax would be an efficient way to reduce carbon dioxide emissions.

"It's like a gas tax- coal, petroleum, and other fossil fuels would be taxed on their carbon content," he said. "This tax would lead people to do what they can to reduce use of carbon-based fuels and come up with ways to avoid them altogether."

Joining in the Kyoto Protocol would be another good step, Field said. The Kyoto Protocol brought together 160 nations and requires each to address and act upon the emission of greenhouse gases. Each nation must meet its reduction goal between 2008-2012. The United States rejected the opportunity to join the treaty.

The there exists the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC), a combination of the World Meteorological Organization and the United Nations Environmental Programme. The panel reviews published scientific and technological literature to compile an assessment of the climate change the planet is experiencing. It released its fourth survey in February.

American organizations that have been around for decades, like Greenpeace, are actively fighting global warming. Step It Up 2007 is acting on April 14 – National Day of Climate Action – when rallies are anticipated to sweep the nation.

The Regional Greenhouse Gas Initiative brought together nine northeastern states in an attempt to cut climate-changing emissions from electrical power plants. They anticipate a 10 percent reduction by 2019 and expect to cap all power plants by 2009.

So what can one college student do to make a difference?

There are minor adjustments that can be made to a student's everyday life. Information and suggestions will be available to all Daily Collegian readers this week.

Field cautions that the time to act is now.

"There will be more catastrophes and that will motivate more behavior," he said. "Hopefully it won't be too late."

Lauren Modisette can be reached at lmodiset@student.umass.edu.

Key Terms in Global Warming

Cap and Trade: when an administration puts a maximum carbon emission credit on industries and companies. If companies have or need to exceed their credit limit, they must trade with other companies who emit fewer pollutants. It basically fines companies for polluting more than they are allowed.

Carbon Dioxide: a greenhouse gas emitted through the burning of fossil fuels by humans.

Carbon Footprint: a measure of carbon dioxide emitted through the burning of fossil fuels, usually expressed in tons. The U.S.'s carbon footprint is 5.8 billion metric tons.

Carbon Offset: the process of reducing the amount of carbon emitted by an individual or organization.

Carbon Tax: a tax on energy sources that emit carbon dioxide into the atmosphere, like a gas tax. It would cause price increases and inconvenience the burning of fossil fuels on a regular basis.

Chlorofluorocarbons: aka CFC's; greenhouse gas emitted into the atmosphere through appliances such as air conditioners and refrigerators.

Fossil Fuels: formed from animal and plant parts that form natural gases, coal, and fuel oil.

Greenhouse Gases: gases that contribute to the greenhouse effect. Some reside naturally in the atmosphere while others are man-made.

Greenhouse Effect: when infrared radiation is trapped in the Earth's atmosphere due to a layer of greenhouse gases. This in turn causes the global temperature to increase.

Methane, Nitrous Oxide: greenhouse gases that are emitted through agricultural processes.

—Compiled by Lauren Modisette

Keimig: 'take action for change'

Urgency from page 1

we just put more air conditioning," Keimig said. "However, in underdeveloped regions, they tend to be less adapted for climate change and many of the time they have no infrastructure to help become adapted.

"The United States is the top emitter of carbon dioxide, per capita from a study in 2002, followed by Saudi Arabia, Australia and Canada," Keimig said.

China, a fossil fuel and coal dependent country, recently joined the race.

But though the U.S. is a big producer of carbon dioxide emissions, Keimig said they lag behind in taking action on the issue.

"I would have to say Europe is becoming more environmentally conscious," Keimig said. "They are way ahead of us."

The European Union has been taking a lot of environmental actions, in part because Green parties in different western European countries have served as political catalysts.

"However, in the U.S.," Keimig said, "we are very much still in the two-party system and Green parties have not quite made it yet."

Keimig said that there are some encouraging signs for the U.S. from Congress, corporations and the general public to start establishing more Green parties.

"We have the Cap and Trade system, which many companies are using," Keimig said. "Basically you put a cap on carbon dioxide and other green house gases, and you trade it, for what we call, carbon credit, and in turn you get money."

So, this puts a "cap," or restriction, on how much pollution a company can emit. In turn, the companies receive permits that they are free to sell to other companies facing high costs. The permits make it desirable to companies who prefer not to make high reduction costs themselves.

But Keimig says this should just be the beginning. Fossil fuel industries, Keimig notes, are using the same tactics as the tobacco industry, in sowing doubts about climate change in the public.

"We need more fuel efficiency in cars, as well as more public transportation," he said. "The public has to be educated."

In addition, Keimig notes that there are biological changes, specifically in New England, that are taking effect because of global warming.

"Growing seasons have been changing," Keimig said. "Certain plants are blooming earlier and some species have been seen where they're not supposed to be, specifically birds."

Because of the warming of sea temperatures, coral reefs are losing their symbiotic relationship with algae, necessary for reef building. Without coral reefs there will be no barrier to protect us from wave movement and power.

"Coral reefs protect us from storms," Keimig said. "And though the death of coral reefs will take quite a long time, coral reefs will eventually bleach, leaving their skeletons, deeply impacting marine life.

"However, global warming causing more severe hurricanes is a little bit controversial, there is still not enough information," he said.

Was Hurricane Katrina caused by global warming?

"That is a tough one," Keimig said. He notes that the warming of the Atlantic is caused in-part by global warming and part by nature. In 2005, Hurricane Wilma, another Category-five hurricane, hit the Yucatan Peninsula, following the devastation of Hurricane Katrina.

"When it comes down to it, the government has to get more involved," Keimig said. "Educators, like myself, have to educate people on what's going on."

Sophia Bruneau can be reached at sbruneau@student.umass.edu.

Check out these sources to learn more about global warming

VIDEOS

1) An Inconvenient Truth: Former Vice President Al Gore's campaign to make the issue of global warming a recognized problem worldwide.

2) Too Hot Not To Handle: An HBO documentary on the effects of global warming in the United States.

3) 11th Hour: A look at the state of the global environment including visionary and practical solutions for restoring the planet's ecosystems.

4) Global Warming: The Signs & The Science: A PBS series that profiles people whose lives have been affected by global warming and explores efforts of scientists, individuals, and communities to make the planet safe for future generations.

WEB SITES

1) www.en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Global—warming: Get the basic facts on global warming.

2) www.ipcc.ch/: The Web site for the United Nations Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, this site provides lots of information on the issue globally.

3) www.eia.doe.gov: The Web site of the Energy Information Administration, which provides data on energy sources and use in the U.S.

4) www.heatisonline.org/: The Web site former Boston Globe environmental writer Ross Gelbspan, a longtime writer and researcher on climate change, and author of The Heat is On and The Boiling Point. This site offers a near-daily roundup of stories about climate change.

5) www.stepitup2007.org: This Vermont-based group, headed by environmental writer Bill McKibben, is organizing a National Day of Climate Action on April 14, 2007. The goal: to lobby Congress to mandate a reduction in cut carbon dioxide emissions by 80 percent by 2050.

6) www.climatecrisis.net: The Web site for "An Inconvenient Truth." Information on global warming and how you can reduce your "carbon footprint." (Measure your own impact at: www.climatecrisis.net/takeaction/carboncalculator/)

7) www.stopglobalwarming.org: The organizing site of a non-partisan group that is sponsoring a college tour with Sheryl Crowe this spring. This group encourages governments, corporations, and politicians to take steps to stop global warming.

8) www.fightglobalwarming.com: The Web site of Environmental Defense, this site offers lots of information on the impact of global warming, as well as tips on energy conservation and efficiency.

9) www.chponline.org: This is a great roundup site explaining climate change and its health effects.

– Compiled by Sophia Bruneau

THE HEAT IS ON: A four-day series on global warming.

This series was produced by the nine members of a Journalism 301 class, Writing About Public Issues. We welcome your comments on these stories at our course blog: http://writingaboutpublicissues.blogspot.com/

SGA releases election report

SGA from page 1

The report goes on to document a number of additional discarded votes, which were rendered invalid on account of voter error.

A total of 61 ballots were "invalidated" by the Election Commission "upon a majority vote of its membership in attendance at the count," states the report. Thirteen ballots were discarded because they showed signs of "having been erased, scratched out, or otherwise altered." Eleven ballots were discarded because they contained more votes than numerically allowed on one ballot. Fifteen absentee ballots could not be identified and/or were illegible. A separate group of 11 absentee ballots were "placed in envelopes with out names, addresses and student identification numbers." And nine absentee ballots were not placed in envelopes at all, making them invalid.

"Ballots that could not be identified were thrown out just to be safe, because fully investigating them would have taken days or weeks," added Morgan.

The election report also breaks down the final tally of votes by living area and contest. The Southwest district accounted for the most cast ballots, with a total of 782 votes. Additionally, 149 ballots were cast from Sylvan, 540 from Orchard Hill, 470 from Central, 84 from North and 143 from the commuter district.

Students cast the largest amount of votes for SGA President – with a total of 2,444 – while trustee candidates received 2,413 votes. SGA area government received 2,168 votes in all, and 2,072 votes were cast in response to the MASSPIRG referenda question.

Moreover, the report certifies that Aaron Buford and Ruth Thompson won by a large margin, with Buford receiving 825 more votes than runner up, Matt Giancola, and Thompson receiving 1025 votes over Joshua Murray.

Lastly, the report states that 12.3 percent of the 19,826 full-time undergraduates at this University came out to vote. While this percentage is more than double the requirement needed to ratify SGA election results, it is still only a tiny fraction of the student body.

Senior Communications major Cara Lonardo-Roy said she didn't vote because she was unaware it was even taking place.

"I didn't feel that it was advertised like it has been in the past. This year it passed by and I didn't even realize," said Lonardo-Roy. "I feel horrible about missing it."

Other students knew about the election, but did not want to vote.

"I'm not sure what they've done for students, or what they even can do," said senior Marketing major Michael Kim.

Bridget Manzella, a junior English major, said she felt similar. "I don't care because I feel like it has nothing to do with me," she said. "I feel disconnected from the campus, and I don't like being hounded outside the D.C.s."

But despite the lack of awareness and low amount of student concern, Chancellor of Elections Sara Morgan still feels this year's election was a success.

"I visited all of the polling places through out both days, and I rarely saw election commissioners just sitting there. They were constantly busy, and calling me to request more ballots," said Morgan.

As far as increasing turnout for future elections, Morgan said she feels the SGA should consider increasing the amount of polling stations, set up strong election committees and advertise more through passing out flyers.

Debbie Friedman can be reached at drfriedm@gmail.com

Meningitis drill to be simulated will be in the drill. As the victim volunteers begin to arrive at 9 a.m., the MRC volunteers will prepare pretend vaccinations to protect them from exposure while they're working at the emergency dispensing site. The drill continues until noon, and many victim volunteers will be asked to go through the symptoms multiple times in order to give the MRC volunteers a more realistic sense of what might happen during a real emergency, where more than a few hundred students would show up. After the drill volunteers will be asked to provide feedback about their experience during debriefing sessions. A similar drill is scheduled to be conducted simultaneously at Amherst College, although on a much smaller scale.

MRC from page 1

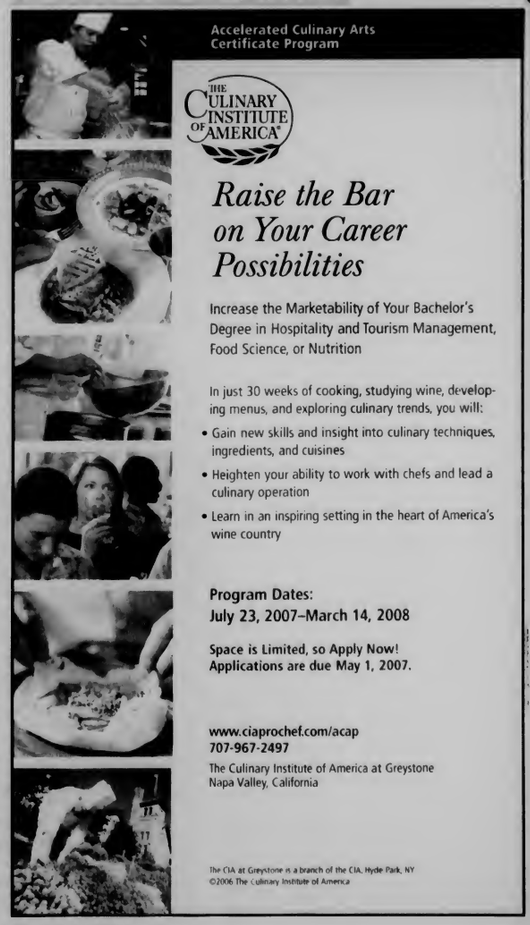
"It will be a very interesting experience for the volunteers," said Sal DiNardi, professor emeritus of Environmental Health and Science. "People don't have an appreciation of what goes on behind the scenes at a drill." DiNardi felt that after participating in the drill, which will take place on April 12, volunteers would "appreciate the complexity of an event like this," and all of the planning and preparation that was involved in the process to make sure that, in the event of an actual emergency, officials aren't simply reacting to the situation.

While volunteers are encouraged to come at any time during the drill, and stay for as long as their class schedule will permit, the MRC strongly encourages registering ahead of time and staying for the entire event to take full advantage of the educational materials and snacks. Students can also receive credit for participating in the event for either community service or CEUs for EMTs.

Ryan Richardson can be reached at rmrich@student.umass.edu.



Accelerated Culinary Arts Certificate Program
The Culinary Institute of America
Raise the Bar on Your Career Possibilities
Increase the Marketability of Your Bachelor's Degree in Hospitality and Tourism Management, Food Science, or Nutrition
In just 30 weeks of cooking, studying wine, developing menus, and exploring culinary trends, you will:
• Gain new skills and insight into culinary techniques, ingredients, and cuisines
• Heighten your ability to work with chefs and lead a culinary operation
• Learn in an inspiring setting in the heart of America's wine country
Program Dates:
July 23, 2007–March 14, 2008
Space is Limited, so Apply Now!
Applications are due May 1, 2007.
www.ciaprochef.com/acap
707-967-2497
The Culinary Institute of America at Greystone
Napa Valley, California
The CIA at Greystone is a branch of the CIA, Hyde Park, NY
©2006 The Culinary Institute of America

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, APRIL 9, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it" Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Changes in latitude, changes in attitude

Obstacles in local activism

Katy Bruck

Attending the first in a series of environmental films being shown by Students for Environmental Action and Awareness (SEAA) made me think about the relationship of environmental activism and politics. To me, politics is often a way for us to relate the smaller issues in our lives to the bigger ones. As I left Wednesday's showing of "Who Killed the Electric Car," I found myself pretty much speechless.

I had expected to be handed something to feel impassioned about by the film, but in the end, I just felt vaguely frustrated and defeated – a sentiment undoubtedly shared, perhaps until recently, by the majority of our left-leaning representatives.

Despite the constant pamphlet-tossing and flyer-gluing of MassPIRG and similar organizations, for my own sanity, I try to remain as unattached as possible to environmental causes while school is in session. This probably makes me sound like an insensitive jerk, but I know I'm not the only person who feels this way. There's no justification needed for human apathy – we have to pick our battles, after all, and the average college student simply doesn't have the means to reduce CO_2 emissions or save drowning polar bears in a way that makes them feel as though their time and emotion hasn't been wasted. Environmental causes are not like the Christian Children's Fund – you don't get a post card in the mail with a picture of your personal polar bear, and a touching story of how you saved it from drowning in the cold Arctic sea. You don't just send in a five-dollar donation and then you're done.

Something as huge and complex as global warming is hard to condense onto a glossy pamphlet in a way that makes it unanimously understood.

Something as huge and complex as global warming is hard to condense onto a glossy pamphlet in a way that makes it unanimously understood. The perpetuation of this problem is so complicated and relates to so many areas that it's hard for someone that isn't an environmental scientist to fully understand.

Watching "Who Killed the Electric Car" really proved this to me. The film was laid out like an investigation report, naming "suspects" and then running through their "cases" to determine guilt. Seven suspects were named in the film, ranging from the consumers, car companies, oil companies, the federal government and its sister state institutions, down to hydrogen fuel cell development and inefficient batteries. In the end, only the batteries were found not guilty, as they were capable of being upgraded to expand the efficiency and range of the electric cars (which were being leased and driven successfully by California drivers in the mid-1990s). All other suspects were deemed guilty as a result of a complicated web of influence and spin that led to hundreds of perfectly viable automobiles being crushed and recycled only a few years after their release.

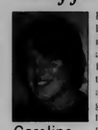
Whatever criticism there may be towards the facts and specifics of the film itself, the whole "conspiracy" theme is not something that the American consumer is unfamiliar with. The motivations behind political decisions have always mystified the public. Part of the idea of representative government, after all, was born from the idea that the general population doesn't hold enough knowledge or prudence to be able to rule itself efficiently, so we elect smarter (often richer) people to make informed decisions for us. This can account for the rampant apathy towards environmental causes, particularly in college communities. Even when we try to get as much information as we can, the facts can be confusing, contradictory and discouraging. And there's always the everyday to worry about – tests, loans, family drama, friend drama; the list could go on forever.

So the question becomes, how do you add the human element to an issue that won't affect most humans until it's too late to fix? There seem to be two camps on this front: the tax-incentive, simple lifestyle changes camp and the scary pictures of ice falling and polar bears drowning camp. These two often try and join forces for fear that those simple changes and legislative shifts won't occur if politicians aren't shocked into enforcing them. This partnership has more often than not resulted in confused and helpless-feeling voters, who feel like they need to do something, but are either unwilling to make the big changes, or feel the small ones won't do any good. The constant belaboring of global warming even being "real" certainly doesn't help.

True, effective action on this issue is going to require a serious commitment on the part of both politicians and citizens to inform each other of the choices that face us, and to push for changes to be made. Not a stretch in the theory of government, but in today's politics, it seems easier to give up or blame a conspiracy. I don't think there are any simple solutions to bridging this rift of trust between politicians and voters, but I think information and awareness is a start.

Katy Bruck can be reached at kbruck@student.umass.edu.

Different setting, same end result



Caroline Moretti

For most of my life, especially in Amherst, I've always been fairly ambivalent towards protests and activism in general. To me, the rallies held in the valley always felt deflated of value.

Who would be swayed by a peace march around here? It's like preaching to a very liberal choir.

On March 24, I was one of thousands of people that gathered in Boston Common to protest the United States' military presence in Iraq. People from all walks of life joined together in a march that went past the statehouse, around the Department of Homeland Security building and back, united in the common dream of an end to this war.

Marching in the city gave us an opposing force, a presence to react against.

Like preaching before a packed arena.

It gave us something to prove.

I hadn't really planned to attend this peace rally. I had originally come to Boston to watch some 1940s propaganda films that were showing at the MFA, but when I was invited to attend the protest by a high school friend, I decided it would be a great opportunity to take part in an aspect of society that I don't usually join in, while catching up with an old chum at the same time.

As soon as I stepped out of Park Street Station and into the streets, I was swept into a sea of people, instantly becoming a participant in the parade. There was an atmosphere of overwhelming magnanimity and uplifting positive energy that spread through the crowd, which extended as far as I could see in front of and behind me. We chanted, carried signs and sang along with the self-proclaimed "leftist marching band." The whole event emanated a sense of greater community, which was echoed every time a bystander flashed a peace sign in solidarity.

It's one thing to oppose this war, but it's very different to actually stand up and shout your opposition. March 24th was a day that made me want to shout.

Also, on our campus, there seems to be this ever-growing stigma around the act of protest. Every event seems to become mired in the petty rivalries between our Registered Student Organizations, as our campus Republicans, Democrats and Socialists all bicker about who's been sabotaging who. They can scream over each other at their events all they want, but it rapidly depletes their credibility as a political force on campus.

They can scream over each other at their events all they want, but it rapidly depletes their credibility as a political force on campus.

These shouting matches masquerading as activism have quickly crushed the ability for these groups to spread their message, which is the root of why they demonstrate in the first place.

Perhaps though, this is more than just a matter of stagnant environment. The dismissal of activism is a symptom of a weakened democracy. It's tragically honest to say that most middle-class white kids, like myself, have very little incentive to be politically active. There's just more ease and entertainment to be found in watching Laguna Beach. Whats the point of protesting if it doesn't change anything? Maybe we'd be more invested in our government if activism were as instantly gratifying as the Internet.

The most discouraging part of the Boston protest I attended was the media coverage of the march. When I got home that night, I turned on the 11 p.m. news hoping to catch the blurb on the event. Blurb doesn't even begin to describe how disappointingly brief the discussion of this on the news was. After sitting through human interest story after human interest story, then 15 minutes of weather forecasting, they finally saw fit to talk about a group of protesters that stopped traffic in town. The story was barely 10-seconds long, and most of the images appeared to be stock footage of the keynote speaker Cindy Sheehan.

Where are our voices? The multitudes of people?

The message of our march was nowhere to be found.

It seems that no matter where you go, protest is a form of free speech that is easily dismissed, ignored and disparaged. In Amherst or the Capital city, it's just too easy to pretend voices of dissent are unimportant. It was my first hard lesson as an amateur protester: activism is seriously unappreciated. I came to re-examine my opinions of the rallies I've walked blithely by here in the Valley, and the MassPIRG students I lazily ignored speaking in my 300-person lectures.

These people work for causes they believe in, and represent a crucial aspect of being a citizen in a democracy: participation.

Caroline Moretti can be reached at cmoretti@student.umass.edu.

A torturous cycle

Chris Eckel

Many people have compared the current conflict in Iraq to the tragic Vietnam War. There are some similarities between the two conflicts, particularly the tragedy that comes when American lives are wasted for no good cause. The phrase "Americans die when politicians lie" comes to mind.

This rhyme becomes particularly poignant when one learns that the Defense Department released a report last week that stated unequivocally that the supposed links between Al-Qaeda and Iraq were based on dubious or unsubstantiated information and that investigations since the war began, including interrogation of Saddam Hussein, have yet to prove any real link between the two. Don't try telling that to Dick Cheney, who last week continued to attempt to argue that there were ties between Al-Qaeda and Iraq, even as the pile of evidence proving his deadly fallacy and/or lie continued to grow.

Cheney might be ignorant to pretty much everything in Iraq, but he certainly is not ignorant to what is going on in Guantanamo Bay, on numerous occasions he has defended the torture and other abuses that go on there.

Such atrocities are so contrary to the spirit of any human being with a conscience that even Vietnam – the country we callously invaded after the Gulf of Tonkin Incident provided a flimsy premise to do so (sound familiar?) – has legislated against such actions. Last March 28, Nguyen Minh Triet, the President of Vietnam, signed a decree to eradicate the power of the government to hold people who are suspected of being national security threats without judicial hearings.

In doing so, Triet undoubtedly recognized that holding prisoners without a trial (and as such, without the need for any sort of evidence of wrongdoing) is duplicitous, immoral and a fundamental violation of human rights. If Vietnam can pass such legislation, then the onus falls on our federal government to take similar steps to ensure an honest judicial process is practiced by the United States.

The suspension of habeas corpus to prisoners detained in Guantanamo Bay and other such facilities is a shameful black mark on the less-than pristine history of civil rights in America. The justifications of some, including Tweedledee-Bush and Tweedledum-Cheney, that habeas corpus does not apply to detainees in these camps due to their nationality or prisoner of war status, have about as much integrity as the statement that the Reverend Ted Haggard became heterosexual after three weeks of "therapy."

The treatment of prisoners should be consistent regardless of race, citizenship or accused crime. No matter what a prisoner has done (and in this case, he/she may have done nothing) the treatment of that prisoner should not be based upon him/her but upon the captor. In this case, the subjugator has become a corrupt prison warden.

Such a scenario might sound like the setup for the newest shoddy horror movie, but it is all too real.

Numerous stories have come out of Guantanamo Bay, Abu Ghraib and other similar detention facilities of torture, degradation and fundamentally inhumane conditions. Everyone has seen pictures of American troops standing over helpless, tortured prisoners, and, considering their background, it is hardly surprising that they are misbehaving, given the caliber of soldiers that are being given free reign as captors.

The Baltimore Sun found that between 2004 and 2005, the number of American military recruits with "serious criminal misconduct" in their backgrounds increased by more than 54 percent. This category includes arrests for such crimes as "aggravated assault, robbery, vehicular manslaughter, receiving stolen property and making terrorist threats." The war has become so inarguably evil that many good people are refusing to enlist in the military, so recruiters are turning to ex-convicts to fill their recruitment quotas. In other words, violent criminals are being given uniforms and guns and allowed to torture people they are led to believe are guilty of worse crimes than they themselves have committed.

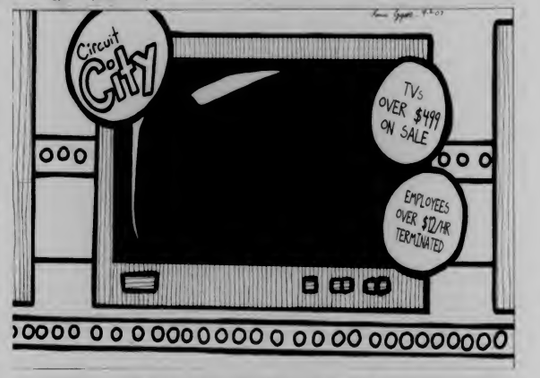
Such a scenario might sound like the setup for the newest shoddy horror movie, but it is all too real. Inmates are truly running the asylum, with predictable results. However, in this case, the result is not the only thing that matters. The simple reality that prisons exist which serve to dehumanize prisoners and eliminate any pretense of humane treatment by their captors is disgraceful, and as such, concrete steps must be taken to eliminate facilities like Guantanamo Bay.

The conviction of David Hicks, the first prisoner to receive a trial, in no way diminishes the evil that is present in American-held Cuba, or at other sites around the world. In fact, it merely confirms wrongdoing. As part of his plea agreement that resulted in a sentence of nine months, Hicks stated that he was never "illegally treated" by the United States, a statement that completely contradicts earlier accounts he made of his detention.

Furthermore, he agreed to a gag order that prevents him from speaking to the media for a year. It seems evident that Hicks was so desperate to escape from this hellhole of a detention facility that he lied and agreed not to speak out about the atrocities committed against him by the U.S. Such a gag order is completely contradictory to the ideals we supposedly value in the U.S., but then again, so is everything about this state of affairs.

If we as Americans wish to maintain any sort of assumed moral and ethical superiority over countries like Vietnam and other despotic nations, then we must move resolutely towards eliminating prison camps that make Alcatraz look like a five-star island resort.

Chris Eckel can be reached at ceckel@student.umass.edu.



LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

ON BILINGUAL EDUCATION

Greg Collins' article ("Bilingual consequences", April 5) is profoundly misinformed about bilingual education. Aligning with the Republican ideas of Newt Gingrich, who in a recent speech to the National Federation of Republican Women referred to bilingual education as learning "the language of living in a ghetto," Collins believes that bilingual education is "counterproductive towards encouraging assimilation among immigrants, which hurts both themselves and the future of the United States."

It is hard to exaggerate how misinformed Gingrich and Collins are about bilingualism, language minorities and bilingual education. Bilingualism is the norm rather than the exception in many parts of the world. If ghettos are created, it is certainly not due to bilingualism in society. Language minorities do not need a law to encourage them to acquire English. They are highly motivated to acquire English and are succeeding. According to the 2000 census, only 1.3 percent of the population cannot speak English, down from 3.6 percent in 1890.

Study after study, done in many countries throughout the world, confirm that students in bilingual programs acquire the second language at least as quickly as those in second language "immersion" programs and often acquire it more quickly. These programs use the child's home language in ways that accelerate second language development. In fact, in the last two years, four major research reviews, including one from a U.S. government report, have concluded that bilingual education actually helps immigrant students learn English faster than English immersion and other English-only models of instruction. Bilingual education works because it uses the child's first language in ways that accelerate English language development. It is to the advantage of not just immigrants but all of our children to learn another language.

Collins is entitled to his own opinion, but too bad he is lacking significant information to be well-informed. He fails to use the long history of well established research both by faculty and graduate students on this campus as well as the wealth of research in the U.S. and across the globe.

J. Andres Ramirez
UMass Grad Student

WRITE LETTERS TO THE EDITOR. MAKE YOUR VOICE COUNT.

WE ARE LOOKING FOR YOU, PART OF THE COLLEGIAN'S SUCCESS EMANATES FROM TAKING THE PULSE OF YOU, THE MEMBER OF THE UMASS COMMUNITY. MAKE YOURSELF HEARD.

SEND LETTERS TO:

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, APRIL 9, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Bon Savants flaunts UMass roots

Lead singer Thom Moran speaks on band's western Mass. origin

Bon Savants lead singer Thom Moran, second from the right, dished about serendipitous typos, his UMass physics degree and the creation of their next record.

BY COREY CHARRON AND GABRIEL CHICOINE
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENTS

The Bon Savants opened for underground legends Pete Tha at the Iron Horse Thursday night. Their entertaining stage presence and excellent music provided for a more than adequate warm-up band. Thom Moran, the lead-singer of the Bon Savants, as well as a University of Massachusetts graduate, sat down for an interview on Friday to discuss this up-and-coming band from Boston. The interview was conducted by Corey Charron and Gabriel Chicoine on 91.1 WMUA on the program "Fallen Through the Cracks."

CC & GC: To start off the interview, would you like to talk about the origins of the Bon Savants, where the name comes from and your background?

Thom Moran: Well a lot of people in the band met in Boston two years ago. The band goes all the way back to when a friend of mine and I started it, we started playing music together about ten years ago. We were apart for a while, going to school, I was going to UMass. When I finished up school I moved back to Boston and we started this band. The name itself actually was kind of a typo. We were talking about band names and the drummer we had at the time, different from the one we have now, his idea was "Bon Vevants," which is a French phrase that means "lovers of life." We made this long list of band names and I was transcribing them onto an email for everyone to consider and when I was typing "Bon Vevants" I accidentally typed "Bon Sevants." I had studied a little bit of French at UMass, and I thought to myself, doesn't that mean "good science" or "good knowledge?" Colloquially, it comes out to be "good scientists." Being a physics guy, it worked well for us. Also, I think in the Google-age, it's always good to have a name that will guarantee to be the first thousand hits.

CC & GC: Speaking of UMass, for those readers who don't know, you graduated from UMass in 2001 with a BS in physics. Would you like to talk about how

See BON SAVANT on page 6

24th Asian Night rocks FAC

BY SOLMAAZ YAZDIA
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Music blasted and spotlights swirled on Saturday night at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall, as the University of Massachusetts' Annual Asian Night kicked off for the 24th year in a row. Presented by the Asian American Students Association (AASA), Asian night offered an array of acts, from singing, piano playing and skits to guest appearances, tai chi arts and a finale fashion show.

The event was organized by senior Business Management major and member of the AASA Kimmy Phan, and hosted by master of ceremonies, Minni Cai, Steven Ho, Abel Lin and Sotheavy Mocung. Following the theme, "Embracing Our Past," Asian Night turned out an enthusiastic and supportive audience that kept the performers smiling and appreciative. Guest appearances included speaker Bao Phi, the first Vietnamese American to ever appear on HBO's "Russell Simmons Presents Def Poetry Jam." Phi captured the audience's attention with his poems and kept everyone laughing with lines like, "I'll say mama could cook, you know she'd make a batch like me," from his poem, "You Bring Out the Vietnamese in Me." With such unmatchable talent, Phi created a sense of Asian pride and awareness while still keeping matters light-hearted and playful.

Guest performer Kristine Sa was a different story, and quite probably the only downfall of Asian night. Solo artist Sa performed several songs with lyrics like, "You look like you could taste so sweet, I wanna bite into you knowing you would poison me," reminiscent of an Asian-Celine-Dion-type vibe. It's an understatement to say that many were cringing throughout her performance, especially during the song titled, "Snooze," which she dedicated to "All you out there who don't like waking up in the morning." Her music seemed to consist of pre-packaged keyboard compositions and drum beats, not to mention her awkward dance moves and background singers via cassette tape. Needless to say, it wasn't for her skimpy outfit and an audience full of hormonal male college students, Kristine Sa's only applause would have been that of crickets chirping.

Luckily, some UMass students came to the rescue and made up for Sa's lack of talent in their acts, ravaging the uncomfortable silence that followed Sa's performance. Highlights of the night included the UMass Tae Kwon Do team which wowed the audience as four students balled up in a row on the floor of the stage, with another at the end holding a wooden board. To the audience's shock, a sixth student came running, leapt across the four students and expertly split the board in two with his foot. Dozens of jaws dropped.

Undoubtedly, another crowd favorite was Origins of Funk, the UMass Hip Hop Club Organization head by president Chris Lau, a junior Mechanical Engineering major at UMass, who dedicated the performance to his friend and fellow UMass student Jenn Chow, who passed away this past summer. Audience members stood up from their seats cheering as break dancers performed head spins and other difficult moves to an upbeat assortment of songs. Art major and member of the Origins of Funk, senior Jessy Miele stated, "It was great to dance with everybody and get to see all the people that came out. We worked really hard for this and I feel like it was our best performance yet."

The audience did not seem to disagree. "I think Asian night went amazingly well. At first I was worried about organization and people goofing off, but, in the end, everyone came together and put in the effort and it went great," Phan stated. Following performances, traditional Asian food was served in the lobby. Rice, noodles, chicken and other refreshments were devoured as fortune cookies were split and shared. "Asian night is a special night for us because all the Asian Registered Student Organizations have a chance to come together and perform," said sophomore Accounting major, Haotion Lin. Asian night proved to be a huge success, displaying the beauty and talent of Asian culture while keeping the audience on the edge of their seats. "We just want people to know Asian culture. Where we come from, what we're all about," said Phan. Luckily for UMass students, this event comes about once every year, so if you missed out this past Saturday, check it out next year.

Solmaaz Yazdia can be reached at Syazdia@student.umass.edu.

Kristine Sa was one of many performers at the AASA sponsored Asian Night on Saturday in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall.

When your friend is a substance abuser, what should you do?

Some students recently wrote to the Daily Collegian seeking advice about a friend who can't seem to control herself when it comes to drinking.

BY VERONICA GARRETT
COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

Well there are just about five weeks left before we head out for summer jobs and the forever fun-summer things, but five more weeks means it's not yet time to party! This week a question came in from a concerned group of friends about their friend Faith* who is known to them as "the drunk girl." Faith is that girl who's always drunk and flirting, putting herself in danger and acting really irritating. She's loud and obnoxious before she throws up on you. So her friends want to know, "How do we handle this situation?"

These circumstances are tricky as Faith comes off as a promiscuous-alcoholic. It'll be hard to confront her because it's likely she'll become offended. Delicacy will be essential. I know, because I have an alcoholic father. There are a few different strategies you can use in the hope of bringing her back and keeping your friendship alive.

A very nonchalant way of making your thoughts clear is to stop inviting her out; make her wonder why you are no longer spending time partying with her. In the days she stops drinking, she could experience withdrawals and realize her problem all on her own. Playing this scenario out will most likely result in her discussing her problems with anyone close to her. Hopefully these people – family members, other friends – will be capable of placating her behavior with their genuine concern.

Scenarios including a discussion with Faith and concerned friends or family members need to be handled by the one most level headed person; whoever is least likely to become raging or emotional. Any conversation must be handled with the daintiest of words and phrases. Try to use "I" statements, so she'll feel less targeted. You have to remember that it's her personality and lifestyle you will be criticizing and also consider that she may have already realized her problem, but thought no one else had.

This topic was incredibly shocking to me, as I am currently studying the effects of drinking, the carcinogen that it is and the many things that poten-

See DRUNK on page 6

IF YOU ARE SEEKING SOME HELPFUL ADVICE...

email Veronica, advice columnist

Vgarrett@student.umass.edu or Arts@dailycollegian.com

Don't keep your problems to yourself.

WordMusic blends music, rhythm and poetry

BY CONOR SULLIVAN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

As Esther Dischereit questioned her audience at the start of her third poem, a ubiquitous chuckle filled the Isenberg School of Management amphitheater as she asked with an accent, "I speek German. Do you?" Of the 35 or so people who had taken April 4 to attend "wordMusic: A bilingual English and German experience" at the University of Massachusetts, only two were not known on a first-name basis by Alexandra Merley, an instructor of Advanced German. Even the pair of eight-year-old boys in the audience was fluent in German.

The performance began when Raymond Kaczynski, a Detroit percussionist whose operations center mainly in Germany, invited a relatively commonplace beat from his drum and Cajon. It was the type of rhythm one hears nightly on the streets of Boston or most any major city, reminiscent of warm summer nights and people banging their paint buckets outside Fenway. Just as the street performers do when they see a crowd starting to gather, Kaczynski's rhythm gained momentum until the stream of sound was solid and then quickly faded out. As the rhythm fell to the background Dischereit joined – struggling through what seemed to be an English translation of her poetry. Though it conjured clear images, the drumming of the first song was mundane and the English hard to understand.

Fortunately, the piece would prove a mere warm-up. During the second song it became apparent exactly why Kaczynski worked as a spoken word percussionist.

The drums were abandoned as Kaczynski picked up a violin bow and took to the small slate of wood that defined the night. His so called "Instrument" was named so due to it's resemblance of the Intelligence tests given to children. The plank of varnished oak was barely larger than the average textbook which lay flat above his drums and between the symbols.

Protruding from the face of the plank were a dozen or so small steel rods of various lengths, small short ones grouped tightly in the middle and larger ones lining each side, angling out beyond the board. A chain with various trinkets was strung across the middle, and a thick-ridged spring ran the length of the plank, filling a space that had been cut from the front of the wood. At the rear of the plank stood a series of thin brass coils, like bass clefs or question marks that had refused to stop spiraling into themselves.

It was through the picking and plucking, striking and strumming that Kaczynski was able to direct and manipulate the feelings of the crowd to flow with the words of Dischereit.

According to Dischereit, "There exists no word that is poetic garbage. I can speak of butter, and eggs, and toasters and what has happened recently in life and the audience will still hear the things relevant to the times." In 1995 she took this idea one step further, joining with Kaczynski and forming the "wordMusic group." To Dischereit, languages are the only real borders and boundaries, and making "wordMusic" bilingual was her way of opening up those borders. As she scratched the table in front of her, Dischereit was clear to indicate that though not every sound is inherently beautiful, "every sound can be made into something beautiful."

This concept clicked perfectly with Kaczynski who believes

See WORD MUSIC on page 6

On Wednesday, German poet Esther Dischereit performed at UMass.

Toubab a mixing pot of high energy music

A band with many influences inspires dancing

By Matthew Solomon
Collegian Staff

The search for original, creative and inspirational music has been an ongoing process for musicians and music lovers alike. Unfortunately, good music can often be hard to find in this day and age, so it's imperative that this search continues with full force, unobstructed.

When radio and MTV just aren't cutting it anymore, the cracks and crevices of the music world need to be explored with more care and attention. This is where the true musicians will be found. These are the hardworking men and women who make the real music world tick. They might not be making the most money, but the underground music scene is a lively and exciting place filled with satisfaction and pleasure for all who care to explore it.

Toubab Krewe is a band that is currently breaking out into the American music scene and is on their way to becoming a worldwide force. On Thursday night at the Pearl Street Theater in Northampton, the Krewe put on a lively concert filled with soulful sounds and African flavor.

The crowd was fairly small and the room was definitely not filled to capacity, however, the fans who were in attendance witnessed an unbelievable collaboration of musical skill. It was an energetic, sweat inducing party filled with smiling faces and good vibes. They had the entire crowd grooving all night, and everyone in the small club, including the usually uptight security force, knew that this was a gift to be savored. Their blend of African and dirty southrock music is filled with many unexpected twists and turns intended to entice music lovers of all shapes and sizes.

The Krewe is not some fame seeking, money hungry, groupie lurking band like so many others in the world of music today. It's more of a family oriented scene. Whenever a good friend or family member of the band is in the crowd they are guaranteed to get a shout out in between songs.

African music blended with southern rock music make up the sounds of band Toubab Krewe, who performed in front of a modest yet dance loving crowd at the Pearl Street Theater in Northampton on Thursday.

The quintet take their inspiration from musicians like Eric Clapton, Luke Quaranta and Jimi Hendrix, to name a few. But their influences mix to create a blend of musical originality.

This band is simply in it for the love of the music and to make people happy. After every show they stand around in the crowd and chat with their dedicated fans. They are all extremely nice guys who aren't trying to be rock stars, or at least not exactly. The band isn't trying to raise itself up on a pedestal. The members don't want there to be a divide between them and their fans. They are trying to bring it all together. The crowd is part of the show as well. Dancing is a huge part of their music and this is a way for their fans to include themselves in the show. This brings the whole group, the band and the fans, into one large circle of energy that feeds off each other.

Their live show has been expanding rapidly over the past couple of years and they've gotten to the point where there is rarely a moment without dancing. The only question is: what kind of dancing? It might be a wild, flaring, tribal, almost primitive style of dancing or it might be a slower, relaxed, more modern free-flow type of dance. Either way, their crowds are constantly moving because it's just so damn hard not too.

Musically they are tight as can be. They transition from their traditional African music to their more rocking songs without even a hint of hesitation. They draw their influences from an oceanic-sized pool of artists, so their music is like a melting pot that they keep throwing ingredients into. Their influences include the likes of The Allman Brothers, Jimi Hendrix, Eric Clapton, Tribe Called Quest, and the list goes on. Luke Quaranta, the percussionist in the Krewe, draws from an extremely wide range of influences spanning from New York hip-hop to his own mother. Furthermore, all the band members were heavily influenced by their numerous trips to Africa in which they studied the arts of Manding and Wassoulou music. All in all, this is a great group of musicians that throws an awesome party every time they're in town.

Matthew Solomon can be reached at Msolomon@student.umass.edu

Moran a UMass grad, rocket science–rockstar

BON SAVANT from page 5

UMass and living in the Pioneer Valley helped influence the band?

TM: Anyone who lives out there knows that it has an unusually dense concentration of interesting and artistic people living there down in the valley. Northampton is where I lived, and there are maybe just a couple other towns like that in the country, where there are about thirty thousand residents and all of them seem to be artists or doing something interesting. Either they're an artist or they own a coffee shop. The general vibe out there makes it easy to meet people who are musicians. I actually didn't play that much music while I was there just because I can only do one thing at a time. I kind of put the music on hold and studied physics for a while. I did play in a few bands out there with some of the guys I went to school with, they were physicists and mathematicians, we had a band that was quite awfully named "The Logarithmics." It wasn't very good, but we'd get together and play parties and not take anything seriously. It definitely contributed to a fruitful creative time in my life.

CC & GC: How has it been working at MIT as, basically, a rocket scientist?

TM: I started working for MIT after I graduated from UMass at a laboratory called Lincoln Labs, a privately funded research center. The job that I've been doing for the past five years, until recently, I'm there part-time now, as a project coordinator for suborbital rocket tests. Basically what I do is when people want to launch something into space, we take some measurements and we figure out how to get all the data back and make sure everything runs smoothly. We work on a project and then after the culmination of work, things launch into space.

CC & GC: Do you have any new material about to be released since your last album [Post-Rock Defends the Nation] came out in November 2006?

TM: We had been sitting on that album for some time before it and waiting to put the right pieces in place, release it and find the right publicity. We do have some new stuff and actually Monday I'm heading down to New York to talk to some producers down there and try to figure out the right way to do it. It's probably going to be three songs, a quick little bump to keep us on the map. We feel really good about the new stuff and don't want to make people wait two years until we get to make an album and then release it, we want to get it out. It's an exciting time for the band right now, looking how we're going to make these next recordings. It's invigorating when you get to focus on creating new music after concentrating on the business side for a while.

For the complete interview, check out the Massachusetts Daily Collegian's podcast Tuesday on www.dailycollegian.com.

Musical poetry moves crowd

WORDMUSIC from page 5

"There are as many forms of music as there are languages and speech patterns." As a professional percussionist of 30 years, working primarily in solo percussion and with spoken word performers, Kaczynski has continued to amass a vast collection of unusual and exotic instruments.

Dischereit's work frequently has overriding themes dealing with the "burden of being Jewish." To her, it is irrelevant how the memory of the Holocaust affects people, what they think of it or whether they care. What matters is that the memories are there, and will always be there. These cultural memories are inescapable, for her, European, and to some extent American Jews. The pain was visible in her face as she described how such memories penetrate the objects of her life and can be summoned by things as simple as a toaster.

Dischereit was clear to distinguish that although she is a political person, she is not a politician. Though she acknowledges that she is regarded as a major voice of the Jewish people in Germany, she is adamant that when she writes it is only as herself.

Although Dischereit does proclaim her support for human rights her struggle with her identity and cultural memories of the Holocaust does not translate to genocides of Rwanda and Darfur. Following the performance, she mentioned her weakness and the inability for an individual to change things, a very surprising attitude considering the political sound of many of her pieces. Shockingly she says she steers away from most public issues – only throwing her support behind issues where she can see something can be done, such as the trafficking of women in the Ukraine. While some of her pieces sound extremely political, she said she likes to leave it open to interpretation.

In the third piece of the performance, Dischereit shifted from the English text to her native tongue. Clearly much more comfortable with her poetry in her primary language, Dischereit started to synch with the rhythm, swinging her arms like dead weights at her side, bouncing her shoulders, rocking to the side and exhibiting what could almost have been attempted hip-hop gestures, comical and awkward coming from an older German woman. Though some of the English was moderately garbled, and some of the German was well beyond the grasp of the some of the undergrads, the message and the emotion of the performance were far from lost.

Inevitably, many of the selections presented quite a dark tone, a tone Kaczynski was able to capture quite well. But part of what he says draws him to his vast array of instruments is the humor he finds in them, a comedy he shared with the crowd, juxtaposing the darker themes presented by Dischereit. Perhaps what was most amazing about the performance was the crowd's interaction and Kaczynski's ability to catapult them through a full range of emotion.

As Dischereit spoke slowly and aggressively of the sweeping away of dust, the silence was punctuated by the snapping and shaking of broom ends, swung through the air, jerked to a halt with a quick tensing of the arms of Kaczynski. He would then smash them on the drums, with a fervor so complete, one felt sure something would break. With just enough silence between each movement he would sweep the ground, keeping the rhythm succinct and the audience tense.

Towards the end of the night, as Kaczynski returned to the "Instrument," tears began to accumulate in the eyes of a dark haired woman towards the front. But by the next song, Kaczynski was mimicking the sing song whines of an old woman, hooting into the mike and buzzing an interesting hum into his Vietnamese mouth harps. The glassed look disappeared and the woman was laughing out loud with the rest of the audience. Then just like that, the humor was gone, stripped, eliminated, the wells in the eyes returned and the audience were held in earnest until the end of the performance.

Conor Sullivan can be reached at Csullivan@student.umass.edu

Percussionist Raymond Kaczynski set the backdrop for poet Esther Dischereit at last week's wordMusic billingual event.

When your pal's over the edge

DRUNK from page 5

tially go wrong in your body when you decide to indulge. So I chose to look into this more; what I found was nothing short of outrageous. Statistics state that children are starting to drink at the age of 13, leading to a prediction that 240 to 360 thousand of the current college student body will eventually die of alcohol-related causes (emailed her already for sources. If she doesn't respond we'll cut this). It is a vicious cycle; an average student is statistically three times more likely to drink than an "A" student, and drinking results in poor grades. Sadly, 40 percent of teens drink when they are bored, alone or want to feel high, the other 60 percent choose to partake because they are upset about something. Drinking does in fact feed numerous other problems, such as the spread of HIV, teen pregnancy and raises the number of teen deaths annually; all consequences adding up to about 90 billion dollars a year, according to mudpc.org.

I don't know about any of you, but being the drunken girl and a statistic doesn't sound too fabulous to me. How to avoid such reputation is to simply watch yourself. You know when you have had enough to drink and you know when you've gone out just a few too many times this week. Watch out for each other, as well; if you're with three other people, one or two of you could not overindulge, and then switch for the next night out. You're in college; nights obliterated with friends run a dime a dozen.

My opinion on the best way to go about the dilemma is to tell Faith how much she means to you, let her know that you're concerned about her behavior and safety. Do not mention the words "help," "alcoholic" or "die." Those three in particular seem to offset anyone who has issues with alcoholism. The best advice is to be incredibly sensitive about it, be honest with your friends and especially yourself. Don't worry about being the life of the party, just be you.

*Veronica Garrett can be reached at Vgarrett@student.umass.edu. Email her if you need any advice. Names have been changed to protect the identity of students.

WRITE FOR ARTS AND LIVING!
Email Arts@dailycollegian.com, or Collegianarts@gmail.com to get in touch with an editor today!

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
is looking for new
Graphic Designers
for the Fall 2007 semester
♦ Daily Advertising Designers
♠ Nightly Production Supervisors
♥ Advertising Production Manager
Any major can apply. Previous design experience not necessary, but encouraged.
Visit our office in the Campus Center Basement from 10am - 4pm for applications.

Minutemen defeat Red Storm

M. LAX from page 10

the UMass defense – he cradled once and shot.

The next three scores all came unassisted on nice individual efforts by three different Red Storm players. It began with Manes faking his way through the defense and scoring top-shelf, and ended when Tom Michaelson freed himself in front to score while jumping through the air.

Halftime couldn't have been too pleasant inside Boyden Gymnasium.

"We weren't executing," senior captain Brett Garber said. "We knew we weren't doing what we were supposed to be doing out there and it puts a fire under us when we know we're not executing what we've been working on all week."

UMass coach Greg Cannella said his team wasn't playing with enough emotion in the game's first half.

"At halftime, I just let the guys know I thought we played pretty well other than about five minutes," the coach said. "I said my piece and coach [Jake] Coon got pretty emotional. It was a matter of our guys playing with emotion. They really need to do that."

Whatever was said in that locker room worked. The Minutemen came out with a purpose, beginning the second half with five straight goals of their own. The tail end included three straight by sophomore Jim Connolly.

It was Garber that awoke the UMass offense while the Minutemen had an extra-man opportunity at the 13:37 mark of the third. The goal was the captain's team-leading 16th of the season and the second man-up score for the Maroon and White on the afternoon – Rory Pedrick scored UMass' first goal of the game on an EMO.

Brian Jacovina then brought the Minutemen to within one just a minute later. With the ball on the far side of the field, he rolled towards the middle and fired a high, hard shot that Red Storm goalie Dan Goldberg couldn't get his stick on.

Connolly's hat trick began at the 9:06 mark, and ended some three and a half minutes later at 5:24.

On his first goal, Connolly fought through just about the entire Red Storm defense to get himself directly in front of Goldberg. The goalie had little chance on the attackman's bounce shot from such close range.

Jacovina then fed a streaking Connolly just 14 seconds later. His 14th of the season proved the sophomore can score with his off-hand as Connolly cut in the middle of the field, took Jacovina's feed and buried it in the net with his left hand.

The Red Storm finally slowed the pace somewhat, keeping the Minutemen – and Connolly – off the board for the next three minutes. His final tally of the game gave the Minutemen some needed insurance, 8-6, as O'Donnell finally broke the UMass scoring streak two minutes later.

Sophomore attack Tim Balise scored two goals in the Minutemen's 11-7 win over St. John's at Garber Field on Saturday.

O'Donnell's second of the game was the only goal St. John's scored in the second half. UMass' defensive unit effectively silenced the Red Storm offense. When the shots did get through, Schneider was there to turn them away – making 14 saves on the day.

Garber rounded out a hat trick of his own with just 10.9 seconds remaining in the third – his fifth three-goal performance of the season. The goal capped perhaps the Minutemen's finest offensive quarter of the season, an effort they carried into the fourth.

Tim Balise, an attackman who Cannella has been encouraging to be more aggressive this season, scored two goals in the final quarter. The 11-goal output ties UMass' season high. It scored 11 goals in wins over Harvard and Sacred Heart earlier this season.

"Hopefully, yeah," Balise responded when asked if the Minuteman offense was starting to click. "We just have to keep playing hard and keep looking ahead to the next game."

Jon Pelland can be reached at jpelland@student.umass.edu. Log onto the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegian.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.

UM offense steps up at perfect time is well aware of the Minutemen's offensive struggles, and said after UMass' 8-6 loss to Hofstra in their season opener – that his team would have to score 10 goals to win.

OFFENSE from page 10

True to form, UMass has won all three games in which it scored 10 or more goals. But Cannella and his players feel that the quality shots are there and the Minutemen have been taking them. It is just a matter of finishing.

"Finishing is the name of the game," Cannella said. "We're going to get opportunities and it's a matter of putting the ball in the net."

They didn't have any problems on that front in the second half. After allowing four straight SU goals, creating a 6-3 deficit heading into the break, the Minutemen put together a four-goal spurt of their own.

Senior captain Brett Garber started things off with a goal just 1:23 into the third. Brian Jacovina threw a running right-hander into the top shelf of the cage, and Connolly bumped and banged his way into the middle of the defense and bounced a ball past the goalie for UMass' third straight goal at the 9:06 mark.

Tie game. Connolly tossed in another goal 14 seconds later off of a pretty feed from Jacovina, and the UMass offense had turned the game around in a matter of minutes.

That kind of explosiveness hasn't come out of the closet this season, but the Minutemen rode it all the way to 11 goals and another win to get them one game from the .500 clip.

"We took better shots today," Garber said. "We take a lot of shots every game and we need to continue to get quality shots. We really took control and set the pace ourselves in the second half. We were on a roll."

Garber and others maintain that the offense didn't do anything differently on Saturday, the shots just dropped.

"We started off slow but we started playing hard, especially in the second half," said attacker Tim Balise, who scored two goals on the day. "We were just playing hard and when we got opportunities today, we finished the ball."

The Minutemen snapped the ball around the box with ease and purpose, and were able to penetrate the St. John's line on a regular basis. Cannella put an emphasis on team offense before the game and UMass put it to work in the second half with two nifty passes from Jacovina and another from freshman Bobby Hayes on the Minutemen's eighth goal.

"We moved the ball," Cannella said. "And when we move the ball, we have success. We do need to get over the 11-goal hump and get up there around 14. We need a day to break out."

Hobart is next weekend.

Rob Greenfield can be reached at rgreenf@student.umass.edu

Rams take two of three from UMass from second on an Adam Tempesta line drive up the middle.

BASEBALL from page 10

Sophomore starter Tim Comiskey had control problems early, and was pulled after the second inning in which Rhode Island scored two runs.

Mitchell Eilenberg replaced Comiskey, and after retiring the side in order in the third, couldn't provide the performance Stone was hoping for.

"We thought Mitchell was going to give us the innings today, and then they started to hit the ball hard," Stone said. "They hit the ball in the right spot today. They hit the ball to right field, and we didn't hit the ball to right field at all today. We didn't drive the ball at all."

The Minutemen trailed by as much as 15-1 after seven innings, but scored two runs in the bottom of the eighth before allowing the 16th and final score in the ninth.

Leading the way for Rhode Island was right-hander James Norcott. The senior picked up his second win of the season in seven innings of four-hit baseball. The only run he allowed was unearned in the first inning because Franczek reached base on catcher interference before scoring.

"He did a nice job," Stone said about Norcott's pitching performance. "He came to play today, and obviously we, for some reason, didn't. And after we blew the game yesterday, it just seemed like a big letdown."

UMass accompanied its poor pitching with very little offense Sunday, finishing the game with only five hits. It's biggest threat came in the bottom of the first, but a strike 'em out-throw 'em out double play left Tempesta and Bryan Adamski stranded on base.

Adamski was hit in the shoulder after Tempesta's RBI single, but catcher Bryan Garrity struck out swinging and Tempesta was thrown out at third on the hit-and-run attempt.

UMass got only one run in that inning, and never looked the same since.

"It was a 3-2 count, and you figure Garrity's going to get something on the baseball," Stone said. "You have to make things happen. Now I don't know if that was something that set the tone for the rest of the ballgame, but we just couldn't get anybody out. They took batting practice on us all day long."

The Minutemen hope the Eagles don't do the same this afternoon, as UMass hosts Boston College today at 3 p.m. in a make-up game from the March 14 postponement.

Danny Picard can be reached at dpicard@student.umass.edu.

Sophomore Jim Macdonald went 0-for-4 with one strikeout in Sunday's 16-3 loss to Rhode Island at Earl Lorden Field.

Junior catcher Bryan Garrity went 0-for-2 with one strikeout in Sunday's 16-3 loss to Rhode Island at Earl Lorden Field. The Minutemen lost two of three in the first home series of the season over the weekend. They host Boston College this afternoon at 3 p.m.

Stone needs to take some of the blame double and a walk. With no one else ready, Hodges was forced to take the beating, and the game was suddenly 9-1 – and out of reach.

ROSENSWAIKE from page 10

Despite trailing by 13 runs in the ninth inning, Stone decided it would be a good idea to keep five of his starters in the game and risk a potential injury. With the freezing field conditions (the wind-chill was in the 20's), the risk of an injury – such as a pulled hamstring – was much higher. Certainly, no lead is insurmountable, but it is highly questionable to leave your starters in a 13-run game, especially when moves you didn't make earlier helped get the game out of hand.

There were many more questionable moves or non-moves by Stone this weekend. Why wasn't Travis Munsey, who went 5-for-8 in the doubleheader, starting in Sunday's game? Why not keep the hot bat in the lineup? His replacement in the order, Mike Donato, went 0-for-4.

Why not give catcher Bryan Garrity some rest after game one of the doubleheader? He started behind the plate in all three games, and caught 24 innings in 24 hours. If he had gotten some rest after game one, maybe he wouldn't have gone a combined 0-for-5 in game two and in Sunday's game.

The Minutemen seemingly had the doubleheader sweep in-hand on Saturday, but fell just short. Reliever Mike Dicato was terrific, but his chance at a win was squandered after a throwing error brought in the tying run. Despite already pitching 6 2/3 innings of relief and showing signs of fatigue, Stone kept Dicato in the game, and he was taken deep by Eric Larson for what turned out to be the game-winning hit.

Of course, every baseball manager can be second-guessed. Yet, there is a deeper issue at work here than simply questioning inning by inning strategy.

A coach is only as good as his players, of course, but by not being able to recruit any left-handed pitching, Stone has put his team at a disadvantage. Prior to this season, Stone hasn't recruited the type of players you need to play it successfully.

His team is loaded with slow base runners who can't successfully steal bases. In 19 games, the Minutemen have stolen just 18 bases, and have been thrown out 15 times. In game two's loss, UMass was caught stealing three times, including twice in the seventh inning of a one-run game – and by its third and fourth hitters in the order.

Coach Stone has had a stellar career at UMass. There can be little doubt about that. But if Stone can take credit for the successful years, here – and he should – he needs to shoulder some of the blame for the recent less than stellar seasons.

The Minutemen, at 6-13, are heading for their fourth consecutive sub-.500 year.

Eli Rosenswaike is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at erosenswaike@student.umass.edu

LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO LIVE?
KAMINS
SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS
PRESIDENTIAL APTS
COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS
PERRY APTS
177 N. PLEASANT ST.
COLLEGE INN APTS
LANTERN COURT APTS
MILL HOLLOW
CRESTVIEW APTS.
55 S. PLEASANT ST. 253-2515 AMHERST
LARGEST SELECTION OF APARTMENTS IN TOWN

South College Rec Council presents
Grammy-nominated artist
Lupe Fiasco
and
Special Opening Event
Nina Sky
April 15th, 2007
8PM DOORS OPEN AT 7PM
John M. Greene Hall
TICKETS ON SALE NOW!
$10 Smith, $15 Five-College $20 General

UMass sweeps Saint Louis

SOFTBALL from page 10

Morin went 3-for-6 with a walk for the Minutewomen on the day. She also scored four runs from the leadoff spot.

Despite the hits, the second inning would end with UMass ahead just 2-0. Senior Candice Mollica, Cullington and Mollica came up with chances to open the game up and failed.

SLU starter Rosie Gonzalez held UMass scoreless over the next three innings, scattering three hits and walking no one.

The Billikens' best chance to score came in the top of the first inning. Although Balschmiter got Pursell to chase a pitch in the dirt, Serio struggled to corral the ball. She recovered, but threw from a poor angle and Pursell reached. A fielder's choice and another dropped third strike allowed her to advance to third. But Balschmiter coaxed a comebacker out of SLU cleanup hitter Christy Ernst to end the threat.

"I thought we got a great performance on the mound in both games," Sortino said. "Two back-to-back complete games in this weather. In the first game, it was great that we [won by run rule] in five, saving two innings. She had a lot of quick at-bats, a couple of pitches and they were out."

In the Minutewomen's final at-bat, Cullington worked the count full before turning on an inside fastball and lifting it down the left field line to put the game away.

"I thought it was foul, that I just fouled it off," she said. "The wind pulled it back in, it was great. I was really trying to stay short, it was an inside pitch and I thought I drove it really well, so I was happy."

Although a homer from Cullington proved the decisive blow in the first day of the game as well, five players drove in runs while SLU held only two Minutewomen hitless in the five inning game – the Minutewomen led by eight after the Saint Louis' half of the fifth, ending the game due to the run rule.

"I believe that this team can hit one through nine," Sortino said. "I think we have solid hitters. Even [Serio], she's no slouch. She can hit the ball. She's starting to come around and figure some things out."

Serio went 1-for-4 on the afternoon. Despite her .188 batting average, the UMass backstop showed her defensive prowess throughout the game. In the first inning of game one, Serio caught SLU sophomore Rachel Heet trying to steal second base.

Williams made UMass' only error on the day. A hard hit ground ball stayed down while she anticipated a hop and the ball ricocheted off her left shin into centerfield. The error is the only miscue made by the UMass defense in its last six games. Before that, the Minutewomen made five errors in a two-game set with Dartmouth.

"We've been working on grounders and short hops [in practice]," Cullington said. "A lot, I think for me personally, is mental. I just need to mentally prepare myself and set my mind to it. It's been paying off."

Joe Meloni can be reached at jmeloni@student.umass.edu.

DAN TRISCIUOGLIO/COLLEGIAN

Senior first baseman Amanda Morin went 2-for-4 with two runs scored and an RBI in Sunday's Game 2 win over Saint Louis.

Mollica faces ups and downs in 2007

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It was just another day for the Massachusetts' softball team.

Sunday was just another conference opponent and another pair of wins in a double-header for the odds-on favorite to win the Atlantic 10 again this year.

But for one of the team's stars, third baseman Whitney Mollica (an odds-on favorite for a slew of individual awards and achievements when the season began), it was another day of ups and downs.

Last year's A-10 Rookie and Player of the Year has struggled mightily in her sophomore campaign to replicate the record-breaking numbers she recorded last season (though the expectations haven't been any lower).

Her .394 batting average, 12 home runs and 61 RBIs in 2006 dwarf her current numbers (.284, 2 homers and 17 RBIs). Yesterday's pair of games against Saint Louis was the perfect example of Mollica's season thus far.

In Game one, the sophomore was solid. Getting a rare chance to bat in the cleanup spot for the Minutewomen, Mollica took advantage early on. In her first at-bat in the bottom of the first inning, No. 23 took the first pitch to the warning track in dead center for a two-run double.

Her next at-bat was just as impressive. Mollica smacked a single up the middle in the second inning to extend the second-straight four-run inning for the Maroon and White.

She finished the game 2-for-3 with a pair of RBIs while playing stellar defense at the hot corner. Even with the temperature in the low 30s, stiff leather and a hard infield couldn't keep Mollica from making all the right plays in the field.

But while her defensive play didn't cool off in the second game her bat certainly did. Once again batting fourth, Amanda Morin, Candice Mollinari and Stacy Cullington each reach base safely, setting up a bases-loaded, no-outs situation for Mollica.

She watched a 2-2 strike go right by, for the first out of the inning. Saint Louis pitcher Rosie Gonzalez got out of the first allowing just one run while retiring three of the next four batters after loading the bases.

In the second, Mollica entered the batter's box with runners on second and third and two outs, only to ground out to the shortstop to end the inning. She finished 1-for-4 with a single. After the game, Mollica talked about her day at the plate.

"I always feel like I'm going to get a hit in those situations," Mollica said. "I was confident in myself, but at the same time I know if I don't get a hit, I don't get a hit. I know that other people on the team are going to pick me up no matter what."

Although she hit in the cleanup spot yesterday, it's been hard sometimes to spot her in the lineup. She started the season in the same spot she spent almost all of last season in, batting third.

After struggling in the early tournaments, UMass coach Elaine Sortino bumped her down to seventh. Since then she's been back in the three-hole, hit cleanup yesterday and could be found in a few other spots throughout the season.

"Coach [Sortino] trusts me no matter where I am in the lineup," Mollica said. "For her, it's just finding a good mix that is going to score the most runs for us and get us a win. So it really doesn't matter where I am in the lineup. We need to win and she's going to put me wherever she thinks I need to be."

Sortino was happy with Mollica's performance Sunday. Throughout the season, the coach has remarked on how difficult this year has been for her third baseman, knowing that her phenomenal freshman season would be used as the benchmark for the rest of her collegiate career.

"I thought she did well," Sortino said. "I thought she gave us some good at-bats. I think she's working her way back into hitting [the way she did last year]. I think it's been hard for her, and I was really pleased with what she did overall."

As far as the decision to move Mollica back into the heart of the lineup, where the pressure is sure to be more intense every time she steps up to bat, Sortino said it was just a matter of who was hitting well that week.

"It's just that I liked what she's been doing the last couple of days," Sortino said. "I think she's been giving us a good look, and she's given us some good at-bats in practice."

She showed flashes of what she can do – and has done in the past – in Game one, but Mollica also demonstrated how difficult this year has been at times in the second contest. It's impossible not to compare her numbers to last season, but 2007 bears no resemblance to 2006 for the Minutewomen's third baseman.

Jeremy Rice can be reach at jeremy@student.umass.edu. Log on to the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.

Atlantic 10 rivals haunt Minutewomen

UM falls to Temple and George Washington over weekend

BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It's a difficult way to start Atlantic 10 play, as the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team (5-7, 0-2 A-10) has dug itself a hole in the conference standings.

The Minutewomen suffered two close losses over the weekend, dropping games to A-10 rivals Temple (13-6, 1-0 A-10) and George Washington (4-5, 0-1 A-10). The team has an opportunity to improve its A-10 record against No. 12 Richmond (8-4, 2-0 A-10) this Sunday.

Traveling to Philadelphia last Friday, the Maroon and White lost to Temple on a last-second shot, 11-10.

Temple	11
UMass	10
GW	10
UMass	7

Two days later, the Minutewomen returned to Amherst to face George Washington. But the result was not much better for UMass, as the team suffered a 10-7 loss.

"George Washington is a great team," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said. "They definitely deserved to win this game. They executed better than us and that's what these close games come down to at the end of the season."

The Minutewomen maintained control of the game for much of the first half, but only managed to take a one goal lead into halftime. UMass took a 5-2 lead with 12 minutes left in the first half off of a goal from junior attack Kathleen Typadis.

The only UMass player with multiple goals.

Less than one minute later, Typadis suffered a knee injury from contact with three GW defenders. Although the junior returned in the second half, the UMass offense appeared to lose the rhythm it established during the first half. The team scored only one goal in each period after the injury.

In fact, after dominating the first 15 minutes of period one, UMass only managed five shots in the second half.

"We couldn't get the ball to our attack," Venechanos said. "You can't score with having only a few shots like we did in the second half – we just couldn't execute all over the field."

Perhaps the biggest reason for the lack of possession was turnovers. The team committed an uncharacteristic 26 total turnovers that led to the inconsistent play.

"We gave them too many opportunities off the turnovers and that allowed them to score a lot of goals. We're not good enough to give them 26 opportunities and still be in the game."

And GW certainly took advantage of the turnovers in the second half, taking the lead for the first time halfway through that period. In fact, the Colonials scored four consecutive goals to end the game, holding UMass scoreless for the final 20 minutes.

However, the Minutewomen fared well with draw controls, winning 10-of-18. Sophomore Holly Drown and senior Samantha Sepulveda controlled four each. Even though winning draws is very important for establishing possessions, the team's success at this facet of the game only emphasizes how significantly the turnovers affected the game.

"The draws are possession," Venechanos said. "We definitely had the ball for a little while, but we turned it away. We did a good job initially, but we just need to keep finishing plays."

It was a similar story for the Minutewomen against Temple. Only this time, UMass managed to keep the game tied until the final minute of play. With less than four minutes left, Typadis scored to tie the game at 10.

Then, Allison Frengs took the ball into the offensive zone for the Owls and drew a foul at the eight-meter line. Frengs tallied the game-winning goal on the restart with just five seconds left in the contest.

UMass controlled play in the first half with a balanced scoring attack. Nine minutes into the second, Sepulveda scored to give the team its biggest lead of the game at 7-3.

But once again, the Minutewomen allowed their opponent to crawl back into the game. The Owls scored four consecutive goals to take the lead, including two from free position shots in the middle of the second half.

In the final minute, sophomore midfielder Megan Reddy scored, but the goal was waived off as a dangerous play. The call resulted in a turnover and allowed the Owls to race down the field to set up the final goal.

"That game, it was the little possessions and the shots where we couldn't put them all away," Venechanos said. "Hopefully when we're in that situation again, we'll come up on top."

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu.

DAN TRISCIUOGLIO/COLLEGIAN

Junior defender Julie Papaleo recorded four groundballs for the Minutewomen in Sunday's 10-7 loss to George Washington.

McCarthy provides veteran leadership

Senior goalkeeper makes presence felt on defense

BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

She's been the mainstay in net for the Minutewomen all season. In her fifth year as a member of the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team, goalie Lauren McCarthy has established herself as one of the leaders of the UMass defense.

Even though UMass suffered losses to Atlantic 10 rivals Temple and George Washington, senior Lauren McCarthy played exceptionally well in net. Not only did she make saves, the Derry, N.H. native made defensive plays outside of the crease.

"She's been keeping us in the game to win and that's all you ask for from a goalie," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said. "She's making some good, timely saves and the defense definitely feeds off her momentum."

After the Minutewomen lost their offensive rhythm in the latter part of the first half and the second, the senior made several crucial saves to keep the score close.

None was more impressive than her performance from close range during the first few minutes of the second half. Passing the ball around the cage, a GW player cut toward the net and fielded a pass in front of McCarthy. The goalie blocked the shot with her stick and managed to control the rebound.

A Colonial midfielder regained possession in the neutral zone and put her team back on offense. McCarthy made a save on a shot from near the 12-meter line, but could not control the rebound.

Another GW player collected the ball and attempted to score from a difficult angle. McCarthy made the save from a close distance and corralled the shot in her stick.

McCarthy's teammates, clearly energized from the series of saves, parlayed the possession into a goal several minutes later. At that point, UMass established a 7-6 lead, but surrendered two goals in the next five minutes.

When it was clear that her teammates were struggling to establish an offensive rhythm, McCarthy made aggressive plays to stifle the GW attack. The goalie ventured out of the crease on several possessions to force turnovers and to prevent the Colonials from getting quality scoring chances.

She forced two turnovers using this strategy and did not allow an open-net goal. McCarthy also fielded seven groundballs in the contest, a career high. Although she played a complete defensive game, her frantic play during the final minutes was not enough to lift her teammates to victory.

However, the UMass defense made the situation difficult for McCarthy in certain situations. The team committed a total of 18 fouls, several of which resulted in free position shots for GW players.

This type of opportunity is awarded to the offense when the other team commits a major or minor foul. Play is stopped and every player must move at least four meters away from the location of the foul.

The offensive player then has an excellent opportunity to shoot unobstructed or find an open player because of the open space. Free position shots typically result in goals within close proximity to the net.

George Washington scored its fifth goal off a free position shot within the 12-meter line in the offensive zone. The Colonials had another free position opportunity earlier in the game, but McCarthy made a jumping save to prevent a goal.

Before this weekend's game, McCarthy ranked third among A-10 goalies with a 9.74 goals-against average. She also is fourth in save percentage, averaging saves on nearly 47 percent of the shots she faces.

In half of the 12 games she's played, McCarthy has allowed nine goals or less. She's also played every minute of each game except the team's victory over Harvard and loss to Northwestern earlier in the season.

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu.

DAN TRISCIUOGLIO/COLLEGIAN

Senior goalkeeper Lauren McCarthy made 10 saves in the Minutewomen's 10-7 loss to George Washington on Sunday.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is hiring copy editors for the Fall 2007 semester

if interested please pick up an application at the Daily Collegian Office, located in the Campus Center basement or contact Sheryl Wolnik at swolnik@student.umass.edu.

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)

CAMPUS ENTERTAINMENT GROUP PRESENTS
UMPHREY'S McGEE plus Brothers Past
WED. APR. 11 • 8:00 PM DOORS OPEN 7:00 PM
CALVIN 19 KING ST. NORTHAMPTON
CLAP YOUR HANDS SAY YEAH with Elvis Perkins in Dearland
WED. APR. 11 • 8:30 PM DOORS OPEN 7:30 PM/BALLROOM
RJD2 PLUS DUS DRIVER, NIKKI'S CHICHESTER
SUN. APR. 15 • 8:30 PM DOORS OPEN 7:30 PM/BALLROOM
Pearl Street Nightclub 10 PEARL ST. NORTHAMPTON
WIN TICKETS! E-mail your name & favorite band to streetteam@ihcg.com
TO PURCHASE TICKETS ON FOR MORE INFO VISIT OUR WEBSITE OR CALL
WWW.IHEG.COM @413-586-8686

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

		8	5	3
			6				8	4
7		2		9	4
		3				5	1
		9				2
	6	1				7
			7	5		4		9
3	2				6
				4	8	3

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"May your trails be crooked, winding, lonesome, dangerous, leading to the most amazing view. May your mountains rise into and above the clouds."

-Edward Abbey

TWO DUDES BY AARON WARNER

THIS SHOW IS SO FAKE, DUDE.
THE PLOT IS SO WEAK I'M SURPRISED ANYONE AGREED TO BE IN IT AFTER READING THE SCRIPT.
I DON'T THINK SCOOBY-DOO KNOWS HOW TO READ, DUDE.

HARD KNOCKS BY LOUIS COPPOLA

HARD KNOCKS
SAMSON THINKS HE'S GOING TO BE A MODEL?
OR AN ACTOR, MAYBE
HA HA! HEY, DAD, MAYBE YOU CAN WRITE HIM A SCRIPT TO READ!
HA! HA!
HA HA! HEH! HAH! HA! HA! HA HA HA! HEE! HEH! HAW! HAW! HEH! HEH! HAW! HA! HAHAH! HEE! HA HA HA!
DO YOU REALLY THINK HE'D READ MY SCRIPT?

LABRAT BY RICHARD MARTELL

THE OLDER I GET THE MORE I START TO WONDER, "WHAT'S IT ALL ABOUT?"
I MEAN, I'VE BEEN IN SCHOOL MY ENTIRE LIFE BUT WHAT DID I REALLY LEARN?
MONEY IS EVERYTHING.

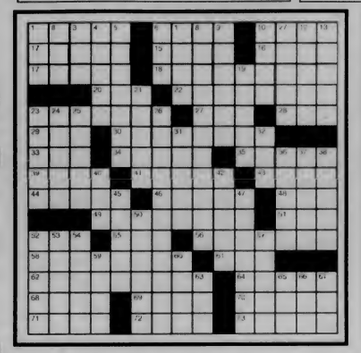
WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK BY JOSH SHALEK

Have you ever seen a person with a duck's head?
Not a canary.
A canary's head? No- are you sure it wasn't a canary masquerading as a tourist with a duck's head?
But must have been it
The simplest solution is usually the correct one

ACROSS
1 Gershwin opera hero
6 Coll. entrance exam
10 Hey, over here!
14 Vowel quintet
15 Summoned, old-style
16 Architect Pei's first name
17 Fairy tale beast
18 Alexander the Great's tutor
20 Cotillion gal
22 Banderas and Selena
23 Brings to mind
27 Low-lying wetland
28 Compass dir.
29 Ms. Thurman
30 Non-member
33 Maple drip
34 Legs junction
35 Medicinal quantities
39 Grow weary
41 Divvy up
43 Sicilian volcano
44 Street talk
46 Ringlet
48 NL Braves
49 "The ___ of the Sierra Madre"
51 Word with whiz
52 Goddess of folly
55 Marie's morsel
56 Halfway point
58 Capital of North Dakota
61 Stitch
62 Wormwoods
64 Triangular sign
68 Stadium level
69 Bodies
70 Bonehead play
71 Facilitate
72 Movie terrier
73 List of candidates
DOWN
1 Gentle caress
2 ___ the land of the free
3 Roberto's river
4 Moor of Israel
5 Holiday burner
6 Whirlpool deg.
7 Poet Teasdale
8 Having no end
9 Sampled
10 Nucleus element
11 Become permanent
12 Wise lawyer
13 "We hold ___ truths"
19 Added shading
21 Smudges
23 Gestures
24 Communication option
25 "It's a Wonderful Life" director
26 Timing devices
31 Mariner
32 Fish eggs
36 Enact
37 Key PC key
38 Oregon's capital
40 Way in, in brief
42 Copley and Garr
45 Sound of pain
47 Night flights
50 Chanteuse Kitt
52 Del dozen
53 Sherborne
54 Middle of a tassel?
57 P-quents
59 Soggy ground
60 Daily Planet reporter
63 .9 digit ID org.
65 Important period
66 Distillery
67 Happing Doctor
Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

CROSSWORD HINT

SEVEN ACROSS: FAIRY-TALE BEAST
DOES THIS PICTURE CREEP YOU OUT?
COLLEGIANCOMICS@YAHOO.COM



Continuing & Professional Education
UMASS AMHERST SUMMER SESSION 2007
Make plans to catch up - or get ahead!
• New online GenEds
• Same great faculty!
• Smaller classes
• Two Sessions
I: June 4 – July 2
II: July 6 – August 22
Register now!
By visiting us @
www.UMassUlearn.net/de

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
If you are not willing to repeat yourself, you should not speak in the first place.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Seek more out of life, I mean Ariel had 20 thing-a-mabobs but she still wanted more.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Easter may be over but eggs are always a healthy way to start the day.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Dream big but try to keep your night-mares to a modest size.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
You will fall out of bed tonight so make sure you move that pile of thumbtacks.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
You are the one named Sailor Moon.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Grunge may have gone out of vogue but flannel shirts are timeless.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
If you don't find puppies cute then you obviously have no soul.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Dean's Book...the downfall of society?

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
You will find the fossilized remains of many velociraptors near Brett and Brooks.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Please tend to your eyebrows because they are turning into a forehead mullet.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Cuticle, follicle, pore...you're obsession with hygiene makes my mind sore.

Chicago Pizzaria
Free Delivery!
PIZZA - CALZONES - SUBS - WRAPS
SALADS - PASTA - DINNERS
RIBS - SEAFOOD - SLICES
PARTY SIZE PIZZA NOW AVAILABLE!
CALZONE SLICES...LIKE NO OTHER!
NOW OPEN FOR LUNCH!
HOURS
Sun.-Wed: 11am -2am
Thurs.-Sat: 11am -3am
Order For DELIVERY or PICK UP
(413) 549-6073
150 Fearing Street
Next to Patterson Dorm
Amherst, MA 01002

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Like no other course, Army ROTC All money going to school and none for the weekend? We pay you to be a student and learn leadership www.umass.edu/armyrotc

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Mill Valley Estates APARTMENT FOR RENT 2 bedroom $1125, 3 bedroom $1425, 4 bedroom $2175 Accepting Applications, 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winnco.com

Center of town, 1,2,3 bedrooms hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

EMPLOYMENT

Outdoor Recreation Jobs Rafting guides full or part time Massachusetts or Maine. Will train! Contact www.moxierafting.com 800-866-6943

EMPLOYMENT

Moving: Local Moving Company looking for self motivated individuals, part-time positions available immediately. Weekday availability a plus. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call (413) 584-4746

Summer on Cape Cod Rent & utilities paid in exchange for providing transportation for teen. Easy walking distance to downtown & beaches, awenkozma@aol.com

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

EMPLOYMENT

Full time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office, $9.50/hour Applications available at 235 Whitmore and are due April 13th.

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Line-cooks needed Full-time Part-time available. Apply in person Amherst Brewing Co. 24 N. Pleasant st.

FOR SALE

English Bulldog Puppies AKC, Champion Bloodlines and come with health certificate, worm-ings, updated shots. Available at this time 4 males and 5 females. $550 each, ready to go to their new homes, selling fast. Puppies available now. For more information and pictures please contact Jessie Young on her email address: jyoung-petcare@yahoo.com

SERVICES

Legal Questions? We have answers, Student Legal Services Office. 925 Campus Center 545-1995

SERVICES

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992. www.tapestryhealth.com

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, APRIL 9, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Comeback Kids

Senior midfielder Andrew Recchione recorded one assist and two groundballs in UMass' 11-7 win over St. John's at Garber Field on Saturday. The Minutemen outscored the Red Storm 8-1 in the second half to win their fourth game of the 2007 season.

UMass outscores St. John's 8-1 in second half to earn win

BY JON PELLAND
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Halftime couldn't have come soon enough for the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team against St. John's on Saturday. The Minutemen answered a Red Storm goal-scoring spree in the closing minutes of the second period with one of their own to start the third and take the victory, 11-7.

UMass	11
SJU	7

The win is UMass' (4-5, 2-1 ECAC) second straight, and it takes that streak on the road next weekend to face Hobart in Geneva, N.Y.

With little scoring for either side through much of the game's first two quarters, it seemed as though the home team was in for another defensive battle. But that all changed when St. John's (3-6, 1-3 ECAC) reeled off four straight scores in the three minutes before halftime.

The rally brought what had been a 3-2 UMass lead to a 6-3 Red Storm advantage entering the locker room. Every shot the visitors threw at the net seemed to beat UMass goalie Doc Schneider.

St. John's tied the game with a nice catch-and-shoot on a pass from Tom Manes to Justin O'Donnell. Manes controlled the ball on the right side of the box and hit a cutting O'Donnell in the middle of

See M. LAX on page 7

Minuteman offense shows true colors against Red Storm

BY ROB GREENFIELD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

When the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team went down by three goals in the first half of Saturday's game against St. John's, those who knew the team well had trouble believing in a comeback if the Red Storm put a few more scores on the board.

The reason for the skepticism: the UMass offense.

While the Minutemen have had outbursts of 11 goals against Harvard and Sacred Heart this year, they have also had their tribulations when it comes to the simple yet extremely trying task of putting the ball in the net.

UMass had success on Saturday, scoring 11 goals for the third time this season and defeating St. John's by an 11-7 score.

But when the first half concluded, with three straight goals by the Red Storm to end the second quarter, you wondered if UMass had the firepower to pull off a comeback if the Red Storm had a similar offensive output in the second half.

Well, the Minutemen answered, and put a big exclamation point on the win by scoring eight goals in the second half to get to the 11 mark.

Sophomore attack Jim Connolly led UMass with three goals and two assists.

"We have talented players who can put the ball in the net," Connolly stated. "We have young guys getting more time and we got a few faceoffs there getting us going in the fourth quarter."

UMass coach Greg Cannella

See OFFENSE on page 7

Stone should be criticized for losing

Eli Rosenswaike

UMass baseball coach Mike Stone – in his 20th season at the helm – registered his 500th victory with the Minutemen on Saturday. But that's not what this column is about.

The milestone victory – an impressive accomplishment, for sure – doesn't mean that Stone can't be criticized for many of his managerial decisions, especially this weekend in the series loss to Rhode Island.

Sunday's 16-3 loss to the Rams wasn't pretty, to say the least. The players couldn't muster up any offense against a sub-par pitcher, and the pitching staff was downright awful. It was a poor team effort all-around, coaching staff included.

After UMass starting pitcher Tim Comiskey exited after just two innings, Mitchell Eilenberg came in and pitched a 1-2-3 third inning. In the fourth, Eilenberg struggled and was hit hard, but only allowed one run despite surrendering a home run, a double and a walk.

The fifth inning is where things started to come undone. Despite showing signs of ineffectiveness, Eilenberg was sent out for his third inning of relief. After he walked Ryan Cunningham with one out, it was clear Eilenberg was no longer Stone's best pitching option. With no action in the bullpen, there was nothing Stone could do as he watched his right-hander give up a two-run shot and then back-to-back singles. The 3-1 game entering the fifth swelled into a 6-1 lead for the Rams.

Don't blame Eilenberg entirely, though. It was Stone who wasn't prepared. Eilenberg struggled in the fourth, and had already thrown two innings, yet there was no action in the bullpen. Stone should have had someone ready immediately after Eilenberg walked Cunningham. Even after allowing his second home run, Stone stuck with him. It's one thing to come back from being down by two runs; it's another thing trying to overcome a five run deficit.

Although down 6-1, the Minutemen still had a chance to come back with four innings still left to play. But things were made tougher on them when Stone essentially conceded the game to the Rams.

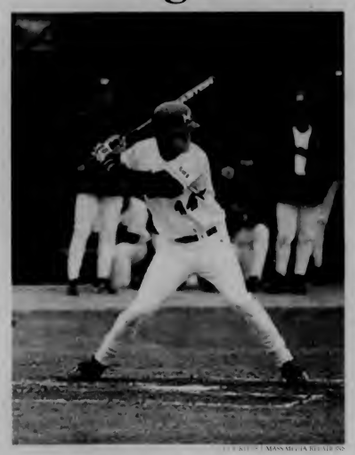
Once again, with another pitcher struggling mightily on the mound, Stone refused to get someone up in the bullpen. Beau Hodges – who got the last out in the fifth – was hit hard to begin the sixth, allowing a single,

See ROSENSWAIKE on page 7

Rams get best of UM Nine

Back-to-back losses take away from coach's self-achievement

BY DANNY PICARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF



Senior Bryan Adamski went 1-for-2 in Sunday's 16-3 loss to Rhode Island. UMass hosts Boston College this afternoon at 3 p.m.

Massachusetts baseball coach Mike Stone recorded his 500th career win on Saturday in the first of a three-game set against Rhode Island, but UMass' home-opening series didn't end as well as it had started.

UMass	5
URI	4
URI	5
UMass	4
URI	16
UMass	3

UMass (6-13, 3-6 Atlantic 10) dropped two games at Earl Lorden Field after defeating the Rams 5-4 in the opening game of Saturday's doubleheader. Stone's accomplishment was watered down when URI returned the favor in the second game of the day, as senior outfielder Eric Larson hit a game-winning home run off Mike Dicato in the top of the 11th inning.

"The number is satisfying," Stone said on win No. 500. "It gives you credibility as far as being around long enough to get the wins. Unfortunately, I'm a bit distracted about the second game. It's definitely gratifying. It verifies the amount of time, effort, years and kids that have played for us."

That effort Stone praised was nowhere to be found in Sunday's rubber match with the Rams. Rhode Island (8-17, 5-4 A-10) used its 18 hits and four home runs to run away with a 16-3 beat down of the Minutemen yesterday.

UMass kept the game close at 3-1 after four innings, but Scott Brown's home run in the top of the fifth inning opened the floodgates.

"We just got no effort at all from anybody on the mound," Stone said after Sunday's loss. "We didn't do anything at the plate. We didn't do much on defense. It was just a poor effort all the way around from us."

The Minutemen jumped out to an early 1-0 lead in the bottom of the first when Ryan Francezek scored

See BASEBALL on page 7

Junior infielder Stacy Cullington went 2-for-4 with three RBI in UMass' 5-0 win over Saint Louis in Game 2 of Sunday's double-header. It extended the team's home winning streak to 21 games.

Minutewomen sweep SLU

Pair of victories extend home winning streak to 21 games

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Massachusetts softball coach Elaine Sortino loves to play small ball. The Minutewomen can bunt and steal as well as anyone, but in the Easter Sunday sweep of Saint Louis, the Maroon and White rode the long ball to victory, trouncing the Billikens 8-0 and 5-0.

The Minutewomen collected seven extra-base hits while out-hitting SLU 17-3 in Sunday's action.

Sophomore hurler Brandice Balschmiter won both games for UMass (19-12-1, 6-0 Atlantic 10). The victories improved her personal winning streak to eight games and the Minutewomen's home winning streak to 21 games, dating back to last season. The 21-game mark is the longest in the nation.

UMass	8
SLU	0
UMass	5
SLU	0

Offensively, second baseman Stacey Cullington continued her clutch ways with the bat. She went 3-for-6 with three runs scored and six RBIs, including a pair of three-run homers.

After playing three of their last four series at home, the Minutewomen hit the road for an eight-game road trip beginning at Boston College this Wednesday.

In the first inning of the day's second game, the Minutewomen loaded the bases with no outs, but pushed just one run across. Sophomore third baseman Whitney Mollica had a chance to put UMass ahead, but took a close pitch on the outside corner for strike three.

UMass' lone run of the inning came when junior left fielder Lauren Proctor flew out to deep center, scoring senior Amanda Morin.

UMass didn't waste any time doubling its lead. Following a Jessica Serio walk, a Whitney Williams bloop avoided the glove of SLU left fielder Jill Pursell for a double. Senior Michea Holness, who pinch ran for Serio, advanced to third. Morin came to the plate with runners at second and third. She wasted little time in lining a first pitch fastball into center, plating Holness.

See SOFTBALL on page 8

MINUTEMEN DOWN EAGLES PAGE 10

DINNER ON STOCKBRIDGE ROAD PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

FLURRIES : HI: 40 LO: 21 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM TUESDAY, APRIL 10, 2007

'96 alum and the Israeli mob

UMass grad writes about life of a New York mobster

BY MELISSA GARBER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

While looking for a freelance job online, David Copeland stumbled into the heart of New York's Israeli mafia as he was browsing through ads on Craiglists.com.

"It was as if the ad was written for me," the University of Massachusetts alum recalled. "It said, 'writer wanted.'"

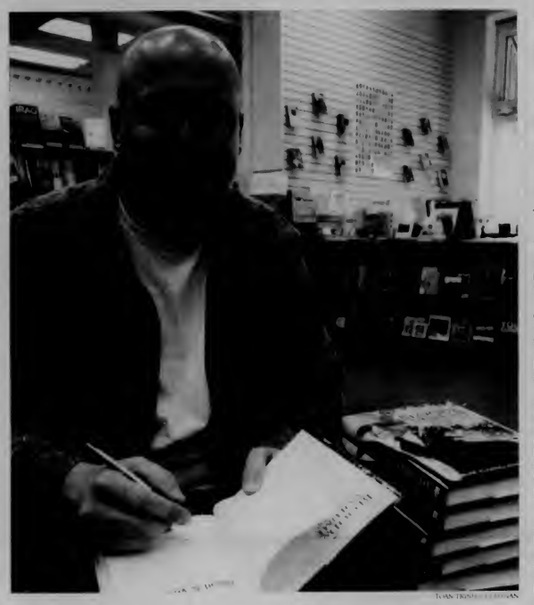
Copeland originally wanted to write about life in the Witness Protection Program, but that quickly changed when he met Ron Gonen, whose life in the Israeli mob, Copeland described, "had all the elements of a pretty interesting story" – and who's life in the Witness Protection Program Copeland wrote about it in his latest book.

Last month publishing company Barricade Books released Copeland's book, "Blood and Volume: Inside New York's Israeli Mafia." Yesterday, at Amherst Books, Copeland held a book signing.

Before writing about the Israeli mafia, Copeland was an undergraduate student at UMass, working towards a degree in Sociology because as he claims, "I wasn't allowed in the Journalism department."

While at UMass, Copeland interned at the Daily Hampshire Gazette in Northampton and wrote

See COPELAND on page 3



Dave Copeland based his book on New York Israeli mobster Ron Gonen who, according to the author, was involved in the biggest gold heist in the history of Manhattan's diamond district.

Former White House chief of staff to visit UMass

Andy Card first to speak for 'Talking Politics' lecture series

BY NICOLE BOONJAKUAKUL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The former chief of staff has left the White House and will be coming to the University of Massachusetts campus tomorrow.

Andrew H. Card, who served as chief of staff for President George W. Bush from 2000-2006, will speak in a lecture, entitled "The American Political Landscape: Looking Towards 2008," to any and all UMass students who attend.

The lecture, which will begin at 11 a.m. in the Student Union Ballroom, kicks off "Talking Politics" – a series sponsored by the UMass Civic Initiative run by the Donahue Institute and the College of Social and Behavioral Sciences – according to a statement from the UMass Office of News and Information.

"['Talking Politics'] is dedicated to democracy education at home and abroad," said Michael Hannahan, director of the UMass Civic Initiative at the Donahue Institute. The series is aimed at bringing a diverse group of working politicians to campus to expand student understanding of the challenges and rewards political life, said Hannahan in the press release.

"Andy Card has been involved in politics for over 30 years," said Hannahan. "He has been a candidate, elected official, cabinet secretary and chief of staff. To have someone with that level of experience come and share with UMass students for two days is a great kick-off to our series," he included in the news statement.

Card was the second-longest serving White House chief of staff serving under the current president, and also served as the 11th U.S. Secretary of Transportation under President George W. Bush.

Card is no stranger to the state. The Hollbrook native served in the Massachusetts House of Representatives from 1975-1983. He was named Legislature of the Year by the National Republican Legislators Association and received the Distinguished Legislator Award from the Massachusetts Municipal Association, according to the press release.

He received his bachelor's degree in engineering from the University of South Carolina and went on to attend the United States Merchant Marine Academy and the John F. Kennedy School of Government at Harvard University.

All students are welcome to attend the free lecture tomorrow at 11 a.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

Nicole Boonjakuakul can be reached at nicyboon@msn.com

The Heat is On

Part two of a four-part series on global warming and what students can do about it

More than just skin deep

BY CHANEL FIGUEREDO
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

You may think global warming is someone else's problem, but the health impacts affect everyone, even college students.

Any day now, the sunbathers will start skipping classes and start to appear on Southwest Beach or by the campus pond.

But skipping class is beside the point; the real issue here goes even deeper than your newly bronzed tone after missing those classes to bake in the sun. You may be risking your future health and increasing your susceptibility to dangerous diseases like skin cancer, asthma and West Nile Virus.

What's the reason?

Global warming.

According to a release by the National Climate Data Center in 2005, nine of the top 10 warmest years on the planet have occurred since 1995, while studies have also shown that the high average temperatures in the Northern Hemisphere during those same years were record breaking in comparison to the past 2,000 years.

"The things that affect us are sort of in balance with the environment and we're throwing it out of balance," said Environmental Health Sciences professor Dr. Christine Rogers of the University of Massachusetts.

Rogers said that environmental changes in the past 100 years have caused the global temperature to rise .6 degrees and is projected to go up at least two more degrees over the next century. That's more than three times the rate calculated over the past 100 years.

Just last year, the surface temperature of the United States between January and June had reached its warmest since 1895.

All that talk of warmer temperatures can sound appealing especially after a brutal New England winter. But such changes in weather patterns can pose a significant threat to our health as we get older.

Skin cancer – 1 million diagnosed annually – can result from too much exposure to harmful ultraviolet-B rays. With a depleting ozone layer as a result of the release of carbon dioxide emissions, we face greater exposure to those dangerous UV-B rays when we're outside, particularly between the hours of 10 a.m. and 2 p.m.

According to the Skin Cancer Foundation, one in five Americans will develop skin cancer in their lifetime, so you might want to rethink cutting those classes.

See SKIN on page 3

UMass professor Dr. Christine Rogers checks branches of a budding tree. According to Rogers, global warming accelerates plant growth and increases the pollen in the air, leading to respiratory diseases like asthma.

(clockwise from left) Kendra Fortin, Josh Stoffell, Rob House, Cloee Cooper and James Highsmith, all members of student environmentalist groups, discuss plans for a Five College summit of local organizations engaged in the fight against global warming.

Students fight back

BY JACKIE HAI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Students at the University of Massachusetts, along with the Five Colleges, are leading the charge against global warming and the energy crisis. From sustainability film screenings to renewable energy initiatives to open dialogues with the administration and faculty, individuals from our generation are making it known: we will not sit back and let this planet go from bad to worse without a fight.

Representatives of student environmentalist groups met in the UMass Campus Center on Monday to discuss their projects, common goals and future plans. Since each group is tackling the global warming problem in their own way, the theme of the meeting was cohesion and collaboration.

"We're all walking in the same direction, just not the same path," said Josh Stoffell, co-president of UMass Students for Environmental Awareness and Action (SEAA). Students at the meeting shared a strong sense of purpose as they made plans for pushing the movement ahead.

Kendra Fortin, a representative from the Smith College chapter of MassPIRG, introduced the idea of a Five College summit for organizations working toward carbon neutrality, sustainable energy and other solutions to come together and raise broad public awareness.

SEAA and Focus UMass on Global Warming, two of the groups present at the meeting, are already joining forces to run the Environmental

See STUDENTS on page 3

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 114

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Eric Athas
MANAGING EDITOR Rob Greenfield
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sherif Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jaimeson Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Mollie Eggleston
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COMICS EDITOR Adam Staigin
EDITORIAL EDITOR Tucker Merrick
NEWS EDITOR Matt Belliveau
SPORTS EDITOR Dunns Picard
SPORTS EDITOR Jon Pelland
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jett Pentz
FINANCE MANAGER David Valade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Puddester
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Sydnes Towne
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Dolianitis
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonjakuakul
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Brendan Hall
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeremy Rice
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS FALL/SPRING SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALMA LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCENE IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Belliveau

COPY EDITOR
Janise Mason

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Tiffany Van Langen

Internet use affects dynamic of dating

BY MARTHA IRVINE
ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — Dating used to be largely a matter of spending time with a love interest, discovering the good, the bad and the ugly in person. If you were lucky, friends helped fill in some of the blanks. These days, the Internet – and the ability to check people out before they ever meet up – has forever changed the rules. For better or worse, "googling" your date has become standard practice.

"I often tell my friends that are still in the dating sphere to use the power of Google to their advantage," says Katie Laird, a 24-year-old Web marketing professional and self-proclaimed "social software geek" from Houston.

The results can be enlightening, surprising – and sometimes, a little disturbing. So Laird's advice also comes with a warning: "Don't google what you can't handle."

Hers is the voice of experience. In her dating life, she regularly did online research on her dates and turned up, among other things, "bizarre" fetishes and a guy who was fascinated with vampires.

"Not my scene at all," Laird says, "and nothing I would've ever guessed over an initial meeting and beer."

She also had to contend with an on-again, off-again boyfriend who googled her on a daily basis to try and track her every move. The story did end happily, however, when she met her future husband online.

In some ways, having a social networking page – or pages – has become the new calling card. It's a way for people to check out photos and find out what they have in common, even when they've already met in person.

That was the case for Brad White, a 23-year-old recent college grad in Chicago, who met his current girlfriend through friends at a bar – and immediately looked her up on Facebook. "The commonality of our music taste and friends is what prompted me to ask her out," White says, "obviously, besides the attraction."

The details people find also can provide a few talking points to get past the initial awkwardness of a first date – though not everyone likes to admit that they've done their research.

"It seems like in contemporary dating, it's this elaborate dance between two people who already know a lot of what their date is talking about, but they can't admit it," says David Silver, an assistant professor of media studies at the University of San Francisco who studies online culture.

"You nod your head with curiosity, but you already know what they're going to say."

Even he is amazed at the level of information that can be dug up these days.

With a little creativity and Internet savvy, a person can find anything from blog postings to news stories that might include personal details – and whether people are telling the truth about their age and where they've lived.

It helps to know some basic details upfront, such as an e-mail address that could help turn up an online nickname; some go as far as paying for an online background check.

Often, though, information is almost too easy to find.

MaryBeth Moore discovered that after she got a call from a guy her mother's hairdresser suggested as a good match. At first, Moore was game. But then she checked out his MySpace page and found photos showing him naked in a bath tub.

"Don't worry – I canceled the date," says Moore, who's 24 and lives in West Palm Beach, Fla.

There's also the problem of mistaken identity.

Lisa Phillips, a 31-year-old San Francisican, was not pleased, for instance, when a search of online images turned up photos of a porn star who shares her name. She can laugh about it now.

"But it's definitely NOT the first impression I want to make with my dates," she says. "Very embarrassing."

It's a big reason people should take the information they find online "with a grain of salt," says Dr. Paul Dobransky, a Chicago-based psychiatrist and author of "The Secret Psychology of How We Fall in Love."

He says there's nothing wrong with doing a little online homework – but thinks the focus should remain on face-to-face interaction to make a final judgment.

"Our minds are more made for in-person, slow contact in getting to know one another," Dobransky says.

New York town's goal is to reach zero carbon emissions

BY MICHAEL HILL
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WOODSTOCK, N.Y. — Michael Esposito rides his bike all the time – from cold nights when leaving his old job at a natural food store to warm days while passing shops selling yoga clothes and soy drinks.

So the 67-year-old is excited about a new plan to reduce this countercultural haven's net carbon dioxide emissions to zero within a decade, an ambitious attempt to erase the town's "carbon footprint."

"It's more than important," Esposito said. "It's a necessity."

The goal might sound as unlikely as stuffing smoke back into a smokestack. Even sympathetic experts call it challenging. It likely would require many of the town's roughly 6,200 people to install solar panels and geothermal hookups. But it's tough to find a resident who doesn't support the project.

Woodstock is best known for the 1969 rock concert that borrowed its name and was held some 50 miles away in Bethel. But the old artists' colony is plugging firmly into the zeitgeist of 2007, a time when hybrid cars are hot and Al Gore's climate-change documentary, "An Incongenient Truth," won two Oscars.

As debate over the scope of global warming continues, local officials across the country have crafted their own policies. Austin, Texas, has a "Climate Protection Plan" that aims to make city buildings reliant on renewable energy by 2012. Portland, Ore., has an Office of Sustainable Development to coordinate and encourage the use of everything from green building to biofuels.

Last month, the Woodstock town board approved a nonbinding resolution that called for "implementing policies resulting in no net emission of carbon dioxide and other greenhouse gases" by 2017.

"Net" means residents can keep their cars as long as they produce enough clean power to offset their emissions.

The resolution lists ways to reach the zero carbon goal, including green building, bike paths, tree planting and biodiesel municipal fleets.

It's the sort of bit-by-bit approach advocated by environmentalists. For instance, one person driving 2,000 fewer miles prevents about a ton of carbon dioxide from being released into the atmosphere. And a compact fluorescent bulb will keep half a ton of carbon dioxide out of the air over its lifetime, according to the Natural Resources Defense Council.

The savings are a wisp compared with the billions of tons of greenhouse gases released annually, but the idea is to reach meaningful reductions through collective action.

Horner said consumer efficiencies should be coupled with onsite generation like solar power. Geothermal heating and cooling systems would take a bite out the town's appetite for fossil fuel, he said.

Renewable energy experts say the goal is technically possible but difficult. Michael Armstrong, a policy analyst with Portland's Office of Sustainability, called net zero a "monstrous challenge."

But Horner insists that as fossil fuel prices spike over the next decade, alternative energy will become more attractive to both producers and residential consumers. Solar panels and geothermal systems will make more sense economically, he said.

Woodstock has some advantages big cities like Portland or Austin don't. It's a rural town with no heavy industry, and residents generally tend to be more sympathetic to save-the-planet ideas.

Those asked about the plan were all supportive of the general idea.

"Climate change is serious. We can't stick our heads in the ground," Norm Wennet said.

"What's not to like? How could anybody be against it?" Robin Kramer asked. Kramer said he supports the effort, but doubts people will cut down on driving and make other sacrifices necessary to reach the goal.

'Green' weddings more popular

BY SYLVIA WESTALL
ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — Here comes the bride, all dressed in – green.

White weddings might have been the dream of fashionable brides of old. But the trendiest British weddings are now at least metaphorically green as couples seek to reduce the impact of their nuptials on the environment.

That means everything from recycled wedding dresses and guests arriving by bicycle, to home-grown flowers and locally produced food for the wedding buffet.

"A year ago there was nothing green at wedding shows. I was really struggling to get the message across that green weddings are about "eco-chic," not lentils and hessian," said green wedding planner Ruth Culver.

"Now specialist venues, products and services are being launched every week."

British celebrity Liz Hurley might have hoped to set new fashion standards with her lavish jetset wedding last month.

But her celebrations broke all the "green" wedding rules, and were dubbed "Liz Hurley's big fat not-so green wedding" by The Independent newspaper, which pored over every opulent detail to determine its environmental impact.

The wedding, which flew in dozens of guests to India from Britain for a series of parties, produced an estimated 200 tons of carbon emissions – more than the average couple produces in a decade, according to researchers.

Bride-to-be Libby Smit will do her bit to make up for this on her wedding day in Northern Ireland this summer.

"We are using the parish church that is literally around the corner," Smit, 30, said. "On the morning of the wedding, the bridesmaids and I are going to be walking to the church."

"GREEN" GIFTS TOO

It's not just the ceremonies that are environmentally aware. Guests are getting into the spirit with their gifts.

After charity gift-lists raised millions of pounds over Christmas, environmental groups WWF and Friends of the Earth have launched similar services for weddings.

Guests can donate to charities on behalf of newly weds, making up to 20,000 pounds ($39,000) a month for green and ethical causes, according to www.weddinglistgiving.com.

"A lot of people seem to feel that when they are making a big commitment to each other they would like to do some good as well," said Nicola Baird, campaigner for Friends of the Earth.

Sarah Webber, 30, a Briton living in Australia, plans to keep the environmental footprint of her wedding to a minimum by having a ceremony in Australia and a party in Britain to prevent her family members from needing to fly across the globe.

She is also making sure her wedding buffet is locally produced: "We're not crusty hippies or anything like that ... but thinking about where things come from is part of our lifestyle," she said.

One of the biggest concerns for 'green' brides is how to find that all-important dress, and the Internet is where they begin their search.

"There is the charity shop option, there are vintage shops, where you could find something a bit more stylish ... or you can have a design made from scratch using fair-trade fabrics," said Katie Fewings, who launched www.ethicalweddings.com in 2006.

Her site lets brides share advice on how to source tricky items – from organic confetti to recycled invitations – with nearly 130 registered members in its discussion forum.

With the average cost of a British wedding set to rise to nearly 18,500 pounds ($36,500) this year according to UK-based insurer Weddingplan, couples say the homemade approach personalizes the celebrations.

London-based Rebecca, a 35-year-old bride-to-be who posts on the ethical weddings site, is being helped by her father, who will be growing lettuces and tomatoes to help feed 150 guests at her wedding reception this summer.

He is also providing a floral touch: "I love wild and home-grown flowers, so my dad has offered to grow all the flowers for me. Cornflowers are my favorite," Rebecca told Reuters, asking to be known by her first name only.

Her fiancé said although some people have found the couple's choices unusual, the planning has paid off.

"For those for whom the environment is not a prime concern, it initially jars, perhaps ... but once everything is explained we've had 100 percent support."

(AP)

Environmental-friendly weddings have become more popular in London, as couples use recycled weddings dresses, make their guests arrive on bicycle, use home-grown flowers and locally produced food for their nuptials.

Student groups join forces

STUDENTS from page 1

Film Series throughout April. The first film of the series, Who Killed the Electric Car? was screened last week to a packed room. The next film, The Great Warming, will be shown on April 11 at 7 p.m. in Gordon Hall.

In addition to the film series, SEAA is taking part in the Presidents Climate Commitment, a nationwide push for college administrations to commit to reducing emissions and taking steps toward carbon neutrality. Ideas for the UMass campus range from attaching water recyclers to the new power plant under construction, to installing motion sensors in lighting for public spaces.

Focus UMass is working together with faculty to develop curriculum focused on global warming, said representative Cloee Cooper. The RSO is also organizing a Global Warming Awareness Week for February 2008.

This year, five UMass engineering students were finalists in mtvU's Eco Challenge, a national competition between student-run teams with the best ideas for "greening" their campuses. Alexander de Geofroy, Allyson Greene, Brendan Kemp, Matt Tinney and Nat Trask's proposal – the Human Power Plant – would have involved hooking up a power generator to stationary bikes and placing it in the Campus Center. Students would be able to race each other, charge their laptops and cell phones, and have a hands-on learning experience about the cost of energy all at once.

"We wanted to show people how much work goes into the energy that they take for granted," said de Geofroy.

Though his team did not win the first place prize, a $25,000 cash grant from MTV, de Geofroy said that he would be interested in building the project if they found another source of funding.

James Highsmith, a BDIC major writing his senior thesis on wind power, also has renewable energy on his mind. He is forming a new RSO, dubbed the Energy Club for now, devoted to tangible projects that will bring alternative energy solutions to the UMass campus.

Many students feel powerless in the ongoing controversy over global warming, or doubt their ability to affect the issue on an individual level. But the message from those on the front lines of the fight for change is clear: we can and will make a difference, if we just put in the effort.

"Everybody can be involved in helping fight global warming," said Colleen Borgendale of MassPIRG. "You don't have to be committed to an organization, but just making simple changes in your own life, to make a difference."

These changes include switching off the lights when you leave the room, shutting down your computer when you're not using it, unplugging cell phone and iPod chargers (which continue to drain energy even when not being used), using compact fluorescent lights instead of incandescent bulbs, walking, carpooling, or taking the bus. Electronics that work with a remote are also power suckers, and a lot of energy can be saved by plugging these devices into power strips that can be switched off at will.

MassPIRG runs a Dorm Energy Challenge in select residence halls every semester, in which dorms compete for the lowest energy usage in a given month. Residents are encouraged to cut down on personal energy waste using some of the strategies given above.

"Another area that students can have a big impact on is trash," said Stoffell. "Students just don't recycle enough, and if they did, not only would we be saving tons of space in landfills, but we'd be putting all that stuff back into circulation. Recycling cuts down on carbon emissions, the use of petroleum-based products to produce plastics, and it goes on and on."

For students who do feel motivated to take it a step further, there is no shortage of groups to get involved with.

"The people who are in power right now aren't doing enough," said Stoffell. "But as students of the university, we have a power that no one else on campus has, and that's because we pay to be here. We get to be the squeaky wheel, stand up and say we need to do something about this."

Jackie Hai can be reached at jhai@student.umass.edu.

GET INVOLVED!!!

UMass Students for Environmental Awareness and Action
-http://www.UMassSEAA.org
-Projects: Presidents Climate Commitment, Light Bulb Committee, Amherst Public School Teach-in, Environmental Film Series

Focus UMass on Global Warming
-http://www.focusumass.org
-Projects: Global Warming Awareness Week, Environmental Film Series, Amherst Climate Action Plan

MassPIRG
-http://www.umass.edu/rso/masspirg/
-Projects: Dorm Energy Challenge, Earth Day Festival, Hybrid Car Show

The Energy Club
-James Highsmith, jhighsmi@student.umass.edu
-Projects: Renewable energy, on-campus solar arrays, wind power

–Compiled by Jackie Hai

U.S. winter and spring surface temps highest since 1985

SKIN from page 1

The warming of the atmosphere also accelerates plant growth, which creates higher levels of pollen in the air and increases the numbers of allergens that lead to respiratory diseases like asthma, said Rogers, who studies and assesses airborne microbial exposure.

Increased exposure to sunlight and warmer temperatures can also lead to heat stroke.

Remember the summer of 2003?

A heat wave swept through Europe and killed an estimated 35,000 people. Temperatures stayed about 100 degrees throughout most of August through a continent unaccustomed to sweltering conditions.

Just north, the Arctic polar ice cap is diminishing and its permanent ice cover has decreased nine percent each decade, according to the National Resources Defense Council. If the trends continue, the NRDC predicts the Arctic could become iceless by the end of the century. Sea levels have risen as a result.

Infectious diseases like West Nile Virus have also risen due to the increased sea levels, causing disease-carrying mosquitoes to multiply and move to expanding warmer climates in higher elevations in order to thrive.

Warmer environments boost mosquitoes' reproduction rates and blood meals while prolonging their breeding season, according to the New England Journal of Medicine, written by Dr. Paul Epstein, associate director of the Center for Health and the Global Environment at Harvard Medical School on Oct. 6, 2005. This makes us more susceptible to diseases like the West Nile Virus that can cause inflammation in the brain and spinal cord, and ultimately lead to death.

This all sounds like scary stuff. So what can we do as college students?

On a small scale, Rogers recommended walking instead of driving on campus, to reduce carbon dioxide emissions. If walking is too much to ask, use public transportation more often, or swallow that pride and ride a bike.

Avoid increased exposure to sunlight. The Skin Cancer Foundation states more than ninety percent of all skin cancers are caused by sun exposure. So stay cool in the shade or lather up with sunscreen.

Students can also get involved politically by lobbying the government, Rogers suggested.

"Get them to take you seriously," she said. "I think that students shouldn't sit back and say, 'someone else is going to take care of it.' Everyone needs to be engaged. Our reality in 50 years is going to be vastly different, that's not a long time."

"It's a call to action for everyone to get involved," she emphasized.

Chanel Figueiredo can be reached at cfigueir@student.umass.edu.

THE HEAT IS ON
A four-day series on global warming

This series was produced by the nine members of a Journalism 301 class, Writing About Public Issues. We welcome your comments on these stories at our course-blog: http://writingaboutpublicissues.blogspot.com/

UMass alum writes about mob

COPELAND from page 1

for the Opinion/Editorial section of the Daily Collegian. After graduating in 1996, Copeland worked for a chain of weekly newspapers before moving on to The Dow Jones & Co. in Newark, New Jersey. The Pittsburgh Daily Tribune in Pennsylvania was the last paper he worked for before pursuing his book endeavors.

Copeland quit the Pittsburgh Daily Tribune because he was "completely burnt out by newspapers." He enrolled in a two-year narrative nonfiction program at Goucher College, which is where he came up with the idea for his book.

"A lot of it is dumb luck," Copeland said about obtaining a good story. "I could have easily dismissed that Craigslist ad as a hoax."

Copeland maintained a two-year correspondence with his main character, Ron Gonen, who according to Copeland, was a part of the biggest gold heist in the history of the Manhattan diamond district.

Gonen is now being kicked out of the Witness Protection Program because of his association with a journalist and is being deported back to his home country of Israel.

"You try to be objective," Copeland explained, "but on the flip-side if he gets deported and killed in Israel I am going to have some issues to deal with."

Another one of Copeland's sources for his book, Ran Ephraim, was killed in a drive-by shooting in Tel Aviv, Israel.

"I'm coming to grips with the impact of what you write, what you publish, what you produce has on other people's lives," Copeland said.

He hasn't had any death threats but has received strange e-mails from Israel.

"A lot of times I try to rationalize it's not a big deal," Copeland said. "It's the stories that you don't think will get you into trouble that cause the most outrage."

Besides publishing a book, Copeland is also the subject of a documentary by Noah Forrest about the process of making a book.

"Every time I tell people I wrote a book about the Israeli mafia they say, 'I didn't know there was an Israeli mafia,'" Copeland said. "It's a blessing and a curse."

Copeland is now working on a book about marathon runners.

"Part of what drives me in journalism is trying to find out why people do the things they do," Copeland said. He decided to take on this challenge because of a group called Team in Training, who raises money for the Leukemia Lymphoma Society and claimed they could train anyone to run a marathon.

"I don't want to be pegged as a true crime writer," Copeland said.

The author will be holding another book signing at the Barnes and Noble in Hadley on May 19.

Melissa Garber can be reached at Mgarber@student.umass.edu

Taste Of Home
No need to leave UMass to savor some delicious home cookin'...
We've got plenty of great recipes sent to us from "home".
We want you to enjoy food prepared according to Mom, Dad or relatives, so make plans to join us for something a little different.
Wednesday, April 11, 2007
Available in all DCs from 5–9 pm
DINING SERVICES
UMassAmherst
umass.edu/diningservices
Be A Local Hero
Buy Locally Grown

Taste of UMass
2007
THURSDAY APRIL 19, from 5:00 to 8:00 PM
The nation's largest campus food service event
Food
75 food and beverage booths from around the world with healthy options
Official sanctioned Nathan's Famous Hot Dog Eating Contest, UMass Idol – Singing Contest
Many great door prizes!
Cooking and Demonstration with Celebrity Chef Jet Tila
Autographs
New England Patriot Cheerleaders
Appearances
Minuteman Mascot
Entertainment
Magic Show and Battle of the Bands
Knowledge
Sustainability and Buying Local
Free
For students on the Meal Plan or $11 cash
umass.edu/diningservices
AT THE MULLINS CENTER
DINING SERVICES
UMassAmherst
All DCs will be closed at 3:00 pm and special buses to Mullins will leave at 4:00.
Doors Open at 4:30

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

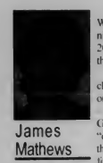
EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, APRIL 10, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it" Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Demonstrating dignity



James Mathews

Andrew Card, who served as the White House chief of staff from the beginning of the Bush presidency until March 2006, will be speaking this Wednesday at the Student Union. Protests are planned.

Along with the standard duties of a chief of staff – a post often viewed as one of the most powerful in Washington – Card formed the "White House Iraq Group," a committee with the goal of "educating the public" about the Iraq threat as the administration prepared for war. Any student with a tendency towards protest will certainly latch onto this fact as a good reason to get out and picket.

Justified as anti-Bush or anti-propaganda sentiments may be, this has not been a good year for campus protests. In October, at the eminent Columbia University in New York, students protested a speech by Jim Gilchrist, the founder of the border-patrolling "Minuteman." Rather than protest peacefully or demonstrate outside, the protesters, members of various campus clubs from the Chicano Caucus to the International Socialist Organization, stormed the stage and completely shut down the event.

Justified as anti-Bush or anti-propaganda sentiments may be, this has not been a good year for campus protests.

The debate over the event shot to the National level, and soon became an issue of free speech. Leaders of the protest took a "free speech" defense. Jim Gilchrist took a "free speech" defense. No one talked about respect.

Respect was not shown at the Columbia protest – not for Gilchrist, a Vietnam veteran and recipient of the Purple Heart, and not for the members of the Republican Club that organized the event. This Wednesday, when Andrew Card speaks at the Student Union, protesters will without a doubt show a similar lack of respect. They will resign to the realm of the political, where one man's bad policy is enough justification for another man to treat him as less than human.

Such an attitude is unacceptable. The University may be a great place to take more liberal points of views and to oppose one's self to political corruption, but it is also a place where one must learn some of the more basic rules of life – respect your peers, respect your elders, and when the time comes, keep your mouth shut.

James Mathews can be reached at jomathew@student.umass.edu.

America's next top leader

Debbie Friedman

In today's day in age, you pretty much have to be a Kajillionaire to run for President. In fact, the title, "President of the United States of America," is now more like a commodity that is sold to the highest bidder than an honor bestowed on the most deserving and qualified individual.

As a result, the majority of citizens are held back from running, while the most privileged members are given even more advantage than they already have. This goes for any political office, but is the most apparent on the Presidential level. Clearly, it is a real problem because when we allow money to run the show – we limit our choice in candidates and create a race that must begin over two years before ballots are even cast.

If running for president was not such a fundraiser, candidates would be more diverse, and the race would be made shorter, limiting the ridiculous drawn out hysteria that swarms around the contest.

Unfortunately, most people don't believe there is anything we can do to alleviate this problem. After all, money runs most things, and there is no way to change the way capitalism influences the democratic process. Others say we should have stricter campaign financing reform laws, but it isn't likely that reform will get much accomplished. And a few point to the system in Britain as a solution, where regulations and campaign terms are much more limited than here.

But I say, let's do something really radical. Let's take away the money, suits, press conferences and debates and start a competition. It's time to transform the Race for the Presidency into a literal competition where contenders battle for the hearts and minds of the American people. Picture the Amazing Race meets Who Wants to Be a Millionaire. Combine that with Fear Factor, and fuse it all together with Dancing for the Stars. I'm talking the competition to end all competitions, where candidates compete over an eight week period in all the events Americans want to see – from swing dancing and eating cow tongue, to answering trivia and racing around desolate parts of the world. It could have some jazzy title like "Who Wants to Run the Free World?" and air on C-Span, since they could definitely use a ratings boost.

The Presidential election is already one big popularity contest, so hosting the campaigns in a reality game show format just makes sense. It would allow candidates to really wow Americans by showcasing their hidden talents and physical strengths, instead of blabbering on about political visions and throwing around big words in their incredibly long speeches. Honestly, most Americans don't care what Barak Obama plans to do with social security, but they'd love to see how many Japanese beetles he could fit into his mouth. Americans would also rather watch McCain and Hillary go at it in an inflatable jousting ring than hear their empty promises about improving healthcare.

And instead of hearing candidates go on and on about how they are going to find some miraculous solution to the mess in Iraq, we could find out who knows the most about '80s pop culture trivia or see who does the best mambo. After each contest, a panel of celebrity judges could award the candidates a score, which would then be totaled at the end of the competition. That number would serve as way to identify front-runners of the race, but Americans would still have the final say in casting their votes for President.

The Presidential election is already one big popularity contest, so hosting the campaigns in a reality game show format just makes sense.

It's time to give up the dream of having a population who actually cares about political issues greatly affecting their lives. That just isn't going to happen. So instead of everyone wasting their time and money, let's hand presidential politics over to the genius minds in reality television. All that would be required is a quick little revision to the constitution and a Nielsen ratings test to make sure the show would be profitable to advertisers (though I have no doubt that it would be a huge attention grabber).

I also have no doubt that if our electoral process was transformed into this competition, voter turn out would soar-especially if we allowed voters to cast their ballots via text message, like they do on American Idol. And the more people involved in the democratic process, the better our democracy will be. Therefore, we should do whatever it takes to get people to the polls, even if it means reducing the Presidential election down to a gratuitous event that has no political substance whatsoever.

I realize people are going to think I'm completely insane for suggesting that the respectable election for President of the Untied States of American take shape in such a hizarre, tacky and ridiculous manner. But to those critics I say, presidential politics is already bizarre, tacky and completely ridiculous. So, why not at least make it fun to watch?

Debbie Friedman writes on Tuesdays. She can be reached at dcfriedm a student.umass.edu.

Sweating out the price

Domenic Poli

As is evident, I attend the University of Massachusetts at Amherst – as do the six of you who are nice enough to read my column every other Tuesday. But, you see, I often forget this, what with the overwhelming can tell a crowd, "I go to UMass and I am darn proud of it." But, apparently, the folks down at the U-Store – or perhaps the manufacturers – think we students are members of the Rockefeller family and can drop

I'd like to be able to purchase some Massachusetts paraphernalia and at least be able to buy licorice after.

that much dough for a piece of clothing.

News flash: We can't.

I don't know about my classmates, but I can't afford to fork over a lot of cash for anything. The money I have on me most of the time consists of whatever coins I manage to find to the floor of my dorm room on any particular morning.

I love my school. I love everything about it – the people, the classes, the opportunities, the parties. I want to flaunt my status as a UMass student (as I'm sure many other students do). But I'm not made of money. I'd like to be able to purchase some Massachusetts paraphernalia and at least be able to buy licorice after.

After all, I am not Paris Hilton – I cannot wipe my rear end with $20 bills. I need clothing I can afford.

The outrageous prices on UMass gear are masking school pride and it is very unfortunate. Go to any other college campus and you will see the students strutting around their turf with all sorts of clothing decked out with their schools' logo. The reason you don't see Massachusetts students sporting UMass stuff in larger quantity does not mean that they are lacking in school spirit. They have it coming out of their ears. Just think about it. We needed riot police to control the swarms of (idiotic) students that trashed Southwest after the football team lost a game. But, unfortunately, the high prices of paraphernalia forces many-a-student to settle for some lame 'Oregon' sweatshirt.

There are two Steve & Barry's gift cards in my wallet – which one of my friends was nice enough to give me – and it would be nice if (even combined) I could walk in and buy a decent UMass sweatshirt. Unfortunately, that is just not the case.

I look forward to seeing my fellow students strolling throughout campus with Maroon and White garb on, but it seems as though that may not happen for quite some time. I guess we will have to further suffer the eyesore of seeing our peers walking around with the logos of other schools plastered all over them. At least until the time comes when people wise up and realize that many college students cannot easily fork over three Mr. Jackson's for a piece of clothing. So, until then, let me be the first to say, "Go Tar Heels!"

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu

Beantown's Blight

Joshua H. Wilder

Boston.

For most people, both Massachusetts residents and tourists, the city carries with it specific memories. The newly built and fully illuminated Leonard P. Zakim Bridge, the old-school charm of Fenway Park, taking Duck Tours or riding the T to places like Faneuil Hall, the New Garden or even Anna's Taqueria comes to mind.

As far as what the public views as violent U.S. cities go, Boston usually falls off the radar. The Morgan Quinto Awards, a poll of the safest and most dangerous American cities, released what it's data found were the top 25 cities you better not be walking around late at night.

Topping the list were the ritual offenders, mostly places known for having a long reputation for being areas with little opportunities and plenty of desperation. Areas such as St. Louis, Detroit, Compton, Camden and Gary, Indiana all made the top 10. While our dirty neighbor to the south, Springfield, has made it on the annual list at positions as high as number nine in years past, Boston has remained MIA.

Young people in the city have developed a fascination with guns.

After all, Boston has plenty of economic strength, a vibrant community and remains today a top tourist destination. Yet despite all of these points, it is becoming impossible to ignore the facts. Pick up a copy of the Boston Globe and you won't miss the constant headlines portraying the bloodshed on city streets day after day.

March was an especially out of control month, with violence occurring at a frightening pace. On Mar. 23, an 18-year-old man from Hyde Park was shot in the head riding an Ashmont-bound bus. He was shot in broad daylight. Four hours later, a man was shot nine blocks away on McClellan Street.

January was also a horrific month for gun violence, with the deaths of two 14-year-olds and a 13-year-old taking place during a three week period. On New Years Day, Jason Fernandes, 14, was the first of five people who were shot in a 20 minute period.

For the sake of space, I will stop recounting stories of senseless violence and murder on the streets of Boston, for I could spend this column's entirety chronicling such disturbing trends. While many questions remain in the wake of the violence, certain facts are for sure. The majority of the shootings have taken place in a 2.5 square mile area surrounding Dorchester, Roxbury and Mattapan.

Police offer up this piece of geographical knowledge as some sort of keepsake, something to ease people's anxiety. Sure, it gives Bostonians piece of mind. Don't go walking around these areas after dark. It is common knowledge really, after all, when a neighborhood's nickname is "Murderpan," it must be for a good reason. But what hope can police give residents of these war-zones?

According to Boston Police statistics, the city recorded 74 homicides in 2006, falling just one death short of outdoing the 10 year high reached in 2005. The majority of the victims have been teenagers or people in their early 20's, which begs the question: how are these kids getting guns?

Boston Police Commissioner Ed Davis has publicly acknowledged that gun violence is driven primarily by gang activity. Young people in the city have developed a fascination with guns, a fascination intensifying due to the return of many criminals who served jail time in the '90s but have gotten out. Mix in a high-powered black market for weapons and you have a lethal concoction: Teenagers with loaded weapons, gang ties and no strong parental figures to tell them otherwise.

While Mayor Menino has been doing what some critics say is extremely little to combat this issue, he finally started working on April 6 when he sent police out with gun-sniffing dogs to find weapons. They searched areas of Dorchester and Roxbury with no results. This recent gun crack down was prompted after an 11-year-old boy came into the Holland School in Dorchester with what Davis was quoted as saying was "a very powerful handgun."

People who pick up bad habits when they are young tend to keep those habits as they grow older. If 11-year-old kids are carrying handguns in Boston, what will they be doing when they are 20? The thought is a scary one, and should motivate lawmakers like Menino and Governor Patrick to start to think seriously about cracking down on this brutality.

It is tempting, as spectators, to look the other way and pretend that since this violence doesn't effect us directly that it is not happening. Sure we can ignore this now and focus only on the nice aspects of Beantown, but eventually this violence in our state capital will affect us all.

Even if you don't care about the innocent lives that are getting lost in the crossfire, know that Boston's reputation is at stake.

Joshua H. Wilder can be reached at jhwilder@student.umass.edu

WRITE LETTERS TO THE EDITOR!

RESPOND TO WHAT WE PRINT!

(550 WORD LIMIT)

Send letters to: editorial@dailycollegian.com

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

ALREADY WELL AWARE

"Global warming seems to be the last issue on the minds of the American College students" Lauren Modisette began in her April 9, 2007 article. I wholly disagree. And I believe that the more than 50 students involved in Students for Environmental Awareness and Action and Focus UMass on Global Warming would also disagree with Modisette.

Little investigation would show Modisette that these student groups are actively in contact with both Vice Chancellor Hatch and Chancellor Lombardi concerning cutting UMass's carbon emissions. These two student groups hope to pressure the administration into joining the over 200 colleges and universities in the U.S. by signing onto the President's of Colleges and Universities Climate Commitment – a long-term initiative to bring campus's net carbon emissions to zero.

In other universities, including three in the UMass system, students pushing for action against climate change have already achieved their goal. The entire UCalifornia system and other large schools such as NYU and UPenn received pressure from their student bodies and consequently the administration developed carbon-neutrality action plans.

I appreciate that Modisette's article attempts to bring the climate change issue to the forefront of student's minds. However, as demonstrated by the clubs' actions and student-sponsored events such as hosting film screenings of "An Inconvenient Truth" and "The Great Warming," climate change is already a major concern of American students.

We as undergraduates must now strive to bring climate change to the forefront of our administrator's minds, not criticize students' inaction, which some simple sleuthing would prove inaccurate.

Rita Sheffer
UMass Senior, Environmental Science

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, APRIL 10, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Restaurant right on campus

Boltwood-Stockbridge House is the oldest in Amherst

Open Monday through Friday the Boltwood–Stockbridge House offers faculty, graduate students and the occasional undergraduate a different dining option. The restaurant is located on Stockbridge Rd. between Franklin and Worcester Dining Commons.

BY AVIVA STOMICH
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Have you ever wanted to go out for some tasty food in a comfortable place, but you're stuck without a car, or the walk uptown seems like a hundred miles away, leaving you with only the choice of the Dining Commons? Now you can go to the University's own restaurant.

Located right in the middle of campus on 243 Stockbridge Rd. (directly across from Franklin D.C.), the restaurant can be found in the grayish older-looking building bordered by a white picket fence with a sign that reads, "The Oldest House in Amherst." No, it's not a museum, which I have to admit I originally thought when I first came upon it. It's a restaurant, open Monday through Friday, serving lunch from 11:30 to 2:00 p.m. and dinners on Thursday and Friday evenings from 5:00 to 9:00 p.m.

As soon as you walk down the stone path leading up to the first entrance, you are sure to meet Dennis Scott, who has been the manager of the Club for the past 20 years, waiting to greet you. "Is this your first time coming to the Club?" Scott will ask? If the answer is "yes," he'll be sure to give you a brief tour, first showing off the full bar, which contains 30 different beers, almost 10 different red and white wines, and plenty of "high end liquor." He'll next escort you to all four dining rooms proudly explaining how this restaurant is full of history.

Once seated at a table, you'll notice the historical plaques and photographs, decorating the walls, explaining each dining room's particular significance. The wooden walls and the fireplaces (which are kept unlit for safety precautions) in each room will give you the feeling of being in an 18th century cottage. Each dining room only has six tables, allowing you to have a private conversation with your guests without sharing it with everyone even when the restaurant reaches its capacity. Scott always keeps the lights dimmed, making it perfect for a romantic, private dinner. At the same time, the Club is a great place to gather with a few friends to relax and to share stories after a long day of classes.

If you still aren't sold on the University Club, then perhaps you should take a peak into the menu and its mouth-watering culinary offerings. Scott explained that 90 percent of the time he lets his head chef, Jane Leary, decide what will be on the menu and each day's special. Leary's top recommendation for someone who has never eaten at the restaurant before is, "The University Club Crab Cakes; its healthy, its light, and it tastes good," exclaimed Leary. Scott has his chef pick out "the best products they can buy, fresh, clean and tasty." The sandwiches are made "Deli Style" with a lot of meat packed into them. The Stockbridge Club, which is a traditional turkey Club made with bacon, lettuce, tomato, and mayo and a choice of bread is always a popular pick. There are plenty of vegetarian dishes, and there is a daily vegetarian special and soup option along with salads, including the Charmoula Salmon Salad, the restaurant's top seller. For lunch, you could easily spend under $10 on a meal, and although dinner may appear a bit pricey, averaging around $18 a meal, the costs include 18 percent gratuity, coffee and one of the Club's "high quality classy desserts."

It wasn't until 1986 that Dennis Scott became manager of the faculty

See UNIVERSITY CLUB on page 6

Fun Historical Facts about the University Club

- In 1728 Samuel Boltwood and his wife Hannah built what is currently known as the Boltwood-Stockbridge House.
- The French dining room was named after Daniel Chester French (1880-1931) who lived in this house as a boy and who is most notable for sculpting the statue of the Lincoln Memorial and our current mascot, the statue of the Concord Minuteman.
- Levi Stockbridge (1820-1904) lived in the house for 15 years, and was the man who convinced the first Trustees of Massachusetts to place the college in Amherst, later becoming the college's fifth president.
- The Tory Room is named for the nine royalists who lived together in the house during the American Revolution.
- In 1934, the president of the Massachusetts State College, Hugh Potter Baker, renovated the University Club and received the honor of having the Baker Lounge named after him.
- The Homestead, which was originally built in 1732, was added on to the Boltwood-Stockbridge House in 1972.

A guide to different environmental views

BY CLAYTON BROSTOWIN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Everyone views nature in a way that is unique to them. That is why there are people that want to protect nature, enjoy nature, use nature or even fear nature. These feelings can be quantified into eight different categories. These eight values determine how people interact with nature and why there are so many conflicting opinions when it comes to issues like, global warming, mining and protecting national parks.

The first of these eight is utilitarian. Utilitarian consists of extracting benefits from the world around us and putting them to use for society or for individuals. For instance if you have ever picked blueberries as a child you were participating in a utilitarian action. Another form of utilitarian action is the cutting of the rainforest for wood products and farming land. Like all of the values to come, the utilitarian value can be taken to extremes that most people would dislike. That is why most industrialists might be considered utilitarian first. They don't necessarily hate life but they see a different use for it than others.

Naturalistic, the second value, is the ability to be out in nature and enjoy it. If you have ever been camping, canoeing or swimming and have enjoyed it, then you have a bit of the naturalist in you. Outdoor recreation is the best way to describe the idea of naturalistic. Part of the pleasure is getting exercise but another part is hard to describe. Obviously lots of people exercise at a gym but others really need to hike a mountain instead of using a stair master, swim at the beach instead of a pool or climb a real rock wall instead of a wall at a gym.

Aesthetic is very similar to naturalistic. Aesthetic is the feeling of awe or wonder some people get from viewing nature. The object might be a huge grizzly bear a perfect red rose or a landscape stretching out from the bottom of a peak that you're standing on. These sights create strong emotions that seem to spring from the soul. To some people they get a feeling of rightness.

In today's modern and extremely science based society an important value is ecological scientific. This is the study of both biological systems on the cellular and ecological level. For all of the students here at UMass who are majoring in life sciences you might have a strong connection to this value. By understanding nature we might one day discover a cure for cancer, and we might avoid damaging our world ecosystem.

Dominionistic is the value associated most with control over nature. This value springs from the most ancient times when human survival was a very narrow thing. Today many people would say the goal of humanity is to subdue nature, which is why we have pesticides and air

See VALUES on page 6

'Lights' beginning to fade on NBC show

BY ROBERT PHILPOT
MCCLATCHY-NEWSPAPERS

IRVING, Texas – It's a pleasant spring afternoon, and football is in the air at Texas Stadium. Not the usual time of year for it, but this isn't the usual practice session. It's the set of the season finale of "Friday Night Lights," and the vibe is laid-back.

Taylor Kitsch and Zach Gilford, two of the show's Dillon Panthers, toss a football around with director Jeffrey Reiner. Scott Porter, who plays a purple-ed former quarterback, is shooting just how ambulatory he really is by doing cartwheels on the sidelines. Extras mill about, many of them playing reporters.

Watching the action is TJ Griffin, a former player for Trinity High School in Euless, Texas. Griffin says "Friday Night Lights" gets it exactly right, especially in the interaction between Coach Eric Taylor and his players.

"That's where it's at, having that trust," says Griffin, who's now a salesman for IBM and a motivational speaker. "It's way better than any other sports show I've seen, because it's not really about sports. It's about the relationships. Football just has to be there."

Oh, yeah. Griffin is in a wheelchair. He's been since 1990, when he broke his neck during a game. His brother, Tony, is a production assistant on the show and helped snag TJ a visit to the set. His story is eerily similar to Porter's character, Jason Street, who was paralyzed making a tackle in the first episode.

You could hardly find a more forceful endorsement of a show, especially one with a fragile future.

"Friday Night Lights" is about a bunch of scrappy underdogs trying to end their season on a strong note and come back as contenders next season. It's also about football.

Despite critical acclaim and a loyal fan base, the show's fate is as unclear now as it was when the cast and crew came to Texas Stadium in March to film the season finale, which airs Wednesday.

Most of the "FNL" folks are optimistic about the show's chances for renewal, and it got a boost last week when it won a Peabody Award. But renewal hasn't happened yet, and Wednesday's episode could be a finale period.

"Everybody who watches it seems to love it, and be so into it, and our viewers have held steady through the entire season," says Gilford, who's a lot more talkative than Matt Saracen, the shy quarterback he plays on the show. "So it's frustrating. It's basically not knowing whether or not you're going to be unemployed. Also, since it's a job everybody loves and cares about, it's like the show needs to be back. It's a quality show."

When it debuted in October, "FNL" already had the odds stacked against it. It stood in the shadow of a good movie and an even better book, but was not a replication of either, moving the locale from the real Odessa to the fictional Dillon and updating the story from the late '80s to the present. It benefits from the involvement of executive producer Peter Berg, who directed the "FNL" movie and happens to be a cousin of HBK "Buzz" Brissinger, who wrote the book. But except for Chandler the cast

See LIGHTS on page 6

"Friday Night Lights" continues to struggle finding viewers even after NBC switched the show to Wednesday nights to avoid "American Idol."

Scott follows steps of his forefathers

UNIVERSITY CLUB from page 5

Club. Scott, whose grandfather and father had been chefs, had sworn at a young age that he would never work in the restaurant business.

Yet, even while he was studying at the New Hampshire Technical Institute in Concord, his former residence, he worked at a small hotel and continued to be in the hotel-restaurant business ever since. After managing the Club for five years, Scott won the Chancellor's Award, which was bestowed on "someone who had achieved something extraordinary for the University."

Scott is currently the Region II Director of the Association of Colleges and Universities (ACUC), to which the Club belongs. This means that, if you do decide to become a member of the Club, you can receive the same benefits while visiting the 104 other Clubs across the nation.

Membership is limited to faculty; professional staff and administrators; classified staff, as well as anyone who works on campus (excluding undergraduates); and graduate students, but there's no need to despair. Undergraduates are more than welcome to come and eat at the restaurant, "appropriately dressed and with an appropriate, respectful personality," states Scott. Although, they aren't members, undergraduates can book their own organized events, and anyone is welcome to attend the many special functions that the Club has to offer.

For example, every year the Club holds a two-night Commencement Dinner for undergraduates and their families. The Club has also worked a number of times with the Fine Arts Center hosting many "Dinner and a Play" evenings.

The University Club staff is primarily made up of undergraduate students. Both students who have work-study and those who don't are eligible to be hired. Unlike many other jobs on campus, work-study students do not receive priority hiring. Thus, when you come in for lunch or dinner, you'll be served by a wait staff who might be right around your age and who could possibly even be your friends. Come and be the first out of your friends to experience the delicacies that are served in this lovely hidden restaurant before the University Club is discovered by everyone.

Aviva Slomich can be reached at aslomich@student.umass.edu.

TOM TRINH/COLLEGIAN

Lunch prices at the University Club are reasonable with their deli style sandwiches. Although dinner prices are more expensive, they stay reasonable.

'Friday Night Lights' continues to struggle was made up of mostly unknowns, and the 8 p.m. EDT Tuesday time slot put the show up against established hits "Dancing With the Stars" and "NCIS."

LIGHTS from page 5

NBC did what it could to keep the show alive, moving it to Wednesday nights to get it out of the way of "American Idol" and at one point posting every episode for free download at NBC.com. The ratings held steady, but the show wasn't exactly doing "Grey's Anatomy" numbers.

"Friday Night Lights" is the kind of show that deserves a few chances. It can take several episodes to get used to its slow-burn plot lines, and its documentary-style shaky-cam look isn't for all tastes. The football players and their families sometimes seem to have enough problems to fill two seasons of "ER."

But "FNL" often finds new twists on familiar situations and has developed into one of the best-acted shows on television. As paralyzed quarterback Jason, Porter (who had a notable role of a very different sort as Hugh Grant's '80s pop partner in "Music and Lyrics") has gone on a journey of self-pity, anger, defiance and resolve. Minka Kelly, as his cheerleader girlfriend Lyla, has a second-nature chemistry with Porter which she needs, because Lyla is both long-suffering and supportive.

Gilford and Aimee Teegarden have been charming as bumbling lovebirds Matt Saracen and Julie Taylor the quarterback and the coach's daughter. They figured prominently in the series' best episode, in which the two virgins forgo a planned night of sex because they decide the time's not right and wind.

Different opinions matter

VALUES from page 5

conditioning. We don't want to have to be subjugated to nature's inconveniences. This value is very similar to utilitarian but is more about subduing nature than using it.

The next value is about having a personal connection with nature. It is called humanistic and is the reason that more than half of families in the United States have had one pet at one time or another. This value is about the need of humanity to have a direct relationship with nature even though pets today are not wild. Cats and dogs may be the best because they show 'feelings' when we leave them alone or when one returns from a long trip. But I guess my question then is, why do people own fish?

The second to last value is moralistic. This is the idea that there is something spiritual about nature. This feeling of spirituality is said to arise from the feeling of having a place in a modern world that seems out of touch. It gives a sense of belonging and of everything being steady and OK. This idea is that there is a harmony and order in nature and by looking at it and experiencing nature we can find a way to live and achieve harmony through nature.

The final value is negativistic. This value expresses the idea that nature should be feared and avoided. Many people express this value strongly today by a fear of animals that include: rats, snakes, insects and some large mammals. While this value can be extremely destructive if taken to an extreme it was and still is an important part of human values. There are reasons to avoid many animals, namely injury and death. The difference between dangerous or merely a small nuisance is a very hard decision to make but it is very important.

These are the eight basic values that make up humanities different ways of interacting with nature. Almost everyone has experience all of these values and participated at some point in their life. It is important to remember that they have all been around for a long time and that all have some use but any taken to an extreme can be extremely destructive to humanity as a whole or to our individual humanity.

Clayton Brostowin can be reached at cbrostow@student.umass.edu.

Take the road to success.

Join the team that's #25 on FORTUNE® magazine's "100 Best Companies to Work For"!

Here's a workplace where you can really go places! Ernst & Young jumped up to #25 on FORTUNE® magazine's "100 Best Companies to Work For" from #67 last year – ranked higher than any other professional services firm. At Ernst & Young, our people are our edge, so we create an environment that promotes your growth and success. See for yourself why we've made the list for the 9th year in a row. This way to a great career!

Visit us at ey.com/us/careers for more information or visit the EY page on facebook.com.

FORTUNE® 100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR® 2007

Audit • Tax • Transaction Advisory Services

ERNST & YOUNG
Quality In Everything We Do

© 2007 Ernst & Young LLP

WRITE for ARTS!!

e-mail

Arts@dailycollegian.com

Junior captain Bryan Garrity recorded one hit in four at-bats in yesterday's win over the Eagles. The team's catcher is now hitting .271 on the season with nine runs batted in and 10 runs scored.

Cassidy dominant as UM defeats BC

BASEBALL from page 10

Seniors Travis Munsey and Lou Prosetti crossed the plate in the second inning, extending the lead to 4-1. Sophomore Brian Baudinet drove in Bryan Garrity with a sacrifice fly to center in the third, and Macdonald drove in his third run of the game when he took a 1-2 pitch to left in the fourth.

"He's been swinging the bat real well," Stone said on Macdonald's reliability with runners on base. "He's one of the few guys who sits back and throws his hands. He came in early today, we did a lot of work, and it paid off with the bats.

"He's got a good approach," Stone added. "He stays back and he does a nice job with two strikes on him."

Macdonald finished the game 2-for-4 with a walk and a strikeout. He was one of four Minutemen with two hits, but it was Cassidy's performance that made the difference.

Cassidy, who was coming off a career outing on April 3 against Holy Cross (three hits, one run and five strikeouts in seven innings), got into trouble in the top of the sixth. BC's Tony Sanchez led off with a single up the middle, which was followed by two walks to load the bases.

One run scored after senior Peter Frates hit a groundball right at UMass first baseman Bryan Adamski. Adamski tagged first on the fielder's choice, leaving runners at second and third with one out.

Cassidy reached back and forced a groundout to short for the second out, and ended the Eagles' threat by striking out BC lefty Mike Augustine on a 2-2 breaking ball to the outside.

Stone went to his starter to see if he could go back out for the seventh inning, but Cassidy wouldn't bring out the ice just yet.

"I wanted to go back out," Cassidy said. "It just didn't work out for me. I always feel like I have a lot of confidence when I'm pitching."

The score was 6-2 in favor of the Minutemen heading into the seventh. After allowing two hits on his first three pitches, Cassidy was replaced by Walczak.

UMass went on to score three more runs in the bottom of the seventh, and Smith put the finishing touches on the win in the ninth.

Cassidy's second consecutive strong outing adds a little more depth to UMass' rotation.

"[Jim] pitched well against Holy Cross the other day, and we know that he's a good pitcher for us, he just had a little arm issue earlier in the season," Stone said. "He had to work himself back into pitching shape. He can be our No. 1 guy."

"It could be something if I stay healthy and I hit my spots," Cassidy said on possibly being the go-to guy in the pitching staff. "A lot of times I just get erratic with my mechanics, but if I stay healthy I have a decent shot at it."

But for right now, senior Chris Lloyd is the ace of the staff, and will return to the hill this weekend when the Minutemen host George Washington in a three-game series that begins on Friday.

Darren Picard can be reached at dpicard@student.umass.edu.

MacDonald key for Minutemen in '07

MACDONALD from page 10

worked hard on his stroke, and he's got great balance at the plate and good extension on his swing. He widened his stance from last year and it's paid off for him."

"You know, it was big, and it felt really good to help the team," Macdonald said after the game, referring to his three-RBI performance.

Macdonald must be used to that feeling by now, because he's been driving in runs at a frantic pace. His 18 RBIs are tops on the team, and his name can be found pacing the club in almost every other major offensive category, as well – including home runs (2), total bases (36) and slugging percentage (.474). He's also tied for the team-lead in both doubles (5) and batting average (.329) with fellow sophomore Adam Tempesta.

All of this production comes after a trying rookie campaign for Macdonald, in which he hit just .221 in 38 starts. In what has been a true breakout season, he's already surpassed almost all of his offensive output from last year, despite having had far fewer at-bats so far at this juncture of the season.

"I'm not worried about failing this season," Macdonald said, when asked about what adjustments he's made over the past few months. "Last year I was just a little tight, but I'm much more relaxed this season. I got a lot of at bats last year, and it gave me a lot of experience."

"I'd say his patience has been the biggest difference this year as opposed to last," Garrity said. "It seems like he's been laying off the off-speed pitches that last year he might have been swinging at. Last year he was getting behind in the count, but this year he's getting his pitches and really driving the ball."

Macdonald – the regular designated hitter last season – has the added responsibility of manning the hot corner for the Minutemen this year. Due to the injury to Tempesta, Stone has been forced to do some reshuffling with his defense, and Macdonald has been up to the task in his new role.

"He's handled it very well," Garrity said. "He's been playing very good defense for us this year, and the more games he plays the better he gets. He worked real hard in the off-season and it's paying off for him."

"It's good to play the field," Macdonald said. "You're not really in the game when you DH, because you're really only doing one thing. So it's good to be able to contribute in the field as well."

His growth all around the diamond has been what's impressed Stone the most about his newest offensive weapon.

"He's more mature, he's bigger and he's stronger than last season," Stone said. "He's been consistently solid and reliable and if he stays where he is now that's great."

With Macdonald's rapid improvements, coupled with the fact that he still has two-plus years left donning the maroon and white, nobody knows how great of a player he can ultimately become.

One thing is for sure, though. He's been nothing short of terrific this year, and despite his success, Macdonald remains humble and thinks his teammates should receive much of the credit.

"I haven't been any more important than anyone else," he said. "Everyone is important, and people have to be getting on base for me to drive in runs, and they've been able to do that."

Eli Rosenzweig can be reached at erosenzw@student.umass.edu. Log onto the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports

Proctor earns award for stellar week

SOFTBALL from page 10

two wins on the road and two more in the conference tournament.

The Maroon and White's final game of the season (and its Senior Day) will be May 6 in a doubleheader against La Salle.

UMass earns pair of awards

It's become a weekly theme, but two more Minutewomen have earned weekly honors from the Atlantic 10. Left fielder Lauren Proctor earned co-Player of the Week along with Fordham's Melissa Andrews, while pitcher Brandice Balschmiter was named A-10 Pitcher of the Week.

Proctor was outstanding for the Minutewomen last week, leading the team offensively to four conference victories. She batted a team-best .700 (7-for-10) in the four games. She recorded two doubles, her first home run of the season, six RBIs and scored five runs. The junior is having a career year this season.

Balschmiter won her third Pitcher of the Week honor and her second straight after pitching in all four games last week. She went 4-0 with an unreal .30 earned run average, completely stumping opposing batters.

She pitched three complete games and also recorded three shutouts, allowing just a single run to cross home plate through 23 innings pitched. She struck out 34 batters, averaging at least one strikeout per inning. Opposing batters hit just .105 during that stretch.

New re-lease on life

Freshman pitcher Bailey Sanders has been good, and she's been not so good in the early going this season. While she's shown she has the stuff to make it at the collegiate level, is hasn't always been there for her, and UMass coach Elain Sortino and the young hurler may have found what was wrong.

Her late release point was causing her rise-ball to sail, something that didn't matter against high school opposition, but has gotten her into trouble at the collegiate level.

If it rises too high, it goes out of the strike zone and college hitters won't bite on something that high. And if it fails to rise, batters will tee off on it.

When Sanders releases it correctly, though opposing batters chase the pitch every time, swinging wildly as the ball jumps out of the path of the bat.

"We had to change her start because she wasn't able to get under and through her pitches," Sortino said. "But she's worked very, very hard since last Tuesday. That was a week ago and it really paid off."

Walking wounded

Senior captain Candice Molinari returned to the field after a brief stint on the disabled list. The Minutewomen's center fielder injured her right throwing hand swinging at a pitch in the first inning of the early game of a double-header against URI.

She returned to play in the sweep of Saint Louis, so obviously the hand is not bothering her enough to keep her out of the lineup any longer.

"Thank God she's OK," Sortino said. "She really got hit hard. I thought it was broken. Her hand was on the bat. It'll be a while for her to really grip a bat. It's her throwing hand, but I think she's going to be OK."

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu. Log on to the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports

Junior left field Lauren Proctor was the Atlantic 10's co-Player of the Week after registering a .700 batting average in four games last week. Her season average was raised to .383, second on the team.

Third baseman Jim Macdonald is currently tied with Adam Tempesta for the team lead in batting average, hitting at a .329 clip.

PRAISE YE THE LORD:FOR IT IS GOOD TO SING PRAISES UNTO OUR GOD; FOR IT IS PLEASENT; AND PRAISE COMELY.
PSALM 147:1

FRIDAY
APRIL 20TH @ 7:00PM
Engineering Building (ECSC II) RM 119
Amherst, MA

UMass Gospel Choir
Presents our first annual
GOSPEL EXPLOSION!!

Special Guests include:
Atlantic Union Gospel Choir
of course...
UMASS AMHERST GOSPEL CHOIR!!
...and many more

"Results you can feel ...without the side effects."

- headaches
- neck pain
- back pain
- sports injuries
- auto injuries
- and more...

Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractor

Participating provider for HMO's
Student Insurance, Blue Cross, GIC
Car Insurance & most others

www.AmherstFamilyChiro.com

Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health

Most insurance accepted

228 Triangle Street
Amherst, MA
(near Bertucci's)

549-1500

UM braves cold at UConn Invitational

By Scott Feldman
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts men's and women's track team went down to Storrs, Conn. for the annual UConn Invitational last Saturday. The weather was windy, cold and miserable for a track meet. Though the elements challenged the athletes, the Maroon and White fought hard, with the men's team earning a fifth place finish, and the women's team coming in sixth.

The temperature in Storrs was in the low 40's with 20 mile-per-hour wind gusts. UMass men's coach Ken O'Brien stated that the weather can take it's toll on athletes who compete in short events because it is difficult to stay warmed up between the different events. Still, O'Brien felt his team handled the elements well.

"Being in the cold outside for four hours can hamper your athletic performance both physically and mentally," O'Brien said. "I thought the kids did a good job of handling that aspect of the competition. I saw real solid resolve and enthusiasm throughout the team."

Coming in fifth place does not seem like a great result, but coach O'Brien mentioned that he felt the team actually improved from last week. The reason for the low placement was that Rhode Island and Connecticut had much stronger teams, and the level of competition was much stiffer than in their opening meet.

The Minutemen got strong individual performances from some athletes competing in a new event. Sophomore Peter Fortunato won the 5,000 meter run with a time of 15:03.20. Fortunato normally runs in the 1,500 meter run, but he ran a race that was three times as long and won it in his first try.

Sophomore Jesse Regnier placed third in the 3,000 meter steeplechase, completing it in 9:49.94. He accomplished this despite being a complete novice to the event, having never run it before in his life. O'Brien was proud of how Regnier performed and believes he showed a great deal of promise in that event.

Senior Manny Harris-Lopes came in second place in the 400-meter dash running it in 49.37 seconds.

"He's been kind of an unsung runner for us, because his major role has been to either lead off, or anchor our relay teams," O'Brien said. "He's a really valuable performer, and many times he doesn't get the recognition as to his prowess in the open event in the 400."

The men had a strong showing in the 4x100 relay, placing second overall. According to O'Brien, freshman Andrew O'Donnell was the key to the Minutemen's finish in the event. He was forced to substitute for Ian Hackney in the relay and gave a great showing in spite of his inexperience.

The Minutewomen had to compete in the same harsh weather conditions as the Minutemen.

UMass women's coach Julie Lafreniere noted that the cold affected most of her athletes, but she believes they did well considering the conditions.

Junior Christina DeRosa won her second straight 5,000-meter race, dominating her competition yet again. She finished the race in 17:50.14. The second-place time was 18:30.28, a full 40 seconds slower.

Freshman thrower Lisa Wilson qualified for the Eastern College Athletic Conference Championships with a third place finish in the discus. Her long throw was 138 feet, 7 inches, one inch off her personal best.

Assistant Coach Mark Gottdenker is excited about Wilson's potential and believes she could become a real star.

"She's fit, she's relatively healthy, and she's excited. Lisa's doing a nice job," said Gottdenker.

Molly Chapin managed to score a fifth place finish in the pole vault. She did this despite battling recurring respiratory illness. It didn't help that the women's pole vault was held outdoors, although the men's pole vault was held indoors.

"I'm excited for the fact that she's still jumping relatively well on really limited practice because of being sick," said Gottdenker. "I don't think she's as fit, as sharp, or as well prepared she was indoors and she's jumping nearly as high. If we can get her healthy, I think it will be really exciting to see what she can do."

Lafreniere emphasized that her goal was to improve the team as a whole to prepare for the Atlantic 10 Championships.

"I think we can improve in every single event, we are a team that I intend to improve every single week," said Lafreniere. "I think there is always room for improvement."

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu Log on to the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports

File photo/UMass Media Relations

Junior Christina DeRosa finished first in her second straight 5,000-meter race, winning the event by 40 seconds. Both the men's and women's teams battled cold temperatures and harsh winds at the UConn Invitational.

Urick hits 300 wins, now second all-time

M. LACROSSE from page 10

Only eight games into his 2007 campaign, Urick reached the mark and is now tied for second in all-time coaching wins. However, 122 of the 300 wins came at the Division III level.

Ironically, Urick could pass legendary UMass coach Dick Garber for second place when the Hoyas face the Minutemen in two weeks. Urick also has the most wins among active coaches, being most notably chased by Glenn Thiel of Penn State (293) and Dom Starsia of Virginia (269).

But 300 wins as only one of Urick's many achievements in 28 years of coaching. He began his career at Hobart, winning 10 Divison III national championships in 10 seasons. Urick's success at the school allowed Hobart to move to the Division I level and laid the foundation for a competitive program.

In 1990, Urick took over as head coach of the Hoyas. He led the program to its first-ever NCAA tournament appearance in 1997. Two years later, Urick guided his team to a school record 13 wins and to the semifinals of the NCAA tournament. However, Urick has yet to win a national championship or advance to the finals as coach of the Hoyas.

Recruiting Success

Since there are only 56 Division I lacrosse programs, teams certainly have the luxury of taking only the elite high school players into their programs. But then again, the sport has yet to permeate parts of the country away from the eastern seaboard, thus limiting the number and quality of available recruits.

As with most years, the giants in collegiate lacrosse tend to attract the best players to their programs. And of course, the best programs are associated with the best coaches, so it's not surprising that Georgetown arguably has the nation's best freshmen.

Not only did the Urick recruit a stellar class on his own, he also plucked recruits Scott Kocis and Craig Dowd away from Duke's class. The Blue Devils had several high caliber players defect with the fate of the program in question after the cancellation of its season and the resignation of coach Mike Pressler.

According to Inside Lacrosse Magazine, Georgetown's group of 13 freshmen is the best in the country. Ultimately you can't judge recruits until they finish their career, but how they contribute as freshman is usually a good indicator of what's to come. Even though the Hoyas return a veteran squad, several first year players have already proven that they can compete among the best.

Andrew Brancaccio, the headliner of the class, ranks second on the team in goals with 12. The 6'4" attackman was a steal for the Hoyas since he was considered to be the best recruit in many circles. In addition, the team managed to pry the Bethesda, Md. native away from that state's four competitive lacrosse programs, including Johns Hopkins and Maryland.

Kocis, the team's other top recruit, has been an important contributor in the Hoyas transition game as a midfielder. He also has four goals and six groundballs while playing in every game this season.

A freshman defender, Chris Nixon, has contributed on the defensive side of the ball, grabbing 31 groundballs. Nixon hails from Eastern Massachusetts lacrosse power Duxbury High School. The program also sent Max Quinzani, the all-time leading scorer in high school lacrosse history, to Duke – another top Division I program.

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu Log on to the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports two months of the season, Sanders failed to find her stride. She struggled to command her pitches, resulting in 29 walks in 59 innings – by comparison, Balschmiter has an equal number of walks in 93 more innings pitched. When Sanders did find the strike zone, she had some success, but still allowed 64 hits to opposing batters.

Sanders must fill No. 2 role for UMass

MELONI from page 10

Sophomore Brandice Balschmiter has dominated the opposition lately, winning her last seven starts, but much like last season, she can not do it all alone, and will need help down the stretch from fellow pitcher Bailey Sanders.

Balschmiter will struggle at one point in the season. She's human, even though she makes fans of UMass softball question that every time she shuts a team out in both ends of a double header without surrendering so much as a threat. In last season's Super Regional of the NCAA Tournament, when it looked like UMass had punched a ticket to the Women's College World Series for the fourth time in program history, Balschmiter faltered.

The events of that game are probably too painful for any of you to relive so I'll spare you the specifics, but you know the end result. The usually sharp control that propelled Balschmiter to a 32-9 freshman season escaped her for those final two games. She walked 11 batters combined and Northwestern advanced to the WCWS.

You can chalk the Wildcats rally up to fatigue or adjustments made by the NU batters, but at the very least, a solid No. 2 would have provided Sortino with some flexibility. The Wildcats threw two different starters at the Minutewomen that day, both of whom performed well against a ridiculously talented UMass lineup.

This year's version of Sortino's bunch knows they can get back where they were last season. It's just not practical to assume UMass can do more than last season without consistent contributions from Sanders. She doesn't need to be perfect, she just needs be good. The other nine players in the UMass' lineup (designated player included) can do the rest.

No one can question whether or not the rookie holds the ability to win at this level. But when you get to this level, it's about more than ability. You need to put the work in.

That's where Sortino comes in. And that's why no one should worry. If anyone can mold a struggling young pitcher into a superstar it's her. In her time at UMass, she produced 12 A-10 Pitchers of the Year and five All-America pitching selections.

Already this season, Sanders took the first step in becoming the pitcher Sortino knew she could be when she signed the 2006 High School All-American. After consecutive shaky outings against Florida Atlantic and Dartmouth, Sortino and the rest of UMass' coaching staff saw a flaw in the delivery of the 6-foot-2 right-hander.

Sanders relies heavily on her rise-ball to get batters out. Getting under the ball during its release to put backspin on the pitch is what makes the ball rise. Sanders just wasn't getting under the ball enough. Sortino saw the problem and took the steps necessary to amend it.

The pitch changes planes as it approaches the hitter, making it a great strikeout pitch. It also draws harmless pop-ups from those who make contact, but get too far under it. However, if the ball doesn't properly rise, it is nothing more than a waste-high fastball.

While Sortino decided against using the freshman against Saint Louis this past Sunday, she will most definitely see some work in UMass' upcoming eight-game road trip. The Minutewomen square off with a weak Boston College (5-15, 2-7 Atlantic Coast Conference) team before heading to Charlotte for a key A-10 match-up with then 49ers (22-16, 2-4 A-10).

The Minutewomen's regular season ends 25 days from now. In that 25-day span, UMass plays 17 games including three double-headers and 12 A-10 contests. Good teams become great teams by winning down the stretch. The 2007 Minutewomen are a great team and will prove it in this final month of the season, but last year's version of the Minutewomen was a great team as well.

If UMass hopes to reach the heights that they fell just short of last season, they'll need to ride the right arms of both Balschmiter and Sanders. And considering the progress Sanders made in just one week on her out pitch, when the postseason rolls around the Minutewomen should have no trouble rising above the competition.

Joe Meloni is a Collegian Columnist. He can be reached at jmeloni@student.umass.edu. Log on to the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports

FRUSTRATED?
PUZZLED?
DO YOU HAVE:
A grade dispute?
Teacher, roomate or job concerns?
Billing problems?
...or any other University related problems?
THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course)
Serving the students, faculty, and staff of the Umass Community
823 Campus Center
Office Hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
Telephone: 413 - 545 - 0867
fax: 413 - 545 - 9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

Gained only through working at The Massachusetts Daily Collegian as a Fall 2007 semester Advertising Representative
If interested please pick up an application at the Daily Collegian Office located in the Campus Center basement or contact Alex Bender at ebender@student.umass.edu

Seven O's
Every Wednesday:
♦ KARAOKE ♦
♦ LIVE BANDS ♦
Friday, April 13th, 2007:
STATE YOUR MIND
Saturday, April 14th, 2007:
FOUR ON THE FLOOR
♦ STUDENT BAND WANTED ♦
NEED A PLACE TO PLAY?
COME TO SEVEN O'S!
Route 116, 330 Amherst Rd
Sunderland, MA 01375
(413) 665-6788
3 PM TO 1 AM M-F
1 PM TO 1 AM SAT&SUN
Next To Cambridge Apts

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

	3	4		6
9	2	6
		7	3	1
					6	4		1
3			5		9			6
2		8	7
				9	4	8
						9	5	7
				7		2	6

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

ACROSS
1 Pal
5 Actor's part
9 Sudden winds
14 Stockings
15 Always
16 Comic-strip orphan
17 Fixation
19 Twisted thread
20 Helping
21 More precipitous
23 Sandwich cookie
25 Nighttime hooter
26 Goober
30 Virtuous conduct
35 Paint type
36 LX
37 Low grade
38 Scottish Gaelic
39 Cash penalties
40 Immortal deeds
41 Had dinner
42 Wise lawgiver
43 Got up
44 Expression of gratitude
46 Illegal activities
47 Hurricane center
48 Blackthorn fruit
50 Mounted soldiers
54 Most extended
59 Playwright Loos
60 Snow slide
62 Passover dinner
63 Hoarfrost
64 Islands off Galway
65 Pretentiously stylish
66 "___ Man Walking"
67 Pulls at with force

DOWN
1 Word with pork or lamb
2 Vagrant
3 Gorby's nabon
4 Get together
5 Club Med, e.g.
6 Sheepskin
7 Zodiac lion
8 Sea eagles
9 Means of access
10 Ailing
11 Cut with shears
12 Prong
13 Tarot reader
18 Plains people
22 Legal wrongs
24 Foreboding
26 Pants fold
27 Third planet
28 Perplexed
29 Born in Bordeaux
31 Yoked pair
32 Local lingo
33 High-strung
34 Affirmatives
36 Fodder storage structure
39 Vestibule
40 Lanka
42 Eurasian songbird
43 Coliseum, e.g.
45 Make tidy
46 Became less intense
49 Alpaca's relative
50 Michelle's co-singer
51 Once more
52 "Livin' la Loca"
53 Word after Scotland
55 Midge
56 Neutral tone
57 Catch fly balls
58 Sawbucks
61 Lock horns

THE HARP
SPECIALS!
Honey Brown, Molson
$2.00 a pint / $6.50 a pitcher
TONIGHT: • Trivia Night
WED: • Open Mic Night (all are welcome)
Pizza 'til midnight 7 days a week
Voted best Neighborhood bar East of the River 2005 & 2006 Valley Advocate Readers Poll
(X, MC & All credit Cards accepted)
Free wireless Internet!
163 Sunderland Rd. • N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net

Quote of the Day

"Society is like a stew. If you don't stir it up every once in a while then a layer of scum floats to the top."
-Edward Abbey

Two Dudes By Aaron Warner

DO YOU LIKE BEING ROOMMATES WITH DAVE, OR DOES IT PUT A LOT OF PRESSURE ON YOUR FRIENDSHIP?
I DON'T KNOW, DUDE. I GUESS I NEVER THOUGHT ABOUT IT.
WHO'S DAVE?

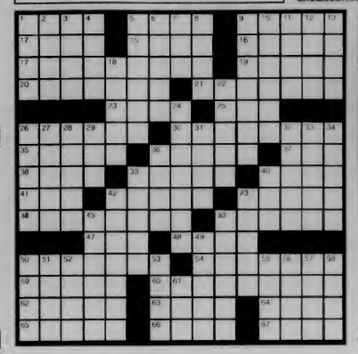
Labrat By Richard Martell

Hard Knocks By Louis Coppola

HARD KNOCKS
NOW THIS IS WHERE BETA FIND GAMES. I HEARD A PACK OF UVULAS IS BURIED HERE.
RIP
OH! I'LL LOOK AT THIS HEADSTONE!
"LOATH MARIA CARELS. CHIEF FLAVOR OF THE LORD TRAMPLED BY A BUFFALO. 1896."
SHE SOUNDS HOT.

Welcome To Falling Rock National Park By Josh Shalek

I'm on to you, Pygmy owl. You have out on the Endangered Species List like it's an all-inclusive day spa.
You hoot housing developments simply keep expanding.
You make people hate owls.
Watch yourself, buster. There are more of us "common" owls, and we're bigger than you.
You realize it's a crime to threaten endangered animals?
Maybe little whiners who can't stand up for themselves deserve to go extinct.



Submit your comics!
collegiancomics@yahoo.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Reignite your passion for basketball by watching Ed starring Whoopi Goldberg.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Wrap yourself in toilet paper and go for a stroll...walk like an Egyptian.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Believe it or not there is such an animal as an aardwolf. Crazy, isn't it?

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Shin splints are great if you break a bone in your lower leg.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Call your nemesis a pipsqueak, regardless of their actual size.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
All the students UMass employs will jump at the chance to undermine their employer.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Spend your Tuesday like you would any other day...being awesome.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Eat 14 extra meals today in case the world runs out of food tomorrow.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Fill your entire schedule with classes that will discuss walrus breeding.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Try a foreign cuisine such as Klingon or Elvin.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Pass the time in class by writing dirty words upside down on your calculator.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Money is obviously overrated otherwise inflation wouldn't exist.

Like honey ham and reindeer stew, you make me comics then I'll love you.

www.dailycollegian.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Activities

Like no other course, Army ROTC Our Nurses call the shots! Guaranteed 3 ½ to 2 year Full Tuition Scholarships plus $5,000 yearly Call 413-545-2321 www.umass.edu/armyrotc

Apartment for Rent

Mill Valley Estates APARTMENT FOR RENT 2 bedroom $1125, 3 bedroom $1425, 4 bedroom $2175 Accepting Applications, 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winnco.com

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Employment

Center of town, 1,2,3 bedrooms hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES www.amherst-lincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Employment

Moving: Local Moving Company looking for self motivated individuals, part-time positions available immediately. Weekday availability a plus. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call (413) 584-4746

Premium skin care and wellness Excellent training and benefits, http://newengland.myarbonne.com

Employment

Outdoor Recreation Jobs Rafting guides full or part time Massachusetts or Maine. Will train! Contact www.moxierafting.com 800-866-6943

Summer on Cape Cod Rent & utilities paid in exchange for providing transportation for teen. Easy walking distance to downtown & beaches, awenkozma@aol.com

Full time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office, $9.50/hour Applications available at 235 Whitmore and are due April 13th.

Line-cooks needed Full-time Part-time available. Apply in person Amherst Brewing Co. 24 N. Pleasant st.

Employment

Attention All Juniors and Senior! April 6th is the last day to apply to become a legal Assistant with the Student Legal Services Office. Earn 12 undergraduate credits while gaining valuable experience in the legal field! Contact us at 545-1995 or stop by our office at 922 Campus Center!

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

Room for Rent

Amherst Beautiful quiet house great location. Need car. With Nice guy and daughter. Perfect for single/couple. Call Jonathan for details 413-22-3006

Roomate Wanted

Cape Cod Seeking summer roommates starting 6/10 Yarmouth, MA near beach. Female only. 617-519-0178

Services

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992. www.tapestryhealth.com

Services

Do you know your rights as a student, tenant, worker and consumer? The Student Legal Services Office can help with your questions. Stop by 922 Campus Center or call 545-1995

Summer Sublet

Won't Last! Puffton Village 3 bedroom apt. rent for summer and/or 07-08 school year Air Cond. Included. Call John 774-239-8937

Submit your classifieds online!

www.dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, APRIL 10, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutemen down Eagles

Cassidy hot again as UM beats first ACC foe in last 36 years

By Danny Picard
Collegian Staff

It had been almost seven years since the Massachusetts baseball team defeated Boston College. It had been even longer since it knocked off an Atlantic Coast Conference team – 36 years to be exact.

As junior Jim Cassidy walked off the mound in the top of the seventh after allowing back-to-back hits to a BC team that was on the comeback trail, it looked as if UMass' 4-1 win in the first round of the 2000 Beanpot would remain the last victory over the Eagles to date.

But solid relief efforts from Ryan Walczak and Aaron Smith, and three insurance runs in the bottom of the seventh secured Cassidy's second win of the season and his second consecutive dominating performance in the Minutemen's 9-4 win over the Eagles (9-19-1) on Monday at Earl Lorden Field.

Cassidy allowed three runs on six hits in six innings of work. He struck out two batters and walked five, while throwing over 110 pitches.

"We needed that," UMass coach Mike Stone said on Cassidy's performance. "He'll be on track now to pitch on the weekends, so that will be good."

UMass	9
BC	4

The Minutemen (7-13) travel to Storrs to face the Connecticut Huskies this afternoon at 3 p.m. It will mark their fifth game since Saturday, one of the reasons why Stone sent Cassidy back out to the mound in the seventh inning after allowing a run, walking two batters and reaching the century mark in the sixth.

"We wanted to make sure we didn't have him throw too many pitches," Stone said. "We have five games in four days, so we can't burn a pitching staff on one day. We didn't have too many fresh guys today."

Boston College scored a run in the top of the first, but UMass answered with six runs in the first four innings before the Eagles even got on the board again.

Sophomore third baseman Jim Macdonald drove in two of his three RBIs in the bottom of the first, giving UMass a 2-1 lead that it never lost.

See BASEBALL on page 7

First baseman Bryan Adanski went 2-for-4 with one walk and a pair of RBIs in the Minutemen's 9-4 win over Boston College. UMass had not defeated the Eagles since the first round of the 2000 Beanpot tournament.

Sophomore Jim MacDonald has improved greatly over his freshman campaign, and has already passed last season's totals in most categories.

MacDonald hitting his stride

Second-year slugger moves up to cleanup spot, leads offense

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

What a difference a year makes.

For sophomore third baseman Jim Macdonald, last year was a bit of a struggle. But any sour memories from 2006 are long gone, as the 6-foot-3, 210-pound Cheshire, Conn. native has quickly immerged as an offensive stalwart for the Massachusetts baseball team.

Macdonald's bat was once again on display from the very beginning of yesterday's 9-4 victory for the Minutemen over Boston College. After falling behind 1-0 in the top of the first, Macdonald quickly put his team back into the lead – and for good, as it turned out – after he stroked a two-run double to left field for his team-leading 16th and 17th RBIs on the season.

His evolution at the plate in his second season for the Maroon and White has been a welcomed addition to the teams' lineup, and the improvements from last year have hardly gone unnoticed.

"He's one of those guys that you can always count on," junior captain Bryan Garrity said. "He has been so huge for us this season, and he's always knocking in guys in crucial situations for us. He's definitely been one of our best hitters this year."

Macdonald delivered again in the bottom of the fourth, as his sharp liner got through to the left side and drove in Lou Proietti for the team's sixth run of the afternoon. Macdonald moved up to cleanup from his usual perch in the six-hole against BC, and did not disappoint. He finished the day 2-for-4, with a walk and three runs batted in.

His continued success comes as no surprise to UMass coach Mike Stone, who has been more than impressed with Macdonald and his newly-found approach at the plate.

"Jim did a real nice job, and he's been real solid all year," he said. "He's

See MACDONALD on page 7

Minutewomen dig in for long road trip

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

So far, so good for the Massachusetts softball team this season against its Atlantic 10 rivals.

The Minutewomen (19-12-1, 6-0 A-10) are perfect against their first three conference opponents, Dayton (5-18, 1-6 A-10), Rhode Island (6-18, 1-5 A-10) and Saint Louis (19-21, 6-2 A-10), sweeping each team in a double-header.

The Maroon and White now sit alone atop the A-10 standings, essentially a game ahead of last season's third-place finisher, Fordham (25-13, 9-1 A-10).

However, UMass has gotten this far against middle-of-the-road competition, having yet to play a conference foe with an overall record above .500. The Minutewomen took advantage of finally getting to play in the comfort of their home field against URI and SLU, and beat up on the worst team in the A-10 (Dayton) on the road.

The next two weeks could present a much tougher challenge, as the team prepares for an eight-game road trip.

The trip begins tomorrow at BC for a single game, then the Minutewomen visit A-10 rival Charlotte for games on Friday and Saturday. Next week, UMass starts a home-and-home series with Connecticut, traveling to Storrs on Tuesday.

The road trip gets hectic next weekend, when UMass goes to Temple for two games on April 20-21, followed by a Sunday double-beader the next day at Saint Joseph's – the team's final regular season games away from Amherst.

Although Charlotte is just 2-4 in A-10 play, the 49ers are 22-16 overall and were good enough to tie the Minutewomen for first place at the end of the 2006 regular season as one of just three team in the A-10 to take a single game from the Maroon and White. Charlotte is also the last team to beat UMass at home – 21 homes games ago spanning two seasons.

UMass' biggest threat the rest of the way will be Fordham. The Rams don't come to the UMass softball complex until the final weekend of the regular season, May 4-5, a series that could determine the A-10 regular season champion and the top seed in the A-10 Tournament the following week (also in Amherst).

The Minutewomen went 4-0 against the Rams last year, including five walks. While UMass can ride her right arm to the program's 19th A-10 Championship, for the players remaining from last year's squad, another A-10 title just isn't enough. And if they hope to improve on last season's progress, Balschmiter just won't be enough.

The Minutewomen possess the talent to win a national championship and there probably isn't a better coach in the country than Elaine Sortino. But they had those things last year, what they didn't have was a consistent No. 2 starter.

In her final season at UMass Jenna Busa struggled to replicate the success she had in her first three years in Amherst. Her ERA skyrocketed from 1.96 in 2005 to 4.98 last season – in 81 fewer innings pitched, she allowed nine more earned runs than she did in 2005.

This year, the No. 2 role belongs to freshman Bailey Sanders. In the first

See SOFTBALL on page 7

Senior captain Amanda Acampora is batting .259 in 81 plate appearances, hitting 4 home runs and recording 18 RBIs primarily from the cleanup spot in the Minutewomen's lineup.

UMass can't rely on Balschmiter all year

Joe Meloni

As most expected, the Massachusetts softball team is off to a scorching 6-0 start in Atlantic 10 play. In their first six games against conference foes, the Minutewomen outscored their opponents 36-3, out-hit their opponents 50-14 and generally had their way with whoever they encountered.

In short, they're very very good.

Although their conference opponents lack the ability of the teams they hope to meet in postseason play, consistently dominating teams that are not in the same class is not always easy. You're bound to suffer a letdown every once in a while, but the Minutewomen continually stroll over opponents that so many teams would look past.

One of the main reasons for UMass' success is the outstanding performance of sophomore ace Brandice Balschmiter.

In her six A-10 starts, Balschmiter is 6-0 with a minuscule 0.50 earned run average and 47 strikeouts to just

See MELONI on page 8

Freshman pitcher Bailey Sanders has appeared in just one A-10 contest this season, relieving starter Brandice Balschmiter against URI.

ECAC clash should shake up conference

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

It'll certainly the most anticipated ECAC game of the season. When Georgetown (6-2, 3-0 ECAC) and Loyola (5-3, 1-1 ECAC) play to a decision on Saturday, the winner will be on the doorstep of the regular season title.

Though both ranked in the Top 20 of the Nike Inside Lacrosse Media Poll (Gtown No. 6 and Loyola at No. 12), the teams appear to be headed in opposite directions. The Hoyas have a two-game winning streak, including a victory over No. 8 Navy (8-2). The team survived a very difficult non-conference schedule, but its fate will ultimately be decided over the course of its final four ECAC matches.

On the other hand, the Greyhounds had a five-game winning streak of their own before losing to Rutgers by 10 goals last weekend. With two of its last three conference games against teams in last place, Loyola has plenty of opportunity to prove that the loss to Rutgers was a fluke and to legitimize wins over No. 4 Duke (9-2) and No. 17 Syracuse (3-5).

ECAC Lacrosse

Since it's unlikely that the Hoyas will lose more than one conference game, Massachusetts (4-5, 2-1 ECAC) is the only other team that has a legitimate chance of the winning the regular season conference title. Should Georgetown defeat Loyola, the Minutemen could finish in first if they win the remainder of their games, including an April 21 date with the Hoyas in Amherst.

However, should Georgetown struggle down the stretch, No. 20 Rutgers (4-4, 2-2 ECAC) has an outside shot at achieving first place. The Scarlet Knights made noise in collegiate lacrosse last week with its obliteration of Loyola. The 17-7 home victory propelled Rutgers into the top 20 for the first time this season.

But a win over Georgetown on April 28 most likely will not be enough for Rutgers to save its season. The team will also need to defend home turf against Penn State and UMass to put itself in the best possible position.

Penn State (3-5, 2-2 ECAC) is in a similar position to Rutgers, but its two conference wins came against bottom feeders Hobart and Fairfield. Although, the team's two ECAC losses were both decided by one goal. As with Rutgers, the Nittany Lions will need to beat Georgetown and get some help from other teams in the conference.

Fairfield (5-3), Hobart (4-5) and St. John's (4-6) have all but been eliminated from contention with only one conference win paired with three losses each. Fairfield almost knocked off Georgetown last Saturday, but fell 8-7.

Urick Wins 300th

Georgetown's Dave Urick went into this season needing only six wins for his 300th career head coaching victory.

See M. LACROSSE on page 8

MINUTEMEN TAKE DOWN UCONN PAGE 12 | LENNON PROMISES GREAT SHOW TONIGHT PAGE 8

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

SUNNY : HI: 52 LO: 31 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY, APRIL 11, 2007

The Heat is On

Part three of a four-part series on global warming and what students can do about it

Heating up

Warming temperatures could result in worldwide food and water shortages.

Growing numbers

Drop in yields of crops and increasing population will put more at risk of hunger:

© 2007 MCT
Source: U.N. Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, AP
Graphic: Melina Yingling

1 Latin America
2050 Productivity of crops and livestock to decline

2 Europe
2070 16 million to 44 million people will suffer water shortages

3 Africa
2020 Rain-fed agriculture could decrease 50 percent
2080 Wheat crop may disappear

4 Bangladesh
2050 Rice production may fall 10 percent; wheat by a third

5 China
2050 3.6°C (6.5°F) increase in air temperature could decrease rice yields 5-12 percent

6 Australia
2030 Increase in drought and fire; decrease agriculture production 30 percent

(M.T.)

Warming affects vacations

By Daryl Popper
Collegian Correspondent

Summer is fast approaching, and the time is right to hit the road and travel. Unfortunately, motor vehicle travel is the largest single contributor to air pollution. In a United States Environmental Protection Agency 2005 series it was found that one gallon of gasoline is assumed to produce 19.4 pounds of CO_2. At almost 20 pounds, the amount of CO_2 produced is equivalent to 64 feet of rope, the average weight gain of a pregnant women or a package of laser printer paper. With an increase in the number of vehicles purchased and the number of miles traveled, the U.S. has the green light toward global warming.

According to the Northeast Sustainable Energy Association (NESEA), transportation alone uses 67 percent of the country's oil and produces one-third of the air pollution and greenhouse gases, which develop into key chemicals that cause smog and over time, lead to health-related problems including birth defects and cancer.

Traveling via airplane is also responsible for two to three percent of carbon dioxide emissions.

A Feb. 12, 2007 Time magazine article, "Greenhouse Airlines," read that on an individual level, a single long-haul flight can emit more carbon dioxide per passenger than months of SUV driving.

There are different approaches to take to summer travel that may limit your environmental impact. If public transportation and bicycling don't fit into your itinerary, check out some alternative ways University of Massachusetts students are arriving at their destinations.

Drive in style – hybrid style. Petroleum Electric Hybrid Vehicles (PEHV) use a combination of fuels and electric batteries to power electric motors, providing better fuel economy and efficiency. In March 2007, the Green Car Congress reported February's hybrid sales rose to 54 percent. This economically and environmentally friendly mode of transportation is popular on the West Coast. In 2004, the state of

See TRAVEL on page 5

UMass athletes feel the heat

By Jeff Shapiro
Collegian Correspondent

"Sweat in August, win in December."

It's a phrase that suggests that if you train hard in the off-season, you will be rewarded by winning in the post-season. The 2002 ESPN original film entitled, "The Junction Boys," highlights the idea of sweating in August and winning in December.

The film depicts legendary head coach Paul "Bear" Bryant and his 1954 Texas A&M Aggies football team struggling to survive his 10-day summer camp in Junction, Texas. In the movie, a ruthless Bryant puts his players through a grueling practice schedule and allows no water breaks in the heat, which topped 100 degrees. Although the "survivors," as they came to be known, did end up mentally tougher after their experience, their sweat did not translate into wins. The Aggies went 1-9 that season.

In those days, that's how they did things. Today, these practices would be regarded as dangerous and potentially fatal – and with good reason.

According to the National Federation of High School Associations, 20 high school football players died from heatstroke in the United States between 1995 and 2005. From 1955 to 1994, the National Center for Catastrophic Sport Injury Research reported that there have been 82 heat-related deaths at all levels of football (high school, collegiate and professional).

The death of Minnesota Vikings offensive tackle Korey Stringer in 2001, from complications brought on by heatstroke, was the most prominent catalyst for change in summer conditioning programs.

Bob Otrando, director of strength and conditioning for University of Massachusetts athletics, has been coaching for 28 years and knows the importance of keeping players safe.

"You've got to know your athlete and know your conditions," said Otrando. "You want

See SPORTS on page 5

Author to lecture at UMass about Israeli-Palestinian conflict

By Alana Melanson
Collegian Staff

Highly controversial and internationally known author and scholar of the Israel-Palestine Conflict Norman Finkelstein will speak tonight on the University of Massachusetts campus in a lecture titled "Palestine & Israel: Roots of Conflict, Prospects for Peace."

Finkelstein, a professor of political science at DePaul University in Chicago, is popular among his own students, but his criticism of Israel tends to inspire protests and debates at other colleges during his speaking tours.

He has written five books related to various aspects concerning Israeli-Palestinian relations and anti-Semitism, including his latest book, "Beyond Chutzpah: On the Misuse of Anti-Semitism and the Abuse of History". According to his website, www.normanfinkelstein.com, "Beyond Chutzpah" puts forth the idea that those in support of Israel "contrive controversy," saying that "whenever Israel comes under international pressure, another media campaign alleging a global outbreak of anti-Semitism is mounted."

He sees many claims of anti-Semitism as being excuses or a means by which sympathy can be gained for Israel, and says that there has been an extreme misrepresentation of historical facts to further the Israeli agenda.

Finkelstein tears apart Harvard law professor and Israel supporter Alan M. Dershowitz's "The Case For Israel," accusing Dershowitz of skewing facts and going as far as to say that he may not have actually written his book.

Dershowitz attempted to stop publication of Finkelstein's work in 2005, saying it was defamatory, but he did not succeed.

Though anti-Semitism has long been understood as discrimination or prejudice against Jews or Judaism, the term Semitic refers to peoples in the Middle East and North Africa who have traditionally spoken Semitic languages Hebrew, Arabic, Aramaic, and Amharic, to name a few – and their descendants, a category that includes people of both Jewish and Arab ancestry.

Norman Finkelstein, professor of Political Science at DePaul University.

Just as Finkelstein sees claims of anti-Semitism being abused, he also sees references to the Holocaust being used to justify political stances, as stated in his previous book, "The Holocaust Industry: Reflections on the Exploitation of Jewish Suffering," an international bestseller that has been translated into 24 different languages.

He alleges that without the Holocaust, there may not have been

See AUTHOR on page 4

Ford Extended

UMass Athletic Director John McCutcheon announced yesterday that Travis Ford has signed a five-year contract extension. Read more on page 12.

Gas price rise easing after springtime surge

By H. Josef Hebert
Associated Press

WASHINGTON – Drivers may find gasoline a little cheaper this summer compared to last, despite a 64-cent-a-gallon jump since January.

The Energy Department said Tuesday that the recent sharp rise in gasoline costs is likely to slow in the coming weeks with prices averaging $2.81 a gallon over the vacation driving season, about three cents lower than last spring and summer.

But the Energy Information Administration forecast is anything but assured.

Only a month ago, the agency said it believed the cost of regular-grade gasoline would peak in June, averaging $2.67 for the month, a price already eclipsed last week.

The latest forecast calls for prices to peak with an average $2.87 a gallon for the month of May, then decline. Last summer's peak was an average of $2.98 for the month of July.

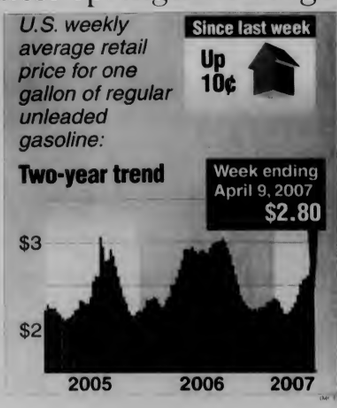
"We think the forecast is about on track," said Geoff Sundstrom, a spokesman for the American Automobile Association. He said based on current market trends he doesn't see another summer of $3 gasoline nationwide.

Prices have soared beyond $3 dollar in each of the last two summers: During Hurricane Katrina in 2005 that disrupted Gulf Coast supplies and last July when the Israeli invasion of Lebanon caused crude prices to spike to $76 dollar a barrel with $3-plus gasoline quick to follow.

The forecast assumes no new international crisis this summer.

Since January, the price of regular grade gasoline has gone from a weekly average of $2.16 a gallon to $2.80 last week. Prices across much of the West Coast have been over $3 a gallon.

Gasoline prices normally increase in advance of the April-to-September heavy driving season, but this time the price climb



See GAS on page 4

DNA test results determine paternity of Anna Nicole's baby

By Jessica Robertson
Associated Press

NASSAU, Bahamas—DNA tests prove it: Larry Birkhead is the father of Anna Nicole Smith's million-dollar baby.

"I told you so!" the late Playboy Playmate's former boyfriend said Tuesday upon emerging from a closed court hearing. He added: "My baby's going to be coming home pretty soon."

Birkhead, a 34-year-old California photographer, then hugged his rival, Howard K. Stern, who has been caring for baby Dannielynn since Smith's sudden death in February.

The hearing was a pivotal moment in the battle over who gets custody of the girl, who could inherit a fortune from the estate of Smith's late husband, J. Howard Marshall II. Although Birkhead is the father, Stern's name is on the birth certificate. Another custody hearing was scheduled for Friday.

Stern, who was Smith's lawyer and later became her companion, said he wouldn't fight for custody, but a lawyer for Smith's mother, Virgie Arthur, indicated she might. The judge scheduled another hearing for Friday in the pink colonial courthouse to discuss who will raise the girl, who could inherit hundreds of millions of dollars.

Stern said he loved the baby despite the DNA results and would support Birkhead.

"I'm obviously very disappointed, but my feelings for Dannielynn have not changed," he said, adding of Birkhead: "I'm going to do whatever I can to make sure he gets sole custody."

Birkhead had been fighting for custody of Dannielynn even before Smith's death.

"Nothing's been determined except parentage and I'm the father," Birkhead said. "It's been a long road and I'm just happy to have this behind me."

A crowd of about 250 people, many of them tourists, cheered from behind police barricades when Birkhead, clutching a piece of paper, announced the DNA test results. The court's DNA expert, Dr. Michael Baird, confirmed it.

"Essentially, he's the biological father," Baird said.

This tropical capital has been transfixed by the Anna Nicole saga since she moved here last year. Smith gave birth to Dannielynn in September, only to see her 20-year-old son Daniel die days later at her bedside from a lethal combination of drugs. Smith died in February at age 39 in Florida.

Many in the crowd took pictures of the impromptu news conference with cameras and cell phones. One man in the crowd wore a T-shirt emblazoned with the handwritten message: "I'm the baby's daddy."

A DNA paternity test concluded that 34-year-old Larry Birkhead is the biological father of the late Anna Nicole Smith's daughter.

GRE exam to remain the same

By Angelle Barbazon
The Daily Reveille (LSU)

BATON ROUGE, La.— Educational Testing Services has canceled plans to revise the format of the Graduate Record Exam, the test required for admission to most graduate programs.

Plans were made for the GRE to undergo several changes beginning Sept. 10, but accessibility issues surfaced.

Russell Schaffer, Kaplan Test Prep and Admissions spokesperson, said about 500,000 students take the exam each year.

He said ETS could not guarantee GRE access to all students because the revised exam would be offered about 35 dates each year. The GRE will be available almost every day of the year as it currently is.

The revised GRE planned to convert to a linear format, change its time distribution for the sections and take twice as long to complete. None of these changes will be implemented during the 2007-2008 fiscal year.

Kaplan is an educational services company that prepares students for a variety of exams including the GRE, the Law School Admission Test, the American College Test and the Scholastic Aptitude Test.

Kaplan advises students to begin preparing for the GRE three months before their scheduled exam.

Schaffer said the cancellation is not a large impact on students preparing for the GRE.

Schaffer said the cancellation is good news for students because accessibility is no longer an issue. He said the revised the exam was supposed to be lengthier, more expensive and more challenging.

Tom Ewing, ETS spokesman, said ETS, a nonprofit organization, invested about $12 million in research to create the revised test.

"It's not lost money, just delayed," he said.

Ewing said ETS plans to eventually revise the GRE.

"We will make improvements to the test in coming years, but it will be done very gradually, not all at once," he said.

Schaffer said Kaplan will host a free GRE strategy seminar May 15 in CEBA to help students prepare for the exam.

Study finds current college freshmen wealthiest in 40 years

By Mai Hong
Daily Bruin (UCLA)

LOS ANGELES— A report encompassing 40 years of data collected by the University of California-Los Angeles annually from its entering undergraduates showed freshmen entering college in recent years are wealthier than any class of freshmen entering in the last 35 years.

The report, "American Freshmen: Forty-Year Trends 1966-2006," was released Monday by the Cooperative Institutional Research Program and is administered nationally by the university's Graduate School of Education & Information Studies.

According to the data from the report, the gap between UCLA's parental median income and the national average has increased by 14 percent since 1971.

The parental median income of freshmen at $74,000 in 2005 is 60 percent higher than the national average income of $46,326.

The research program is a survey group that looks at the impact of college on students by surveying entering freshmen and graduating seniors. The survey for freshmen looks for what students' values are coming into college and in what activities they participated in high school, said John Pryor, director of the program.

Pryor said the survey also looks to find what freshmen expect from college and a number of demographic issues including race and sex.

"The important thing about the freshmen survey is that it sets (colleges) up to do additional studies from the survey. If you don't know what students are like coming in, then you don't know — how much they gained out of their college careers by the time you do the senior surveys," Pryor said.

Professor of Education, and an author of the report, Jose Luis Santos, said in a statement that the increasing tuitions and fees are a factor accounting for the gap between the median income and the national average, as students with low incomes face tougher choices of whether to attend universities with higher tuitions.

But some don't agree that the report of the gap will discourage students from applying.

"(The report) makes it sound like we're well off, but we have the highest percentage of Pell Grant recipients than any other school in the nation," said Marwa Kaisey, president of the Undergraduate Students Association Council.

Anthony Antonio, professor at Stanford University School of Education, said the average applicant would focus on other issues when applying to college, such as the racial climate and tolerance of accepted minorities, and the report would not affect future applicant pools right away.

USAC internal vice president, Gregory Cendana, said the report was troubling because it suggested a lack of diversity.

"This study will shed light on trying to find a different process that will yield a more diverse population," Cendana said.

The report also showed more students stated that making more money was an important factor in going to college, and showed a decline in the percentage of students who prioritized racial understanding as "essential" or "very important."

OPEN HOUSE

ADANTI STUDENT CENTER
SOUTHERN CONNECTICUT
STATE UNIVERSITY

THURSDAY
APRIL 19, 2007
3:00 - 7:00 PM

- Meet with graduate faculty from more than 40 areas of study
- Find out about financial aid and graduate assistantships
- Get details on career services and living on campus
- Choose from 55 graduate programs, including master's degree programs, sixth year certificates and the Ed.D.

SCHOOL OF ARTS & SCIENCES
SCHOOL OF BUSINESS
SCHOOL OF COMMUNICATION, INFORMATION & LIBRARY SCIENCE
SCHOOL OF EDUCATION
SCHOOL OF HEALTH & HUMAN SERVICES

Southern Connecticut State University
New Haven, Connecticut
1-800-448-0661 or 203-392-5240

Register for the Open House at www.gradstudies.SouthernCT.edu

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL - W. SPFLD
Special Student Rate
Local-National Placement
Includes Certification
1-800-357-3210
BostonBartender.com

LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO LIVE?
KAMINS
SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS
PRESIDENTIAL APTS
COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS
PERRY APTS
177 N. PLEASANT ST.
COLLEGE INN APTS
LANTERN COURT APTS
MILL HOLLOW
CRESTVIEW APTS.
55 S. PLEASANT ST. 253-2515 AMHERST
LARGEST SELECTION OF APARTMENTS IN TOWN

SOLVE THIS.
What pair of English words, with no letters in common, have the greatest product of their lengths?*
HAVE FUN WORKING HERE.
*Solve this puzzle for a chance to meet ITA Software's extraordinary engineers and interview at our Cambridge, MA office. For details, please visit www.itasoftware.com/careers/umass.
ita Software™
www.itasoftware.com/careers

City may create panel to stop odor

OGDEN, Utah The city may be looking for a few good noses. When it meets Tuesday, the City Council is expected to set a public hearing for a law that would create a committee to sniff out objectionable odors.

Ogden's chief administrator, John Patterson, said the city is not singling out a specific company for enforcement. But there have been complaints about a pet-food factory, American Nutrition Inc.

Despite promises, American Nutrition has failed to install an exhaust scrubber on three ovens that bake treats for dogs and cats, Patterson said.

"Stench is not the lasting memory that we want people to have in Ogden," he said.

Councilwoman Dorrene Jeske said an ordinance is overdue.

"The odor from the American Nutrition plant may have hindered us from getting some businesses along Wall Avenue," she said.

Company executive Bill Behnken was away from his office Monday and unavailable for comment.

American Nutrition last year said it had installed scrubbers on equipment used to produce kibble products from a mix of corn, wheat, rice meal and meat products, the Standard-Examiner reported.

In addition to creating a sniff patrol, the ordinance would also require companies to adopt technology or change practices to reduce or eliminate bad odors. Violators would be fined $125 to $500.

A panel consisting of a city building official and three residents appointed by Mayor Matthew Godfrey would investigate complaints.

A device known as an olfactometer would be used by city inspectors to determine if an odor had reached an objectionable level. Restaurants and bakeries would be exempt.

Associated Press

Bill would make textbook costs public

By Zack Hoopes
Columbia Daily Spectator (Columbia U.)

NEW YORK— Some people like to know how big the needle is before they get the injection. And pending the passage of a bill before Congress, the same principle will apply to course books.

The College Textbook Affordability Act, S. 495, was sponsored in the U.S. Senate on March 20 by Sen. Dick Durbin, (D-Ill.) It has been approved by the Senate and is pending review in the House of Representatives.

The bill would mandate that institutions receiving federal assistance include the ISBN and price of course books on class schedules and registration information that students see before picking classes.

It would also require publishers to make available to university faculty the revision history of textbooks and the exact nature of changes made, as well as information on the different formats (paperback, hardback) in which the book is available. And it would force publishers to offer materials that are often "bundled" together — such as CDs and workbooks – as separate items. Additionally, the bill would require that schools provide information on course books to any bookstore that requests it.

Durbin's stated strategy is to help students and instructors make the most affordable choices in purchasing course material. "Publishers use new editions and bundled material to drive up costs for students who are already having trouble paying for school," he said in a press release, adding, "It is time to give them the information and options they need to make educated decisions about managing their finances in school."

According to Durbin, textbook costs have risen more than 185 percent in the past 20 years.

The bill has been criticized for not containing any firm price controls. Some bloggers and editorial writers have said that the provisions of the bill provide a needless layer of bureaucracy without actually restructuring the textbook market.

While competition among retailers may increase under the bill's measures, selection of titles may not. According to critics, the fact that students have no recourse other than buying books has enabled price gouging, and the narrowness of a market protected by intellectual property laws limits the competition among publishers. Several students said they thought the measures of the Textbook Act would do little to increase their options.

"It'll help only in extreme cases," said Max Zeiberg, a junior at Columbia University, adding, "If I want to take a class, it's worth it [to buy the books] unless the price is just absurd."

Zeiberg said that knowing the revision history will help with problem-based textbooks where there is only minor renumbering between editions. But Janet Yen, a junior, said that revision information won't make much of a difference in humanities classes where students can "usually just ask the professor" about changes between editions.

The College Textbook Affordability Act would mandate that institutions receiving federal funding disclose textbook prices prior to registration.

The bill may also affect textbook retailers who will now be able to find out what books students will want to purchase. "We'll have better access to professors' course orders, because some refuse to give it to us," Jeff Hednick, a manager at Labyrinth Books, said. He said the major change will be for smaller stores that have to carefully select their inventory. "It would be different," he said, "because anyone could order the book and sell it."

But for Thommen Ollapally, a junior, the Textbook Act is at least a first step in the right direction. "It's good that something is being done about this," he said. "Hidden costs are quite annoying."

Fire destroys Johnny Cash's lakeside home

By Kristin M. Hall
Associated Press

HENDERSONVILLE, Tenn.— A fire destroyed the lakeside home of the late country singer Johnny Cash on Tuesday.

The fire started around 1:40 p.m. CST in this suburb about 20 miles northeast of downtown Nashville. Fire trucks arrived within five minutes, but the house was already engulfed in flames, Hendersonville Fire Chief Jamie Steele said.

Just a few hours later, there was almost nothing left except brick chimneys and the steel frame.

The cause is unknown, but Steele said the flames spread quickly because construction workers had recently applied a flammable wood preservative to the exterior of the house. The preservative was also being applied inside the house.

No workers were injured, but one firefighter was slightly hurt while fighting the fire, Steele said.

Cash and his wife, June Carter Cash, lived at the home from the late 1960s until their deaths in 2003.

The property was purchased by Barry Gibb, a member of the Bee Gees, in January 2006. Gibb and his wife, Linda, had said they planned to restore the home on Old Hickory Lake and hoped to write songs there.

Gibb's spokesman, Paul Bloch, said the singer and his family are "both saddened and devastated by the news."

While the Cashes lived there, the 13,880-square-foot home was visited by everyone from U.S presidents to ordinary fans.

"So many prominent things and prominent people in American history took place in that house — everyone from Billy Graham to Bob Dylan went into that house," said singer Marty Stuart, who lives next door and was married to Cash's daughter, Cindy, in the 1980s.

Stuart said the man who designed the house, Nashville builder Braxton Dixon, was "the closest thing this part of the country had to Frank Lloyd Wright."

When Cash moved there, the road was a quiet country lane that skirts Old Hickory Lake. Kris Kristofferson, then an aspiring songwriter, once landed a helicopter on Cash's lawn to pitch him a song.

In later years, Cash did a lot of recording in the home and in a studio on the property. The landmark video for his song "Hurt" was shot inside the house.

"It was a sanctuary and a fortress for him," Stuart said. "There was a lot of writing that took place there."

Richard Sterban of the Oak Ridge Boys lives on the same road as Cash. "Maybe it's the good Lord's way to make sure that it was only Johnny's house," Sterban said.

Cash's musical career began in the 1950s and spanned from rock 'n' roll to folk to country. His hits included "Ring of Fire," "Folsom Prison Blues" and "I Walk the Line."

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 115
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Eric Athas
Managing Editor Rob Greenfield
Business Manager Dan Conti
Production Manager Amanda Allen
Night Supervisor Sherel Wilnik
Advertising Manager Jameson Porter
Advertising Production Molly Eggleston
Arts & Living Editor Morgan Rousseau
Comics Editor Adam Scaggin
Editorial Editor Tucker Merrick
News Editor Matt Bellweau
Sports Editor Danny Picard
Sports Editor Jon Pelland
Features Editor Melissa D'Amico
Circulation Manager Jeff Peritz
Asst. Business Manager David Vallade
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Sarah Pelletier
Asst. Arts & Living Erin McCall
Asst. Arts & Living Sydney Towne
Assistant News Anna DeBiasio
Assistant News Nicole Baumgartel
Assistant Editorial Brendan Hall
Assistant Sports Jeremy Rice
Web Editor Jana Hale
Photo Editor Evan Frisch

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Eric Athas
COPY EDITOR
Callie Williams
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Amanda Allen

Nathan's FAMOUS
OFFICIAL
Hot Dog Eating Contest
Dear Students,
On April 19, between 6:00 and 7:00 pm during the Taste of UMass in Mullins Center, you can compete as one of 12 students in the Nathan's Famous Hot Dog Eating Contest and a chance to go to the national competition in Coney Island.
To register, just send us an email to mmonaghan@mail.aux.umass.edu or sign-up at all DCs and Bluewall, the Hatch, Southwest Café, Whitmore Café, and the Pita Pit.
Best of luck,
Dining Services
UMass contest limited to 12 UMass students
To qualify for national competition you are required to eat at least 16 hot dogs, including bun during a specific time.
umass.edu/diningservices
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
YCMP
Taste of UMass 2007
*Contest open to current UMass students only. Contestants must be at least 18 years old with identification. Contestants must sign a UMass contest waiver.

UMass Idol
Mark your calendar!
Sign Up and Enter Today!
Want to be a UMass Idol?
This is your moment to win $500 cash/grand prize
Sing at the Taste of UMass!
Thursday, April 19, 2007 · Time: 6–7:30 pm
Place: Mullins Center
Email mmonaghan@mail.aux.umass.edu or call UMass Dining Services & ask for Kevin: 413 545-2472.
Provide your: name, e-mail address, major, year, and the title of the song you will sing
All entries must be received by April 18, 2007
There will be two rounds with Cash prizes for each round. Limited to 30 contestants for the entire event
Presented by: UMass Dining Services & LAZER 99.5
Sponsored by: Coca-Cola
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
Taste of UMass 2007
umass.edu/diningservices
Must be a UMass student to enter. Judges decisions are final.

Controversial speaker to give lecture at UMass

AUTHOR from page 1

as strong of a movement for a Jewish homeland in Israel.

Finkelstein, however, does not deny the existence of the Holocaust, as his own parents are survivors. Maryla Husyt Finkelstein and Zacharias Finkelstein both survived the Warsaw Ghetto in Poland, and the Maidanek and Auschwitz concentration camps, respectively.

Finkelstein's proposed tenure is currently in dispute at DePaul, as a result of his views and written works. Members of the faculty have voted in favor of his tenure, while Dean Chuck Suchar is in staunch opposition.

As recently reported in the online publication "Inside Higher Ed," a leaked memo quotes Suchar as saying that Finkelstein's personal attacks on others, such as that of Dershowitz in "Beyond Chutzpah," "border on character assassination" and are "inconsistent with DePaul's Vincentian values, most particularly our institutional commitment to respect the dignity of the individual and to respect the rights of others to hold and express different intellectual positions."

Finkelstein's Amherst talk comes at the time of the 40th anniversary of Israel's invasion of the Palestinian West Bank, Gaza Strip, East Jerusalem, and the Syrian Golan Heights.

Sponsored by the Palestinian Action Coalition and the Anti-War Coalition, the event is open to the public and will be held at 7:30 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

Alana Melanson can be reached at amelanso@student.umass.edu.

Accidental school shooting injures 2

By Karen Hawkins
Associated Press

CHICAGO—A high school student passed a handgun to a classmate inside a Chicago classroom Tuesday when it accidentally discharged, striking both in the leg, police said.

The two teens, both 15, were taken to hospital in "critical/serious" condition, the Chicago Fire Department said. Police initially said the students were in good condition.

The boys were sitting in the back of a science classroom at the Chicago Vocational Career Academy on the city's South Side around 2:15 p.m. when the gun discharged. One was struck in the thigh and the other near the knee, said Robert Lopez, an assistant deputy police superintendent.

The teen who brought the gun to school panicked, ran outside the building and dumped the gun near the front of the building, Lopez said. The gun was recovered at the scene, police said.

Police had earlier said the student had shot a classmate in the leg, with the bullet apparently ricocheting and wounding the shooter.

While the school has metal detectors, students are chosen at random to go through them because it would take too long to scan each teen, Lopez said. The teen who brought the gun did not go through the device.

Lopez said there would be charges against the teen who brought the gun to school, but he had no details.

School officials could not immediately provide any information.

It was the second shooting in less than a month at the school, which has about 2,000 students in grades nine through 12. On March 22, two students standing in the parking lot were wounded after a car pulled up and someone inside opened fire, Bond said.

Those students recovered, but no arrests were made, police spokeswoman Monique Bond said.

Gas use to increase 1.2 percent from 2006 came shockingly early — in the dead of winter.

GAS from page 1

The government attributed the unusual early price surge to higher crude oil prices, unplanned refinery outages, declining imports from Europe and an increase in demand.

"Although gasoline prices began their seasonal increase about a month earlier than usual, the rapid rate of price increase is projected to slow over the next few months," said the energy agency.

Despite the higher prices, motorists show no signs that they're staying off the roads.

The forecast said motorists are expected to use nearly 400 million gallons of gasoline from April to September, a 1.2 percent increase over the same months last year.

"Demand for fuel is strong. We've not seen a reduction in fuel use," said Sundstrom. Nor have there been gasoline shortages as imports make up the shortfall in domestic refinery output.

The Triple-A won't make its formal prediction of summer travel until next month. But Sundstrom said it appears that people seem to be adapting to the higher prices.

"One has to ponder if $3 a gallon is the new threshold to pain," said Sundstrom.

That may be the case among many vacationers, according to a survey of 2,518 owners of RVs, travel trailers, boats and motorcycles by Nationwide Mutual Insurance Co.

Nearly seven out of ten of the survey's respondents "say they will not change their vacation plans because of high (fuel) prices," according to the Columbus, Ohio-based insurer.

The government report said it expects crude oil prices to average $65 a barrel over the summer because of "tight oil markets and continued international uncertainty" including tensions involving Iran.

Crude oil for May delivery rose 38 cents Tuesday to settle at $61.89 on the New York Mercantile Exchange after sliding nearly $3 on Monday.

Meanwhile, high gasoline costs — and an anticipation of large profit figures from major oil companies — has already spurred talk in Congress about price gouging.

Legislation sponsored by 86 House members would establish the first federal law against price gouging and impose criminal penalties and fines of up to $150 million for companies and $2 million on individuals.

The American Council for Capital Formation, a business advocacy group, said this week the law would cause gasoline shortages as retailers choose to shut down instead of risking prosecution whenever prices spike sharply.

Rep. Bart Stupak, D-Mich., a principal sponsor of the bill, promised to continue to push for the legislation and said Tuesday he was not surprised at the criticism from an organization that "receives hundreds of thousands of dollars from Big Oil."

The government forecast also:

Said ethanol production is expected to average 399,000 barrels a day this summer, an increase of nearly 28 percent from last summer as more plants opened to produce the gasoline substitute. Congress has required ethanol, made from corn, be blended with the gasoline. Another 80 new plants and plant expansions are in the works.

A colder-than-normal first quarter has set the stage for more natural gas use this year with prices likely to average $7.83 per thousand cubic feet, about 13 percent more than last summer.

Electricity prices are expected to increase 3 percent on average, although price hikes could be substantially greater on some states or regions where there are structural changes expected in electricity markets.

More than 3.4M in U.S. have iron deficiency

By Abby Brownback
Kansas State Collegian
(Kansas State U.)

MANHATTAN, Kan.—Meg Gentry can feel when her iron levels are low.

A cross country and long-distance track runner for Kansas State University, Gentry becomes exhausted during training, in class and at home, and her race times get significantly slower.

Gentry, junior in secondary education, is one of the 3.4 million Americans with anemia.

The National Anemia Action Council defines anemia as "a below-normal level of hemoglobin or hematocrit." Carried by red blood cells, hemoglobin transports oxygen to the body. Hematocrit is the "percentage of red blood cells in a blood sample."

Menstruating girls and women should have a hemoglobin level between 12.3 and 15.3 grams per deciliter. The healthy range for men is 14.0-17.4 g/dl. The World Health Organization says women whose levels fall below 12 g/dl and men whose levels drop below 13 g/dl are anemic. Healthy hematocrit levels are at least 36 percent for women and 42 percent for men.

Anemia is diagnosed when a physician notes symptoms of weakness and fatigue in a patient and orders a complete blood count or a blood test of the patient's ferritin level, or the amount of iron stored in the patient's body, said Dr. James Gardner, an internal medicine doctor who has practiced in Manhattan for almost 30 years. Tests of a patient's iron level or iron-binding capacity might also be conducted, but are not as reliable.

If the test results indicate the patient is iron deficient, that should raise questions of losing blood, Gardner said. He then checks for blood loss through urine, stools and heavy periods. Probes for colon cancer or irregularities in the gastrointestinal tract come next.

Iron deficiency anemia like Gentry's is the most prevalent type of anemia, Gardner said, but cases are not typically severe. It occurs in 9 percent to 16 percent of menstruating girls and women and in 7 percent of 1- and 2-year-olds, according to the NAAC.

Iron deficiency anemia occurs when an individual's body lacks sufficient iron, caused by insufficient absorption of iron, a diet too low in iron, or an excessive loss of blood — often from heavy menstrual cycles, a severe injury, ulcers or problems in the gastrointestinal system or the colon, said Dr. Scott Coonrod, a Manhattan-based internal medicine doctor. The body needs a certain amount of iron to function as part of the blood's hemoglobin, binding oxygen to the molecule and delivering it to the body for use in daily activities like metabolism.

"Hemoglobin binds to oxygen, and without it, we wouldn't be alive, because you couldn't transport as much oxygen around the body," Gardner said.

Premenopausal women have a Recommended Dietary Allowance of 18 milligrams of iron daily, while men should consume 8 milligrams daily, according to the American Dietetic Association's "Complete Food and Nutrition Guide."

Women should consume more iron than men due to loss of blood through monthly menstruation, and those with heavy periods should take an iron supplement, Gardner said.

"(Anemia) is almost a normal thing for a woman with heavy menstrual periods," he said.

Pregnant women also require additional iron to account for the fetus' needs.

The ADA notes women are at greater risk for iron deficiency anemia, because they frequently abstain from foods rich in iron to control their weight. Dianna Schalles, a registered dietician at Lafene Health Center, said college students also are at risk for iron deficiency anemia because of their diets.

"College students, in particular females, often don't buy a lot of meat, which contributes a more absorbable form of iron," she said. "Sometimes this is due to the expense, vegetarian preferences or the perception that meat is too difficult to prepare."

When people do not get enough iron — and therefore enough oxygen — they might notice symptoms of fatigue, weakness, pale skin, dizziness, irritability, headache, poor concentration, a rapid heartbeat or shortness of breath, according to the NAAC. Anemia also forces the patient's heart to work harder, which can result in high output heart failure, Coonrod said.

Occasionally, physicians refer patients with iron deficiency anemia to Schalles for diet therapy, which includes education on what foods are high in absorbable iron. She said the treatment for iron deficiency anemia is fairly straightforward. Some patients simply need to increase their consumption of foods rich in iron; patients with more severe cases might need to take either prescription or over-the-counter iron supplements — like ferrous sulfate — which begin rebuilding a patient's iron concentration in two to three weeks, Gardner said.

STUDENT ALUMNI ASSOCIATION UMASS AMHERST

APRIL to Career PROGRAMS

ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

Credit Survival
Learn how to manage your finances and credit responsibly.
Tuesday, April 17
5:30 p.m.
Memorial Hall
FREE PIZZA & REFRESHMENTS

Navigating the Corporate Environment
Prepare to make the transition from student to corporate America.
Tuesday, April 24
5:30 p.m.
Memorial Hall
FREE PIZZA & REFRESHMENTS

Etiquette Dinner
Learn from an etiquette professional how to navigate a formal dinner place setting and meal etiquette.
Wednesday, April 25, 5:30 p.m.
Cape Cod Lounge, Student Union
$7.00 per person
Co-sponsored by University Catering

Register online at UMassAlumni.com/students

SPONSORED BY
STUDENT ALUMNI ASSOCIATION UMASS AMHERST
alumni loan consolidation program
UMassAlumni.com/studentloans
800.936.4975

For more information contact Kate Robert, Assistant Director for Student and Alumni Programs at 545-3086 or krobert@admin.umass.edu

Congratulations Graduates!
Alumni "Fare" For Graduating Seniors
To celebrate your upcoming graduation, your UMass Amherst Alumni Association invites you to Memorial Hall for... a FREE GIFT,
free Career information,
a DEMO of the ALUMNI DIRECTORY,
a chance to win $1000,
and a few SNACKS to get you through exams.
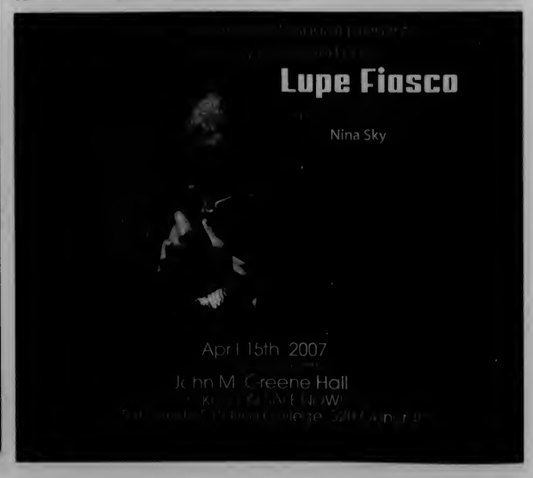
ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
Monday, May 7 through Thursday, May 10
10 a.m. - 3 p.m.
You were. You are. UMASS. • UMassAlumni.com



UMass students discuss benefits of hybrid cars

TRAVEL from page 1

California registered 25,021 hybrid vehicles and in the same year the city of Los Angeles accounted for 10,399 of those vehicles.

UMass sophomore Becky Moschini traveled to Los Angeles during spring break and drove her brother's Toyota Prius hybrid while sight seeing throughout the city.

"There are so many hybrids out there," said Moschini. "When you buy a Prius, you receive a tax break and free parking anywhere in L.A., if you apply for a 'Clean Air' vehicle sticker. My brother and I would play a game to see how far we could drive without using any gas. He won," she added.

A UMass sophomore duo, which would like to remain unidentified, opted out of concrete travel plans altogether for their spring break trip to Miami this year. Instead, they chose to hitchhike.

"Hitching wasn't that hard and, if more people did it, we would save the environment," said one unidentified sophomore. "We cut costs in transportation and met some cool people along the way."

Hitchhiking, a travel trend that is gradually making its way back to being socially accepted in our society has online Web sites such as digiHitch.com and StiffarmingSociety.com supporting it. The local movement Communi-GO in the Pioneer Valley, led by well-known activist Frances Crowe, also has people trusting each other for short- and long-term transportation once again.

UMass domestic exchange student Alicia Stockman is one of approximately 100 students each year participating in the exchange program. Stockman traveled by car – a 1990 Honda Civic — from Utah and landed in Amherst last September. With a month of classes left, Stockman has already begun planning her return trip home with global warming in mind.

"My car gets really good gas mileage – 40 miles to the gallon – if I avoid the mountains," said Stockman. "Through Kansas and the Midwestern states, they had gas stations that used alternative fuels [renewable energy]. It was much cheaper at $1.85 per gallon. On my drive home I plan to stay with friends in states along the way," said Stockman. "Even though I'm taking my car, I'm looking for ways to be even more environmentally focused this time around."

Daryl Popper can be reached at dpopper@student.umass.edu.

How concerned are you about global warming?

a. Very concerned

b. Slightly concerned

c. I don't care

Vote online at www.dailycollegian.com

College tests long-distance relationships

By Christina Wills
Washington Square News (NYU)

NEW YORK—Webcams, late-night telephone calls, Facebook stalking and "Baby, I miss you" text messages are just not enough to keep some long-distance relationships intact.

Many freshmen come into college trying to hold onto a significant other and find themselves facing the insurmountable obstacle of geography.

"It's bad to come to school with [a girlfriend] because you need to find out who you are," said New York University junior Nick Lacey.

Lacey, a Sports Management major, came into college with a long-distance girlfriend in Rhode Island. They broke up after freshman year.

"At some point you stop trusting each other," he said.

SCPS senior Josh Rubin dated a girl from Westchester, N.Y., but found it difficult to stay faithful.

"If the person is worth it, it's worth it," he said. "You have to know. You really, really have to know. You're not going to know that when you're 21."

Though Rubin advises against long-distance relationships in college, he sees an advantage to separation – it can be a stimulus to enjoy the time couples have together.

Steinhardt sophomore Ian Riccoboni is hesitant to get involved in a long-distance relationship.

"I try to avoid them because I've seen what happens to my friends," he said.

Riccoboni noticed that most of his friends' breakups happened to fall during school breaks like Thanksgiving.

This phenomenon, known to many as the "turkey drop," happens when students come home from college and break up with their significant other.

GSP freshman Jennifer Grasso thought that her relationship with her boyfriend in Connecticut would end by Thanksgiving because of the constant temptation that the city offers.

But she soon found that the temptation was not all it was hyped up to be, especially when she kept a concerted effort to see her boyfriend as much as possible.

"It's more not seeing each other that's the problem," Grasso said. "When we don't see each other we fight, but we have something to look forward to, so it's OK." Grasso, however, may be among a minority who feel the pros of long-distance relationships outweigh the cons.

Tisch freshman Scott Pestronk said that every long-distance couple he knows is either miserable or broken up. Pestronk said he even knew a couple that went to the same school to be together, and then ended up breaking up.

"At least you're going to the college you want to go to," he said of NYU students dealing with sweethearts far away.

Then there are the lucky ones who meet someone at NYU and can avoid the distance completely, for now at least.

CAS junior Rebecca McRae studied abroad in Florence and stayed in her relationship with her boyfriend back at NYU.

McRae said that whether you meet someone in college or have someone at home, a separation of one kind or another is inevitable.

"It will be summer at some point, and then it will be long-distance," she said.

Steinhardt sophomore Maayan Shemesh currently has a boyfriend at NYU, which she knows will be an issue when the semester is over.

"If you're seeing someone," she said, "you have to re-evaluate it in the summer."

CAS sophomore Ben Kitchens had the opposite problem.

"Long-distance relationships suck," he said.

Kitchens, who was in a relationship with a girl living in Texas his entire freshman year, came home for the summer expecting to work out problems with his girlfriend. She broke up with him two weeks later.

Kitchens blames the college atmosphere for hardships in long-distance relationships.

"I was surrounded by people who were having random hookups all the time," he said. "Curiosity killed the cat. She had no idea I was hooking up with other girls. It definitely put a strain on [the relationship] on my end."

Although Kitchens blames his undergraduate experience for his unfaithfulness, he believes the city is not to blame.

New uniforms keep athletes cool

SPORTS from page 1

to push them, but safety comes first."

To "know your conditions," Otrando uses a device called a "wet bulb," which provides a reading based on the combination of humidity and air temperature. Otrando and his staff use the measurement to decide whether to hold practice on especially hot days, and in some cases, even close the weight room.

When the heat is on during the summer, practices are held early in the morning and at night. During practice, Otrando said that the most important thing is to hydrate a lot and take breaks. Additionally, a trainer is present at all running workouts to prevent any issues.

Only so much can be done physically to keep players cool in the summer heat. Over the past few years, changes in equipment have been made to keep players cooler and drier.

UMass football equipment manager Paul Bys noted several changes in the gear worn by the team.

"The new uniforms have more Lycra and are made of more breathable materials," says Bys. "It wicks water away from the body to keep players cooler in the heat and drier in the winter."

Bys says that uniforms have strayed away from their cotton predecessors, which has been beneficial to an industry that is reliant on speed and safety.

UMass football will be making the switch from Nike uniforms to Adidas this upcoming season, and although the full shipment of Adidas products hasn't come in yet, Bys and the team are eager to see the finished result.

"We are looking forward to working with an exciting company [Adidas] and the new products," said Bys. "Clima-Lite is new to us."

According to Adidas, the Clima-Lite fabric, used in T-shirts worn by players under their pads, pulls sweat away from the skin to the outer fabric face for quick evaporation, enhancing the body's natural temperature regulation.

The team may be looking to keep the temperature down in their off-season training, but the team and fans alike are hoping that they turn the heat up when the season resumes, looking to build off of last season in which they finished the season ranked No. 3 after the loss to Appalachian State in the NCAA Division I championship game.

The season opens at home against Holy Cross on Sept. 1st.

Jeff Shapiro can be reached at jashapir@student.umass.edu.

Tips for athletes dealing with heat:

• When the temperature is 80 degrees and the relative humidity is 50 percent, that's enough to be considered dangerous. And that's for people dressed in shorts and T-shirts. So, when you're dealing with players in pads and helmets, it doesn't take much heat to be dangerous.

• Heat-related problems, both minor and severe, have everything to do with hydration. Water and sports drinks are essential. A player should drink 20 ounces of water about an hour or two before a practice or game and then continue to drink throughout the practice.

• Some of the signs that a player might be feeling effects of the heat include: irritability, confusion, belligerence, hyperventilation, refusal to drink and staggering. Some of the symptoms include: headache, dizziness, unusual fatigue, heat flush, chills and tingling fingers.

THE HEAT IS ON:
A four-day series on global warming.

This series was produced by the nine members of a Journalism 301 class, Writing About Public Issues. We welcome your comments on these stories at our course-blog: http://writingaboutpublicissues.blogspot.com.

Taste Of Home

No need to leave UMass to savor some delicious home cookin'...

We've got plenty of great recipes sent to us from "home".

We want you to enjoy food prepared according to Mom, Dad or relatives, so make plans to join us for something a little different.

Wednesday, April 11, 2007
Available in all DCs from 5–9 pm

DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
umass.edu/diningservices
Be A Local Hero Buy Locally Grown

GUEST CHEF JET TILA

Renowned Chef of Asian Cuisine, Author, and TV Celebrity Chef Jet Tila is coming to the Taste of UMass April 19, 2007 from 5—8 pm at the Mullins Center.

You have always wanted to cook with a celebrity chef. Here's your chance! Send us a short essay (100 words or less) to explain why you want to cook with Chef Jet Tila at mmonaghan@mail.aux.umass.edu no later than April 12. 8 winners will be chosen!

DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
umass.edu/diningservices

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 11, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Commercializing Cupid

Andrew Freeman

In the classic Jane Austen novel "Pride and Prejudice," Elizabeth Bennet and Mr. Darcy overcome their initial misgivings for one another. Her prejudice against him evaporates as the novel progresses, as does his sense of superiority over her.

Such a scenario appears unrealistic today, if indeed it ever was possible. Prejudice runs amok through the world of dating and relationships.

A recent New York Times article described some of the myriad disqualifying factors for a relationship. Entitled "It's Not You, it's Your Apartment," it covered only housing-related influences. One woman hated overhead lighting, and declared "I believe in lamps that are casting warm glows, and anyone who doesn't understand that, I can't be in their house, men or women." A man mentioned in the article broke off a relationship because he "didn't trust her judgment," on account of her having his two least favorite pieces of artwork.

Revealingly, the Times article used the business cliché "deal breaker" five times to discuss the factors that led to breakups. The young professionals profiled in the article approached their love life with the same mindset as they would a commercial transaction. This consumerist mindset is endemic to our society's presentation of love and dating.

What ends up dominating these mediums is not charm or commonalities, but physical attractiveness.

The materialist approach to love is a product of America's vast dating industry. This industry has grown far beyond women's magazines, advice columns and self-help books. It now includes such products as online dating and speed dating services. In most cases, these products encourage us to think of others as commodities, rather than as people.

Online dating is epitomized by the company Match.com, which claims to have over 8 million members. Individuals sign up for subscriptions to a service, usually in the range of $20 to $30 a month, and then are invited to browse through profiles of other members. Match.com provides a vast array of potential partners, but the level of interaction is shallow – nothing more than reading personals or corresponding via e-mail. Accordingly, there is a high degree of dissatisfaction with the online dating industry – a 2005 survey by Jupiter Research found only 29 percent of users were somewhat or very satisfied with the service.

Another new product is speed dating. Companies like 8 Minute Dating run parties at local restaurants where guests talk to each other for eight minutes only, and then move on to the next individual. Parties for 8 Minute Dating in the Boston area cost about $35 to attend. Many of the dating events are even shorter: HurryDate, for example, gives only three minutes per date.

What ends up dominating these mediums is not charm or commonalities, but physical attractiveness. A 2005 University of Pennsylvania study found that at HurryDate events, both men and women evaluated their dates largely based on physical attractiveness. One of the authors of the study declared "most participants made their decision based on information they probably got in the first three seconds."

Likewise, the interface for browsing personals on Match.com focuses on member's photographs, and does not include any of their preferences of other characteristics.

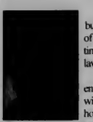
Services, such as speed dating and online dating, emphasize their speed and convenience. Clients can interact with more people, more quickly, than would typically happen in their lives. They can look at lineups of men online, or rotate from one woman to another at a party. The dating service takes on the form of an assembly line, with its product being potential mates, who are evaluated on initial attractiveness and readily replaced if found wanting.

Given the pervasiveness of materialism in our society, it is no wonder that prejudice plays such a role in dating. People are judging their dates with the same mentality that they select their cars or houses. Trivial, innocuous characteristics become irredeemable product flaws. The presence of overhead lighting or bad artwork becomes a deal-breaker.

Thankfully, some people develop lasting, loving relationships, overcoming initial prejudices and misjudgments. This occurs despite the perverse influences of the dating industry and despite widespread materialism. It is these relationships, and not the shallow, prejudiced ones that society advances upon us, that we should aspire to, and take pride in.

Andrew Freeman writes on Wednesdays. He can be reached at adfreema@student.umass.edu.

Another inconvenient truth



Ben Duffy

This may come as a surprise, but scientists lie. Maybe not all of them, and maybe not all of the time, but scientists do lie, just like lawyers and politicians.

The curious thing about scientific mendacity is that scientists will occasionally admit their dishonesty, and then rationalize it by trying to show how their lies actually contributed to the greater good. Nowhere is this more evident than in the field of global warming.

For the global warming faithful, there is no harm in telling little white lies about the certainty of global warming, the possible effects it could have, the sacrifices we need to make in order to deter it or the amount of responsibility mankind shares for the warming of the planet. The public needs to get it through their heads that we are facing a catastrophe, so a little fudging of the facts becomes acceptable. Slowly, the fudging and concealment of uncooperative data becomes worse.

Just ask climate scientist Stephen Schneider. In 1989, Schneider made a breath-taking admission to Discover Magazine that has haunted him ever since. He essentially admitted that he feels a duty to lie about climatology in order to get the public's attention. Schneider has complained that the quote was taken out of context.

In reference to global warming, he said: "This, of course, entails getting loads of media coverage. So we have to offer up scary scenarios, make simplified, dramatic statements and make little mention of any doubts we might have."

In Schneider's defense, the larger context of the quote seems to suggest that he sees his job as a sensitive balancing act between telling the truth as a scientist and prodding the public to act. He calls it the "double-ethical bind." In reality, the "bind" that Schneider finds himself in is completely unnecessary. Schneider is trying to serve two masters – science and advocacy. His sole allegiance should be to the facts, not "making little mention of the doubts that we have," "getting loads of media coverage" or "offer[ing] up scary scenarios."

You cannot be both a scientist and a global warming crusader at the same time.

Petr Chylek, professor of Physics and Atmospheric Science at Dalhousie University in Canada comments on this trend: "Scientists who want to attract attention to themselves, who want to attract great funding to themselves, have to [find a] way to scare the public…and this you can achieve only by making things bigger and more dangerous than they are."

Dr. Robert Giegengack of the University of Pennsylvania has firsthand knowledge of what it means to be working among scientists who double as advocates. When the Ivy League professor suggested that other sources (not simply carbon dioxide and other greenhouse gases) were responsible for the slight warming of recent years, he was shunned by some colleagues. "People would come to me and say: 'Stop talking like this. You're hurting the cause.'" In case you were wondering, the "cause" was not the unbiased pursuit of the truth, as you might expect from scientists. The "cause" was making the theory of manmade global warming as commonly accepted as gravity.

You cannot be both a scientist and a global warming crusader at the same time.

These advocate-scientists already know what they want the science to reveal. The evidence is then fitted to the theory, not vice-versa.

This brings us to Al Gore, the new icon of the global warming movement. Technically speaking, Gore isn't a scientist, but you wouldn't know that from all of the fawning he receives. While his recent movie was entitled An Inconvenient Truth, even he isn't above lying about his pet cause in order to create a little panic. In a Grist Magazine interview on global warming from 2006, Gore confessed: "Nobody is interested in solutions if they don't think there's a problem. Given that starting point, I believe it is appropriate to have an over-representation of factual presentations on how dangerous it is, as a predicate for opening up the audience to listen to what the solutions are, and how hopeful it is that we are going to solve this crisis."

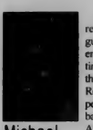
Yes, sometimes the truth is much too inconvenient for Gore's liking. Well, Gore is right about one thing. If you don't believe that any such crisis exists, then Gore's "solutions" seem pretty pointless. Gore himself has already decided that the case for global warming is closed, so he's moving on to the next step. If you aren't ready to move on with him, then he will scare you with nightmarish scenarios he knows to be false. I guess we should expect as much from the man who still tells claims he won the 2000 election.

No scientist can serve two masters. He can either be real scientist, or he can be a psuedo-scientific movement "scientist." It can sometimes be difficult to distinguish one type from the other. One quick way to tell the difference is the fake scientist will fudge the facts in order to make the facts fit the theory. He justifies his own deceit by telling himself that the populace needs to be scared witless before they will act. This is a betrayal of scientific principles, and cannot be tolerated.

Ben Duffy writes on Wednesdays. He can be reached at bcduffy@student.umass.edu.

WAS THAT THE WEATHER REPORT?
ONLY IF YOU'RE AL GORE... THINGS ARE REALLY GETTING HOT FOR HIM!
ENGLISH GLOBAL WARMING EXPERT CHALLENGES AL GORE TO DEBATE!
STAYSKAL
TRIBUNE MEDIA SERVICES '07

Racism and redemption



Michael Dennis

Of all the horrendously misguided trends to emerge in recent times, I didn't see this one coming. Reality TV, sure – people will watch basically anything. And Atkins? I mean, have you seen how fat Americans are?

But, I'm sorry to say, the homophobic/racist tirades by pseudo-celebrities followed by heartfelt outreach to the leaders of the offended communities, completely blindsided me.

Trey Parker and Matt Stone were onto something with their recent skewering of this ubiquitous phenomenon on South Park, where Stan's dad uttered a bad word on Wheel of Fortune (the correct answer was actually naggers), and subsequently led a crusade all the way to Congress to protect the rights of those who choose to utilize such terms.

The episode was certainly dead-on in terms how it depicted the formula of these events, whether it be the tirades of Michael Richards, Tim Hardaway or now, Don Imus. It's pretty simple math – drop a slur or two, immediately apologize and insist that it's not how you truly feel and that you're a good person and then meet with the leaders of that offended community.

Never mind the inherent condescension involved in the notion that one needs only to meet with Jesse Jackson to regain the respect of black people everywhere, or the obvious hypocrisy of saying something with so much virulence in a public forum and then stringently denying it the morning after. It's called self-incrimination, and there aren't a whole lot of ways to escape it.

What the creators of South Park also had right was the way in which the focus ends up shifting from the heavy social issues inherent in such incidents and into the well-being of the offenders (and their careers). In the case of Richards, between his awkward appearance on David Letterman and questions of how his comments would affect the syndication of Seinfeld, it became all about how he was going to redeem himself by meeting with leaders of "the black community" (an ambiguous concept if there ever was one). Forget focusing on those affected, and how far we still have to go to heal racial strife in America – let's rehabilitate this washed up comedian's career.

Now, the word is that Imus is going to meet personally with the Rutgers women's basketball team. What could possibly come out of this?

Former NBA player, Hardaway provided some shockingly self-centered commentary in light of his tirade against gays, telling The Miami Herald, "People have been trying to kick me when I'm down...This is a big bump I have to overcome. I'm going to deal with it like a champ. I've got to make sure people know I don't hate gay people." Yeah, you know what, the Hardaways of the world have dealt with enough anti-homophobic persecution over the years – it's about time they had their due.

And make no mistake; the media is as guilty as anyone for cajoling the public into at least pondering what's to become of the latest pariah.

A recent headline on CNN.com declared, in reference to Imus, "Comments threaten 40-year career" – as though it were some great tragedy that those pesky little slurs might tarnish an otherwise upstanding man. As one writer put it, "he is an equal-opportunity misanthrope whose show displays 360-degree offensiveness toward all sorts of ethnicities, sexual orientations and religious affiliations."

Appearing on the radio show of Al Sharpton, Imus pleaded his case as to why he's such a good-hearted person in spite of what he said. At one point, growing frustrated at Sharpton's constant (and justified) grilling, Imus declared his inability to win with "you people." What people would those be, Don? The "nappy-headed" ones?

Now, the word is that Imus is going to meet personally with the Rutgers women's basketball team. What could possibly come out of this? Is there doubt in anyone's mind that Imus' sole concern is Imus, and that meeting with the team is merely another step on the path to self-purification?

Understand that I'm all for opening up a discourse on such continuously sensitive topics. But why are we including the offenders in the discussion if they don't have anything valuable to offer other than hollow, bumbling apologies? Perhaps if one of them came out and said, flat out, "Yes, I have issues with race, I think it's an awful thing and it's my belief that it all goes back to my childhood" and so on, then we'd have something worth talking about.

And let's face it – areRichards, Hardaway, Imus and company that important to the fabric of American society where we need to ensure that their public personas be repaired? Or can't we simply see to it that they find another line of work out of the public eye, file them away in the crazy folder in between Mike Tyson and Tom Cruise and call it a day?

That's my vote for the newest trend – unless they've got something constructive to offer (outside the realm of self-preservation), let's dump these homophobic, racist celebrities on the has-been trash heap, no questions asked. Who's with me?

Michael Dennis can be reached at mdennis@student.umass.edu.

Quit inventing addictions

Kevin Dooley

The segue from "Jeopardy" to "Dr. Phil" on UPN is always an interesting one. You go from watching awkward conversations courtesy of Alex Trebeck during the interview segment, to conversations where the guests try to act serious while trying not to laugh at the ridiculousness of Dr. Phil. But the segue last week got a lot more interesting thanks to one man. Allow me to introduce you to Ben.

Ben was on Dr. Phil with his wife to confess to the legion of Dr. Phil fans around the world that he was a sex addict. Yeah, so what? Aren't we all sex addicts by nature? Weren't we designed to be a sexual creature by the Creator? Of course, a case study of my life wouldn't tell you that, but I digress.

But as it turns out, our friend Ben has one serious case of allowing his Mr. Johnson too much freedom.

He explained that he's addicted to online porn and regularly takes two hour lunch breaks to go on masturbation marathons. He even frequents the local strip clubs where he passed out pictures of his family to the local female entertainers.

Apparently, his wife wasn't too happy about the embarrassment and ruin Ben brought upon the family. But he holds his claim of having no self-control over his inner demons. In other words, he is a slave to sex.

An addiction to sex for men has to be the oldest addiction on Earth and will always be an addiction. So why can't Ben just learn to control himself and realize he's having the same natural impulses we all do?

I'm joining the common sense crowd on this issue. Ben is someone who is simply not the master of his own domain and does not deserve our sympathy. But I'm willing to bet, in this country full of people who mislabel not having the ability to control themselves as a mental disease brought upon by Satan, that there would be people in Ben's corner.

So, I took some time off from watching old WWE clips on YouTube.com and the Boston Bruins audition for a prime-time spot on the "Who Cares" channel for the 2007-2008 season to launch a mini-investigation into the matter.

According to SexHelp.com, "self-addicts are unable to stop self-destructive behavior." Families are ruined, financial woes ensue, suicide obsession becomes apparent and abortions are just some of the fallouts from becoming a sex-addict.

If we acquiesce, we're just opening the floodgates for everyone who acts on their impulses.

The origin of sexual addiction was brought into the American conscious by Dr. Patriek Carnes' 1983 book, "Out of the Shadows: Understanding Sexual Addiction." Four years later in 1987, The National Council on Sexual Addiction came as a rescue for those inflicted with the urge to throw caution, and their pants, to the wind.

The news is troubling. Three to six percent of the population is inflicted with sexual addiction, but luckily there are over 750 sex-addict anonymous centers across this country. Despite that, one hasn't opened in the state of Massachusetts as of yet, I sense a new organization with a table coming to the Campus Center in the near future with fresh fliers to stuff in your pant pockets.

Should we put any credence into men who claim to be at the demanding will of their penis every time it wants to come out to get a breath of fresh air?

Are we to blame the plethora of porn sites available as the source for this sexual madness? Not until now has there ever been a time in human history when mankind could roll out of bed, turn on a machine and bear witness to millions of girls engaging in sex acts. I swear you wouldn't be able to cut the awkwardness in some of those films with an electric saw.

No, we need to draw the line and not acknowledge sexual addiction as a weak excuse for an addiction or illness. If we acquiesce, we're just opening the floodgates for everyone who aets on their impulses, and without any regard for how their behavior affects everyone around them, to hop aboard the rehab train.

Soon, we'll have students claiming an addiction to their beds before the sun positions itself directly overhead in the sky, or not being able to keep a pen or PRS clicker on a desk longer than 60 seconds. By the way, I won an award in the second grade for being the only kid able to keep his pencil on his desk the entire year. That's an award which should be adopted by UMass before I graduate.

Every time someone messes up or makes a big boo-boo in our society, you can always a make a safe bet (sorry to those with an addiction to gambling) an illness or addiction won't be too far behind. It's a simple message that there is a lack of people who don't take responsibility for their actions anymore. Before you know it, the good people at Jeopardy will have to debut a weekly category devoted to new addictions which spring up in our society. Maybe Dr. Phil can give the clues via video.

Kevin Dooley can be reached at kdooley@student.umass.edu.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

RIGHTFUL OBJECTION

James Mathews' oped yesterday, titled "Demonstrating dignity," shows a lack of understanding on how social movements cause change.

It has always been disruption and direct action which push progress forward. The labor movement had strikes, the gay rights movement had the Stonewall Riots and the civil rights movement had sit-ins. I suspect that the columnist would have recommended that Rosa Parks learn when to keep her mouth shut to avoid disrupting the Montgomery bus lines.

It is no surpise that campus protests are becoming more disruptive as people become more outraged with the failure, indefinite detention and war that characterize our country's actions.

Mathews says that basic rules of life include "mind your elders," and "when the teacher talks, they zone mouth shut." It appears my elders may deserve it, and businessmen will keep their mouth shut if they encounter injustice.

Caleb Gallo
UMass Student

POINT-COUNTER-POINT

"Freedom rings where opinions clash." - Adlai E. Stevenson

Forget about Russia, this is the real deal.

Oh China, my China

General Tso

I bet you think you're pretty clever, Western Civilization. I bet you think you're the tops, the end result of thousands of years of forward-moving innovation in science and technology and that you've come to where you are through plague, through war and through natural disaster, retaining your dignity to the end. Well, sure, whatever. China did it first.

A navy of unforeseen power able to patrol the high seas and search the corners of the Earth? Good idea, 16th century Europe. China did it first.

An innovative printing device, sure to revolutionize the world of thought and the power of the written word? Wowza, Gutenberg, you're a real genius. China did it first.

Gunpowder? Did you say gunpowder, Sir Roger Bacon? How clever of you. Go kill some people. China did it first. China always does it first.

I don't think I've made my point clear. Yes, China does it first, but more importantly, China does it big. America must think it's on top of it all, with its picture-perfect Hoover Dam in its precious Grand Canyon, but America couldn't even forever destroy one of the Earth's greatest treasures if it tried. When China builds a dam, China does it big and China does it wherever China wants. China will not think twice about displacing you. When China speaks, you listen.

Kyoto Protocol? China does not need your protocol. China invented the paper that you wrote it on.

George W. Bush probably thinks he's pretty smart, with his plans for enclosing an entire border by way of an unprecedented system of fencing, but he's got nothing on China. China laughs at Bush, and China laughs at his pitiful fence. China did it first, China did it better and China did it with hard labor and bricks. China does what it wants, when it wants. China controls the weather.

This is not a joke. Al Gore is not so clever after all. He is worried about global warming. Do not worry about global warming. China has it covered. When the time comes, China will displace thousands of its own people and destroy vast quantities of unexplored archaeological sites in order to construct an air conditioner of epic proportions. It will be visible from space. China is visible from space. If China wanted to not be visible from space, China would take care of it. China is fully capable of pitching a tent.

You may think that I am being ridiculous, or that I am exaggerating the strange tendencies of a nation both absolutist and populist whose long dynastic legacy has led to the institutionalization of social and economic policies that reveal both a reverence and disdain for its people? Just say the case. China is awesome. China does it first. China does it bigger and China does it better.

I repeat: China does it better. When China comes to your country to play, better, China is better than you and China wins. When China decides to export its traditional foodstuffs to the world market in a greasier, deboned-down form, China does it without a brand name. China doesn't need a 30-foot sign, and China doesn't need a drive through. China doesn't need a military-level satellite computer program to best locate its stores, because China knows that you want that food. China made it tasty just for you, but not really. China made it tasty because China can.

China is better than you at classical music. China is better than you at science. China is better than you at strip mining, and China does not care what you think. Kyoto Protocol? China does not need your protocol. China invented the paper that you wrote it on. When China writes its own protocol, you will know, because China's protocol will be visible from space.

China is also better than you at protesting. When know-it-all Americans run around in roll-necked sweaters sticking daisies in the barrels of guns, China stands in front of a tank. China is epic. Deal with it.

You might hear people say that China is a threat to you, or that China isn't a threat to you, or that China is somehow the perfect foil to your Western way of life and a constant reminder of what else is possible on our fair Earth. Let me be the first to tell you – they are wrong. Have they ever built a wall? Can they dunk without jumping? Have they ever invented anything in their life? No, they haven't. They don't know Chaos.

If they did, they would tell you that Chaos is not an issue of two inevitably opposed historical ideologies growing more and more similar until the line between them becomes a blur. They would tell you that this is not about two nations of equal power and potential, each representing what psychologists and novelists alike have both identified as the irreconcilable virtues of individualism and the social life. If it were about that, we would know. But China already thought that stuff, and China could care less.

James Mathews likes General Tso's Chicken more, loves China and can be reached at jwmathews@student.umass.edu.

America. America.

Colonel Sanders

These days, everyone seems to be caught up in a big fuss about China. As a warm-blooded American, there is no way to avoid all that Liberal chatter of "People's Republic" this and "New Superpower" that. Well now's the time to set the record straight. Yes, it's true that China's getting stronger, and yes, it's true that it's good at Ping Pong, but this doesn't mean that there's nothing this great nation can do about it. Overcoming these communists is well within our reach.

Despite what "experts" will tell you, this is not a complex, multilayered issue cemented in years of economic development and social change. This is about believing in the US of A and saluting the flag. This is about winning over the anti-capitalists. This is about America. America.

You may think that I just wrote America too many times, but I didn't. The truth is, you just didn't read it right. America. Say America like you are overcoming an obstacle, and if you still don't get it, then say it three times to yourself. It's somewhere between a powerful whisper and an intimidating growl. Okay, now we're on the same page. America.

Our pessimistic citizens seriously need to stop worrying, seriously.

See, to say no to China, all you have to do is love this country as much as Chevrolet does. No spin here, China is starting to one-up us left and right. They're taking all the great things this country is known for, and pretending like they're better at it. For starters, nobody is better at capitalism than we are – after all, this nation invented it. America.

If that doesn't convince you, then how about some fact: everyone else bases their currency on the dollar bill. The Chinese yuan isn't even worth a fifth of the dollar. That means more Chinese goods for us, and only dollars for them. How does that trade deficit feel China? Answer: not too good. China thinks it's so great with their yuan, but all it does is make America actually yawn. See how America makes puns with Chinese legal tender? America.

Our pessimistic citizens seriously need to stop worrying, seriously. With a few simple changes, America can make sure it stays on top. First, America needs to add some floors to the Sears Tower. Number two, and most important, is calling dibs on the moon. You can bet your bottom dollar that China is scheming for it. Sure, claiming the moon is going to mean more useless spending to get colonies started up, but deficit spending is what makes this great nation great. All America has to do is make sure America doesn't sell it's debt to China anymore and America will be all set. America.

There's no better way to accelerate American values upward than to strap them to a rocket. We'll rename the moon the second sweetest name ever, America II. America II will be even freer than America (if that's even possible) because we won't have to obey Earth's laws of gravity. America doesn't even need gravity. America.

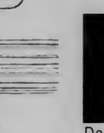
If you're still not convinced, then take a look at history. China historically runs around the historical Dynastic Cycle. China seems so great for a while, and then eventually gets big-headed. Thinking they're the center of the world, they begin to decay and fall to ruin. China is the only country where this phenomenon has ever occurred, ever. The signs of the end of the Dynastic Cycle are easy to spot: There is some environmental disaster, along with a poor leader and usually some civil unrest. All we Americans have to do is keep our eyes on China and wait for the omens. America.

Say no to China, because saying no to China is saying yes to yourself and yes to America. This country needs cynics about as much as we need fast trains. We don't need them, China does. America.

If you're reading this now and still can't say no to China, then you're probably mute. Get that checked in a hospital, but make sure you're not in China trying to find a hospital, because China's really big. America.

Tucker Merrick goes to Kentucky Fried Chicken loves America and can be reached at jmerrick@student.umass.edu. America.

A blunt form



Dan Nicastro

Don't be fooled; evil exists in this world. I'm a person who optimistically believes in the general good inherent within all human beings, but that doesn't mean evil is not present. Big corporations continually exploit their workers and consumers in order to increase profit margins, people regularly commit acts of violence or hate against each other and to top it all off, the New York Yankees are an annual staple of October.

Unfortunately, evil even exists within the sphere of higher education. This evil is known by many names. Some know it as a soul-sucking waste of time. Others see it as a way to confuse students out of financial aid. The federal government calls it FAFSA.

FAFSA is rife with problems which end up hurting students more than helping them.

FAFSA, or the "Free Application for Federal Student Aid," is a way for the federal government to ascertain the amount of money you should receive in order to help you continue higher education. Like many federally funded programs, the idea of a federally maintained, standardized aid form is a good one. Unfortunately, the FAFSA is rife with problems which end up hurting students more than helping them.

When you fill out a FAFSA form, you submit your parent's financial information so the federal government can estimate how much money your parents are expected to contribute to your college education. Unfortunately, this approach doesn't always work.

About a month and a half ago, I sat down to fill out my FAFSA and try to get some money for college. After several hours and several calls home, I finally finished the lengthy form. Imagine my surprise when I found out that my EFC (Expected Family Contribution) was a fifth of my parents' gross income (for those of you who have never looked at a pay stub, that's the amount they make before taxes are taken out).

The FAFSA does not take into account the fact that my parents (and probably yours) owe money for their house and their cars and they don't have thousands of dollars to spend on my $19,000 education. The federal government also refuses to take into account the fact that my parents aren't the ones paying for my college education, I am.

FAFSA also almost nothing for students like me. While my EFC is a fifth of my parents' gross yearly income, it's almost 300 percent of mine. Like many of you, I'm going to be in debt to college loan offices until I die. But the part of this which makes me most angry is the fact I go to a public university.

Public universities are just that: public. They were created and are (supposedly) maintained in order to provide affordable higher education for those who want to take advantage of it. It's true that we pay less at UMass than we would at Amherst, or Mount Holyoke, but it's all relative, as the University's mission is "to provide an affordable and accessible education of high quality and to conduct programs of research and public service that advance knowledge and improve the lives of the people of the Commonwealth, the nation, and the world." Like the FAFSA, the mission statement is a good goal which is poorly executed. It's one thing to say college is affordable and another for it to actually be affordable.

As tuition and fees slowly climb, I can feel myself sinking deeper and deeper into debt I may not be able to crawl out of. This brings us to one of the fundamental questions of higher education: what is the purpose of college?

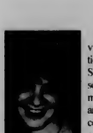
Publicly-funded higher education should be a right and not a privilege. Twenty years ago, a high school diploma was enough of an education to get by in the world. Unfortunately, times have changed and a bachelor's degree is very quickly becoming the minimum threshold for employment. If we do nothing to fix the financial-aid system, this country will be torn apart by a crisis which could further destroy higher education. It is the responsibility of government to provide accessible and affordable education in order to educate its citizenry.

As the weight a bachelor's degree holds is consistently devalued, the cost of college skyrockets. Supply and demand should not dictate the way higher education is run. The point of government is to make people's lives better, and providing higher education is one of the best ways to aid them in that goal. The higher the amount of education, the better off a citizenry will be, and that means it's time for the government to do their job.

It's time to get angry. The federal government keeps forcing exorbitantly high EFCs down our throats because we accept it. We grumble about paying in private, but that's not enough. Petition the University, write your Congressperson, make lots of noise. We riot at the drop of a hat for mostly ridiculous reasons; imagine if we got that angry over something that actually mattered.

Dan Nicastro can be reached at dmcastr@student.umass.edu.

The eye of the beholder



Debra Capellari

When you watch television, do you pay attention to the commercials? Superbowl commercials are sometimes discussed even more than the actual game, and the Geico caveman commercials actually have a fan base. I'm wondering if anyone is paying attention to the Dove Company's "Campaign for Real Beauty" commercials. These are the advertisements that show real women with real bodies selling real products meant for people of all races and backgrounds, and intentionally not targeted to the thinnest, wealthiest members of society, and it's time to start a fan base for them as well.

The commercials are a welcome change from a media that's constantly barraging us with pictures of scary thin models and celebrities who seem to have everything they could ever want in life, besides the capabilities of eating a Twinkie and drinking a pint of Sam Adam's Summer Ale. Dove products, as opposed to products that advertise with super thin models, advertise so that their products are not only alluring to rich stick figures, like so much of the designer labels are, but are actually products that real women could see themselves using. Most women are not super-thin super models or superstar celebrities. Most real women have normal sized bodies and normal sized appetites. And most real women also have pocketbooks that can afford Dove products, not Dolce and Gabbana or Versace.

Here's the deal ladies: those models that you see on the runway shows and in the pages of the very addicting gossip magazines are actually really unhealthy. In fact, they're so unhealthy that a new rule has just been imposed for European runway models. It has been recommended that any model with a Body Mass Index (BMI) that is less than 18 be banned from runway modeling. A healthy BMI ranges anywhere from 18.5 to 24.9, and is calculated by using both height and weight as factors.

But while calculating your BMI and making sure you're in a healthy range are good things to do for yourself, my point is that you should not be holding yourself to the standards that you see displayed on the runways or in the magazines. Many women have trouble differentiating between what is feasible and healthy and what is done with makeup and airbrushing. Women who hold themselves to the impossible standards set maybe in time we'll actually see real women, modeling clothes that we could see ourselves wearing.

by runway models and fashion magazine fodder should let go of their preconceived notions of beauty, and embrace what they have to offer, instead of pining away for longer legs and impossibly flat stomachs.

And fellas, I know a lot of you would love to date the supermodels that are so popular on television today – but think carefully. Would you rather be with an emaciated model that was on the verge of being deathly ill, or would you like to pass your time with a gal who could drink a few brews with you while eating a slice or two of pizza? It's not fair to hold your girl to some impossible standard of "beauty" based on what you see on television either. Be realistic and be kind to the women that you meet in your life. We sure would appreciate it.

Maybe in time we'll actually see real women, modeling clothes that we could see ourselves wearing. They'll have curves and imperfections and actually look like they've spent a little time on the couch eating pints of Ben and Jerry's like the rest of us.

But the Dove Company is making those dreams a reality right now. Women everywhere, whether they're tall and thin, short and curvy or somewhere in between, are being represented on television as we speak. Women like to see our true selves represented in a society that sometimes forgets that not all of us are perfect, and most of us don't have the ways and means to look like a model in a magazine.

Everyone should take a closer look at what the Dove Company and their commercials are trying to convey. They say it's OK to be imperfect and that no matter what size, body type, skin color or weight you are, you are still beautiful. Those women in those advertisements are on television with the simple message of "I know I'm not perfect, but perfection isn't necessary. In fact, I don't want to be perfect. I'm fabulous just the way I am."

We could all learn a little something from the women who are smart enough and bold enough to be on television allowing viewers to see that imperfections are just as beautiful as our preconceived notions of a designer look. Instead of focusing your attention of an impossible standard of beauty, take a hint from the Dove women and show off what you do have. Most importantly, be proud of what you've got, and don't allow anyone to dictate to you what beauty is defined as.

Deb Capellari can be reached at dcapella@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 11, 2007 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Sean Lennon lights up Iron Horse stage

By Brad Farberman
Collegian Staff

Touring behind last year's excellent "Friendly Fire," multi-instrumentalist Sean Lennon will bring his band to the Iron Horse tonight, following sets from Women and Children and Kamila Thompson.

Combining elements of the music of Elliot Smith, The Beach Boys and, of course, The Beatles (Lennon is the son of John Lennon and Yoko Ono), Lennon has crafted a sound both unique and referential, and certainly worth trekking to Northampton to hear.

Lennon, 31, attended boarding schools in Switzerland and New York City following the murder of his father in 1980. He first appeared on record in 1981 on Ono's "Season of Glass," and made other early appearances with Lenny Kravitz (on 1991's "Mama Said") and again with Ono in 1995 (on her album "Rising").

It was around this time, too, that Lennon began listening to rock artists like Jimi Hendrix, and experimenting with the "rock star" lifestyle. "I started dressing badly and not washing my jeans as much, and girls actually started talking to me," said Lennon in an interview with New York Magazine.

Lennon's career began in earnest when he joined Cibo Matto in 1997; he toured with the band and contributed to their "Super Relax" and "Stereo Type A" albums. Through Cibo Matto, Lennon was introduced to Adam Yauch of the Beastie Boys, who invited him to record for the Beastie's label, the now-defunct Grand Royal Records.

Lennon released Into the Sun, his first full-length album, on Grand Royal in 1998. The disc was produced by former girlfriend and Cibo Matto member Yuka Honda. Spike Jonze directed the video for the album's single, "Home."

In 1999, Lennon released an I.P entitled "Half Horse, Half Musician" and began to dabble in hip-hop. He contributed to Handsome Boy Modeling School's "So... How's Your Girl?" in 1999 and played on Deltron 3030 albums in 2000 and 2001.

Also in 2001, Cibo Matto broke up, and Grand Royal folded. Lennon went on to sign with Capitol Records and release his sophomore effort in 2006.

"Friendly Fire," his second

See LENNON on page 9

SEAN LENNON
IRON HORSE MUSIC HALL
TONIGHT 7 P.M.
$25/$28

COURTESY STEPHEN CHERNIN/AP

Sean Lennon is touring again after an eight year break. The show tonight at the Iron Horse Music Hall is in support of his new album "Friendly Fire."

Umphrey's McGee delights fans with Northampton show

Increasingly popular band shows off jamming sound in live show at Calvin Theater

By Matthew Solomon
Collegian Staff

Rock 'n' roll is undergoing a revival. A little-known band named Umphrey's McGee is playing a major role in this rebirth. In support of that goal, they'll be playing tonight at the Calvin Theater in Northampton at 8 p.m.

The six-man ensemble out of Chicago, Illin. is starting a revolution in the music industry and it seems to be spreading across the nation. The Notre Dame band has gone a long way from playing college parties. These days, Umphrey's McGee caters to large, sold-out venues around the world.

They are not doing what so many bands before them have done, which is simply finding a distinct sound and imitating it. Umphrey's wants to be different. They want to do their own thing, follow their own path and create their own music. For this reason, they have consciously decided not to cover bands like the Grateful Dead and Phish.

This is not because they don't respect these talented groups. It's because they don't want to get stereotyped as a typical "jam band." They want their own distinct sound to be recognized and respected by all listeners, and they felt that to achieve this, they need to go in their own direction.

This certainly does not, however, limit them from performing random and ridiculous covers such as Michael Jackson's "Billy Jean," Pink Floyd's "Shine on You Crazy Diamond" and Justin Timberlake's "Dick in a Box" (the SNL skit).

Their goal is simply to be spontaneous, exciting and to keep the crowd on their toes. They would rather introduce new songs and artists to their fans than play tunes that they've all heard before. They are pushing their fans to explore the music world rather than get stuck on one particular artist or group; this

See UMPHREY'S on page 9

COURTESY RYAN MERL

Umphrey's McGee is a Chicago-based jam band that's trying to create a distinct sound. They'll be playing to a crowd of fans at Northampton's Calvin Theater at 8 p.m.

Clap Your Hands hopes fans do just that

By Tim McCall
Collegian Staff

Clap Your Hands Say Yeah lead singer Alec Ounsworth might have one of the most unusual approaches to singing in today's rock 'n' roll scene. But what really separates him from the rest is his dedication to his band.

"When we were recording our first album, I took a train or bus every weekend from Philadelphia to Brooklyn to record," said Ounsworth in an exclusive interview.

Ounsworth's devotion does not stop with an hour long commute to practice or record. Ounsworth and his bandmates do not have a record label backing them financially on any of their American endeavors.

"We have had plenty of offers, but we like doing things ourselves. We don't have to answer to anyone this way," Ounsworth said.

Overseas the band's two albums have been released by Wichita Records, but here in America the band is independent.

Recently other bands such as the Barenaked Ladies and The Format have also released their albums free of a record label, but according to Ounsworth, this may or may not be becoming a trend.

"We don't really pay attention to what other bands are doing business-wise. We do pay attention what they are doing musically, but business, it means nothing to us," Ounsworth said.

It makes sense in the 21st century to be record label-less. Bands can record their music cheaper on their computer; promote it on their personal sites and MySpace.com and tour all over the country to showcase their music. But, according to Ounsworth, MP3s create a product not worth owning.

"Downloading music is great for promotions, but as a product, we prefer releasing music on a physical format such as CDs and vinyl," Ounsworth said.

This may be why the band released their self-titled album in vinyl and CD, a move many bands are now distancing themselves from. Their second album "Some Loud Thunder," will be released sometime in the immediate future on vinyl.

The band plans to perform music from both at their concert at Pearl Street in Northampton tonight. This is the second time the band has come to Northampton since they formed just three years ago.

"The first time we played in Northampton, we played the Iron Horse and I really enjoyed that club, it was nice and intimate, creating a great atmosphere," said Ounsworth.

This time the band will be the headliner, but this does not diminish their desire to win over the crowd. Each performance for the band is a challenge to perform the best show they can. "Whether it's a festival like Bonnaroo or a small club show, we try our best to win over everyone," said Ounsworth.

Unfortunately, the band is unable to play at Bonnaroo this year because they performed last year. They will be performing at a different festival, but Ounsworth said they are not sure of which one.

Clap Your Hands Say Yeah will be performing at Pearl Street tonight with Elvis Perkins in Deerland. Tickets are $20 in advance and $23 at the door.

Tim McCall can be reached at tmccall@student.umass.edu

COURTESY RYAN MERL

Clap Your Hands Say Yeah is returning to Northampton tonight to headline a show at the Pearl Street Night Club.

Assembly of Dust excites with Iron Horse live show

By Lauren Modisette
Collegian Staff

Assembly of Dust is coming to the Iron Horse Music Hall tomorrow night at 10 p.m. Richard Gehr of the Village Voice said of the band, "The former Strangefolk singer is an articulate songwriter with a sturdy, well-crafted song cycle of an album as proof. His band, which includes three members of Percy Hill, fleshes out the tunes like a good movie can elucidate a short story."

Eli Messinger of No Depression describes AOD as a "thick, funk blend of rock, jazz, soul, folk and blues." This combination of genres creates a fantastic platform for a modern jam band.

Assembly of Dust was formed in 1991 and four out of the five members of the band contribute to the vocalization of their sound. Reid Genauer stands as the lead vocalist and acoustic guitarist, but is backed up by Nate Wilson (keyboards/vocals), Adam Terrell (guitar/vocals), John Lecesse (bass/vocals) and finally Andrew Herrick on drums.

Genauer joined AOD after leaving his band Strangefolk. In an interview with Jambase.com's Brian Heisler, he said that it got to the point where he wasn't having fun with Strangefolk anymore. "There are some things in life that are worth doing even if it's not fun, like, I dunno, push-ups. But, [there are] others that are not, and music is one of them. So, that was really it for me. That was the beginning of the end, when it stopped being fun."

ASSEMBLY OF DUST
IRON HORSE MUSIC HALL
TONIGHT 10 P.M.
$12.50/$15

Music isn't about the money for Genauer. He believes that when a band begins to create music solely for the purpose of profit rather than the music itself, then the passion is lost. He believes that music should be created for music's sake.

Once Genauer left Strangefolk he enrolled at Cornell University in the business program. He explains to Heisler that it "kicked his ass" and he found himself preoccupied with writing songs and recording.

Clearly, he's a different kind of musician. While most focus solely on the music and on tour, Genauer has a big time job with eMusic.com.

See AOD on page 9

Titus informs his humor with real life

By Sherry Larnard
Collegian Correspondent

Comedian Christopher Titus' "Fifth Annual End of the World Tour" CD was released yesterday. Anyone looking for a refreshing and hilarious take on the recent state of the world, should run to the store and grab this one.

The two-disc set has skits covering everything from Titus' personal life to the state of affairs surrounding the war on terror alerts. Titus opens the disc with a skit about the birth of his daughter, which sets the tone for the remainder of the disc. He speaks a lot about his concern for his children growing up in such an unsteady culture.

According to Titus, about 80 percent of what he talks about on the album really happened to him. "I'm not smart enough to make stuff up so I just use myself," Titus said.

While the first part of this album is funny, it doesn't really prepare the listener for the hilarity that begins around the skit called "Kill Titus" and continues until the end of the second disc.

Among all of the humorous skits "I'm Whitey and I Apologize" stands out from the pack. According to Titus, this skit came about after watching people get fired up about race relations on television.

The majority of Titus' skits have to do with things that many would not make jokes about. "My mother was in a mental institution and my father would always crack jokes about it, so I have a knack for finding the grossest, darkest thing and making a joke about it," Titus said.

A lot of Titus' comedy deals with his rough childhood. "It used to be that if you were from a bad family, you were bad," said Titus adding, "I wanted to switch it to if you're mom's crazy, you're stronger than anyone else."

Titus is not only a stand-up comedian; he has two movies coming out and a show in the works. Titus wrote and is starring in the movie Five Seconds. It's about drag racing, which, according to Titus, is an intense sport that he has been a fan of since childhood.

He is also acting in the movie Remarkable Power in which he plays a very eccentric Englishman. Titus said the new television series that he's working on is in the editing stages right now.

Stand up is Titus' favorite of all of his performance arenas because: "It's like working without a safety net and I get a heroin-like rush from doing it."

Apparently, this comedy has come a long way. "I was a kid when I started. I did nothing so I was talking about nothing," Titus said. His first show, he said, consisted of a lame parody of the song "We Will Rock You."

Somehow with all that he has going on he still finds the time to do charity. He runs "The Insight Project." Every year the group chooses a charity that deals with teenagers that have been bounced around in foster homes. They put on a comedy show and give about 95 percent of the money raised to that charity.

"I'd like the money to be used to take the kids who might move into a neighborhood and be criminals and turn them into neighbors," Titus said.

He said that in his comedy telling the audience the truth is what makes him so funny. He said he learned this lesson after he was about to quit stand up and took a friend's advice to show his real self on stage. He went home that night and wrote an angry skit as a joke. "When I performed it like three weeks later, the audience loved it. They were going nuts, but I had no other material like that so I went back to my cheesy stuff and the audience was silent for the rest of the night," said Titus.

Titus claims to never use material over again after he's done with a tour so he is already working on more material for his next tour. He said he asked God for a new idea when he finished recording the album and soon found out that his wife was cheating on him. "Be more specific with God when you ask him for something," he advises. In true Titus style, however, this will become the laughter of his next tour.

Sherry Larnard can be reached at slarnard@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY CHRISTOPHERTITUS.COM

Christopher Titus' new album of stand-up, "Fifth Annual End of the World Tour" was released yesterday.

Assembly supports debut album in Noho

AOD from page 8

Heisler asked him about the balance of work and play and how the company copes with his touring.

"They're just totally into it. Most of the folks there, my boss included, are fans of music and they just get it. It's a music company that promotes independent music and it's great. It's not like some guys who are working selling insurance and then at night strapping on their guitar. It's not like that at all. My life is just one seamless pursuit of music. I live a life of passion, both in the day and in the night."

Genauer had landed several solo gigs in New England at which he met the future members of AOD. Lecesse had asked Genauer if he could play stand-up bass with him during one of his gigs. There were frequent collaboration between either Genauer, Lecesse and Wilson or Genauer and Terrell. Genauer knew Terrell through other bands and the four of them inevitably joined forces and sought out Herrick as their drummer.

AOD isn't the kind of band that might turn up on MTV or popular radio stations. It is possible that their classic folk/rock and improvisational styles came about because of their experience playing with many renowned jam bands. They have shared the stage with Phish, The Grateful Dead, The Talking Heads and The Allman Brothers.

The band recently released their new CD "Recollection" this past March. Their music has been compared to that of Crosby, Stills and Nash, Paul Simone and The Band. This summer they are attending a plethora of festivals including Wakarusa, All Good and Gathering of the Vibes. Until then, they'll be finishing up their tour on the East Coast beginning with Northampton and moving onto Rhode Island and Vermont.

Glide Magazine's Shane Handler said that AOD's "Recollection" is like their very own "Working Man's Dead," a popular record released by The Grateful Dead in 1970. It is a mark of their achievement's that AOD is being compared to a legendary band like The Grateful Dead.

This CD is the first the band is releasing as a group. Their name comes from Genauer's solo album "Assembly of Dust." He said it was an attempt to create the same sort of mystique as The Grateful Dead once did.

Tickets are $12.50 in advance and $15 dollars at the door for tomorrow's 10 p.m. show at the Iron Horse Music Hall.

Lauren Modisette can be reached at lmodiset@student.umass.edu

Son of legend shares sophomore album

LENNON from page 8

album in eight years, discusses the affair that his best friend and former girlfriend (actress Bijou Phillips) had and the death of said best friend before he and Lennon could come to terms with what had happened. Despite the melancholy subject matter, the music is driving and pretty. It exudes a sense of courage.

Songs like "Dead Meat" and "Parachute" are as good as sad pop songs can get. "You'd better run out of here," sings a menacing Lennon on "Dead Meat." "I'll close my eyes and count to 10 and then I'll come find you."

Kamila Thompson, from London, shares an affinity for Beatlesque music, but with a Fiona Apple edge to it. She has performed alongside Bonnie "Prince" Billy, Martha and Rufus Wainwright and brother Teddy Thompson, and was recently featured at the "Came So Far For Beauty" concert in Dublin, a tribute to the music of Leonard Cohen.

Experimental/folk duo, Women and Children formed in Paris in 2001 and released their debut in 2003 on Attack 9 Records. "Paralyzed Dance, Tonight," their second album, was issued by Narnack Records in 2006.

Following their stop in Northampton, the bands will continue on to Boston, New York City and Buffalo, N.Y. before routing through the Midwest.

"I like playing music live for people because it's the way music was meant to be heard," Lennon told MSNBC.com in an interview in March. "We've only been recording music for a couple hundred years."

Thompson plays first tonight, followed by Women and Children and with Lennon finishing the night. The show starts at 7 p.m. and tickets are $25 in advance and $28 at the door.

Brad Farberman can be reached at bfarberman@gmail.com.

McGee touring for 'Safety in Numbers'

UMPHREY'S from page 8

is also how they approach their own musical endeavors.

Umphrey's has put together some amazing studio albums such as "Safety in Numbers," "Anchor Drops" and their brand-new offering "The Bottom Half." They also have some great DVDs such as "Wrapped around Chicago" and "Live at the Lake Coast." To truly get a feel for this talented group, however, one needs to see their live concert.

They put on a show like no other band. Anything can happen at an Umphrey's show and any song is fair game for a cover. Their original material is what's really special though. Their songs are simply all over the place. One minute they could be playing a heavily rock and metal influenced power ballad such as "Miss Tinkle's Overture" and then, without warning, they transition into a calmer, flowing melody, such as "Great American."

They will often take their audience through a range of emotions not just in one show, but in one song. Some songs sound like 10 different tunes thrown into a blender. They know exactly how to take the pieces and variations and sew them all together with perfectly smooth and calculated transitions.

On New Years 2005, they even did a Frank Sinatra impression, brimmed hats and all. This band has no limits. They will attempt to play any style of music, and they are usually successful.

They have a wide selection of composed songs, but nothing is set in stone. They believe in a "Lego" theory of music which consists of building upon songs and letting them evolve naturally over time. A song might get recorded one way in the studio and then, three weeks later, it will sound very different in concert because they've tweaked and added to it. Sometimes they have a stream of consciousness and the music almost creates itself, just flowing right through them.

Although, having recently experienced some emotionally draining events on a personal level, they have managed to push through their struggles and let it all out in the music. Music has become a form of therapy for them and they have been able to pull together as a band and use each other for support, hence the name of their album "Safety in Numbers."

They are also reaching the highest level of fame they have experienced, playing to large, sold-out crowds night after night. They are also rapidly gaining a large fan base through their constant live-performances and word of mouth. Instead of following in others' footsteps, they are carving their own path with seemingly limitless talent and creativity.

Umphrey's has been lucky enough to tour all over the United States, Europe and Japan. They are at the pinnacle of their career right now and this is an incredible time for them. They'll be bringing their stage show to the Calvin Theater tonight at 8 p.m. Tickets are $22.50 in advance and $25 at the door.

Matthew Solomon can be reached at msolomon@student.umass.edu

UMPHREY'S MCGEE
CALVIN THEATER
TONIGHT 8 P.M.
$22.50/$25

FRUSTRATED?
PUZZLED?
DO YOU HAVE?
A grade dispute?
Teacher, roomate or job concerns?
Billing problems?
...or any other University related problems?
THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course)
Serving the students, faculty, and staff of the Umass Community
823 Campus Center
Office Hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
Telephone: 413 - 545 - 0867
fax: 413 - 545 - 9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

PRAISE YE THE LORD:FOR IT IS GOOD TO SING PRAISES UNTO OUR GOD; FOR IT IS PLEASENT; AND PRAISE COMELY.
PSALM 147:1
FRIDAY
APRIL 20TH @ 7:00PM
Engineering Building (ECSC II) RM 119
Amherst, MA
UMass Gospel Choir
Presents our first annual
GOSPEL EXPLOSION!!
Special Guests include:
Atlantic Union Gospel Choir
of course...
UMASS AMHERST GOSPEL CHOIR!!
...and many more

"Results you can feel ...without the side effects."
• headaches • neck pain
• back pain • sports injuries
• auto injuries • and more...
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractor
Participating provider for HMO's
Student Insurance, Blue Cross, GIC,
Car Insurance & most others
www.AmherstFamilyChiro.com
Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health
Most insurance accepted.
228 Triangle Street
Amherst, MA
(near Bertucci's)
549-1500

Where are YOU living next semester?
CHECK OUT
PUFFTON VILLAGE!
Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments--1,2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include heat, hot water and cooking gas
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis courts.
PUFFTON VILLAGE
1040 N. Pleasant St. #410
Amherst, MA 01002
413-549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

over jeans
ZANNA
downtown Amherst

TAKE A PHOTO OF YOURSELF WITH YOUR COMPLETED SUDOKU OR CROSSWORD AND SEE YOURSELF ON THE COMICS PAGE
COLLEGIANCOMICS@YAHOO.COM

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

		7	4			9	5
				1
6		2	8			7	3
	2		3			9		4
9		4			2		7
	1	9			6	5		7
				7
3	7				5	2

ACROSS
1 Wall covering
6 Baby's bed
10 Stable youngster
14 Sneeringly derogatory
15 Part of ADC
16 Far from terra firma
17 Commit theft
18 Part to play
19 Ananias, e.g.
20 Conclude
22 Odor
23 Old hand
24 Utters suddenly
25 Formed
29 Wall covering
31 Polished
32 Umpire's pocketful
36 Pint drinks
37 Procrastinator's word
38 Abound
39 Propped up
41 "The Count of Cristo"
42 Presses
43 Tongue-lash
44 Kind of cold?
47 Mare's morsel
48 Steer clear of
49 Infuriating
55 Expressions of disapproval
58 Beyond risque
57 Scoundrel
58 Coagulate
59 Organic compound
60 Conjure
61 Towel word
62 As expected
63 Takes the plunge

DOWN
1 Attention getter
2 Game starter
3 Landing place
4 Cheese from Holland
5 Experienced again
6 Jeweler's weight
7 Wild profusion
8 Without work
9 Speller's contest
10 Common adder
11 Basketry material
12 Emulated Pisa a tower
13 Small open pies
21 Actor Beatty
22 Thick piece
24 Fox's title
25 Medicinal applicator
26 Aura
27 Skater's leap
28 Doomsayers
29 Spouses
30 Played for a sap
32 Farm outbuilding
33 Horne or Olin
34 Riga resident
35 Hook's undering
37 A Spinks
40 Trampled
41 Gauged
43 Spoiled
44 Nab
45 Botanic structure
46 Word before oil or mouth
47 Curiously
49 List of dishes
50 Mil truant
51 PBS series
52 Composer Stravinsky
53 Heat in the microwave
54 Launch forces
56 Set the pace

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

THE HARP
SPECIALS!
Honey Brown, Molson
$2.00 a pint / $6.50 a pitcher
THURSDAY: • RUDY BROWN
FRIDAY: • THE DIRTY HIT
Pizza 'til midnight 7 days a week
Voted best Neighborhood bar
East of the River 2005 & 2006
Valley Advocate Readers Poll
OCMP & All Credit Cards accepted
Free wireless Internet!
163 Sunderland Rd. - N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"One man alone can be pretty dumb sometimes, but for real bona fide stupidity, there ain't nothin' can beat teamwork."

-Edward Abbey

PAUL By Billy O'Keefe

HELLO THERE, FORMER LOVER.
OH, SHUT UP. WE WERE NEVER LOVERS.
WELL ANYWAY, I NEED HELP DUMPING THIS GIRL, AND YOU'RE THE MASTER OF DUMPING PEOPLE SO I NEED YOUR HELP.
I SHOT YOU DOWN SO MANY TIMES--NONE OF THAT STUCK?
NO, I WAS TOO BUSY PRETENDING IT WASN'T HAPPENING. REMEMBER? YEAH, YOU REMEMBER. ALL RIGHT.
WHY ARE YOU WINKING AT ME? WHY'S ME DOING THAT?

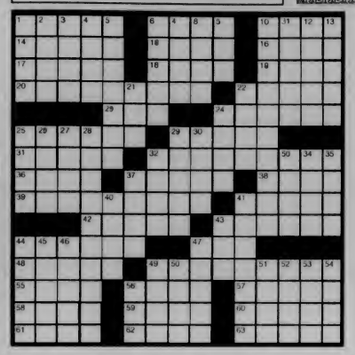
SZAJGIN'S SAGA By Ashley Miami

THE FAMILY MONSTER By Josh Shalek

This is your report?
You can't extrapolate data from a single sample. There's got no pattern on which to test your predictions
Are you guessing? Or do you just not care?
A bit of both, actually
If I was paying you for this, I'd have you fired

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Josh Shalek

Look at the tall Wizard pilots nappy with infidel's storm
Almost as infectious as money lenders
I don't believe you
I haven't left a river in Egypt, you know



Continuing & Professional Education
UMass Amherst Summer 2007
Get an early start on your summer plans!
• New online GenEds
• Same great faculty!
• Smaller classes
• Two Sessions
I: June 4 – July 2
II: July 6 – August 22
(Variable date classes available)
Register now!
By visiting us@
www.UMassLearn.net/dc

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Look both ways before crossing the street. There's a bus coming.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Hungry as you are, it is basically impossible to eat your own arm so find a new plan.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Your chi has somehow gotten further left ... mmunism, it needs to be centered.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
If you are going to burp in public you better make it count.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
It's quite simple really... you are not listening to enough funk music.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Tell your boss you're not coming to work because you're saving seals from an oil spill.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Indiana Jones would admire your ruggedly handsome yet unintimidating appearance.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Tell someone your glasses case smells funny then close it on their nose. BOOYA!

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
There are few things on earth as messy as a poorly folded burrito.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
If you get burned pulling a plate out of the microwave simply drop it like it's hot.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Cheer up, you don't have to be young, sweet or even 17 to be the dancing queen.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
I know that you're lost but the fact that your eyes are closed really doesn't help.

Townehouse of Amherst Condominums
Walk to Campus!
Hurry,
Get 'em before they're gone!
50 Meadow St. Amherst, MA
Tel: 413.549.0839
Fax: 413.549.8487

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Like no other course. Army ROTC Learn, Lead and Succeed. Be and do something bigger than yourself. Full Scholarships plus $5,000 yearly. Call 413-545-2321 www.umass.edu/armyrotc

APARTMENT FOR RENT

2 bedroom apartment in Brandywine lake over starting June 1st on bus route for more information call Nicole at 508-654-6522

Mill Valley Estates APARTMENT FOR RENT 2 bedroom $1125. 3 bedroom $1425. 4 bedroom $2175. Accepting Applications. 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winnco.com

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing. 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Center of town, 1,2,3 bedrooms hardwood floors NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

EMPLOYMENT

Moving. Local Moving Company looking for self motivated individuals, part-time positions available immediately. Weekday availability a plus. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call (413) 584-4746

Outdoor Recreation Jobs. Rafting guides full or part time Massachusetts or Maine. Will train! Contact www.moxierafting.com 800-866-6943

Premium skin care and wellness. Excellent training and benefits. http://newengland.myarbonne.com

EMPLOYMENT

Summer on Cape Cod. Rent & utilities paid in exchange for providing transportation for teen. Easy walking distance to downtown & beaches. awenkozma@aol.com

Full time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office, $9.50/hour. Applications available at 235 Whitmore and are due April 13th

Line-cooks needed. Full-time Part-time available. Apply in person. Amherst Brewing Co. 24 N. Pleasant st.

Attention All Juniors and Seniors! April 6th is the last day to apply to become a Legal Assistant with the Student Legal Services Office. Earn 12 undergraduate credits while gaining valuable experience in the legal field! Contact us at 545-1995 or stop by our office at 922 Campus Center!

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr. English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

Attention All Juniors and Seniors! The deadline is now extended to april 13th to apply to become a Legal Assistant with the Student Legal Services Office. Earn up to 12 undergraduate credits while gaining valuable experience in the legal field. Contact us at 545-1995 or stop by our office at 922 Campus Center.

ROOM FOR RENT

Amherst Beautiful quiet house great location. Need car. With Nice guy and daughter. Perfect for single/couple. Call Jonathan for details 413-22-3006

ROOMMATE WANTED

Cape Cod Seeking summer roommates starting 6/10 Yarmouth, MA near beach. Female only. 617-519-0178

SERVICES

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992. www.tapestryhealth.com

Are you getting ready to rent your 1st apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office for legal advice. 922 Campus Center or call 545-1995

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

SUMMER SUBLET

Won't Last! Puffton Village 3 bedroom apt. rent for summer and/or 07-08 school year. Air Cond. Included. Call John 774-239-8937

Alpine Commons apartment June-August 15th $2050/month includes utilities. 413.204.9519 or jennaw@student.umass.edu

Submitting a classified is easy!

Stop the Collegian office in the Campus Center basement or Call 413-545-3500 and speak to a classified advertising executive.

Or submit your classified online at www.dailycollegian.com.

Adamski does it all for UM

BASEBALL from page 12

error that enabled the Maroon and White to have a chance to win.

After Tuetken reached on an error by shortstop Dennis Donovan, Adamski followed with a single to put two on with no out. Junior captain Bryan Garrity came through after a Jim MacDonald pop out, driving in Tuetken to pull within one. Bill Rankin then tied the game with an RBI-groundout to second base.

The teams traded zeros in the ninth inning, with neither side putting up much of a threat. Freshman right-hander Will Musson registered the loss for the Huskies, allowing two runs – one earned – in his two innings of relief.

Fellow freshman Robert Van Woert started for UConn, recording a no-decision despite lasting for eight strong innings of work. His defense let him down throughout much of the game, as only one of the four runs he allowed was earned. Despite his strong start, Van Woert failed to register a single strikeout.

For UMass, Adamski came in as the fourth pitcher of the afternoon. Starter Jared Freni was solid in his three innings, striking out five and allowing just one run. Mitchell Eilenberg relieved Freni in the fourth but ran into trouble in both the fifth and sixth innings. An error by second baseman Cody Kauffman led to two unearned runs in the fifth and UConn added another run in the next inning to increase the lead to 4-2.

Just as Adamski closed out the game for the Minutemen, he was the one who got them started as well, when his RBI groundout scored Lou Proietti in the first inning. UConn countered with a run of its own in the third inning off Freni. Harold Brantley stole second after drawing a walk and then moved over to third on a balk. Dale Brannon knocked him in with a one out single up the middle.

Once again, Adamski was in the middle of things in the sixth, laying down a critical sacrifice bunt after Proietti and Adam Tempesta hit back-to-back singles to start the inning. Adamski's bunt enabled Proietti to score on MacDonald's groundout to third base, drawing the Minutemen to within one at the time.

Eli Rosenzweig can be reached at erosenzw@student.umass.edu. Log onto the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.

McCutcheon signs Ford through '15

FORD from page 12

Lasme, Rashaun Freeman, James Life and Brandon Thomas are all lost to graduation.

Lasme and Freeman carried the load for UMass throughout the season. Lasme was named AP Honorable Mention All-American, A-10 Player of the Year and A-10 Defensive Player of the Year after a tremendous 2006-07 season.

Also, he became just the third player in NCAA history to record four triple-doubles in the same season, with the third category being blocks each time.

Freeman's presence will also be greatly missed, as he has been the face of UMass basketball for the last four seasons.

Danny Picard can be reached at dpicard@student.umass.edu. Log onto the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.

Freshman catches on quickly

SERIO from page 12

so it was just a good play at a good time."

Early in the year, Serio and Wehr split time catching both pitchers, Brandice Balschmiter and Bailey Sanders. However, a hip injury sidelined Wehr and forced Serio into a ful-time postion behind the plate.

"Emily is hurt. She tweaked her hips a couple weeks ago, and she's still not right," Sortino said. "We can't put her out there because she'll kill herself."

So that leaves Serio to pick up the slack, and she's done just that. She's played in eight consecutive games for the Minutewomen, including all six against A-10 opponents.

In those conference games, Serio has picked up her play (batting a .273 in her last six compared to .188 overall).

"She's getting better and better," Sortino said. "We worked so hard with her on the outside pitch and having stronger hands to the outside because she's a strong kid. She's going to keep getting better. She'll be quite a hitter."

Serio hasn't gotten comfortable in her new role either. She knows Wehr will be returning eventually, and she will still be competing for playing time.

"Emily and I have been working really hard," Serio said, "and it's kind of on a day-to-day basis. It's not really about who plays, but that the person who's in there plays well."

As far as catching Balschmiter – something Sortino admits is no easy task – Serio has shown no problem adjusting to catching fastballs, rather than ground balls. She's has just two passed balls in 18 appearances.

"I think she's doing great. Brandice is hard to catch," Sortino said. "The ball moves, it comes at you hard. It's hard to block her off speed pitch. She hangs onto a lot of swinging strikes, and that's tough to do."

Serio and Balschmiter have been a perfect 8-0 since the former took over full-time, and the young catcher said she's enjoyed working with one of the top pitchers in the game.

"It's fun. She's a great pitcher, she's really talented," Serio said of Balschmiter. "She's still young and she's got so much talent. It's great working with her. I'm younger than her, and we're both working together out there. It's good to have someone older than you out there with you, taking you through the game."

"Hirandice it easy to please," said Sortino. "Both of them do a great job. They both work really hard."

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu. Log on to the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.

RYAN TRESKE / COLLEGIAN

Since Emily Wehr suffered a hip injury, freshman Jessica Serio has played brilliant defense behind the plate for the Minutewomen.

Minutewoman pitching staff hopes to silence BC bats

SOFTBALL from page 12

On top of standing in fourth in runs scored, with 14, Proctor has also belted a home run.

"[Proctor], since she started, has always been there," Sortino said. "She never gets all the accolades and attention of everyone else, but she has consistently gotten it done. We are so fortunate to have her. She's a great performer."

As of last night, Sortino was not sure who would be in the circle for the Minutewomen. She said both sophomore Brandice Balschmiter and freshman Bailey Sanders warmed up in the bullpen yesterday and that she is still deciding who will get the nod.

The Eagles are led by their key performers – seniors Jenna Macchi and Elena Ferrero, who are the two players on the squad batting above .300.

Macchi, a shortstop batting .379, is first across almost the entire board. She is tops in runs scored (35), hits (61), total bases (96), RBIs (29), doubles (14), batting average (.379) and slugging percentage (.596).

She is also second on the team with seven round-trippers.

Ferrero, a first baseman batting .324, is her team's RBI machine, having tallied 35 RBIs – a team high.

She is also second on the team in total bases, hits and slugging percentage, with numbers of 70, 46 and .493, respectively.

"[They are] two powerful hitters. We recruited Jenna Macchi. She is a great shortstop. She's the epitome of a shortstop. She's a great hitter and a phenomenal athlete. And the Ferrero kid is equally as good," Sortino said.

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu. Log on to the Daily Collegian's sports blog at sports.dailycollegian.com for coverage on all UMass sports.

10 goals key for UMass wins

M. LACROSSE from page 12

games this season on Saturday with the 11-goal output against St. John's. UMass scored 11 goals twice in earlier in the season – once against Harvard on the road for its first win of the season, once against Sacred Heart at home.

UMass is 3-0 when scoring over 10 goals this season, and has lost some close games because of its inability to score late. Cannella hopes that the Minutemen can break out at some point this season and score 14 or 15 goals. After Saturday's win, Cannella emphasized that the key to scoring is moving the ball and playing as a team. He said that sometimes, when things aren't going well, that attackmen try to take on the whole defense by themselves.

But the Minutemen used each other on Saturday, as attack Tim Ballise scored two fourth-quarter goals to seal the victory, a nice compliment to Garber and Connolly in the offensive zone.

Pedrick and senior Denis Whelan also had goals in the game, while freshman Bobby Hayes won a career-best 14 out of 20 faceoffs. Hayes really helped the Minutemen's momentum in the second half when the goals were piling up and he kept getting his team possessions.

Hayes even got an assist off of a faceoff when he quickly got the ball into the offensive zone and his team put up a quick score. Long-stick midfielder Dan Whipple leads the team in groundballs with 29. He's followed by Hayes with 24 and Connolly with 20. . . Garber leads the Minutemen in man-up goals with four. Pedrick, Connolly, senior Andrew Recchione and Balise all have one . . . On the defensive end, David Von Voigt and Brian Danvers have 13 and 12 caused turnovers, respectively.

Rob Greenfield can be reached rgreenfi@student.umass.edu. Log on to the Daily Collegian's sports blog for more coverage of all UMass

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 11, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutemen down UConn

Adamski leads UMass in numerous roles

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Bryan Adamski played the role of hero for the Massachusetts baseball team, using both his bat and his arm to bring down the Connecticut Huskies, 6-4, in 10 innings yesterday in Storrs, Conn.

The Minutemen (8-13, 3-5 A-10) took the lead in the top half of the 10th inning after Andy Tuetken – who led off with a double – scored on a throwing error by UConn third baseman Eric Turgeon on a sacrifice bunt that Adamski dropped down. The miscue allowed Adamski to reach third, and Ryan Francek – who came into the game as a defensive replacement in the eighth – drove him in with a sacrifice fly.

UMass	6
UConn	4

Those two runs were all Adamski needed, as the 6-foot-4 senior came back out to the mound and shut down the Huskies (13-16) for the fourth consecutive inning. In those four innings of work, Adamski allowed just two hits and one walk, while striking out two en route to registering his second win of the season. He also finished 1-for-3 at the plate, with two runs scored, an RBI and two sacrifices.

UConn – now losers of four straight – had the Minutemen on the ropes in the eighth inning, leading 4-2, but could not hold on. Similar to the 10th, it was the combination of Tuetken, Adamski and an untimely Huskies

See BASEBALL on page 11

KRISTIAN GOMEZ/COLLEGIAN

Starter Jared Freni pitched the first three innings of UMass' win over UConn yesterday. The freshman struck out five batters while allowing just one run.

UMass extends Ford's contract

BY DANNY PICARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In an offseason that included quite the coaching carousel in NCAA basketball, University of Massachusetts Athletic Director John McCutcheon announced last night that men's basketball coach Travis Ford has signed a five-year contract extension through the 2014-15 season.

"We are thrilled that Travis has made a commitment to UMass basketball," McCutcheon said at the team's end-of-year banquet last night. "This past season was very exciting for our university and our fans. Travis has brought Minuteman basketball back to national recognition with his solid leadership. This extension shows that we are pleased with where UMass basketball is headed under Travis' guidance."

UMass is coming off its best season since it went to the Final Four in 1995-96. Ford led the Minutemen to a 24-9 record in 2006-07, sharing the Atlantic 10 Regular Season Conference Title with Xavier.

Ford signed a five-year deal when he came to UMass prior to the 2005-06 season. He had three years left on his deal prior to the extension announced on Tuesday.

"My family and I have been welcomed with open arms by the university and New England communities," Ford said. "I love UMass and my family does as well. I am excited to know that UMass is committed to building the men's basketball program back to one of the best in the East and that I will have the chance to be at the helm for many years to come."

UMass lost in the second round of the NIT to West Virginia this past season, after being overlooked by the NCAA Selection Committee for an at-large bid. The Minutemen drastically hurt their chances of getting that bid by losing to Saint Louis in the second round of the A-10 Tournament in March.

Ford's name swirled around college basketball's rumor mill as a "coach in high demand," but he will not be one of those packing his bags.

He does, however, go into the 2007-08 season with a little less firepower. Seniors Stephane

See FORD on page 11

Garber, Connolly lead UM scoring

BY ROB GREENFIELD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts men's lacrosse team has won two games in a row for the first time this season, vaulting the Minutemen to just one game below the .500 mark at 4-5 (2-1 ECAC). The latest triumph came over the St. John's Red Storm on Saturday with an 11-7 victory.

UMass Lacrosse

Sophomore attack Jim Connolly and senior captain Brett Garber had three goals each in the win. The hat trick was Garber's fifth this season – he had three of them in his first four seasons combined.

Garber and Connolly are leading the Minutemen in scoring this season. The former has the most goals with 18 – Connolly has 15 – while the two are tied in overall points at 22.

Midfielder Rory Pedrick leads the Minutemen in assists with nine, and provided a couple to Connolly on Saturday. He is fourth on the team in points with 16.

TIES TO THE STORM

UMass coach Greg Cannella matched up with his former assistant on Saturday in St. John's coach Jason Miller, who joined the Red Storm after a stint with the Minutemen. SJU notched its first win in the ECAC with a victory over Rutgers on March 31, but with the loss to UMass, the Red Storm fell to 4-6 on the season and 1-3 in conference.

OFFENSIVE SHOWING

The Minutemen scored over 10 goals for just the third time in nine

See M. LACROSSE on page 11

KRISTIAN GOMEZ/COLLEGIAN

Entering this season, senior captain Brett Garber had three career hat tricks to his credit. This year, Garber already has five three-goal games.

Minutewomen face Eagles

Maroon and White begin eight-game road trip at BC

BY DOMENIC POLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts softball team (19-12-1, 6-0 Atlantic 10) travels to Chestnut Hill, Mass., today to take on the Boston College Eagles (6-16, 2-7 Atlantic Coast Conference).

The Minutewomen are coming off a doubleheader sweep off Saint Louis on Easter Sunday, blanking the Billikens 13-0 combined in the two games.

With a perfect A-10 record, UMass is vying to stay tops in the A-10 standings. The Fordham Rams are the next-highest contenders in the conference, holding a 9-1 record.

Stacy Cullington let her bat do the talking on Sunday, going 3-for-6 with a three-run home run in each contest. When the doubleheader was over she had contributed six RBIs, three runs scored and a walk to the stat sheet.

The junior maintains a .307 batting average – the fourth highest on the team. She is at the head of the class in total bases (57), doubles (nine), homers (seven), RBIs (32) and slugging percentage (.648).

"Stacy is one of the finest kids we've ever brought into the program," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said of her second baseman. "She's a great defender. She has incredible instincts for the game and she just gets it."

Cullington also has 18 runs scored and 27 hits on the year – third and fourth on the team, respectively.

Another contributor to the Minutewomen's success on Sunday, who has also been making a habit of solid play, was Lauren Proctor. The junior went 2-for-4 in the pair of games, registering two RBIs and a run scored.

A left fielder, Proctor has been one of the best weapons in the UMass arsenal this season. She holds second place in four key offensive categories – RBIs (25), total bases (48), hits (36) and slugging percentage (.511).

See SOFTBALL on page 11

TOMAS TRINIDAD/COLLEGIAN

Senior first baseman Amanda Morin went 3-for-6 in the Minutewomen's last action against Saint Louis on Sunday. She is hitting .293 on the season.

Freshman Serio fills catching need

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Grab your catcher's mask, you're about to catch last year's Atlantic 10 Pitcher of the Year and the 2006 A-10 Tournament MVP.

That sums up freshman Jessica Serio's situation this year, her first with the Massachusetts softball team.

With four-year starter K.J. Kelley lost to graduation (she's now an assistant coach with the team), the starting catcher's job was up for grabs coming into the 2007 season. Sophomore Emily Wehr came in as the favorite to take over the role, but UMass coach Elaine Sortino made a move to sure up a position that Kelley's departure left depleted.

Sortino decided to move Serio from the infield, where the Minutewomen had plenty of depth, to behind the plate, to compete with Wehr for the starting job.

"She came here as a third baseman, and we taught her how to catch," Sortino said. "She's done a yeoman's job at that."

Serio's hard work was on display in Sunday's early game against Saint Louis. The Billikens came into the game having stolen 79 bases on 109 attempts in 38 games this season.

Saint Louis went after the young catcher early. SLU shortstop Rachel Heet reached first on a single, then tested Serio, going for second during the next at-bat.

On the heels of a swing and miss, Heet bolted from first, and Serio was to her feet and firing toward fellow freshman, Whitney Williams. The throw was right on target – Williams barely had to move her glove – as Heet slid right into the tag.

"[Saint Louis] is big on stealing," Sortino said. "They had a lot of steals coming into the game. We knew they were going to run, and we wanted to send the message early. That was a big play for [Serio], and at the other of it was another young kid [Williams], sticking the tag down, so it was freshman-to-freshman."

The message was sent. The Billikens ended the day with just one steal on two attempts, and never crossed the plate, getting shut out in both contests, largely due to the play of No. 20.

"We knew they were going to be running," Serio said. "They've stolen close to 100 bases this year,

See SERIO on page 11

Spiess makes another bid for No. 64

BY MIKE CONNORS
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The Massachusetts tennis team travels to Hamden, Conn. today to try and cool off the streaky Quinnipiac Bobcats.

The Minutewomen (9-7, 1-1 Atlantic 10) come in with hopes of getting back on track after dropping two tough matches at the end of March.

Quinnipiac (7-4), on the other hand, has won three matches in a row and is looking to continue its recent demolition of opponents.

Further motivation for the Bobcats includes a 5-2 defeat at the hands of the Minutewomen last April. UMass has a history of success against Quinnipiac, owning four out of five victories in the all-time series.

Despite the previous success the Minutewomen have against the Bobcats, the most intriguing story of the match involves Michele Spiess and her quest to break the UMass school record for career singles victories.

Barring a drastic change in the Quinnipiac lineup, Spiess will have to go through senior Gahhy Pasternak to obtain this milestone. If the outcome mirrors last year's match between the two stars, Spiess will go into Friday's Senior Day with the record in hand. Pasternak was overpowered by Spiess last year, falling 6-3, 6-1 in straight sets.

Spiess currently shares the record of 63 victories with Jackie Braunstein.

Spiess' record aside, the match will be a challenge for the Minutewomen. Quinnipiac has thrashed opponents recently. Its last three matches include victories over Farleigh Dickinson, Monmouth and Colgate with scores of 5-2, 7-0 and 7-0, respectively.

Prior to this winning streak, the Bobcats had dropped three matches in a row, including one to Binghamton, 4-3. In one of the UMass' most significant matches of the short season, it defeated Binghamton, 4-3, on the road.

Hofstra is the only other similar opponent for these teams, with both recording 6-1 victories in their matches against the Pride.

While it is easy to focus on Spiess' accomplishments, there are other players on the team who cannot be overlooked.

Masha Pozar, the team's No. 2 singles player, has been the best player during the past month and a half, winning eight of nine matches. She has also enjoyed success at various doubles spots over the course of the season.

This is the final week of the regular season for the Minutewomen. Friday's home match against Rhode Island will be the last time Ione senior Michele Spiess steps onto the court donning the maroon and white on the Boyden Courts.

The Rams are unlikely to be moved by the honoring of UMass' top player. Similar to Quinnipiac, URI will also be looking to enact revenge. The Minutewomen blanked URI 7-0 last year, and improved their all-time record against the Rams to 31-6-1. It may not come so easy this year, as the opponent holds an impressive 13-3 record.

Following the conclusion of the regular season, UMass will embark on a journey into the Atlantic 10 Championships. This begins next Friday and continues through the weekend.

Michael Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu. Log on to the Daily Collegian's sports blog for more coverage of all UMass sports.

UMass senior Michele Spiess is 10-5 this season in the Minutewomen's No. 1 singles position while going 15-8 overall.

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

SNOW : HI: 41 LO: 33 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, APRIL 12, 2007

MINUTEWOMEN DEFEAT BC PAGE 14

UMASS PERFORMS WILDE PLAY PAGE 7

Lecture met with protest

The Graduate Student Center and the Radical Student Union organized a series of protests at the lecture given by former White House Chief of Staff Andrew Card in the Student Union Ballroom yesterday.

Former SGA president attends protest

BY MICHELLE OSORIO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Former White House Chief of Staff Andrew Card's lecture was not received without some opposition yesterday, as defined by student protestor turn out at the Student Union Ballroom. The Graduate Student Center and the Radical Student Union organized a series of protests from within the lecture to dispute the former Chief of Staff's policies on the Iraq war and the administration's foreign policy.

"He was at the center of putting the war together in Iraq. We do not believe that any department or organization on campus should be sponsoring a criminal," graduate student Sai Madivala said.

Several students were denied entry prior to the lecture and threatened with arrest as they were told that their signs did not meet the 8 ½ by 11 inch size standard. The students were later allowed to enter with the stipulation that they must remain seated, yet a group of protestors remained standing in the back holding their signs for the duration of the lecture.

"There's no way they can hold [their signs] and not block someone else's view," UMass Police Chief Barbara O'Connor said.

Two students snuck in a large banner claiming that Card's propaganda machine is meant to lie to the people and kill them for profit, and stood up mid-lecture to unfold the sign. The two individuals were surrounded by police within minutes and escorted out of the ballroom.

Though the size of the protest signs are not a legal standard, police felt these sizes would be the least obstructive. Madivala and former SGA president, Elvis Mendez, two protestors previously denied entry, made it clear to the police present that they were aware of the possibility of arrest and were prepared to face the consequences of such actions. Police, however, took no action to arrest any of the student protestors.

"We believe this [standard] is simply to mitigate our voices. Basically use small signs, stand in the back and don't obstruct. They are stripping us of our rights of doing what we want to do," Madivala said.

In the front row, two students had turned their seats facing away from the stage and covered their ears in silent protest toward the lies they believed Card had come to spew.

See CARD on page 4

Speaker reacts to protesters' opposition

BY KATE OLESIN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Andrew H Card Jr., the former White House Chief of Staff, gave a lecture followed by a question-and-answer session yesterday at the University of Massachusetts in the Student Union Ballroom.

The first in a series called "Talking Politics," sponsored by the UMass Civic Initiative run by the Donahue Institute and the College of Social and Behavioral Sciences, Card's talk was entitled, "The American Political Landscape: Looking Towards 2008." Among his topics he stressed how important participation is in a democracy.

"If you don't show up, you can't complain about the results," said Card.

With a long history of politics rooted in his family, Card functioned as Chief of Staff under George W. Bush from 2000-2006, making him the second-longest serving Chief of Staff to the White House.

Card started off the talk with an emphasis on his early involvement in politics and his ties to his hometown, Holbrook, Mass. As protestors began to file into the ballroom, sitting in chairs with their backs turned to the podium and blocking their ears, and many with a variety of signs such as "1 H S" or "Card: Criminal," Card transitioned to the 2008 elections and why this is a "very interesting period" in the political calendar.

"There are more candidates running for president than any other election that I can remember with the exception of 1980," said Card.

Card explained that this is the time in the political calendar where the United States has "faux presidents," where citizens look to candidates for leadership even though they are not in office. "What does it mean to have a leader who is not president...?" Card posed to the audience and especially to political science classes.

The success of candidates in the upcoming election, according to Card, will depend on hundreds of millions of dollars spent on television advertisements. He implied that immense spending is an unfortunate consequence of having so many candidates for president, and pertinent issues or those candidates without vast amounts of money may be lost in the fray.

He also stated that a democracy is "really a responsibility of participation." Speaking alone

See PROTEST on page 4

UMass struggles to maintain diversity in athletic department

BY ROB GREENFIELD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Sixty years ago, Jackie Robinson broke into the major leagues with the Brooklyn Dodgers and became the first African-American to ever play in the MLB. Robinson advocated for equal rights for black players throughout his career, and major leaguers all over the country are wearing the No 42 in his memory.

But would Robinson be happy with the situation at the University of Massachusetts?

Of 21 varsity head coaches in the UMass Athletic Department, zero are African-Americans.

"It's a concern for us as a department as it is a concern for the University," Athletic Director John McCutcheon said. "The recruitment and retention of minority employees has been a challenge for the University and the athletic program as well."

Four head coaching positions have opened up since McCutcheon took the AD job in 2004. He hired Travis Ford for men's basketball, Justine Sowry for field hockey, Alexis Venechanos for women's lacrosse and Don Brown as the football head coach, none are African-American.

Brown was McCutcheon's first hire as the athletic director, but McCutcheon initially offered the football head coaching job to Nomes Wilson – an African-American assistant at Connecticut at the time – who turned it down in favor of Columbia University.

The Black Coaches Association (BCA) was created to "foster the growth and development of ethnic minorities at all levels of sports both nationally and internationally," according to its Web site, www.bcasports.org.

The BCA implemented a "Hiring Report Card" in 2003, which outlines certain criteria that colleges have to meet during the hiring process for new head coaching positions. Contact with the BCA, diversity of the search and hiring committee and diversity in the interview process are among the criterion.

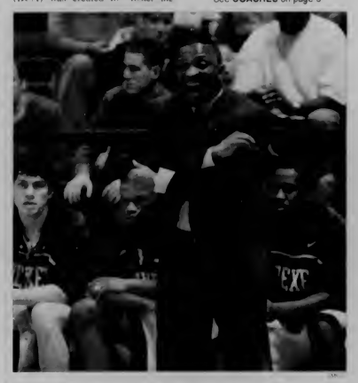
The BCA gave UMass a grade of 'B' for its football coaching search (a school has to hire a black head coach to get an 'A') and McCutcheon maintains that he is going to do everything he can to actively search for minority coaching candidates.

"As you seek people, the ability to bring diversity to the program is a plus," he said. "Everybody has their strengths. Everybody has areas where they might not be quite as prepared. In the final analyses, you weigh everybody's pluses and areas where they're not so good and choose the best overall for the position. That's the way we approach it."

McCutcheon hasn't hired any African-Americans yet, although he came close with both the football and men's basketball positions, and he believes that it will take time for things to change because there are many qualified coaches already in place.

"We want to have more diversity within the department," McCutcheon

See COACHES on page 5



Bruiser Flint was the last black head basketball coach at the University of Massachusetts. He is currently coaching at Drexel University.

The Heat is On

Part four of a four-part series on global warming and what students can do about it

Group calls for action

BY JANELLE JUNKINS
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Six Middlebury College students came together in November 2006 to think of a productive way to put their interest in climate activism to use. They created Step It Up 2007 – a group that pushes for more government action towards climate change. The Vermont-based team has one main goal – to persuade local communities across the U.S to catch the attention of Congress on April 14, or as the group has named, National Day of Climate Action.

On that day, over 1,300 walks, rallies, teach-ins across all 50 states will be taking place, flashing banners that read, "Step It Up, Congress! Cut Carbon 80% by 2050." The Step It Up team has been working full-time since the beginning of this year to push for nationwide support to make communities aware of global warming.

The organization hits close to home this Saturday with events that tie in with the Step It Up campaign. The MassPIRG Campus Climate Challenge campaign has been working with the Amherst Step it Up Committee and Hampshire College to bring the BioBus Tour to campus this Friday and Saturday. The bus is a bio-fueled vehicle and is fully equipped with presentations about alternative transportation and

See STEP IT UP on page 5

New legislation recently introduced would require U.S. utilities to generate 20 percent of their electricity from renewable energy resources.

Seeking alternatives

BY JOSHUA H. WILDER
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The United States is the top producer carbon dioxide – 5.8 billion metric tons per year, according to The Bergen Record newspaper. While many University of Massachusetts students may wonder about alternatives, they remain relatively uninformed about cleaner, more efficient forms of energy.

But alternative energy can actually help the economy while cleaning up the environment, says a press representative for the Union of Concerned Scientists (UCS), a Cambridge-based energy research and environmental organization.

"When we look at switching over to renewable energy, it is a win-win situation," said Aaron Huertas, assistant press secretary for UCS. "It is better for the environment and the pocketbook. It will create more jobs and save the consumer money," he said.

New legislation recently introduced in the House of Representatives would require United States utilities to generate 20 percent of their electricity from renewable energy sources by the year 2020. House bill 969, introduced by Tom Udall of New Mexico, reduces our dependence on highly pollutant fossil fuels and focuses on cleaner energy from solar and wind power.

Although this proposal looks good on paper, many wonder how practical and effective it would be in reality.

See WARMING on page 5

Burglars photograph own break-in

By Matt Bellveau
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Two local burglars thought it would be a good idea to snap photos of each other during one of their break-ins.

Then recent arrests may have them reconsidering that idea.

A 21-year-old Amherst man and a 17-year-old male from Hadley were recently arrested in connection with the Amherst Police Department (APD) investigation into a recent rash of home break-ins.

During the investigation digital photographs that the suspects took of themselves at the time of the breaks surfaced.

Two of the photos, which police claim were taken on a cell phone, depict the suspects on the night of the burglaries, presumably in the home of some unlucky owner.

Police say that no victim has come forward to report the house break, which police believe to have taken place within Main Street and Southeast Street.

The photos have been posted on the APD Web site. Police encourage citizens to view the photographs and contact investigators at 413-239-3015.

The image above is one of two posted on the Amherst Police Department Web site in an effort to obtain information about the burglary.

SGA president begins filling cabinet seats

By Amber Vallancourt
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With just 18 senators present for the 1523rd regular meeting of the Student Government Association (SGA) at the University of Massachusetts, President Aaron Buford has begun to stock his presidential cabinet.

Malcolm Chu was approved by the senators present for the position as Secretary of Diversity Issues. Chu said he hoped to see groups on campus come together, and suggested open forums or "at least, monthly roundtable discussions between groups."

Rick Pierre, an accounting major, was also unanimously approved by the Senate for the position of Secretary of Finance. "I think it would be a good experience for me, it's a lot of working with numbers," Pierre said about working as Secretary of Finance.

Erin Maghran and Felicia Magwood also spoke to the SGA on behalf of the Collegiate Readership Program which the SGA has sponsored on the UMass campus since August of 2003. Costing the SGA about $45,000 each year, students on campus reportedly pick up over 100,000 copies of USA Today, The New York Times, and The Boston Globe, Maghran said.

Magwood also stated that each day, about 400 copies of both The Boston Globe as well as USA Today are picked up on campus, while a little less than 400 copies of The New York Times are snagged by students.

Of the 43 colleges in the Northeast that take part in the Collegiate Readership program, Maghran called UMass their "most valuable partner."

"With very few papers left over each day, it really says something about the caliber of the student body," Maghran said.

Melanie Greatorex of The Western Massachusetts Labor Action group also stopped by the SGA meeting to call for more volunteers to help out the organization, whose home base is in Pittsfield. The WMLA is a group funded and supported by the community, boasting that it takes no funds from the government. Greatorex also said that WMLA is not a charity, but a self-help organization. She said one day a person could be using resources from WMLA, and the next day that same person could be working behind the counter helping others. More information about WMLA can be obtained by calling (413) 443-9862.

Senator Karina Martinez who chairs the Finance Committee reported to the SGA that the committee's current budget now stands at $26,741.93. The largest allocation was passed in previously approved motion 2007-S31 to the North Area Government for $10,450.49, which was "a special circumstance," according to Martinez. Recent allocations include $25 to the Philosophical Club and $700 to the Boxing Club as part of their start up funding, which came from the New RSO fund.

Student Trustee Mishy Leiblum also announced that the Western Massachusetts Social Forum will be taking place in the School of Management building this coming weekend. Tracks at the forum include human rights, "our common wealth," environment/sustainability, and economic justice.

Leiblum also updated the Senate with details on their recent decision to support UMass divestment from Sudan on March 3. Leiblum explained that 16 percent, or $40 million of the $250 million actively managed funds

See SGA on page 3

Finance Committee chair Karina Martinez reported to the SGA that the committee's current budget now stands at $26,741.93

Amherst Police log

Intoxicated man kicked out of Charlie's

Tuesday
April 10

2:05 p.m.
A larceny occurred on the PVTA. A laptop was reported stolen when nobody had turned it in.

3:00 p.m.
A breaking and entering occurred at Alpine Commons. An unlocked car was rifled through; $60 cash was reported stolen.

4:06 p.m.
A breaking and entering occurred on College Street during the night. A Nintendo system, two laptops, and a bike totaling $2,100 were reported stolen.

8:41 p.m.
A suspicious male party was seen at Delano's Bar on North Pleasant Street, pouring a beer from his own cup into a cup taken from the bar. The party ran out; employees at Delano's reported that the same individual caused a problem on another other night.

Wednesday
April 11

12:32 a.m.
Police kicked an intoxicated male party out of Charlie's on Pray Street. The individual falsely claimed to have his wallet stolen and reported to police.

12:48 a.m.
A suspicious man in his 40's was reported to police for allegedly looking into other people's windows. The man was gone on the police's arrival, and the reporting party did not answer her door.

2:11 a.m.
Lamont Evaine Allen, 19, of Amherst was arrested on warrant. Allen failed to pay fines out of Northampton District Court for his original charge of possession of alcohol as a minor.

- Compiled by Holly Seabury

Plagiarism trend continues to increase on college campuses

By Zachary Moser-Katz
The Technician (N.C. State)

RALEIGH, N.C. — University students and professors say they feel that plagiarism is a growing problem in the college environment, and it is an unethical tendency that needs to be prevented.

Although North Carolina State University officials take a hard stance for academic integrity, and violators have permanent scars on their school records, the problem of plagiarism is still prevalent in the college classroom, according to English Lecturer Janet Hudson.

The National Center for Academic Integrity conducted a study, which found that almost 80 percent of college students admit to cheating at least once.

Hudson said a rise in the amount of plagiarism in recent years may be from an increasingly competitive job market.

"It's my sense that students are very focused on grades and getting jobs with their degree," Hudson said. "They may feel that plagiarism is the only way to achieve a high grade."

Hudson said for professors who grade hundreds of papers in a semester, inconsistencies in a student's writing style are easy to identify.

See PLAGIARISM on page 3

Use of steroids, side effects become increasingly risky

Though anabolic-androgenic steroids, synthetic versions of the male hormone testosterone, serve powerful and useful medical purposes, many experts agree that the misuse of these drugs can lead to devastating consequences.

By Sue Wang
Daily Bruin (UCLA)

LOS ANGELES — With the pressure of competition looming in their minds, an increasing number of athletes are turning to steroids to help improve their performance and gain a winning edge over non-users.

Though anabolic-androgenic steroids, synthetic versions of the male hormone testosterone, serve powerful and useful medical purposes, many experts agree that the misuse of these drugs can lead to devastating consequences.

The drug's increasing prevalence has led to a rise in the potential for damage.

According to the National Institute of Drug Abuse's "Monitoring the Future" survey, there was a general increase in steroid use from 1.5 to 1.8 percent in 2006.

And while steroid use in general is rare, the drug's effectiveness makes it especially risky and has led to a rise in the potential for damage for the few who do use it.

"The topic of anabolic steroids has sparked controversy in recent years, since they are so prevalent and effective," said Barney Schlinger, a professor in the University of California-Los Angeles Department of Physiological Science.

"What makes them so interesting is that they can go wherever they want in the body – the molecular structure allows them to pass through all tissues," Schlinger said. "They are very potent because a small amount of hormones can have a huge impact."

Anabolic steroids, such as Deca Durabolin or Dianabol taken in by injection or orally in the form of a pill, can be medically used for bone marrow and growth stimulation, hormone replacement therapy, and muscle wasting due to cancer or AIDS.

"Yet when anabolic steroids are misused, as many athletes take 10 to 100 times the prescribed dosage to increase muscle mass, extremely harmful side effects can occur," said Don Catlin, president of the Anti-Doping Research Institute and former director of the UCLA Olympic Analytical Laboratory.

"They improve performance in lots of sports, not just lifting and throwing, but running and cycling as well," Catlin said. "If they didn't work, there wouldn't be an issue."

A common misconception associated with anabolic steroid use is the belief that side effects are uncommon.

Rather, experts such as Catlin say everyone will experience side effects, it is just a matter of how mild those are.

Side effects in women may include the undesirable masculine effect of excess facial and underarm hair and irregular menstrual cycles, while men may experience hair loss, develop breasts, and become sterile.

But changes extend beyond the physical realm – they can be psychological as well.

Depression and mood swings are commonly cited problems.

Still, many people are overlooking such health effects and opting to take the steroids, Catlin said.

"It's a matter of risk-taking," Catlin said. "You have to pay the price to gain the benefits."

Jake Dean, a center and guard for the UCLA football team said he and his fellow teammates look ahead in the long run when debating whether or not to use steroids.

"It's a few years of glory for the possibility of a lifetime of pain," said Dean, a first-year history student.

If the side effects do not deter the athlete, sometimes the penalties – usually a suspension or a ban from the sport – will.

Evidence of steroid use will lead to the dismissal of athletes from participation.

Using illegal substances to gain a competitive advantage over others is essentially cheating, Dean said.

"Sports is not just competition (but it also deals) with many aspects of life," Dean said. "If you cheat in sports, it's like you're cheating in life."

The increasing knowledge and awareness of the drug's use has led to the creation of more effective ways to screen individuals for the drug.

SGA addresses punishment of students in riots that the University invests in companies, were in fact companies that were targeted for divestment by STAND (Students Take Action Now: Darfur) at UMass Lowell.

SGA from page 2

The last motion of the meeting was a call to the campus administration to put "Students First." Motion 2001-S43, which was approved, cited that the "University has de-prioritized recruitment and underrepresented students..." and also recognized that "UMass has drastically cut staff and funding for many vital and unique cultural and student support services."

The motion also called attention to fact that "students have been unconstitutionally punished" in relation to the punishments dealt to students after the December 15, 2006 football riots. According to Senator Carla Dominguez, students who were caught taking part in the riots, after the fall semester ended, were not only expelled, but also had their credits from the fall semester taken away. According to Senator Dominguez, the Constitution reads that credits may not be taken away from a student once a semester is completed.

The motion says that the "Undergraduate Student Senate will mobilize its people power, resources and legitimacy to support the 'Students First' campaign in all appropriate ways."

Students, professors make cheating hard

PLAGIARISM from page 2

"Once you get to know your students and know how they write, it's fairly obvious when a text isn't written by that individual," Hudson said.

English Professor and Director of Campus Writing and Speaking Program Christopher Anson said many of the problems associated with plagiarism come from a lack of cooperative communication between professors and students.

"Across higher education, we are getting so paranoid about [plagiarism]. We focus more on crime and punishment and not on how to educate people," Anson said. "Students need to be taught what it means to take text from a published work and document it."

Anson was a member of the Council of Writing Program Administrators, which is a national association of college and university faculty with professional responsibilities for directing writing programs. The WPA publishes a journal and newsletter, holds an annual workshop and conference, develops position statements, offers consulting and program evaluation and holds extensive discussions about college writing and writing programs.

He said professors can decrease the amount of plagiarism by designing innovative assignments that capture the purpose of the information they are trying to teach.

"If you can design assignments that are really engaging, creative and unique, students will not only be unable to plagiarize, but they won't want to," Anson said.

Anson said if students and professors work together they can eliminate this problem and create a more productive classroom.

"This is a shared responsibility," Anson said. "Students have the responsibility to be ethical, and professors need to do their part in considering what they want their students to learn from an assignment."

Matthew Alfaro, a freshman in biomedical engineering, said he can't condone plagiarism, and he sees it as a lazy and useless way to do school work.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 116

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Eric Athas
MANAGING EDITOR Rob Greenfield
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sheryl Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jaimeson Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COMICS EDITOR Adam Szagin
EDITORIAL EDITOR Tucker Merrick
NEWS EDITOR Matt Bellveau
SPORTS EDITOR Danny Picard
SPORTS EDITOR Jon Pylland
FEATURES EDITOR Melissa D'Amico
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Pentz
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER David Valade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Pedidester
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Sydney Towne
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Dolianitis
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonjakuakul
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Brendan Hall
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeremy Rice
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR YEAR(SEPTEMBER THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCENE IN 1903, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1934, AND THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN ON-CAMPUS EVERY SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Sheryl Wolnik

COPY EDITOR
Nicole Boonjakuakul

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

If you see news happening, call us at 545-1809 and snap a photo with your cell phone, then send it to news@dailycollegian.com

THIS SATURDAY!
O·A·R
LIVE ON TOUR
ON SALE NOW
WITH SPECIAL GUEST Telograph
STORIES OF A STRANGER IN STORES NOW
WWW.MYSPACE.COM/FAREVOLUTION
SAT. APRIL 14 8PM
MULLINS CENTER
University of Massachusetts Amherst
Tickets on sale at the Mullins Center Box Office, online at ticketmaster.com, by phone at (860) 525-4500 or at all ticketmaster outlets. For additional information call the Mullins Center at (413) 545-0505.
Presented by Massconcerts • www.massconcerts.com

Thinking of a Teaching Career?
Master of Arts in Teaching (MAT)
A 12-month graduate program for aspiring teachers that blends theory and practice and features:
• Endorsement for teacher licensure in elementary or secondary education
• Field experiences in Boston public school classrooms
• Supervised student teaching placements
• Instruction from Northeastern faculty and master public school teachers
For more information, visit www.education.neu.edu or call toll free 877.6NU.SPCS (877.668.7727).
Northeastern University

Nathan's Famous
OFFICIAL
Hot Dog Eating Contest
Dear Students,
On April 19, between 6:00 and 7:00 pm during the Taste of UMass in Mullins Center, you can compete as one of 12 students in the Nathan's Famous Hot Dog Eating Contest and a chance to go to the national competition in Coney Island.
To register, just send us an email to mmonaghan@mail.aux.umass.edu or sign-up at all DCs and Bluewall, the Hatch, Southwest Café, Whitmore Café, and the Pita Pit.
Best of luck,
Dining Services
UMass contest limited to 12 UMass students
To qualify for national competition you are required to eat at least 16 hot dogs, induding bun during a specific time.
umass.edu/diningservices
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
Taste of UMass 2007
*Contest open to current UMass students only. Contestants must be at least 18 years old with identification. Contestants must sign a UMass contest waiver.

UMass Idol
Mark your calendar!
Sign Up and Enter Today!
Want to be a UMass Idol?
This is your moment to win $500 cash/grand prize
Sing at the Taste of UMass!
Thursday, April 19, 2007 · Time: 6–7:30 pm
Place: Mullins Center
Email mmonaghan@mail.aux.umass.edu or call UMass Dining Services & ask for Kevin: 413-545-2472.
Provide your: name, e-mail address, major, year, and the title of the song you will sing.
All entries must be received by April 18, 2007
There will be two rounds with Cash prizes for each round. Limited to 30 contestants for the entire event.
Presented by: UMass Dining Services & LAZER 99.7
Sponsored by: Coca-Cola
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
Taste of UMass 2007
umass.edu/diningservices
Must be a UMass student to enter. Judges decisions are final.

Silent protesters believed to have biggest impact

CARD from page 1

Several other students stood up just as Card came to the stage and in what looked like blood stained clothing lay on the floor. Each student represented either a fallen soldier or Iraqi civilian casualty unjustly killed in the line of fire. Some of these protestors held small cardboard signs displaying the situations of the soldiers, one of which read: "When I realized it was a choice between getting shot at in the ghetto and getting shot at in Iraq, I chose the one that would pay more." These 'dead' students were carried out by their fellow protestors as the question portion of the lecture began.

Dan Keefe, one of the students displaying a bloody looking shirt, played the role of a fallen American soldier to create a visual of the violence surrounding current policies.

"We only portrayed American soldiers and Iraqi citizens. We meant to symbolize the destruction and bloodshed this administration has caused in Iraq," Keefe said.

Card attempted to ignore the protestors, only commenting on the "skeptical" students lying in front of him.

"Don't think it's so bad that it's not worth participating because if that happens then what you will end up having is a government without participation," Card said.

While most of the protestors held their signs and minimally interrupted by yelling out words such as "fascist" and "criminal," graduate student Justin Jackson became increasingly more vocal as the lecture went on. During the question portion of the lecture, Jackson yelled out when in disagreement with Card's comments to prevent what he called Card's "promotional tour."

"[Card] has served in an administration that has violated the constitution countless times since it has taken office, most brazenly in lying to the country, invading a sovereign nation and killing hundreds of thousands of people, directly or indirectly for no reason. This man is a traitor to the country. George Bush is a traitor to the country, the whole administration is full of traitors and they should all serve jail time."

Jackson upholds that in comparison to other college protests, this one did not disrupt the speech as Card was allowed to speak and hold a question and answer session.

"[Card] was peddling to an audience of very intelligent people," Jackson said. "Maybe he can peddle that in Washington but this is a college campus where people have access to information and have recent historical knowledge of how things have happened."

Alienating the democratic student population in the room did not seem to be an issue for Jackson or the other protestors. Jackson stated that the liberal population in the state was already alienated and were therefore supporting the Democratic Party. Student Cory Telman, however, felt differently after viewing the different facets of the student run protest. According to Telman, the students who made themselves visible with their large signs had the biggest impact in their silent, yet respectful protest.

Lecture causes stir at Student Union

Students turned their backs and covered their ears in silent protest during former White House Chief of Staff Andrew Card's lecture, entitled, "Talking Politics," the first in a series of lectures at the University of Massachusetts.

PROTEST from page 1

in a democracy "does not dictate a change," whereas participation can incite one. Card gave the example of New Hampshire, a favorite state of politicians, which possesses a participatory, grass-roots political nature and dedication to debating difficult issues such as taxes, war, and abortion.

Addressing a growing sense of skepticism and cynicism towards governmental processes was another main point in Card's lecture.

Urging UMass students to refrain from being cynical and apathetic toward government he said, "Where is the line between cynicism and skepticism?

"I'm glad I never crossed the line to cynicism, because, cynicism invites apathy in terms of participation. I plead with you not to become a cynic.

"What drives us to participate in politics?" asked Card. "Usually fear drives us more than love." However, he urged the audience to find issues and people they can support.

"Politicians always try to be love magnets…I don't know any politician who stood up and said 'hate me,'" he said.

Card emphasized the importance of the president and what the hardest part of the job is: being alone in your ideas, policies and intent to defend the constitution.

"So as you consider who the next president will be, please consider the job description," he said. Presidents are required to preserve, protect and defend the Constitution by an oath. "See which one of them [the candidates] has the courage to be lonely," he continued.

Card described the numerous times he had seen George W. Bush visit hospitals with wounded soldiers and bestow upon them the words,

"On behalf of a grateful nation, thank you for your sacrifice," emphasizing the President's sympathy toward the soldiers and his lonely burden of being Commander in Chief.

Card closed his talk with his definition of citizenship.

"Citizenship is an obligation, it is a great privilege, it is an honor, but it is an obligation," he said.

As the audience posed questions to Card, student protestors forcibly shouted from the back of the ballroom, waved signs and carried mock, dead soldiers from the room. As they verbalized their distaste for the Bush administration.

Card said, "Your passions are important, but they have to translate from rhetoric to participation." Although urged not to create questions over 30-seconds long and not to relate a speech, Justin Jackson, a graduate student in the U Mass History department vehemently displayed his dislike of the Bush administration at the microphone and throughout the rest of the question-and-answer session.

One question focused on the difficulty the Republican Party faces in the next election to which Card stated, "A keen grasp of the obvious."

The individual asked about common issues the Republicans could focus on, to which Card immediately listed the War in Iraq, social security, higher education, shifting demographics, the shrinking work force and public education.

Other questions addressed the possibility of clear-cut contenders for party nominations, the diversity of the Cabinet members in the Bush administration, translators in Baghdad being killed every day and those without the potential to become naturalized citizens, the compensation of veterans and the President's reaction to hearing the news of Sept. 11 in Sarasota, Fl.

Kate Olesin can be reached at kolesin@student.umass.edu

Want to write for News?
We're looking for staff writers for fall '07
e-mail news@dailycollegian.com

YOUR FUTURE IS WITHIN REACH
And so is the money to pay for it
College expenses should not be a roadblock for your future. Stay on track with an alternative loan from Campus Door. Get up to $250,000 to pay for college and make no payments until 12 months after you graduate. Apply online today at campusdoor.com to receive an approval usually in less than a minute. Spend your time planning for your future, not worrying about how to pay for it.
You have the will. We have the way.
campusdoor.com
campusdoor

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
is looking for new
Graphic Designers
for the Fall 2007 semester
♠ Daily Advertising Designers
♠ Nightly Production Supervisors
♥ Advertising Production Manager
Any major can apply. Previous design experience not necessary, but encouraged.
Visit our office in the Campus Center Basement from 10am - 4pm for applications.

FOUR Seasons
WINE • LIQUOR • CIGARS
333 Russell St., Rt. 9
Hadley, MA 01035
584-8174
Sale date: 4/12/07 - 4/18/07
not responsible for typographical errors
Beer
20% off
WINTER BEERS!
Singles 6 packs
Bottles 12 packs
Liquor
LIBATION LIQUIDATION
DEEP DISCOUNTS on Discontinued and Closeout Items Wine
10% off 6 bottles* of wine
EVERYDAY
MIX & MATCH
*Regular priced 750ml bottles of varietal wines
SALE 4/12-4/18
Hours: Monday - Saturday 9am - 11pm Sunday 12pm - 11pm

Proposed energy plan to reduce air pollution by 2020

WARMING from page 1

The UCS examined the costs and benefits of the 20 percent by 2020 standard by using the Energy Information Administration's National Energy Modeling System.

The study found that if 20 percent of the generated energy came from renewable sources – mostly wind and solar – the total homegrown renewable capacity would increase from the approximate 20,000 megawatts in 2005 to an estimated 180,000 megawatts by 2020.

Solar energy harnesses the power of the sun by using solar panels and solar cells that convert light directly into electricity. This source of energy is a pollution-free alternative to fossil fuels and one way to reverse the trend of global warming, according to UCS.

"Solar panels are extremely portable, they can go almost anywhere," said Huertas of UCS. "In New Mexico and Arizona they have already started using solar panels effectively."

Wind energy is another alternative to fossil fuels and has been utilized effectively in Europe ever since the invention of the windmill. When the sun heats the atmosphere unevenly, some patches become warmer than usual, and heat rises. The energy from the heat rising and being replaced can be harnessed by a tall tower with a propeller.

While wind power is relatively rare in America, Europe has made headway in developing this energy source. According to the European Wind Energy Association, the market for wind energy broke new records in Europe in 2006, with Spain and Germany making the most investments.

"The Midwest has many areas that are great wind resources," Huertas said. "All that wind blowing out there is latent, renewable energy to be harnessed by wind turbines."

UCS found that development of renewable energy sources would increase competition in the marketplace and reduce energy costs for homes and businesses. With increased competition, prices of energy would decline. It is estimated that the 20 percent standard would save consumers $4.91 billion on electricity and natural gas bills annually.

If the 20 percent by 2020 plan were to be enacted, air pollution from coal and oil burning power plants would be reduced significantly, according to UCS. More importantly, carbon dioxide emissions would decline by 434 million metric tons per year by 2020. Such a reduction would be equivocal to taking close to 71 million cars off the road.

Renewable energy development and maintenance would create high-paying jobs and other economic benefits for the United States. UCS estimates that by 2020 there would be more than 355,000 new jobs created in construction, manufacturing, and operation of renewable energy sources.

"Economic benefits from this plan are widespread, especially when it comes to jobs," Huertas said. "Many new industries will be created. Manufacturing solar panels and wind turbines, then maintaining them and servicing all other renewable energy facilities."

The findings seem favorable, although it still may seem difficult to make an impact on global warming at UMass. Despite feeling detached from the situation, college students can play an integral role in improving the environment.

"A college campus is a great place to start, it is like a miniature city," Huertas said. "Those of us under the age of 25 will be around to see global warming in action, and if we don't do anything it will get much worse."

Josh Wilder can be reached at jhwilder@student.umass.edu

THE HEAT IS ON:

A four-day series on global warming.

This series was produced by the nine members of a Journalism 301 class, Writing about Public Issues. We welcome your comments on these stories at our course blog: http://writingaboutpublicissues.blogspot.com.

Student group organizes to speak out against Congress energy.

STEP IT UP from page 1

On Saturday, from 1 p.m. to 3 p.m., there will be a "Greening the Roadways Festival" at the Hitchcock Center in Amherst. Afterwards, there will be a Step It Up 2007 Parade from Amherst Center to Hampshire College on route 116. From 4 p.m. to 8 p.m. there will be a Step It Up festival at Hampshire College, with booths, food, music, information, speeches, art for kids, and films.

There will also be live music starting at 8 p.m.

For more information on the events, check out Facebook.com's group, "Step It Up 2007-Amherst."

"It's easy," said Robbie Adler, a full time participant in the Burlington, Vt. office of Step It Up 2007. "You can find out information on starting an action on our Web site. Just make sure you have a banner saying 'Step It Up Congress! Cut Carbon 80% by 2050.'"

Why Congress? According to the organization, Congress' participation could reduce annual carbon dioxide emissions by 2 percent. NASA scientist Jim Hansen has endorsed this idea on the group's Web site and said that we only have a few years to begin carbon cuts.

Adler explained that the Step It Up team has been successful in gaining traditional environment allies and establishing entities in the environment world including the Climate Crisis Coalition, Green Exchange, and Focus the Nation, just to name a few.

"[These groups and organizations] all helped to reach out to their members, friends, and partner organizations through Web site links, e-mail, and direct contact," Adler says.

Another advantage of Step It Up is their leader, as well as noted author and journalist, Bill McKibben. McKibben has been around the country promoting his book, Deep Economy, as well as taking the chance to inform everyone of Step It Up.

"Bill has reached out to many of his personal contacts, some of whom are leaders in the environmental field, and asked them for support," says Adler.

In his letter posted on the Step It Up Web site, McKibben says, "The best science tells us we have ten years to fundamentally transform our economy and lead the world in the same direction."

The organization's Web site, www.stepitup2007.com, contains updates of what climate action events have been taking place across the country, as well as what will happen locally on April 14. It also provides tips on how to start individual actions.

Warming on the Cape

While Europe has been leading the way in wind energy for quite some time, wind turbines may be appearing soon on the Cape.

The Cape Wind Project is a proposal to setup an offshore wind farm on Horseshoe Shoal in Nantucket Sound off Cape Cod. The $900 million renewable energy project would be the first of such offshore wind energy plants in the United States and the largest of such projects to date.

While the proposal appeals to those who favor renewable energy, it has drawn criticism from those who fear it will disrupt Nantucket's wildlife – harming area birds, as well as interfering with shipping lines.

The project is currently under federal review.

UMass to address diversity in coaching said. "At this point, you're not going to get rid of somebody just to do that. So it's something that has to happen as people move on or as situations change. We will do everything we can to continue to try and recruit quality people if positions open up to try and improve our diversity."

COACHES from page 1

Associate Chancellor Esther Terry, who also heads the African-American studies department at UMass, trusts McCutcheon's ability to diversify the athletic department and get rid of what she calls "unhappy statistics."

"I am persuaded that [McCutcheon] will continue his search for talented minority coaches, and that he will prevail in convincing them to come to work at UMass Amherst," Terry said via e-mail. "He certainly has the support of the Chancellor and upper administration in his determination to make us more inclusive at every level of our athletic program; and because we know that we didn't get to where we are overnight, we can appreciate that things won't get changed overnight.

"We have every confidence that under John's guidance, things will change," Terry said.

McCutcheon has had his share of experience with diversification. When he worked at California Polytechnic State University, McCutcheon hired two black head coaches – one for the women's basketball team and the other for the football team.

But in Amherst, there is an obvious problem – one that McCutcheon wants to address immediately. Because head coaching positions don't open up often, he has taken other avenues to diversify, including internships within the administration and assistant coaching positions.

There are currently three black assistant coaches in the football program, one in the men's basketball program and another in the women's basketball program. McCutcheon wants to bring in more minorities to assistant coaching positions and lower-level positions within the department. When head coaching and high-level administrative positions open up, he argues, minority candidates will be hired from within the system.

It will take a while for McCutcheon's plan to take effect. He will have to wait until another coaching position opens up, and at the rate of turnover it might be a while before the athletic department's diversity is up to the University's standards.

While the BCA keeps close track of university athletic departments and their hiring processes, UMass has standards of its own. McCutcheon works closely with the Human Resources department during his search for head coaches.

"[Human Resources] reviews the candidate pool and makes sure that every minority who is qualified receives due consideration," McCutcheon said. "If they felt you didn't do diligence in your recruitment then they may come back to us and ask us to continue the search and try to diversify the candidate pool."

In an Affirmative Action Plan developed by the Office of Equal Opportunity and Diversity at UMass, the goals for diversifying the campus are outlined.

"One of the ways that the campus seeks to provide opportunity is through its active monitoring of the search process," says one of the plan's initiatives. "The Equal Opportunity and Diversity Office reviews recruitment plans and advises search committees and hiring authorities on matters related to affirmative action and equal opportunity. Departments and/or search committee chairs will be informed by EO&D when, based on utilization analysis, there are affirmative action goals for a position vacancy."

According to a March 28 article in the Boston Globe sports section, of 41 varsity head coaching positions at Harvard University there were zero black head coaches. That changed with the recent hiring of Tommy Amaker, an African-American head coach at the University of Michigan for the past six years.

UMass has a similar problem that McCutcheon is becoming increasingly aware of. McCutcheon understands that there are student-athletes at UMass who are underrepresented in the athletic department and believes that a minority coach could identify with certain athletes more than a non-minority coach.

"All you have to do is look at who we have employed and we don't have diversity in the head coaching positions," McCutcheon said. "I'm not going to make it something that it isn't. But a lot of the coaches have been here for quite a while and all I can say to that student-athlete who feels underrepresented is that as we have openings, we will do everything in our power to have a comprehensive search process that will include as many qualified minority candidates as we can have."

UMass is now the only Division I school in Massachusetts without an African-American head coach, and only time will tell if McCutcheon's dedication to diversification will provide results in the athletic department.

Rob Greenfield can be reached at rgreenfi@student.umass.edu

Avoid senior moments.
Last call for your Apple Student Discount before graduation.

If you're a senior, you'll be history in a matter of weeks. Right along with your Apple Student Discount.
So make plans now to visit your Authorized Campus Store and take advantage of these great Apple savings one last time. Save on the new smarter, faster, do-everything MacBook and MacBook Pro. Save on the new faster, bigger, brighter iMacs. And save on Apple software, peripherals and accessories, too.
It's last call, so stop by today. We're just moments away.
Authorized Campus Store
UMASS AMHERST
University Store
Campus Center
Amherst, MA 01003-0000 413.545.2619
http://www.bkstore.com
Apple, the Apple logo, iLife, iMac, Mac and MacBook are trademarks of Apple, Inc., registered in the U.S. and other countries.

GUEST CHEF JET TILA

Renowned Chef of Asian Cuisine, Author, and TV Celebrity Chef Jet Tila is coming to the Taste of UMass April 19, 2007 from 5—8 pm at the Mullins Center.
You have always wanted to cook with a celebrity chef. Here's your chance! Send us a short essay (100 words or less) to explain why you want to cook with Chef Jet Tila at mmonaghan@mail.aux.umass.edu no later than April 12. 8 winners will be chosen!
DINING SERVICES
UMassAmherst
umass.edu/diningservices
Taste of UMass 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, APRIL 12, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Unethical sponsorship

Greg Collins

The time has come for UMass' academic departments to be held responsible for particular speakers and events they sponsor on campus.

No departments deserve more scrutiny here than those of political science and sociology, as well as the Middle East Studies Program. Last night, they, among other academic and student groups on campus, sponsored a speech given by DePaul professor Norman Finkelstein. A controversial intellectual who has been fired from several universities for questionable academic credentials and scholarship, according to Jbooks.com, he is widely known for criticizing people who use the legacy of the Holocaust to further a pro-Jewish and pro-Israel agenda.

Finkelstein raises compelling questions about whether people use Jewish victimhood for financial or political advantage and whether criticizing Israel constitutes anti-Semitism. The problem is not that the professor brings light to these issues. Instead, it is his deeper statements regarding the Palestinian-Israeli conflict which call into question his legitimacy as a reputable scholar.

To summarize the background of Finkelstein's work, he is considered to be a Holocaust revisionist who overemphasizes poorly-conceived Israeli policies while dismissing Arab repression of Jews in the Middle East. He glosses over the fact that Israel allows political participation of Muslims in voting and government, while many Arab Muslim governments reject any notion of allowing Jews to partake in the states' political processes.

Finkelstein argues that criticism of Israel is immediately met with charges of anti-Semitism, and he has a legitimate point to a limited extent. But being intellectually dishonest about the similarities and differences between Israeli and Arab policies because of a personal vendetta against Jews and the United States invariably constitutes anti-Semitism. Failing to distinguish clearly, as Finkelstein does not, that Muslim terrorist organizations specifically target innocent Jews because of their religion, while Jews do not intentionally target innocent Muslims because of their religion, is not only anti-Semitic. It is also tarnishes and undermines the reliability of scholars when they allow personal grudges, for whatever reason, to supersede efforts to be accurate and objective.

Sponsoring scholars who distort history and contemporary political affairs is not an issue of academic freedom, but an issue of academic integrity.

The fact is that we could extrapolate endlessly on the specific elements of the complex Israeli-Palestinian conflict. The point here is not to counter every one of Finkelstein's controversial claims but to call into question the motives of the particular university academic departments who sponsored the speaker.

And this is when the departments of political science and sociology, and the Middle East Studies Program, should stand in front of a mirror and look directly in their own eyes. These groups will probably claim that they sponsored Finkelstein because the "public has a right to know" and that "all voices should be heard" concerning the Palestinian-Israeli debate.

Don't be fooled by this justification. Blind support for a diversity of viewpoints is a cunning way of indicating that the departments do not want to be held directly responsible for determining the veracity or honesty of the speaker's rhetoric. Rather, it gives a free hand to people to say whatever they want without facing the consequences and implications of their words by those who sponsored them.

Why should we as UMass students be critical of these departments when they want to promote open debate on contentious issues? Because the purpose of hosting speakers, and of university education in general, is not merely to expose different points of view, but to make progress towards establishing conclusions grounded in truth.

Students should demand that the academic departments who sponsored the speaker make a forthright public statement expressing whether they think Finkelstein's views contribute to finding out the truth about the Palestinian-Israeli conflict. If they hesitate for even one second in contemplating the answer, then they have abused their privilege as educators. Regardless, they have already trivialized every student on this campus who wants to become educated on the conflict without being exposed to scholars of questionable reputation who purposefully exaggerate and misrepresent the intricacies of the conflict.

In essence, sponsoring scholars who distort history and contemporary political affairs is not an issue of academic freedom but an issue of academic integrity. If the purpose of this university and its specific academic departments is not to strive for truth but to merely facilitate a marketplace of ideas on campus, then they should continue to host and sponsor a multitude of speakers, regardless of their extreme views, dubious background, or systematic misrepresentation of issues. And it is safe to say that Finkelstein's thinking embodies all of these characteristics, which enables him to make money off of universities and students in an unethical manner.

But if UMass is committed to strive for something which transcends diversity of thought, no matter how illogical or inaccurate it is, this university should think twice before hosting speakers with dishonest academic reputations, such as Finkelstein. He can afford to distort information, because ultimately he will end up with money in his pocket.

But students who are not as knowledgeable about the issues are subject to being manipulated by scholars like him. They deserve much better from UMass and its departments of political science, sociology, and Middle East Studies Program.

Greg Collins can be reached at gcollins@student.umass.edu

Apathy and SGA elections: who's to blame?

Adam McGillen

There is no doubt that University of Massachusetts students possess a great potential for activism, but so often we, as a student body, fall short. Our eyes light up at the thought of bringing change, but that flicker of hope seems always extinguished by an unjustified feeling of inadequacy. A rift runs through UMass students.

"I want to make a difference," their heart says.

"But I am so insignificant and powerless," their head says.

Nowhere is this problem more prevalent at UMass than the elections for Student Government Association. Here is a chance for every student to voice their unique opinion with a ballot and actually make a difference. Students all-too-often do not realize it, but the SGA bridges the gap that divides students from the administration — a gap that grows every year.

The administration and the student body drift further apart with every additional dollar of tuition and fees. Students feel disconnected, as if they are just at the university and not part of it. Tuition and fees rise every year, and students act like helpless victims, complaining about their climbing debt but doing nothing to try to reverse the trend.

It's troublesome to hear students explain why they did not vote in the SGA elections, but most upsetting of all is the statement that the SGA has no real power at UMass, and thus voting is pointless. It's a catch-22; the SGA lacks power, so students do not vote, but the SGA lacks power because so many students fail to show initiative in their own government. Voting is such a simple task, especially when it is impossible to get a meal on What students need to realize is that they can leave a legacy of change at this university.

Election Day without passing a ballot box, so why such apathy?

Part of the problem lies in the short time candidates have for campaigning. Jumbled by spring break, this past election gave candidates only a few days to get out their platform and ask students to vote. Students fail to get a real grasp on what each candidate represents, and so they do not vote because an uninformed vote is perhaps more detrimental than a non-vote. A lack of campaign time only skims the surface of the problem at hand though.

Students often do not directly experience the fruits of the SGA's labor, and frequently when they do, they do not realize it. More importantly, students that are frustrated with the administration fail to see the impact that the SGA could have.

"We focus on everything really: campus life, residences, dining commons, transportation, the Board of Trustees, RSOs," said Matt Giancola, a senator in the SGA.

Clearly, the SGA provides a direct outlet for students to have an impact on UMass and its policies.

"The administration doesn't care because only 12 percent of students vote," Giancola said.

Backed by such a small fraction of the student body, the SGA goes largely ignored and has trouble bringing about the changes that it knows students want – funding for UMass, lowered student fees, accessibility for minorities, and many other vital changes.

If the administration faced an SGA backed by 75 percent, or even just half of the student body, the University would have to respond with action in favor of motions put forth by the senate. Rising tuition and fees could be curbed, more events and concerts on campus could be made more affordable for students, and a larger portion of funding from the state level could be achieved.

At the roots of this problem is a student body seeking instant gratification when it comes to policy. When attending UMass for only four years, it can seem useless when every policy or motion passed seems to only go into action the year after you graduate. What students need to realize is that they can leave a legacy of change at this university. Sure, you may not be able to help reduce the cost of education at UMass in the few short years you are here, but you will be thankful if you voted and empowered the SGA to seek such ends – someday you may have kids in college at your alma mater that you have to pay for.

Politics, even on the student government scale, should not be about seeking action towards short-term solutions. The problems and issues that the SGA deals with are large ones, and as a student body, we should support the SGA so that they can tackle such problems for the good of UMass and future generations of students.

Ask not how you will remember UMass. Ask how UMass will remember you.

Adam McGillen can be reached at amcgille@student.umass.edu.

IVAN TRIMBLE/COLLEGIAN

Voter apathy is one of several issues that newly-elected SGA President Aaron Buford (above) will be facing.

It's time to right the RIAA

Kaitlyn Silva

Gathering up a decent collection of music is not the easy task that it used to be. It seems that CDs have reverted into the land of dinosaurs. They roam in the deadened fields, along with old mixtapes that we recorded off of radio shows back when the Record Industry Association of America wasn't trying to sue us. Though CDs can still be found all over the place, many students have replaced them with online downloads and mp3 programs.

This may seem like the simple solution for most students to seek, but it has led some of us into more trouble than we had ever anticipated.

Hundreds of students at UMass are being forced to pay up every cent they owe the RIAA, and then some. They've received an e-mail telling them that they'll either have to pay a settlement online with a credit card or face a lawsuit. If the student realizes that the e-mail is not a ridiculous scam from someone claiming to be the RIAA, they end up paying a large sum to the tune of $3,000. Those who choose not to act will be sued and charged $750 per song.

Having programs such as KaZaa and Limewire on any computer on campus is a huge mistake, as UMass monitors all of your Internet access and will readily give your information to the RIAA after finding illegal downloads on your IP address. Big Brother is watching you. The RIAA is using this system at 14 other colleges and universities.

Still, it's easy to understand the dilemma that illegal downloaders are put into. Sure, students on campus have Ruckus, a free music program that can only be used while connected to the UMass network, but even this has its restrictions. Songs downloaded on Ruckus expire after thirty days, so there's no chance of having a song on your playlist for a long period of time unless you remember to continually download it. None of the songs can be taken out of the Ruckus program and put on to an mp3 player, so your music downloads are no good once you leave your computer.

There are only a few methods of acquiring music for your mp3 player that the RIAA will allow. You can get the music for free from band dollars, so it's easy to keep track. Every now and then, iTunes will throw you a curveball by pricing extremely rare or popular songs at $1.99. It's more convenient to buy music online and put it to better use this way, but it's also more expensive in the long run. Buy anything more than a few songs, and the bill hits the roof.

These choices leave college students, along with the rest of the music-loving, Internet-savvy people of America, in a rut. It's easy to turn to illegal downloading, even though it isn't a smart choice for college students anymore because the RIAA has made a horrible choice by throwing lawsuits in the face of their target audience.

Perhaps instead of suing the students, the RIAA and UMass could work out an easier way for students to get music. UMass students pay yearly for the Ruckus music player, so we aren't we allowed to keep at least some of the songs we download? Technically, we've already paid for them, and it would only be fair. Could the RIAA and iTunes come together to offer discounts to students and decrease illegal downloading?

Maybe if songs were less costly, we'd be more inclined to go along with their business and acquire the music legally. These are definitely options, but it seems that nobody is looking into them. They'd rather check over our Internet use like a hawk and sue us as soon as the opportunity arises.

This is not the solution. There is a real solution somewhere out there, but the RIAA is looking in the wrong place.

Big Brother is watching you. The RIAA is using this system at 14 other colleges and universities.

or music Web sites if the Web site gives you the option to do so. This type of music is a rare find, and it usually doesn't give audiophiles many options. Beyond that, the only way to add music to an mp3 player for free is to rip the music off of CDs that you already own, leaving no options for new music.

The most obvious choice is to buy the music. Most songs on iTunes and Ruckus are priced at 99 cents. This can be a deal. If we assume that the average song is three minutes long, we pay about 33 cents per minute. Thirty-five songs cost 35

Kaitlyn Silva can be reached at kmsilva@student.umass.edu.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

PRAISE FOR CARD

Much thanks to Andy Card for coming into the lion's den of liberalism to give an insightful and interesting speech. Also, a job well done to the UMass Civic Initiative for coordinating the event. Little thanks should be given to those who protested the event in a disruptive manner, and no, I'm not even talking about the people who pretended to play dead (at least they were quiet).

Those who engaged Mr. Card with constructive questions highlight an important part of the democratic process, participation, which Mr. Card talked about at length. To those who merely attended the event to scream the same few comments, showcase unintelligible banners, and constantly "hiss" throughout the event, I could have done without your attendance. Their demonstrations only serve to make even-keeled individuals wearier of being associated with them and their beliefs.

Jesse Wooster
UMass Student

I would like to thank the UMass Civic Initiative for having former White House Chief of Staff Andy Card here to speak. He gave an informative speech, and it would've been an overall excellent experience except for a minority of students that ruined the event.

The way the protesters acted and represented our school was disrespectful and immature. I attended this event to hear Andy Card speak about his experiences, but all I could hear was a group of very rude people yelling obscenities throughout the lecture. I felt ashamed to be at UMass, and I questioned what Mr. Card thought of our university afterwards.

I have always respected people having their own opinion. But the way you express your opinion is most important. The way these protesters acted was unrepresentative of the UMass Political Science department and our school. I truly felt bad for the people that helped put this event together.

In conclusion, these protesters need to realize that they achieved absolutely nothing. If you acted in a professional and civil way then you may have been taken seriously. But yelling obscenities and calling a man a "bloody Imperialist" gives you no credibility and makes you look ignorant and incompetent. Please don't ruin something that is supposed to be enjoyable for us again.

Michael DeFilippi
UMass Student

WRITE LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

RESPOND TO WHAT WE PRINT.
MAKE YOUR VOICE COUNT.
GET HEARD.

Send letters to:
EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, APRIL 12, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Guild plays with Wilde

UMass Theater performs Victorian-era play

By Stephanie McPherson
Collegian Staff

Satire, deceit, and British accents – what more does a play need? How about a great group of people to put it on? That's exactly what the UMass Theater Guild will be giving to audiences in Oscar Wilde's classic play, "The Importance of Being Earnest," beginning today and running through Saturday, April 14.

The play is a comedy of errors addressing love and marriage in Victorian England. It centers on mistaken identity – two men simultaneously pretend to be the same man that one of the men has made up! As stated by director Brian Kelly, Earnest is "an intellectual farce" set in an "age of ideals… [when] style, not sincerity was the most important thing."

What's a man to do when he gets bored with his every day life? Become another person of course, which is just what Jack Worthing, played by sophomore Greg Boczenowski, does. He creates a "wicked brother" named Earnest he could use as an excuse to frequently visit the city. While in the city, he becomes Earnest and does all the disrespectable things he could never do in the country. Jack/Earnest befriends Algernon Moncrieff, played by UMass senior Jim Kane, and falls in love with Gwendolyn, played by freshman Natalya Betzig.

Before Jack/Earnest can propose to Gwendolyn, Algernon discovers that he is not Earnest, as he has led everyone to believe. Algernon also uncovers the fact that Jack is the guardian of Cecily Cardew, played by Jill Whalen, a UMass sophomore. Due to Jack's description of the "excessively pretty" Cecily who "is only just eighteen," Algernon becomes interested and pretends to be Jack's brother Earnest to visit Cecily in the country. The ensuing confusion is full of the witty and satirical hilarity that is characteristic of a play by Wilde, and proves that "the truth is rarely pure and never simple."

The UMass Theater Guild is an Registered Student Organization on campus. Entirely run by students, it performs one play and one musical per semester. Along with these shows, the Guild organizes day trips to New York City and puts on a coffee house each semester with performances that range from a cappella groups to skits.

Brian Kelly, the director of Earnest who has been with the Guild for eight years, said that the best thing about being part of the Theater Guild is that it's a learning organization. There is so much that younger students can learn about theater from the veteran members. He went on to say that "you form

See EARNEST on page 8

The UMass Theater Guild is performing "The Importance of Being Earnest" from April 12 through April 14 at 8 p.m., with a 2 p.m. matinee on Saturday.

MANDY THOMAS/COLLEGIAN

Children at two orphanages in Honduras were given cameras and asked to document their lives. The stunning results are on display at the Northampton Center for the Arts.

Honduran children capture their world in Noho exhibit

By Mandy Thomas
Collegian Correspondent

After a quick crash course on the basics of using a camera and taking photographs, a group of children were sent out to capture what they considered important. The children's ages ranged from seven to 16, and they had no previous experience in photography. But what was returned were captivating images of a culture and a people seen through the simple eyes of youngsters.

"Fotos de mi Peublo," meaning "Photos of my Home," is a traveling exhibit that has finally made its way to Northampton from its home in El Progresso, Honduras. The exhibit began as an art project sponsored by the non-profit organization OYE, which stands for Organization for Youth Empowerment and also translates into the Spanish word for listen.

Josh Farrell-Starbuck, a junior BDIC major in Culture and Medicine, spent three weeks in Honduras during winter break volunteering in the two major orphanages sponsored by OYE, Copromme and Proniño. There, Farrell-Starbuck was able to teach and in turn learn from many of the children featured in the exhibit.

"This was the first time these kids had ever seen, or touched, or whatever a camera," Farrell-Starbuck said. "And look at them (photographs). They're awesome."

Today is the opening of the exhibit, "Fotos de mi Peublo," being displayed at the Northampton Center for the Arts. While looking at the photos, Farrell-Starbuck recognized the name of one of the kids he spent time with while in Honduras.

"I remember Alejandro," Farrell-Starbuck said. "I thought the title of his photo was so simple, but so great. It was something like 'the day was beautiful and it is more beautiful now that I have photographed it.' I just thought that was great."

Farrell-Starbuck's best friend and roommate, Jeff Boucher, also spent the January term working with OYE in the northern part of Honduras. Boucher said more than anything, he learned that despite the perceived differences between different cultures, there is a strong potential for human connection everywhere you go.

"We gave these kids the opportunity to do something, anything, and they are just as capable as anyone else, but they were never provided that opportunity," Boucher said.

Part of Boucher's daily routine in Honduras was playing chess with an eight-year-old orphan named Gabriel.

"He is one of the smartest kids I know. He was so

See GALLERY on page 9

Dance company dazzles FAC

The Stephen Petronio Dance Company heads to UMass this week for a performance at the Fine Arts Center. Petronio, a Hampshire College alum, founded the company in 1984 and over the years has become, according to The Advocate, known as the 'bad boy' of New York City's downtown art scene. The Company's three-part act starts at 7:30 p.m. tonight. Tickets for Five College students range from $7 to $15, and it is also open to the general public. For tickets and information about the show, please contact the Fine Arts Center box office at 413-545-2511 or www.fineartscenter.com.

'Grindhouse' shocks and awes with gritty, satirical style

By Kate Bauer and Leighanne Noonan
Collegian Columnists

Grindhouse (n): a theatre playing back-to-back films exploiting sex, violence, and other extreme subject matter.

Rodriguez and Tarantino have always been rebels, consistently defying Hollywood formula, and Grindhouse marks their greatest achievement yet, especially to their fan following. Planet Terror and Death Proof, and their fictitious trailers, combine sticky blood, brutal language, contrived acting, zombies, kick-ass girls, kick-ass cars, Michael Biehn, sex, guns, and dabble in biblical allusions. Anything goes in these tributes to the 70's exploitation genre, and Rodriguez and Tarantino take that liberty to the extremes they're known for. These rebels are out to restore crude dynamism to film, and we're lucky enough to sit in and enjoy the ride while these masters perfect their craft.

Rodriguez keeps you enthralled on a twisted, fast-paced ride through Grindhouse's first half, Planet Terror. The director wastes no time getting into the action, intertwining storylines centered around an infected zombie populous caused by governmental greed, military faux paus and mad money.

There's Cherry Darling (Rose McGowan), a stripper who's having trouble finding a solid career goal, but no trouble accruing useless talents. Meeting up with an ex love, El Wray (Freddy Rodriguez), an El Mariachi-style gunslinger who never misses (and not just with a gun), the two set off to escape the infested town, only to have Cherry lose a limb when they're attacked. El Wray fives her up with a machine gun substitute, and everything's a pop, blast, and shot of fun from there.

Dakota Block, a doctor whose "friends" make everything tingly and numb and dead, is trying to escape the clutches of her husband, the good Dr. William Block (Josh Brolin). Michael Biehn plays Sheriff Hague who is trying to keep the unaffected population safe with the same desperation and dedication that he applies to his quest to attain J.T.'s (Jeff Fahey) chili recipe.

It's 85 minutes of jam-packed fun, the absurdities and amusements hitting straight on like El Wray's bullets. It's the best film ever created solely to corrupt the youth.

Tarantino's take is a bit different, and the slow tempo opening drops the pace a bit; our high from Terror starting to fizzle a bit. But of course in Tarantino fashion the director saves the best for last, with car crashes, severed appendages and one killer car chase.

A group of beautiful women enjoying their sexual youth arrive at a local decrepit bar on their way to a lake house, only to meet Stuntman Mike (Kurt Russell), a TV stunt car driver with a fetish for young women and car crashes. Just like Terror, Tarantino's flick is chock full of celebs, including Sydney Poitier's daughter, whose name is also Sydney Poitier, along with Michael Parks and Carlos Gallardo returning as deputies from Kill Bill Vol 1, and Parks as Esteban from Vol 2.

Stuntman's quest is to find women, who are preferably beautiful, young, naïve women, and offer them a ride in his death mobile. The car's essentially Death Proof, but, like the trailers say, to get the benefit of it, you have to be sitting in his seat.

While chapter 1 may dare those eyelids of yours to start dropping, Tarantino makes up for it with one wild and crazy car chase reminiscent of the French Connection and Mad Max – and that's the idea. No CGI, no fancy tricks – just straight-on, brutal, dirty action. Yet giving it a modern twist, it's the girls who deliver the action-packed punch, and by the end of Proof, you know these women are no sissy cheerleaders.

KB: Would it be patronizing if I said this is the most fun I've ever had at the movies?

LN: Not at all, I would completely agree. While the films themselves were amusing in their own right, the attitude taken by the directors and conveyed to the audience only heightened the entertainment. Nothing was taken too seriously. The humor and satire towards the genre only made the overall ensemble better. Had there been a lack of this kind of fun, the films would have been unwatchable.

KB: I found Death Proof a little hard to get into at the beginning, with all the female sex jargon, but the dialogue was certainly full of pop culture references, as well as it opening with Tarantino's classic feet shot. That guy really does have a foot fetish.

Towards the end of the film all the action really starts to kick in, and I enjoyed watching Tracie Thoms as Kim and Zoë Bell's (as herself) character adding the strong female ingredient to the film.

LN: I also found Death Proof difficult. I definitely didn't like it overall as much as I liked Planet Terror. For me, Terror had more dynamic in the characters and more working beneath the basic action of the plot. I did, however, enjoy the juxtaposition of such a fast film (in Terror) with a slower beginning (in Proof). Furthermore, when we were confronted with the car chase and fighting sequence of Proof, I found them enjoyable. The last sequence of that film, with Russell's tears of relief and the fast camerawork of him "getting what he deserved," was a fitting and enthralling ending.

KB: Russell's Stuntman Mike is definitely not the bad ass you'd expect, but he certainly drives one bad ass car. I agree that Planet Terror was the more entertaining of the two, but I can see the craft that Tarantino put into his. He even did the new version of the continuous take around a restaurant table – this time with girls – that he did in Reservoir Dogs with the men.

The camerawork and style in both films was great, though I could have done with a little less sticky blood in Terror. It looks as if they stole the syrup supply from the local IHOP.

LN: Tarantino definitely puts a lot of thought into the film, as he does all his work. Still, I found some parts dragging a bit. It started to feel unnatural, but again that might be an effect of following Terror. As for the latter's gore, I wasn't that put off by it; for the most part, it appealed to my sense of humor. I found myself laughing or amused by much of the blood and gore. Had that effect not been achieved, however, it definitely would have lost its appeal.

COURTESY THE WEINSTEIN FILMS

Rose McGowan, above, stars in Robert Rodriguez's new film "Planet Terror" as a stripper who becomes a gun-wielding amputee.

KB: That's very true. And this is an homage to exploitation films, so I can see where the gallons of fake blood would pay tribute to that.

So for our fellow college students and anyone else who's reading this, take to heart that this film is not for the faint of heart, or for those with weak bladders. The films, and the trailers accompanying, run almost three hours, so plan accordingly.

Kate Bauer and Leighanne Noonan can be reached at kbauer@student.umass.edu

COURTESY THE WEINSTEIN FILMS

Springfield, Mass. native Kurt Russell, above, stars in Quentin Tarantino's half of the new double feature "Grindhouse." In "Death Proof" Russell plays Stuntman Mike, a man who terrorizes a group of beautiful women with his death proof car.

UMass Theater Guild performs witty play

EARNEST from page 7

wonderful friendships" that last for years.

Auditions for Earnest were held at the beginning of the spring semester, giving the Guild only eight short weeks to master this famous play. Despite time restraints, Kelly, who also directed "Into the Woods" in 2001, said the process was very relaxed. The tight-knit cast and crew were always two steps ahead in their schedule, giving them time to perfect things such as comedic timing and their British accents, which proved to be the most difficult part of the show.

Kane, a Legal Studies and Theater double major, said that it was "easy to read with the accent, but it was much harder to actually act with it. It was hard making sure everyone had the same accent." The cast worked tirelessly with CDs and exercises like reading passages from Harry Potter books. Whalen, a double major in Communications and Theater, said, "Once you get into the rhythm of the accent, it's hard to get out of." She kept finding herself slipping into the accent outside of rehearsal.

The reason for the ease of the rehearsal process was undoubtedly the small size of the cast. The "close knit community," as put by Boczenowski, was the cast's favorite part of being involved with Earnest. With a group so small there are "no cliques, just one big family," said Betzig. When asked to choose a word to describe the past eight weeks, Whalen captured the sentiments of her fellow cast members and said, "It's hard to sum up this experience in just one word."

Come see the wit of Oscar Wilde and the chemistry of a great cast in "The Importance of Being Earnest" in Bowker Auditorium, located in Stockbridge Hall, today through April 14 at 8 p.m. There will also be a matinee performance on April 14 at 2 p.m. Tickets can be purchased at the Fine Arts Center box office or at the door for $8 to the public and $5 for students, children, and seniors.

Stephanie McPherson can be reached at smephers@student.umass.edu

Tired of the Dorms?
IT'S NEVER TOO EARLY TO LOOK FOR AN APARTMENT WITH LINCOLN REAL ESTATE
Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant St.
253-7879
www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
Now accepting applications for June 2006

Rental Office Phone #: (413) 549-0145
1040 N. Pleasant St. #410
Amherst, MA 01002
NEW PUFFTON VILLAGE
Serving all Your Rental Needs
Now Accepting applications for summer/fall 2007
www.pufftonvillage.com

SUPREME COURT REPORTS
ATTENTION GRADUATING SENIORS:
CONSIDERING LAW SCHOOL?
Get started this summer with Boston University's Certificate in Paralegal Studies. Taught by legal experts, this two-week intensive program will help you:
• Enhance your credentials for law school
• Gain exposure to the legal work environment
• Confirm your decision to pursue a legal career
Learn more at an Information Session:
Monday, April 30, 6-8 p.m.
928 Commonwealth Avenue, Room 202
Boston
Courses begin June 1, 2007.
For more information:
www.bu.edu/professional/2087
1-800-BU-TRAIN (288-7246) x457
Refer to Priority Code: CPE2087
BOSTON UNIVERSITY CENTER FOR PROFESSIONAL EDUCATION

PRAISE YE THE LORD:FOR IT IS GOOD TO SING PRAISES UNTO OUR GOD; FOR IT IS PLEASENT; AND PRAISE COMELY.
PSALM 147:1
FRIDAY
APRIL 27TH @ 7:00PM
Engineering Building (ECSC II) RM 119
Amherst, MA
UMass Gospel Choir
Presents our first annual
GOSPEL EXPLOSION!!
Special Guests include:
Atlantic Union Gospel Choir
of course...
UMASS AMHERST GOSPEL CHOIR!!
...and many more

Fights don't have to be negative for your relationship

By Jasmine Monteiro
Collegian Columnist

After being in a long-term relationship in high school, I consider myself somewhat of a connoisseur of pointless bickering. Yes, I know that's not a good thing. But luckily, I can now put my knowledge to good use.

I know that many people believe that fighting is healthy for a relationship; I happen to be one of those people. Look at it this way, have you ever had a discussion with someone and all they ever did was agree with you? If you have then you know how annoying it can get. You just want to shake them and say, "Don't you have an opinion of your own?!" This is where we realize that sometimes we need a little bit of both – happy medium as I like to call it.

Sometimes it's hard to decipher the difference between a petty fight and a legitimate one. Often, our emotions can get the best of us in the initial stages. In this case, we don't usually think, we just react. With time and some often unfortunate experiences, we learn how to manage and control that anger. We can learn whether or not something is worth getting mad over, or better yet, whether it's worth fighting over. Nothing is worse than waking up the next day thinking, "Damn I messed up."

The worst part about fighting is the urge to point fingers. We're all human, and we all make mistakes from time to time. The best thing to do is admit to your partner when you're wrong and tell them that you (hopefully) won't do it again.

Sometimes when a fight seems pointless to you it isn't for your beau. It's important to listen to what your partner is saying and really understand where they are coming from. If you continuously sweep problems under the rug they are just going to grow larger and larger until they blow up in your face. To avoid this kind of problem make sure you resolve the issue as soon as it surfaces.

The good part about fighting is obviously making up. This is one of the reasons why we need to fight. We need to see if our partners will be there for us through the bad times, not just the good. Sometimes we need to get our blood flowing and our endorphins pumping. And even if you don't talk to each other for a couple of days, hopefully someone will cave in and apologize. You probably won't even remember what you're apologizing for at this point, but you know the best is yet to come! Making up is a great way to start fresh. It's a time for you to continue accepting each other's faults and help work on your strengths.

If you and your partner fight constantly you may want to consider why this is happening. Sometimes this means that you have passed the infatuation phase and are realizing how different you two really are. You may want to think about what it is that keeps you together and if you want to continue down this route. Because like I said, some people like to put it off for a while hoping it'll pass or that you'll move on from it. That is never a foolproof plan.

If you and your partner have been together for a while and the fighting is sudden, there could be an underlying issue. Maybe you've been under a lot of stress. It's human to take out our frustrations on our loved ones more often than not, often subconsciously. It's also possible that there's something bothering them that they may be keeping from you, whether it's a personal problem or guilty conscience.

The most important thing is to not jump to conclusions. Give your partner the benefit of the doubt and give them the opportunity to talk to you. If you give them time to work their anger out, they will come to you when they are ready. But fighting shouldn't be the only thing that's keeping your relationship alive.

Jasmine Monteiro can be reached at jmonteir@student.umass.edu.

Amherst Cinema screens French film

COURTESY CRITERION FILMS

French actor Jean-Pierre Leaud, above, plays the young Antoine Doinel, a misunderstood adolescent who begins committing petty crimes for attention, is seen here in a work camp.

By Morgan-ann Rousseau
Collegian Staff

Tonight at 7 p.m. The Amherst Cinema will show François Truffaut's renowned film, The 400 Blows with an introduction by Visiting Assistant Professor of Film Studies at Amherst College, Dale Hudson.

The Paris-shot film was made in 1959 and stars Jean-Pierre Léaud as Antoine Doinel, a young boy whose character is loosely based on Truffaut.

Antoine is a somewhat typical Parisian adolescent; curious, rebellious and striving for attention. His petty, yet innocent crimes, brings on a reputation of Antoine as a trouble maker. The French judicial system's unjust treatment of his pranks set the film aside as a unique exposé of the poor treatment of juvenile offenders in France at the time of filming.

Truffaut made four other films with leading man Léaud as Antoine Doinel, and each film depicts the character at later stages of his life. They are Antoine and Colette, Stolen Kisses, Bed and Board, and Love on the Run.

The cinema's International Art House Classics Series began with Jean Renoir's 1939 French film Rules of the Game, and will end on May 28 with Jean Cocteau's Beauty and the Beast. Check out Friday's paper for a thorough follow-up on tonight's screening.

Morgan-ann Rousseau can be reached at mrousseau@student.umass.edu

Honduran orphans' art displayed in Noho

GALLERY from page 7

inquisitive and wanted to learn everything," Boucher said. "We played chess on a regular basis and I realized those kind of games provide an environment for a connection beyond the barrier of language."

One of the founders of OYE, Justin Elderidge-Otero, is a 2005 graduate of UMass. Elderidge-Otero was born in Honduras and grew up with Ana Luisa Ahern, who is another founder of OYE. The two spent their teenage summers volunteering at the orphanage Copprome, but parted ways after high school. Then after graduating college, the two reconnected to form the non-profit organization. The original concept for the organization was to provide scholarships to the orphans unable to afford higher education after completing high school. Now, OYE has grown into something much bigger.

For the past two years, OYE has worked to introduce arts, health, nutrition and sports in the orphans of Copprome and Proniño. It does so by teaching the children skills like drawing or photography, growing and maintaining organic gardens and fishponds and providing information about widespread health issues in Honduras like AIDS.

Both Boucher and Farrell-Starbuck said the experience was challenging but rewarding, and now that the exhibit has made its way to Northampton, the boys believe their involvement with OYE can continue. Farrell-Starbuck said, "We feel compelled to do this as representatives of OYE and this exhibit is a way to continue our work and spread the word back in the Valley where there are other people who can help."

"Fotos de mi Pueblo" has been traveling throughout Honduras and made an appearance in Washington D.C. before landing in Northampton. The reception tonight begins at 6:30 p.m. It will be catered by the People's Market and music will be provided by a UMass student. The Northampton Center for the Arts is open Tuesday through Friday 11 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Mandy Thomas can be reached at Mandyrudy@gmail.com.

Goten OF JAPAN STEAK HOUSE
FAMOUS FOR CAPTIVATING GUESTS PREPARED AT YOUR TABLE
Early Bird Specials
Tues.-Thurs. 5-6 PM
Saturday 12-3 PM
Sunday 4-5 PM
104 Old Amherst Rd., Sunderland off Rt. 116
413-665-3628
www.gotenofjapan.com

over jeans
ZANNA
downtown Amherst

www.fordcollegehq.com
iAM aware. define yourself.
student bonus cash
EXCLUSIVE OFFER
$500
Additional savings just for college and trade school students, recent grads and grad students
HYBRID
2008 Mercury Mariner Hybrid
07 college student purchase program
Ford LINCOLN MERCURY

Neely shines as Jesus Christ in musical at Mullins Center

By Tim McCall
Collegian Staff

Three days after Easter was a fitting time to stage the fourth installment of the Mullins Center Theater Series, Broadway in Amherst, "Jesus Christ Superstar."

This performance, however, was not just any performance of the 35-year-old Tim Rice and Andrew Lloyd Webber production based on the Gospel according to John in the New Testament. It marked Ted Neely's return to the cast. He reprised the role of Jesus Christ, the very role he held when the play first toured in 1972. Neither Neely's voice or acting has dwindled over the years. During solos, such as "Poor Jerusalem" and "The Garden," Neeley was outstanding.

He was not the only member of the 24-person cast to stand out, however. Corey Glover, from the 80's rock band Living Colour, gave a performance as Judas that was second only to Neeley. Glover's rock 'n' roll singing experience worked flawlessly with the rock 'n' roll orchestra. Glover commanded the entire stage, going back and forth, filling the scenes but simple set design. Contrary to what many people believe, Glover is not related to the film actor Danny Glover, but after his performance in "Jesus Christ Superstar," Corey proved he too could be a leading film actor.

Tiffini Dodson's performance as Mary Magdalene was well acted, but she came across more as mother figure than anything else. Her voice accompanied Neeley's well during their duet in the scene, "I Didn't Know How to Love Him."

At first glance, Bill Stabile's set came across as too simple, but once the play began and the actors went back and forth, the set's simplicity was an asset. During different scenes throughout the play a backdrop would change from all black to being star filled. The scene, "The Arrest," had a blown up image of the moon on the backdrop.

The scenes with Jesus, the Apostles and their female friends featured a fog machine and strobe lights, and during scenes focused around the Romans the fog machine was heavily used. In the play, these scenes were accompanied by red lighting to highlight the evil nature of the Romans.

Overall, the costumes were well done. Everyone's costume, except for King Herod's (Aaron Fukas), was historically accurate. Herod's costume was more like Joseph's from the previous play at the Mullins Center, "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat." The scene, "Superstar," also featured an interesting choice in wardrobe. Glover returned to the stage in a 70's style white disco suit with backup soul singers in dresses similarly styled for a high school prom.

Seventies style suits are not, however, totally inaccurate for the play itself. It is a rock 'n' roll opera from the 70's and includes many references to the time period often crossing the boundary from the original. One time in particular was when the cast sang the song, "What's the Buzz?"

The rock 'n' roll music in the play performed live in the orchestra pit was exciting. The guitar solos were more elaborate than solos heard echoing from the Calvin Theater in Northampton. The drumming was mostly subdued, but used effectively when needed.

Some of the scenes' music had more of a folk sound with harmonizing vocals by the entire cast. Sometimes the entire song sounded as if it was part of a Simon and Garfunkle album. But most of the time the harmonizing and acoustic guitar was thrown in the middle of a heavier rock song, resulting in a sound more like Judas Priest.

If this tour truly is Ted Neely's last hurrah on stage as he is claiming it may be, then this is the tour to go out on. "Jesus Christ Superstar" is not just for the Christians, it is for anyone who enjoys quality theater.

Tim McCall can be reached at tmccall@student.umass.edu.

Ted Neely, above, reprises his role as Jesus Christ Superstar in the Tim Rice/Andrew Lloyd Webber musical of the same name. He first played the role in the 1972 American tour and has hinted that this tour will be the end of his stage career.

Lark String Quartet teaches

The Lark String Quartet, which features Maria Bachmann and Deborah Buck, violin, Kathryn Lockwood, viola, and Astrid Schween, cello, taught a Masterclass yesterday at Bezanson Recital Hall that was free and open to the public.

MONEY FOR COLLEGE
NOW
Because Aunt Joan needed more Botox®.
She got a facelift, you got the tuition bill.
Not to worry a Campus Door student loan can cover up to 100% of your education costs, with online approval in less than a minute.
All without the painful side effects.
campusdoor.com
CAMPUSDOOR
GREAT FUTURES START HERE

EXPERIENCE
Gained only through working at The Massachusetts Daily Collegian as a Fall 2007 semester Advertising Representative
If interested please pick up an application at the Daily Collegian Office located in the Campus Center basement or contact Alex Bender at ebender@student.umass.edu

UM heads to New York to face Hobart

M. LAX from page 14

it makes his team more difficult to defend. He pointed to his previous teams that had multiple 30-goal scorers, something that's unlikely to repeat given the small number of games remaining.

After the win over the Red Storm the last time out, both Garber and attackman Tim Balise said the key to UMass scoring goals (it has only scored 10 goals three times this season) is having everybody playing together. Then, after practice yesterday, Cannella stressed that working as a team involves a lot of off-ball movement.

"Very important," Cannella said of off-ball movement. "It always has been for us."

Sophomore attackman Jim Connolly (second in goals with 15) took Cannella at his word against St. John's. Perhaps more than any other game this season, it appeared Connolly was making a conscience effort to make cuts when he didn't have the ball.

The middle goal of his natural hat trick was scored when Connolly attacked the net. He cut in the middle of the field and took a pass from midfielder Brian Jacovina.

Jon Pelland can be reached at jpelland@student.umass.edu.

Minutewomen defeat Eagles

SOFTBALL from page 14

left fielder Danielle Pandolfo dropped a fly ball off the bat of UMass junior Stacey Cullington to load the bases.

Junior Lauren Proctor and sophomore Whitney Mollica both failed to make the Eagles pay for their mistakes. Proctor lined out to the third baseman Taylor Peyton, then on a 3-1 count, Mollica popped out to shortstop.

Nearly out of the jam, Thompson and UMass senior Amanda Acampora battled to a full count. On the payoff pitch, Acampora turned Thompson's offering, lining it over the left field fence and putting the Minutewomen up 4-0.

Acampora's homer gives her five on the season, good enough for second on the team behind Cullington's seven.

The BC defense let its pitcher down once again in the top of the third. This time, a miscue by BC first baseman Dani Weir made way for a UMass rally. After a walk to Proctor, Mollica attempted to move her to second with a sacrifice bunt. Weir fielded the bunt, but threw the ball away, allowing both runners to advance safely.

With the bases loaded, Savana Lloyd — who took over for Thompson after the Acampora grand slam in the first — drew a popup from freshman Carly Normandin and sophomore Samantha Salato, who pinch-hit for sophomore Jessica Serio, struck out looking. But the Minutewomen benefited from more poor play by the Eagles. A wild pitch scored Proctor and put UMass on top 5-0.

The next batter, freshman Whitney Williams singled on a 2-1 pitch, scoring Teman and senior Michea Holness, who ran for Acampora.

The three-run inning put a cap on the UMass offense for the day and would prove to hold up.

Williams raised her batting average to .320 on the season. That places her third on the team — she is fifth on the Minutewomen in on-base percentage (.375).

Yesterday was Normandin's first action in some time. The freshman's performance improved in the last few team workouts. Although she went 0-for-2 at the plate, her showing encouraged the UMass skipper.

"I like what she's been doing in practice," Sortino said. "She didn't have the results to show for it. But she looked really strong at the plate. She's been putting her offensive game together and I wanted to give her a shot at it. I think she did a pretty good job."

The lone BC run came in the bottom of the fourth inning. BC's second leading hitter, Jenna Macchi stepped to the plate with a one out. She took the first pitch she saw from Sanders over the left field wall. The homer gives her four on the season which is also good enough for second on the BC roster.

Joe Meloni can be reached at jmeloni@student.umass.edu. Log on to the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.

UMass faces harsh reality

Now fighting for its postseason lives after strong start to 2007

By Kevin Dooley
Collegian Staff

It's safe to say that after 12 games, it's been a tale of two seasons for the 2007 edition of the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team.

On March 13, the Minutewomen made their way back onto the national scene, ranking 20th in the nation and off to their best start since the 2003 season with a 4-2 record. Indeed, there was plenty of optimism and high hopes in Amherst.

Fast-forward to a month later and that optimism has been replaced by the grim reality that the Minutewomen find themselves in, fighting for their postseason lives. A season which was shaping up to be a historic one is slowly slipping away to one defined by heartbreaking losses and missed opportunities.

UMass has dropped its last three games and five of its last six contests. If not for an overtime goal over Boston College on March 25, the Minutewomen would be currently riding a six-game losing streak. The last time UMass lost six consecutive games in one season was in 1989.

But despite the sub par 5-7 overall record, the record which UMass has to be most concerned about right now is an 0-2 start to the Atlantic 10 part of the season — the second straight year the Minutewomen have dropped their opening two games of the conference schedule.

Last year, the team won four of its last five games to secure the final spot in the A-10 tournament. This year's squad will have to repeat its late-season heroics from a year ago if they want a shot at advancing to postseason play for the eighth time in nine seasons.

"I think we gave ourselves opportunities in the first six games," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said. "Right now we are making things harder for ourselves. We're turning the ball over and we're not taking the shots we want to take. We're basically letting other teams dictate the way we play rather than us dictating the way we want to play. We're just going to try to work on game situations in practice and hopefully if we're in the same types of positions to win we were in last week we'll come out on top.

"It's been tough on the team because these games have been really close," Venechanos added. "The details really matter when games are close and each possession is really crucial. We play with a sense of urgency when we are down in games or when it's tied but we don't have that urgency when we're leading."

Second Half Woes

It's been well documented that the Minutewomen have started the second half of the season on the wrong foot and the trend continued this past weekend against the Temple Owls and the George Washington Colonials.

The Minutewomen allowed eight goals in the second frame against the Owls last Friday in an 11-10 defeat, and came out flat in the second half against the Colonials Sunday as well, surrendering five goals to George Washington en route to a 10-7 loss.

UMass LAX

"It just comes down to knowing how to win and knowing how to put teams away and we don't know how to do that yet," Venechanos said. "We try to simulate these same kinds of situations in practice and we're just going to have to keep on doing it more."

The Venechanos era got off to a heartbreaking start back on Feb. 21, when the Minutewomen jumped out to a 5-0 lead over Holy Cross, only to see the Crusaders notch seven of the eight goals scored in the second half to secure a 7-6 win.

In fact, the Minutewomen have outscored opponents in the second half in only four games this season and are being out shot in the second half of games 144-128.

What More Can Be Said?

Even if junior attacker Kathleen Typadis fails to score another goal in her time left donning the maroon and white, she has already left a worthy legacy.

While that scenario playing out is highly unlikely, a continuing rewriting of the record book is not. Typadis, who has the seventh longest active scoring streak in the country at 36 games, needs just one more goal to rank fourth all-time in career goals scored.

In addition, she is currently 13 goals shy of moving ahead of Sue Murphy for second all-time on that list. Murphy, who is now head coach of the Richmond Spiders, leads her team into Amherst Sunday hoping they can be the first team in two years to keep Typadis off the scoreboard.

Lending a Helping Hand

Junior Kristina Twichell leads the team in assists with 13 and is now just five assists shy of cracking UMass' Top 10 single-season assist club.

Twichell ranks fourth in the A-10 in assists and has a career 21 assists to her credit.

"She really has great vision on the field," Venechanos said. "She definitely finds the seams well and she works well with Kathleen [Typadis] and Holly [Drown] and she's just the ultimate team player. She has good stick work and she's definitely putting herself in a good position to pass. Right now teams are targeting other players so that is giving her opportunities to pass."

Kevin Dooley can be reached at kdooley@student.umass.edu.

Junior Kristina Twichell (left) ranks fourth on the Minutewomen in scoring with 20 points on seven goals and 13 assists.

Trading first pick would be wise move

RICE from page 14

sion team in 2002, but recently released him after trading for Atlanta's Matt Schaub (a three-year backup to Michael Vick). The Texans opted against taking Reggie Bush last year and instead took Mario Williams (who certainly was more of a need-based pick than Bush would have been).

Williams' rookie campaign was a sub-stellar one (47 tackles, 4.5 sacks, one fumble recovery), however, there are doubts about whether he is the type of "sure-thing" defensive player that he was originally touted as.

You could even go back to the mid-90s, when Cincinnati took defensive tackle Dan Wilkinson and running back Ki-Jana Carter first overall in back-to-back drafts in 1994 and 1995. Wilkinson has bounced around the league as a marginal starter, and Carter may be the biggest bust of a No. 1 pick in the history of the draft.

The Chargers, however, seemed to have figured it out. In 2001, Michael Vick left Virginia Tech and was considered the next big thing in professional football. The Chargers pursued him hard in the months prior to Draft Day, but could not settle on a contract agreement and ended up trading down to the fifth overall pick, giving the top spot to Atlanta.

By the way, Vick the "coach killer" is on his third head coach since entering the league and can't manage to keep his completion percentage in the 60s. Meanwhile, the Chargers used the fifth pick on some guy named LaDainian Tomlinson, who's turned out OK.

Then, with the first pick in the second round, San Diego snatched up Purdue's Drew Brees — who happens to be a two-time Pro Bowl quarterback, now with the Saints, who happen to play Vick's Falcons twice a year (I believe New Orleans won that division last season). And wide receiver-kick returner Tim Dwight (sent to San Diego in the same deal) was no slouch for the Chargers for four seasons either.

The Chargers went 12-4 a year later, but fell off again, and were given the top pick in 2004. They originally selected Eli Manning, but knew from the start the younger Manning brother would never don the Lightning Bolt on his helmet.

The Giants took Philip Rivers at No. 4, and the teams swapped their picks. Manning is yet another struggling quarterback who has given more than one head coach migraines, whereas Rivers led the Bolts to a 14-2 record in his first year as a starter in 2006.

San Diego also got an early third-round pick in the deal, which it spent on Pro Bowl kicker Nate Kaeding.

So, while the Browns, Texans, Falcons and Giants are struggling to prove that they made the right decision with their top overall picks (six players amongst the four teams), the Chargers have developed two Pro Bowl quarterbacks, a Pro Bowl kicker and the best running back in the game today, by stepping down from the top spot in the draft.

The risk-reward of drafting first overall just simply isn't worth it. If you pick wrong, you become a fool in the sports world. If you pick right, well, you damn well better pick right (no one thinks the Colts are geniuses for taking Peyton Manning with the top pick in 1998).

I guess Chargers general manager A.J. Smith must be doing something right (and maybe the problem in the playoffs actually was former head coach Marty Schottenheimer).

So, Mr. Davis, it's still your move. The fate of the Silver and Black rests in your hands on April 28.

Will we hear Commission Goodell say, "With the first pick in the 2007 NFL Draft, the Raiders select JaMarcus Russel, quarterback, Louisiana State?"

Or will it be "... Calvin Johnson, wide receiver, Georgia Tech?"

Well, Mr. Davis, if you're willing to learn from recent history, the first thing Commissioner Goodell announces on Draft Day should be a trade of your coveted top selection.

Jeremy Rice is a Collegian Columnist. He can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu.

MOVING ON?
POTTER'S
AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Save 10% off your truck or cargo van rental
Coupon must be presented at time of payroll and reservation
Coupon applies to Potter's vehicles only
• Round Trip Rentals to and from Boston and New York
• One Way Rentals
• Hand Trucks & Furniture Pads Available for Rent
• Boxes & Moving Accessories Available for Sale
The Economical Way To Move
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.pottersauto.com

SKYPLEX
SPRINGFIELD'S HOTTEST NIGHTCLUB
3 CLUBS & 3 DJ'S ALL UNDER ONE ROOF!!!
NJ & NYC NIGHTLIFE COMES TO SPRINGFIELD
Thursday - 18+ College Night "Hot Body Contest"
Friday - 18+ "Underground Electronic Dance Party" Downstairs
"Top 40" Upstairs
Saturday - 21+ "Party VIP Style"
WANTED: Hip Young Promoters/Hosts • Earn $$$$
Calling all DJ's
Do you do campus and house parties? Looking for a chance to work at the HOTTEST Nightclub? Here's your chance to become a Club DJ! Signup online at www.info.skyplex.us
18+ $2.00 off admission before midnight with this ad
21+ FREE admission before midnight with this ad
code:umass
10 Stearns Square Springfield, MA 413-827-9000

SCHOOL OF GRADUATE STUDIES
OPEN HOUSE
ADANTI STUDENT CENTER | THURSDAY
SOUTHERN CONNECTICUT STATE UNIVERSITY | APRIL 19, 2007
3:00 - 7:00 PM
• Meet with graduate faculty from more than 40 areas of study
• Find out about financial aid and graduate assistantships
• Get details on career services and living on campus
• Choose from 55 graduate programs, including master's degree programs, sixth-year certificates, and the Ed.D.
SCHOOL OF ARTS & SCIENCES
SCHOOL OF BUSINESS
SCHOOL OF COMMUNICATION, INFORMATION & LIBRARY SCIENCE
SCHOOL OF EDUCATION
SCHOOL OF HEALTH & HUMAN SERVICES
Southern Connecticut State University
SCSU
New Haven, Connecticut
(800) 4SCSU01 or 203-392-5240
Register for the Open House at www.gradstudies.SouthernCT.edu

Spiess makes UMass history

Breaks All-Time singles win record with 64th career win

BY JUSTIN MCGRAIL
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

It was a rough but historic day for the Massachusetts women's tennis team as its record improved to 10-7 with a 4-3 victory over Quinnipiac University. Senior Michele Spiess broke the All-Time record for singles wins in university history, which was previously held by Jackie Braunstein.

"It was a difficult match," UMass coach Judy Dixon said. "The weather was awful."

The team has been practicing outside in 45 degree weather which limited them to only one hour-long practice two days ago, and an hour and a half practice the day before. The cancellation of the Boston University match only made things worse.

"It was too long of a wait," Dixon said. "It was hard to get momentum and it's been too cold out."

That was Dixon's description of the layoff and practices the team has had since the BU cancellation. Not only was the layoff hurting the team, but the level of competition from Quinnipiac University made the match even tougher.

"They always fight hard," Dixon said. "Whenever we play them we have to grind out a win."

The Minutewomen did just that and they had to do it without one of their best players, Junior Masha Pozar was having an outstanding season when she unexpectedly got injured.

"She was walking across the parking lot to get in the van and her back started to spasm," Dixon said.

The spasms kept her from playing in her singles match. She did play in her doubles but could "barely walk" afterwards. But that wasn't the story of the day.

The biggest storyline at the match was undoubtedly Michele Spiess. Spiess tied the record against Florida Atlantic two weeks ago, but wasn't able to break it against Richmond or Old Dominion. She finally got the monkey off her back yesterday against Quinnipiac.

What makes this record even more impressive is that she did it in only three years. She transferred to UMass from Louisville for her sophomore year. She went up against Gabby Pasternak from QU and was able to win 6-1 and 6-2 to break the record.

"It was a good match for me," Spiess said. "I played really well today. I've had a lot of pressure. Now all the pressure is off. It's just good to be the all-time winner at UMass. I'm very happy right now."

Dixon described Spiess as tense, but that's gone now that she's broken the record.

That wasn't her only win of the match though. She teamed with Pozar to defeat Pasternak and Mary Wilson, 8-6.

Spiess' play seemed to inspire the rest of the team to do well. After Pozar had to withdraw because of back spasms, and Ellen de Jong's loss, Maude Lecluyse and Stephanie Gimenez stepped up to win their matches.

Lecluyse won 6-1, 7-6 (7-5) and Gimenez 7-5, 6-3. The women split the singles matches with QU but got the upperhand in the doubles match.

Spiess and Pozar won along with Stephanie Gimenez and Laura Murillo. Gimenez and Murillo won 9-7 to take two of three doubles matches from QU and ultimately won the match. Spiess is in the doubles record book as well. She is currently ranked third all-time in doubles win. She started the season in eighth place in the record books, but has risen up to third over the course of the spring.

A lot of factors went into the UMass win yesterday, some good and some bad. Bad weather and a star player going down looked to hamper the team. Michelle Spiess was able to overcome the pressure of breaking a university record and other teammates were able to step up when it was needed and it led to an important win.

Justin McGrail can be reached at jsmcgrail@student.umass.edu.

COLLEGIAN/UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Senior Michele Spiess broke UMass' All-Time singles win record in the Minutewomen's 4-3 win over Quinnipiac on Wednesday. Spiess recorded her 64th career singles win at UMass after transferring from Louisville after her freshman year.

Bonnies remain top team in A-10

COLLEGIAN/TEMPLE SPORTS INFORMATION

Temple senior captain Allison Frengs was named the Atlantic 10 Co-Player of the Week on Monday after scoring four goals last week.

BY MELISSA TURTINEN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The St. Bonaventure Bonnies are leading the Atlantic 10 conference with a 3-0 record to date. Last Tuesday, the Bonnies took on Duquesne and won 15-9, allowing them to control the first place position in the conference.

Going into the second half of the game, the Bonnies were winning 5-3. The second half played out differently when Duquesne came back and tied the game up. The team's shot accuracy helped them out at the end of the game. They scored on eight of their 12 shots.

A-10 Lax

The team will have a week off until it plays Binghamton at home on Tuesday, April 17.

RICHMOND LOSES TO TEMPLE FOR FIRST TIME SINCE 2004

Richmond played Temple on April 8 and lost, 9-8. This was the first time Temple beat Richmond since April 25, 2004. Richmond, nationally ranked No. 20, moved to a 2-1 record and is ranked third in A-10 play.

Richmond started the Sunday afternoon game with a 7-2 lead three minutes into the second half. Temple proved strong and came back to win the game.

Temple is ranked second in the A-10, just behind St. Bonaventure.

GEORGE WASHINGTON RANKED FOURTH

George Washington has a 1-1 conference record and is ranked fourth in the conference.

GW defeated UMass on April 8 by a score of 10-7. Massachusetts took control during the beginning of the game, scoring two goals in the first three minutes. In the last 43 minutes of play, GW was able to come back and beat the Minutewomen to control their fourth place ranking in the A-10.

GW failed to beat No. 20 Richmond, however. The Colonials were able to come back from a five-goal deficit against Richmond early in the second half of the April 1 game. Richmond came back strong and beat GW 10-7. This was the first A-10 conference game for both teams.

George Washington has a big week coming up when it takes on LaSalle Friday and Temple on Saturday.

PLAYERS OF THE WEEK

George Washington junior defender Katelyn Honeyford and Temple senior midfielder Allison Frengs were named this week's Players of the Week.

Katelyn Honeyford scored her career-best four goals during George Washington's 10-7 win at UMass on April 8. During this match, Honeyford had eight ground balls and seven caused turnovers. To date, Honeyford has 65 career turnovers.

Allison Frengs scored four goals, including the game winner, to stay undefeated in the A-10. She scored the game winning goal in Temple's 11-10 win against UMass on April 5. This goal ended Temple's three-game losing streak. During the April 7 game against Richmond, Frengs scored three goals to allow Temple to beat the Spiders.

ROOKIE OF THE WEEK

Duquesne freshman midfielder Meghan Frederick was named Rookie of the Week. She scored a game-high four goals in Duquesne's 15-5 win over Canisius on April 5. She also had a game-best six shots on goal, one turnover and one ground ball.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at Mturtine@student.umass.edu

LOOKING FOR A MOTEL WHERE YOU CAN REST IN PEACE?

At the Pinewood Motel we feature:

- Free Movies
- A Staff That's Up To Snuff
- Killer Views

VACANCY
SCREEN GEMS PRESENTS A HAL LIEBERMAN COMPANY PRODUCTION
"VACANCY" LUKE WILSON KATE BECKINSALE PAUL HASLINGER
GLENN S. GAINOR STACY KOLKER CRAMER BRIAN PASCHAL
HAL LIEBERMAN NIMROD ANTAL
MARK L. SMITH
R RESTRICTED
BRUTAL VIOLENCE AND TERROR, BRIEF NUDITY AND LANGUAGE
sony.com/Vacancy

For Reservations Please Call
1-888-9-VACANCY
(Toll Free)

FIND OUT WHY EVERYONE IS DYING TO STAY HERE!

You got something to say?

Want to share your opinion?

Why dont you visit the Daily Collegian Sports Blog?

DailyCollegianSports dot Blogspot dot com

Let us know what you think!

Seven O's

EVERY WEDNESDAY:
♦ KARAOKE ♦
♦ LIVE BANDS ♦
FRIDAY, APRIL 13TH, 2007:
STATE YOUR MIND
SATURDAY, APRIL 14TH, 2007:
FOUR ON THE FLOOR
SUNDAY, APRIL 15TH, 2007:
VALLEY POKER @ 6PM
♦ STUDENT BAND WANTED ♦
NEED A PLACE TO PLAY? COME TO SEVEN O's!
ROUTE 116, 330 AMHERST RD SUNDERLAND, MA 01375 (413) 665-8788
3 PM TO 1 AM M-F 1 PM TO 1 AM SAT&SUN
NEXT TO CLIFFSIDE APTS.

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

7	5			3		9
			6	7	1
							7
9					6	2	1	5
	6						9
3	2	1	5					8
	7
				2	1	9
		2		4			6	3

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 German subs
7 Verbal sigh
11 One of those girls
14 Top-notch
15 Made haste
16 Yeoman's yup
17 New York City district
18 J.R.'s missis
20 Totally nonreactive
22 Ramsack
23 Tot's bed
26 Four-letter wor
29 Spit out
30 The man in question
31 Newcomer
33 Vietnamese holidays
34 Little devil
35 "American Mercury" found
37 Looked furtively
39 G and Cheshire
42 Tart fruit
45 Debt reminder
47 Accurate
49 Conan or Pat
50 Blighted tree
51 Fleming and McKellen
52 Consenting votes
53 Inquires
54 Gives out
56 Nostril
59 Slobbering
62 Get at
66 Face in the mirror?
67 Cosmetics ingredient
68 Settle down!
69 H. Ross Perot company
70 Divided avenue abbr.
71 Being

DOWN
1 Word of disgust
2 Lingerie item
3 Scull's propeller
4 Off-the-cuff comment
5 Twist 12 and 20
6 Uniform
7 Being raised
8 Comic Costello
9 Metric measure
10 Soothsayer
11 Old British coins
12 Button slot
13 Takes up again
19 Eavesdrop
21 Chamber
23 Wedge shot
24 Coating of ice
25 Lacking money
27 Foil material
28 Try to rattle a performer
31 Wife of Cronus
32 Mutual assistance network
36 Very sharp
38 Violet
40 Egg part
41 Tidals
43 Homer's dad
44 Bombed from the air, British style
45 City on the Arno
47 Color fabric
60s style
48 Exemplar of stiffness
53 Wide necktie
55 Hefty slice
57 Try to outrun
58 PC image
60 Unkindly
61 Oct. follower
63 Actor Wallach
64 Pose
65 Pig's digs.

the Moan and Dove

you drank 5,000 pints during our $3 draft week.

that's f##king teamwork.

themoananddove.com
460 West St. • Rte 116
Amherst, MA • 256-1710
3pm 'til 1 am every day

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Wilderness is not a luxury but a necessity of the human spirit."

-Edward Abbey

PAUL BY BILLY O'KEEFE

HOW'S THE BUSINESS-OWNING BUSINESS?
SWEET! MY EMPLOYEE DOES THE HEAVY LIFTING AND I JUST SIT BACK, WORK A COUPLE OF HOURS HERE AND THERE, NEVER GET DRESSED, AND COLLECT THE SWEET CASH.
WOW, THAT DIDN'T TAKE LONG. YOU SOUND LIKE MANAGEMENT ALREADY.
I'M NOT SURE IT'S AWESOME.
KNOW ISN'T IT AWESOME?
LET ME ASSURE YOU, THEN—IT IS. HAVE FUN AT WORK? NICE PANTSUIT!

TWO DUDES BY AARON WARNER

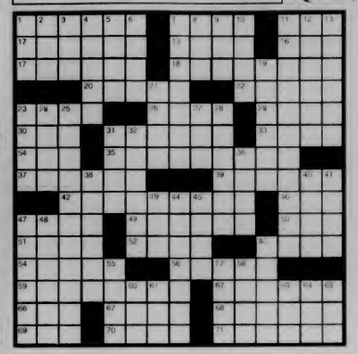
CLIP-A-TIP COLLEGE COUPON
DOUBLE THE GRADE FOR HALF THE WORK
Before writing a term paper, choose a topic that can be used in various classes.
FOR MUSIC HISTORY AND WESTERN POLITICS, I WROTE WHAT WOULD HAPPEN IF "AEROSMITH" WAS PRESIDENT.
SWEET, DUDE.
PRESS ADVICE

A COLLEGE GIRL NAMED JOE BY AARON WARNER

TODAY'S TEST WILL BE POSTPONED DUE TO A MYSTERIOUS ACCIDENT.
MY ASSISTANT MOONLIGHTS AS A MAGICIAN'S ASSISTANT IN A DISAPPEARING ACT.
I DIDN'T KNOW YOU HAVE AN ASSISTANT.
I DON'T ANYMORE.

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK BY JOSH SHALEK

My hair gets so flat after wearing my hat
Flatter than the state of Kansas. Flatter than bread without yeast
Flatter than a bug under your shoe. Flat
That's all I got for today



HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Ashlee Simpson is to Jessica Simpson as chickens are to turkeys.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Before you judge Britney Spears, think of all the days you forgot underpants.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Alex Mack never used her ability to turn into goo for evil and neither should you.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Locate your nearest art gallery, put up your periscope and check it out.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Your gonads are tinier than those of the Bee-Gee's.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Make all large downpayments in the form of cash so you can act like a mobster.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Act as your own announcer, speak in the third person and narrate all your actions.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Prince never really offered a clear example of what doves sound like when they cry.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
It's impressive to know the alphabet backwards but you need to learn it forward first.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
It's all fun and games until somebody kidnaps a rabid raccoon named Dennis.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
If you have no job you get to be your own employee of the month every month. Yay!

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
If you're wondering what God sounds like it's probably a lot like Christopher Walken.

Chicago Pizzaria
Free Delivery!
PIZZA - CALZONES - SUBS - WRAPS
SALADS - PASTA - DINNERS
RIBS - SEAFOOD - SLICES
PARTY SIZE PIZZA NOW AVAILABLE!
CALZONE SLICES...LIKE NO OTHER!
NOW OPEN FOR LUNCH!
HOURS
Sun-Wed: 11am-2am
Thurs-Sat: 11am-3am
Order For DELIVERY or PICK-UP
(413) 549-6073
150 Fearing Street
Next to Patterson Dorm
Amherst, MA 01002

Continuing & Professional Education
UMass Amherst Summer 2007
Here are a few of the many Gen Ed classes offered this summer
Online
• English 132: Man and Woman in Literature
• Psych 350: Child Psychology
On Campus
• Math 131: Calculus I
• Art 104: Basic Studio Drawing
I: June 4 – July 2
II: July 6 – August 22
Register Now!
By visiting us at www.umassonline.net

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Like no other course, Army ROTC Minor in Leadership and get paid for it! Graduate as an Army Officer full time/part time after college www.umass.edu/armyrotc

2 bedroom apartment in Brandywine take over starting June 1st on bus route for more information call Nicole at 508-654-6522

Mill Valley Estates APARTMENT FOR RENT 2 bedroom $1125, 3 bedroom $1425, 4 bedroom $2175 Accepting Applications, 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winnco.com

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

ANNOUNCEMENTS

28 Stockbridge st: 4 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage, 1.5 Mi to campus! $2,900/Mo www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

EMPLOYMENT

Moving: Local Moving Company looking for self motivated individuals, part-time positions available immediately. Weekday availability a plus. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call (413) 584-4746

Outdoor Recreation Jobs Rafting guides full or part time Massachusetts or Maine. Will train! Contact www.moxierafting.com 800-866-6943

EMPLOYMENT

Summer on Cape Cod Rent & utilities paid in exchange for providing transportation for teen. Easy walking distance to downtown & beaches, awenkozma@aol.com

Full time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office, $9.50/hour Applications available at 235 Whitmore and are due April 13th.

Line-cooks needed Full-time Part-time available. Apply in person Amherst Brewing Co. 24 N. Pleasant st.

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

Premium skin care and wellness Excellent training and benefits, http://newengland.myarbonne.com

Attention All Juniors and Seniors! The deadline is now extended to april 13th to apply to become a Legal Assistant with the Student Legal Services Office. Earn up to 12 undergraduate credits while gaining valuable experience in the legal field. Contact us at 545-1995 or stop by our office at 922 Campus Center.

HOUSING

Amherst Beautiful quiet house great location. Need car. With Nice guy and daughter. Perfect for single/couple. Call Jonathan for details 413-222-3006 or 413-253-2535

Amherst nice house on bus route to all colleges. 2 rooms available immediately. Each 450 mo + electric. Call Ally 413-253-4929 leave message or call 413-626-7491 Roommate Wanted

Cape Cod Seeking summer roommates starting 6/10 Yarmouth, MA near beach Female only. 617-519-0178

SERVICES

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992. www.tapestryhealth.com

SERVICES

Do you need help with filling out Immigration forms? If you want legal advise contact the Student Legal Services Office at 922 Campus Center or call 545-1995

SUMMER SUBLET

Alpine Commons apartment June-August 15th $2050/month includes utilities. 413.204.9519 or jennaw@student.umass.edu

Submitting a classified is easy!

Stop the Collegian office in the Campus Center basement or Call 413-545-3500 and speak to a classified advertising executive. Or submit your classified online at www.dailycollegian.com.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, APRIL 12, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Rolling Along

Senior Amanda Acampora went 2-for-3 with a home run in UMass' 7-1 win over Boston College on Wednesday in Chesnut Hill. The Minutewomen continue their eight-game road trip when they travel to Charlotte to face the 49ers on Friday at 4 p.m.

Victory over Boston College extends win streak to nine

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Freshman Bailey Sanders made her first appearance since April 3 in the Massachusetts softball team's (20-12-1, 6-0 Atlantic 10) 7-1 win at Boston College yesterday.

UMass	7
BC	1

The rookie scattered two hits over seven innings en route to her seventh complete game of the season. She also struck out five while walking two batters.

BC struggled to do much of anything against Sanders, as she didn't allow a hit until the fourth inning. Her win improves her record to 5-4 on the season. Her earned run average now sits at 3.39 after allowing one run in her last nine innings pitched.

"I thought she moved the ball around very effectively," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "I thought she put herself in a situation where she was ahead or at least even [in the count]. She threw 72 pitches to get 21 outs, that's just outstanding. That's a very low pitch count."

The Minutewomen's next action is this weekend. They head to North Carolina for a pair of games with A-10 foe Charlotte.

While they managed to put seven runs on the board, the Minutewomen didn't have the type of offensive performance they'd managed over the last two series. UMass had just six hits in the game, but BC made five errors leading to four unearned runs for the Minutewomen.

The Eagles put themselves at a deficit in the first inning with some sloppy play and bad luck.

BC starter Britney Thompson hit UMass senior Amanda Morin on 1-2 pitch. Thompson then made an error on a Candice Molinari comebacker and

See SOFTBALL on page 11

UMass in search of third straight win

BY JON PELLAND
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In this instance, one is better than two, three or even four. The old "two heads is better than one" line doesn't apply when talking about an opposition's scorers. Massachusetts men's lacrosse coach Greg Cannella knows this and would much rather see his team have to deal with one scorer each weekend.

That's exactly what the Minutemen (4-5, 2-1 LCAC) will face this weekend as they travel to Geneva, N.Y., to square off with Hobart. The game has been moved to 12 p.m. instead of its originally scheduled 1 p.m. slot.

The Statesmen (4-5, 1-3 LCAC) boast a number of viable scoring threats, led by one prolific scorer. In this case it is junior attackman, Daryl Veltman. With 27 goals through nine games this season, Veltman is easily the No. 1 scoring threat for Hobart.

Many of Veltman's three goals per game this season have been helped by the play of fellow attackman Jamie Kirk. His 29 assists put him at the top of the Statesmen's scoring list. He also has eight goals.

Those two, paired with Jeff Colburn (16 goals), give Hobart a very formidable offensive attack. They move the ball well between them, setting each other up for chances.

"It's hard to shutdown six guys because somebody's going to wind up with the ball in their stick and with an opportunity to score," Cannella said. "They are very explosive."

It's hard to pinpoint what's giving Hobart trouble with consistency this year. It has better statistics than its opponent in goals scored (217-195), goals per game (11.19-9.65) and shooting percentage (28.6-27.6), but still has a sub-.500 record.

That wasn't helped with a loss to Penn State the last time out, 12-7. The Nittany Lion defense shut down Veltman, allowing him to score just one goal on the afternoon.

PSU and Hobart traded scores until the former took control late in the game. The Nittany Lions reeled off six straight goals between the middle of the third quarter and the end of regulation. That streak erased a 7-6 deficit and led to the 12-7 victory.

In that respect, that game was very similar to the one UMass and St. John's played in Amherst last Saturday. The Minutemen used a five-goal run to erase a deficit. They never relinquished the lead once taking it with the streak's fourth score. UMass had been down by three at halftime when the run started.

UMass and Hobart are very different teams. The Minutemen rely heavily on their defense. They don't score as much as Hobart (7.98 per game), but they also don't give up as many scores either (5.44).

The Minutemen's offense has seen its scoring spread out among a few different players. Senior captain Brett Garber leads in both points and goals as a midfielder. His offense has exploded this season with 18 goals to go along with four assists. Garber already has John but tricks this season after recording just three in his previous three years at Amherst.

Cantella said it's nice to have a bunch of scoring options because

See M. LAX on page 11

Senior midfielder Andrew Recchione recorded one assist in UMass' 11-7 win over St. John's on Saturday. The Minutemen look for their third win in a row when they meet Hobart this Saturday at noon. Saturday's win marked the first time this season the Maroon and White won two games in a row.

Draft history proves Raiders would be wise to deal pick

It has to be the toughest decision an NFL general manager could make during the offseason. You've got the first overall pick in the draft. It's yours to do whatever you want.

That abysmal season last year seems like decades ago, because now you have in your hands that coveted No. 1. But if you're smart, you'll trade it away to the highest bidder because in the long run, you don't want it.

You could take any player you want with that first pick. The franchise quarterback, the next "freak" wide receiver, or the closest pick to a "sure-thing" defensive player, wherever your team has a big need, it's filled as soon as NFL Commissioner Roger Goodell utters those famous words: "With the first pick in the 2007 NFL Draft, the Oakland Raiders select."

Al Davis' franchise has been in shambles since Bill Callahan took Jon Gruden's old squad to the Super Bowl and got embarrassed by Gruden's new squad in Tampa Bay.

Oakland is now on its third head coach since Callahan was fired, and after one of the worst seasons in NFL history, the Raiders have the top pick in the draft and can start rebuilding.

But where do you begin? Is quarterback JaMarcus Russell the long-term solution at quarterback for the Silver and Black? Randy Moss and Jerry Porter aren't exactly ecstatic to be Raiders any more, so may be wide receiver Calvin Johnson – generally considered to be the best overall talent – is the right choice for you, Mr. Davis.

Jeremy Rice

Well, as it turns out, the best choice for Al Davis and the Raiders is no choice at all. Oakland should trade away the top overall choice for multiple first-rounders or another collection of picks.

No team really wants to give up that top choice just to stockpile picks (Dan Snyder and the Washington Redskins don't even hang on to their original ones). However, if Davis wants to find out how to handle the No. 1 overall selection the right way, all he needs to do is take a drive down Interstate 5, past his old stomping grounds in Los Angeles, to the San Diego Chargers' headquarters.

Since 1999, three teams have earned the top pick in the draft on two different occasions: the Cleveland Browns in 1999 (when they re-entered the league) and 2000, the Houston Texans in 2002 and 2006, and San Diego (2001, 2004).

Cleveland tried rebuilding its franchise with back-to-back No. 1's. They took Kentucky's Tim Couch (no longer in the league) and Penn State's Courtney Brown (released by Denver this offseason).

Houston picked quarterback David Carr first overall as an expan-

See RICE on page 11

Al Davis and the Oakland Raiders have the first pick in the 2007 NFL Draft. They are reportedly interested in former LSU quarterback JaMarcus Russell. The Draft will be held on April 28 in New York City.

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

RAIN : HI: 46 LO: 33 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, APRIL 13, 2007

UMASS HOSTS G. WASHINGTON PAGE 10

CHRIS PAIN TO SPEAK AT SMITH COLLEGE PAGE 6

College of Humanities and Fine Arts facing financial crisis

BY WILL MCGUINNESS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

As students watch their tuition rise, the College of the Humanities and Fine Arts at the University of Massachusetts is trying to find ways to deal with a shrinking budget.

A $600,000 budget deficit shortage has been reported by the College of Humanities and Fine Arts. The situation has been referred to as a crisis, but Dean Ronald Michaud describes this designation as premature.

"It is not a crisis. We undertook this approach of closely monitoring our expenses so as to avoid a crisis," he said.

An unnamed faculty member inside of the College of Humanities and Fine Arts, however, criticizes the college's management of situation.

"We've been told [by our Dept. chairs] that there is a $600,000 budget crisis for which we, the departments and faculty, must find ways to pay. We've not been told anything about how we incurred this debt or why we faculty members have to make amends for it," reads an e-mail sent to the Daily Collegian.

According to Michaud, the College has been limiting its spending by cutting down on unneeded expenses.

"We are trying to cut down in such a way to avoid affecting the quality of education. It means people will have to make fewer phone calls to avoid interference with the educational enterprise." He continues, "It is possible to simply spend less," said Michaud.

However, it is the limiting of the daily operating budget that is so vexing to faculty.

"Last week an e-mail was sent to all the language units in the Departments of Languages, Literatures and Cultures saying that we must stop all copying immediately. Or, if we need to copy, payment for it will come out of our individual gift accounts," reads the e-mail. "We also need to restrict our use of photocopying: the purchase of paper and toner is a major departmental expense. I assure you that some sort of policy will be in place for the next academic year. In the meanwhile, I would like to ask all of you to do whatever you can and exercise all possible restraint in your use of the photocopiers.

See FUNDS on page 3

Finkelstein speaks at UMass

BY WES RAHN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Professor, author and outspoken critic of Israel, Norman Finkelstein gave a guest lecture in the University of Massachusetts student union ballroom Wednesday night.

His lecture titled, "Palestine and Israel: roots of conflict, prospects for peace," was centered on Israeli treatment of Palestinians as being the primary obstacle to peace in the region, the distortion of the conflict in the media and the manipulation of Anti-Semitism.

Finkelstein repeated throughout his lecture that there was little controversy to the issue. For someone who speaks of there being a lack controversy, Finkelstein himself generates a lot of it.

Finkelstein has been casti-

See LECTURE on page 3

Norman Finkelstein gave a guest lecture in the University of Massachusetts student union ballroom last night.

LIVIN' LARGE

With UMass Minuteman Luke Bonner

Daily Collegian reporter Melissa D'Amico spent the entire day and night following UMass men's basketball big man Luke Bonner. D'Amico found that basketball is just one of Bonner's numerous talents.

BY MELISSA D'AMICO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

TUESDAY APRIL 10, 2007, 8:30 A.M.

You may have only seen him in the Mullins Center, ducking through doorways in the School of Management, or towering over you in line at the Newman Center, but at seven feet tall, you've seen him.

He is a student-athlete, a blogger, a radio show co-host, charity event organizer and bow tie enthusiast. He is Luke Bonner.

Luke Bonner eases himself out of bed within his room at the Pullon Apartments. As he slowly makes his way from his bed toward the shower, he wishes to himself that there might be a snow day.

His bedroom, lined with Big Lebowski, Fenway Park and Shearwater posters, consists of everyday bedroom items, along with two turntables, records and the accumulation of too many clothes, is not as messy today as he's seen it get. A self-proclaimed disaster when it comes to cleaning his room, he has gotten better at keeping things in order with continual reminders from his girlfriend and housemates, Rashaun Freeman and Tiki Mayben.

Unable to dry off in the same room he showers in, Luke makes his way from the bathroom to his bedroom after his shower, to

Check out our audio slideshow at www.DailyCollegian.com

See BONNER on page 4

Author Vonnegut dead at 84

Acclaimed author Kurt Vonnegut, best known for his novels 'Slaughterhouse-Five' and 'Cat's Cradle,' died at age 84 yesterday. See pg. 2

Emergency drill inspires rumors of outbreak

Students help out in mock medical scare

BY RYAN RICHARDSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Thursday's emergency drill was a learning experience for both the University of Massachusetts Medical Reserve Corps and the student volunteers. But as with every medical intervention there were some side effects. Rumors about meningitis outbreak circulated around campus.

During the drill the MRC, a group of healthcare professionals and volunteers, set up an emergency dispensing site to simulate the distribution of three different drugs to combat

See DRILL on page 3

Nursing student Christina Jahl gives a mock vaccination to a student volunteer during the University of Massachusetts Medical Reserve Corps emergency medical drill yesterday.

Duke players could sue

BY STEVE HARTSOE
ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH, N.C.—The disgraced district attorney in the Duke lacrosse rape case apologized to the three athletes in a carefully worded statement Thursday as their lawyers weighed whether to sue him — and some legal experts say they have a case.

While prosecutors generally have immunity for what they do inside the courtroom, experts said that protection probably doesn't cover some of Mike Nifong's more questionable actions in his handling of the case — such as calling the lacrosse players "a bunch of hooligans" in one of several interviews deemed unethical by the state bar.

"I think their chances of success suing Mr. Nifong are reasonably good, despite what we call prosecutorial immunity," said John Hanzhal, a professor at the George Washington University School of Law.

On Wednesday, North Carolina Attorney General Roy Cooper threw out the case against the three young men, pronounced them innocent and delivered a withering attack on Nifong, portraying him as a "rogue" prosecutor guilty of "overreaching." Cooper said Nifong rushed the case, failed to verify the accuser's allegations and pressed on despite the warning signs.

In his first comment on that decision, Nifong said in a statement Thursday. "To the extent that

See DUKE on page 3

Survey shows employers in search of workers

BY CHRIS HYNES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

As the University of Massachusetts commencement date draws closer (May 25, 2007) it may interest graduating seniors to know that 41 percent of global employers indicated difficulty in filling positions, one percentage point stronger compared to last year's survey, according to a Manpower Inc. survey conducted in late January.

Manpower Inc., an employment business and agency headquartered in Milwaukee, surveyed nearly 37,000 employers across 27 countries to accumulate its data.

The survey found that 41 percent of U.S. employers are also having trouble finding the proper level of talent, down from 44 percent in 2006.

Throughout the 27 countries involved in the survey, a sales representative was the most difficult position to fill, followed by skilled manual trades, technicians, engineers and accounting and finance staff.

The U.S. also has a dire need for sales representatives, topping the national list of most sought after employees, with teachers, mechanics, technicians and management positions filling out the top five.

Some of UMass' most well-known majors were spotted throughout the survey. The engineer, the fourth-most difficult position to fill worldwide, was also the hardest position to fill in India and the fifth toughest in China, two of the world's fastest growing economies. These countries may be having trouble finding engineers because their top talent is taking their abilities to the U.S., according to Director of the Engineering Career and Student Development Center Brian Schwarz. American students don't appear to be having much trouble finding jobs either.

"The job market is pretty good for engineers, last year 92 percent of graduates from UMass' college of engineering received jobs six months after graduation" Schwarz said.

The flow of engineers into UMass has declined in recent years however. "In the '80s we were producing a lot more engineers than we are now. It used to be around 400 graduates a year, now it's down to around 175 to 225" said Schwarz. "There's just less interest coming into the field of engineering, less students applying to engineering schools."

Accounting majors, all 175 of them, will be pleased to know that accountants landed as the eighth

See WORK on page 3

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 117

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Eric Athas
MANAGING EDITOR Rob Greenfield
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sheryl Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jaimeson Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molli-Eggleston
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COMICS EDITOR Adam Staggin
EDITORIAL EDITOR Tucker Merrick
NEWS EDITOR Matt Belliveau
SPORTS EDITOR Danny Picard
SPORTS EDITOR Jon Pelland
FEATURES EDITOR Melissa D'Amico
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Pentz
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER David Valade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicolle Puddester
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Sydney Towne
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Dolianitis
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonjakuakul
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Brendan Hall
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeremy Rice
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALMA LITE; IT BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Rob Greenfield

COPY EDITOR
Courtney Souza

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

Get yourself published by writing for the Daily Collegian

Contact us at News@DailyCollegian.com

Racist remarks cost shock-jock Imus CBS radio job

By David Bauder
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Don Imus flashed gallows humor and raised more than $1.3 million for charity Thursday despite losing his TV platform, while outside the studio pressure grew on CBS Radio to fire him.

The Rev. Al Sharpton and Jesse Jackson met with CBS Corp. chief executive Leslie Moonves to advocate for Imus' removal, promising a rally outside CBS headquarters Saturday and an effort to persuade more advertisers to abandon Imus.

Sumner Redstone, chairman of the CBS Corp. board and its chief stockholder, told Newsweek that he expected Moonves to "do the right thing," although it wasn't clear what he thought that was.

"This may be our last Radiothon, so we need to raise about $100 million," Imus said at the start of the event, which has raised more than $40 million since 1990.

By 3 p.m., $1.3 million had been raised for three children's charities, an associate producer at the station said. Volunteers were getting about 200 more pledges per hour than they did last year, with most callers expressing support for Imus, said Tony Gonzalez, supervisor of the Radiothon phone bank. The event benefited Tomorrows Children's Fund, the CJ Foundation for SIDS and the Imus Ranch.

Imus, who was suspended by CBS Radio for two weeks without pay beginning next week, was in the awkward situation of broadcasting Thursday's radio program from the MSNBC studios in New Jersey, even though NBC News said the night before that MSNBC would no longer simulcast his program on television.

He didn't attack MSNBC for its decision - "I understand the pressure they were under," he said - but complained the network was doing some unethical things during the broadcast. He didn't elaborate.

He acknowledged again that calling the Rutgers women's basketball players "nappy-headed hoes" a day after they had competed in the NCAA championship game had been "really stupid." He said he had apologized enough and wasn't going to whine about his fate.

"I said it," he said. "I wouldn't be here if I didn't say it."

Sharpton and Jackson emerged from a meeting with Moonves saying the corporate chief had promised to consider their requests.

"It's not about taking Imus down," Sharpton said. "It's about lifting decency up."

Sheila Johnson, owner of the WNBA's Washington Mystics and, with her ex-husband Robert, co-founder of BET, called Imus' comments reprehensible in an interview with The Associated Press. She said she had called Moonves to urge that CBS cut all ties with the veteran radio star, and was worried that what he said could hurt women's sports.

"I think what Imus has done has put a cloud over what we've tried to do in promoting women's athletics," she said.

Several sponsors, including American Express Co., Sprint Nextel Corp., Staples Inc., Procter & Gamble Co., and General Motors Corp., have said they were pulling ads from Imus' show indefinitely. Imus made a point Thursday to thank one sponsor, Bigelow Tea, for sticking by him.

Radio personality Don Imus was fired yesterday.

The list of his potential guests is shrinking, too.

Newsweek Editor Jon Meacham said the magazine's staffers will no longer appear on Imus' show. Meacham, Jonathan Alter, Evan Thomas, Howard Fineman and Michael Isikoff from Newsweek have been frequent guests.

Don't look for Charles Gibson, George Stephanopoulos or any other ABC News personality, either. Although spokesman Jeffrey Schneider said there's no network policy forbidding them now, "I don't see any circumstance where [an appearance] would be possible."

Imus has complained bitterly about a lack of support from one black politician, Harold Ford Jr., even though he strongly backed Ford's campaign for Senate in Tennessee last year. Ford, now head of the Democratic Leadership Council, said Thursday he'll leave it to others to decide Imus' future.

"I don't want to be viewed as piling on right now because Don Imus is a good friend and a decent man," Ford said. "However, he did a reprehensible thing."

Imus' troubles have also affected his wife, author Deirdre Imus, whose household cleaning guide, "Green This!" came out this week. Her promotional tour has been called off "because of the enormous pressure that Deirdre and her family are under," said Simon & Schuster publicist Victoria Meyer.

People are buying it, though: An original printing of 45,000 was increased to 55,000.

Losing Imus would be a financial hit to CBS Radio, which also suffered when Howard Stern departed for satellite radio. The program is worth about $15 million in annual revenue to CBS, which owns Imus' home radio station WFAN-AM and manages Westwood One, the company that syndicates the show across the country.

Imus still has a lot of support among radio managers across the country, many of whom grew up listening to him, said Tom Taylor, editor of the trade publication Inside Radio.

Yet he's clearly becoming a political liability for a major corporation – CBS. (General Electric Co. owns NBC Universal, of which MSNBC is a part.) NBC News said anger about Imus among some of its employees had as much to do with ending the MSNBC simulcast as the advertiser defection.

Redstone's remarks "could be a game-changer," Taylor said.

Bryan Monroe, president of the National Association of Black Journalists and vice president and editor director of Ebony and Jet magazines, met with Moonves on Wednesday. It seemed clear Moonves and his aides were struggling with a difficult decision, he said. He urged them to take advantage of an opportunity to take a stand against the coarsening of culture.

"Something happened in the last week around America," Monroe said. "It's not just what the radio host did. America said enough is enough. America said we don't want this kind of conversation, we don't want this kind of vitriol, especially with teenagers."

Rutgers' team, meanwhile, appeared Thursday on "The Oprah Winfrey Show" with their coach, C. Vivian Stringer.

At the end of their appearance, Winfrey said: " . . . I want to borrow a line from Maya Angelou, who is a personal mentor of mine and I know you all also feel the same way about her. And she has said this many times, and I say this to you, on behalf of myself and every woman that I know, you make me proud to spell my name W-O-M-A-N. You've really handled this beautifully."

Imus said Thursday he still wants to meet with the team.

"At some point, I'm not sure when, I'm going to talk to the team," he said. "That's all I'm interested in doing."

Influential author Kurt Vonnegut dies at 84

By Cristian Salazar
Associated Press

Kurt Vonnegut mixed the bitter and funny with a touch of the profound in books such as "Slaughterhouse-Five," "Cat's Cradle," and "Hocus Pocus."

Vonnegut, regarded by many critics as a key influence in shaping 20th-century American literature, died Wednesday at 84. He suffered brain injuries after a recent fall at his Manhattan home, said his wife, photographer Jill Krementz.

Vonnegut's more than a dozen books, short stories, essays and plays contained elements of social commentary, science fiction and autobiography.

"He was sort of like nobody else," said fellow author Gore Vidal. "Kurt was never dull."

A self-described religious skeptic and freethinking humanist, Vonnegut used protagonists such as Billy Pilgrim and Eliot Rosewater as transparent vehicles for his points of view.

He lectured regularly, exhorting audiences to think for themselves and delighting in barbed commentary against the institutions he felt were dehumanizing people.

"He was a man who combined a wicked sense of humor and sort of steady moral compass, who was always sort of looking at the big picture of the things that were most important," said Joel Bleifuss, editor of In These Times, a liberal magazine based in Chicago that featured Vonnegut articles.

Some of Vonnegut's books were banned and burned for suspected obscenity. He took on censorship as an active member of the PEN writers' aid group and the American Civil Liberties Union.

The American Humanist Association, which promotes individual freedom, rational thought and scientific skepticism made him its honorary president.

Vonnegut said the villains in his books were never individuals, but culture, society and history, which he said were making a mess of the planet.

"I like to say that the 51st state is the state of denial," he told The Associated Press in 2005. "It's as though a huge comet were heading for us and nobody wants to talk about it. We're just about to run out of petroleum and there's nothing to replace it."

Despite his commercial success, Vonnegut battled depression throughout his life, and in 1984, he attempted suicide with pills and alcohol, joking later about how he botched the job.

"I will say anything to be funny, often in the most horrible situations," Vonnegut, whose watery, heavy-lidded eyes and unruly hair made him seem to be in existential pain, once told a gathering of psychiatrists.

Vonnegut was born on Nov. 11, 1922, in Indianapolis, and studied chemistry at Cornell University before joining the Army. His mother killed herself just before he left for Germany during World War II, where he was quickly taken prisoner during the Battle of the Bulge. He was being held in Dresden when Allied bombs firebombed the city.

"The firebombing of Dresden explains absolutely nothing about why I write what I write and am what I am," Vonnegut wrote in "Fates Worse Than Death," his 1991 autobiography of sorts.

But he spent 23 years struggling to write about the ordeal, which he survived by huddling with other POW's inside an underground meat locker labeled slaughterhouse-five.

The novel that emerged, in which Pvt. Pilgrim is transported from Dresden by time-traveling aliens, was published at the height of the Vietnam War, and solidified his reputation as an iconoclast.

After World War II, he reported for Chicago's City News Bureau, then did public relations for General Electric, a job he loathed. He wrote his first novel, "Player Piano," in 1951, followed by "The Sirens of Titan," "Canary in a Cat House" and "Mother Night," making ends meet by selling Saabs on Cape Cod.

Critics ignored him at first, then denigrated his deliberately bizarre stories and disjointed plots as haphazardly written science fiction. But his novels became cult classics, especially "Cat's Cradle" in 1963, in which scientists create "ice-nine," a crystal that turns water solid and destroys the earth.

He retired from novel writing in his later years, but continued to publish short articles. He had a best-seller in 2005 with "A Man Without a Country," a collection of his nonfiction, including jabs at the Bush administration ("upper-crust C-students who know no history or geography") and the uncertain future of the planet.

Wolfowitz sorry for hiring 'mistake'

By Jeannine Aversa
Associated Press

World Bank President Paul Wolfowitz acknowledged Thursday that he erred in helping a close female friend get transferred to a high-paying job. "I made a mistake for which I am sorry," he said.

The growing controversy has overshadowed major development meetings this weekend and is raising fresh questions about whether Wolfowitz will stay on the job.

At issue is the generous compensation of a bank employee, Shaha Riza, who has dated Wolfowitz. She was given an assignment at the State Department in September 2005, shortly after he became bank president.

"In hindsight I wish I had trusted my original instincts and kept myself out of the negotiations," Wolfowitz said.

He said he met Thursday morning with the World Bank's board and that members were looking into the matter. He declined to discuss what actions, if any, the board could take.

"I proposed to the board that they establish some mechanism to judge whether the agreement reached was a reasonable outcome," he said, referring to Riza's transfer. "I will accept any remedies they propose."

Wolfowitz dodged a question about whether he would resign over the flap.

"I take full responsibility for the details. I did not attempt to hide my actions nor make anyone else responsible," he said.

CDC says gonorrhea is drug-resistant

By Daniel Yee
Associated Press

ATLANTA—The sexually transmitted disease gonorrhea is now among the "superbugs" resistant to common antibiotics, leading U.S. health officials to recommend wider use of a different class of drugs to avert a public health crisis.

The resistant form accounts for more than one in every four gonorrhea cases among heterosexual men in Philadelphia and nearly that many in San Francisco, according to a survey that led to Thursday's recommendation by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

Gonorrhea, which is believed to infect more than 700,000 people in the United States each year, can leave both men and women infertile and puts people at higher risk of getting the AIDS virus.

Since the early 1990s, a class of drugs known as fluoroquinolones has provided a relatively easy cure. These antibiotics, taken as tablets, include the drug Cipro.

But a growing number of gonorrhea cases is resistant to those drugs, and officials at the CDC for the first time are urging doctors to stop using fluoroquinolones and switch to cephalosporins, a different class of antibiotics, to treat everyone.

Those drugs — which include the generic ceftriaxone or brand name Rocephin, made by Swiss drug maker Roche Holding AG — must be given as a shot and aren't as readily stocked as Cipro on most doctor's shelves.

"Gonorrhea has now joined the list of other superbugs for which treatment options have become dangerously few," said Dr. Henry Masur, president of the Infectious Disease Society of America. "To make a bad problem even worse, we're also seeing a decline in the development of new antibiotics to treat these infections."

The CDC made the new recommendation after discovering that nearly 7 percent of gonorrhea cases among heterosexual men in a survey of 26 U.S. cities last year were drug-resistant. In 2001, only about 0.6 percent of gonorrhea cases among heterosexual men were drug-resistant.

"That leaves us with a single class of highly effective antibiotics," said Dr. John Douglas Jr., director of the CDC's division of STD prevention. Other experts called the situation perilous.

"We are running out of options to treat this disease," added Douglas, who said there are "no new drugs for gonorrhea in the drug development pipeline."

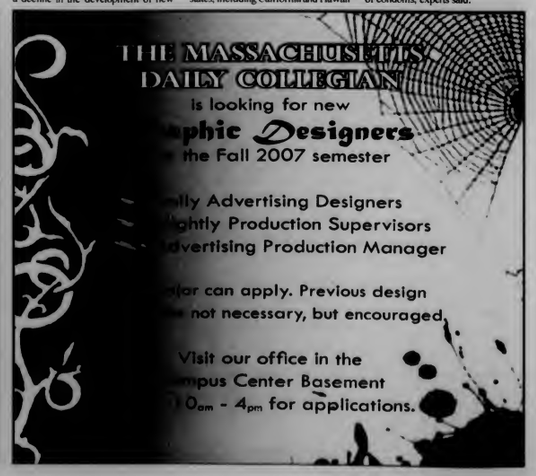
Previously, CDC recommended against fluoroquinolones to treat drug-resistant gonorrhea among men who have sex with men and in certain states, including California and Hawaii where most of these cases were turning up.

Described by Douglas as a "very wily" disease, gonorrhea has worked its way through decades of other treatment regimens, from sulfa drugs used in the 1930s and 1940s, to penicillin, which was used from the 1940s until the mid-1980s.

Gonorrhea, spread through sexual contact, is the second most commonly reported infectious disease in the United States, trailing only chlamydia, which the CDC says affects more than 2.1 million people yearly in the U.S.

The highest rates of infection are among sexually active teens, young adults and African-Americans. Because many people don't have obvious symptoms, they can unknowingly spread it to others. And having it makes people more susceptible to HIV. Gonorrhea's spread is preventable through consistent and proper use of condoms, experts said.

EXPERIENCE
Gained only through working at The Massachusetts Daily Collegian as a Fall 2007 semester Advertising Representative
If interested please pick up an application at the Daily Collegian office located in the Campus Center basement or contact Alex Bender at



College of Fine Arts facing financial crisis

FUNDS from page 1

"Department photocopiers should not be used to make extensive personal copies of articles, books, or parts of books. If you wish for students to read an article, make use of the library's e-reserves – at this time of year, turnaround only takes a day or so."

The unnamed source explains, "We're not being 'asked' to take budget cuts at all. This is being ordered from above; we have no recourse but to cut our copying for who knows how long.

As a dedicated teacher, I find this to be an appalling solution. Asking faculty to stop making copies, critical for teaching and research, is not the way to do it. We feel as if we're being punished for the College's mistakes."

Michaud said that there is no single cause of the deficit, and that it is difficult to calculate the start-up and maintaining cost of hiring new faculty. He continues that each department is being asked to find ways to deal with the problem, and said, "with the assistance and support of the faculty and the academic departments we have developed a carefully planned effort to monitor our spending to assure financial stability."

As part of the fall-out, a college wide faculty e-mail explained that "departments that show serious, good faith efforts at mitigation now will be given priority to have their budgets restored in the following fiscal year." Michaud describes the situation as "a real wake up call."

"Everyone has done a great job of dealing with a problem that was building up over several years. With the kind of help and collaborative spirit that we have received from the faculty and the departments, we are assured that this problem will not reoccur and that we can move ahead and plan accordingly," said Michaud.

Will McGuinness can be reached at wmcguinn@gmail.com

Survey shows employers in search of workers

WORK from page 1

hardest job to fill in the U.S, as well as No. 7 in the United Kingdom.

"There's an unlimited demand for accountants" said Ronald Mannino, Chair of the Accounting Department. "We could place twice as many accountants as we graduate, but not everybody wants to be an accountant" he joked.

This trend is apparently here to stay said Mannino. "Capital markets demand financial information and accountants provide said information."

Another ever-expanding field seeking talented employment is the restaurant and hotel staff of European countries, including Austria, Germany, Belgium, France, Italy, Sweden and Switzerland who all listing the position in the top 10 of their surveys.

"Most of these academic programs are located in the U.S., but Europe is where one of the strongest needs is," said head of the Hospitality and Tourism Management Department Rodney Warnick.

Warnick also explained the reasons for the needed talent. "It's because of consumer behavior. More people are traveling and eating out more. These types of consumer trends mean more opportunities for lodging and restaurant business. Companies are looking to place more professional managers in these positions."

The American field has also grown exponentially. In 1970, restaurant sales brought in $42.8 million. That number has grown to a $537 billion prediction for 2007.

"It's a multi-million dollar job right here on campus just to feed all you guys," said Warnick.

Wherever your path leads you after May 25 rest assured that the numbers are with you.

According to the Job Outlook survey conducted annually by the National Association of Colleges and Employers companies plan to hire 17.4 percent more new college graduates from the class of 2007 than they did from the class of 2006.

Chris Hynes can be reached at chynes@student.umass.edu

Emergency drill inspires rumors of outbreak

DRILL from page 1

a simulated outbreak of meningitis on campus.

Volunteers took on the roles of victims with various symptoms and degrees of contact with the outbreak, the MRC had to sort out who would need what drug and get as many people safely through the system as possible. The student nurses managed to simulate the administration of approximately 750 doses of meningitis vaccine in two hours with very few problems.

"We don't expect perfection," said Ann Becker, the Public Health Nurse at University Health Services and coordinator for the exercise.

The main purpose of the drill isn't just to make the MRC more confident in their ability to handle a situation, but to iron out any kinks in their procedures.

"[This drill] was another set of lessons on how to make the campus safer, communicate with community and educate the students," Becker said.

Educating the students became critical as several students showed up to the emergency dispensing site under the assumption that there was an actual outbreak of meningitis on campus, according to MRC volunteers. The drill had been in the planning stages for months, enough time for rumors to begin to circulate that the meningitis outbreak was something more than a scenario. Thankfully the rumor wasn't very widespread, but University Health Services staff wanted to emphasize that there was no outbreak of meningitis on campus.

Meningitis is an infection of the fluid surrounding the brain and inside of the spinal cord, which causes the membranes surrounding the brain – the meninges – to become inflamed. This inflammation causes high fever, headache and stiff neck in early stages, other symptoms include nausea, vomiting, discomfort looking into bright lights, confusion and sleepiness. As the disease progresses seizures can result, as well as damage to the nervous system.

In spite of state mandated vaccinations that have been in place since Fall 2005 the disease remains a persistent threat because of students that waived vaccination and students that were not required to receive the vaccination. While meningitis isn't as contagious as the common cold it can easily spread through shared drinks and kissing which puts college students, especially freshmen living in dorms, at increased risk for the disease. Vaccinations can decrease the risk of contracting meningitis, but the available vaccines protect only the most common strains.

"[Vaccination] is pretty effective against about 80 percent of the types of strains that cause epidemics," Becker said. Students that were vaccinated prior to 2005, when Menactra was licensed by the FDA, may not be fully protected against meningitis because certain meningitis vaccines may only be effective for three to five years.

With the weather alternating between hail and freezing rain throughout the morning there weren't as many victim volunteers at the drill as members of the MRC would have liked. However, the victim volunteers that did brave the weather, including many from Professor Dan Gerber's "My Body, My Health" class, made up for this by repeating the process as many as nine or 10 times for the lower risk victims. In spite of a relatively low turnout – the MRC predicts that in the event of an actual public health emergency about 5,000 people would show up to the emergency dispensing site – evaluators were able to spot a number of problem areas and improve upon them.

The most frequently cited bottleneck at the site was at medial control, where patients that were highly symptomatic or especially at risk were separated from the rest of the flow. Evaluators and students noted that while there were plenty of nurses there were only a few physicians, which slowed down the process of treating and evaluating special cases. Part of the problem may have been students adding to their roles after having passed through the process a number of times after having seen students like freshman Andrew Fish, at the center of a little more excitement as they were carted away on stretchers by EMTs.

"I had a broken neck and high blood pressure," said Fish. Other students and victim volunteers that passed through medical control were fainting or dealing with pregnancy, which were a lot more fun than many of roles that only involved a little bit of acting.

In the course of other drills occurring on campus, including those with Emergency Operations Command, other problems were noted in the lack of force protection - vaccinating volunteers that will be exposed to the disease in the course of helping out – for transportation workers.

The success of the drill relied on the hard work of everyone involved, from the victim volunteers to the ROTC cadets on hand to help people navigate the site and make sure that everything was running smoothly. 240 nursing students were on hand running everything from triage to vaccine administration with incredibly professional attitudes for students that had to get up before noon. Much of the work was behind the scenes in the months before the drill.

"To do something like this, it's months and months of planning work," said Becker, planning to make sure that everything from the site to the signs was ready to go for the day of the drill. The work was borne by volunteers from many campus and local organizations, including the School of Public Health, and their work still isn't finished.

Ryan Richardson can be reached at rmrich@student.umass.edu

Finkelstein lectures about Israeli conflict

LECTURE from page 1

gated for his audacious opinion of there being a "holocaust industry," which asserts Israel uses the holocaust and anti-Semitism as a political tool.

Finkelstein calls it "the uniqueness doctrine," asserting that there is the idea that Jewish suffering was unique and therefore Israel uses that as a basis to ignore regular moral ethical standards in regard to their policy with Palestinians.

"The purpose is to turn perpetrators into victims. To focus on the suffering of Jews rather than the suffering of the Palestinians," said Finkelstein. While Finkelstein does not deny the degree of genocide during the holocaust, his believes that the suffering should not be used as a means to a political end.

According to Finkelstein there is no controversy to the issue of Israeli occupation when seen through the prism of international law.

"Why is it that when it comes to these questions that are called so controversial, there is absolutely no controversy in the ruling of the world court?" he said.

Finkelstein cites the takeover of Palestinian land by Israel in June 1967 as a violation of law, stating it is inadmissible to acquire territory by force. Finkelstein said that the proposal of a two-state settlement has been on the table at the United Nations for almost 30 years, and the vast majority of the members each year vote in support.

"Israel has been the primary obstacle to a peace agreement," said Finkelstein.

Finkelstein cites the decision of the world court ruling unanimously that the Israeli settlements are illegal.

"It is difficult to find a conflict in history where there is that level of accordance," he said. "It is remarkably uncontroversial."

Finkelstein stated that Israel must adhere to the same borders as in 1967 in order to achieve peace.

"If in the fundamental question there is no controversy, how do you explain the huge amount of controversy in the media?" he asked.

Finkelstein said it was a fabrication that the conflict is so complex and hard to define that it cannot be compared to any other conflict and a resolution is also difficult to reach.

"There's an effort to mystify the conflict and claim it is so complicated it cannot be easily understood. That it is a cosmic clash of religion and civilizations," he said. "The purpose of that is to make people suspend their legal and ethical judgments."

Finkelstein said the treatment of the Palestinians In Israel is an ethnic cleansing and that it is similar to Apartheid in South Africa and to the treatment of Native Americans in the United States.

Finkelstein asserts there is a fundamental contradiction in the demands that are made on Palestine. "Israel has failed to implement the opinion of the international court, yet they escape the imposition of sanctions. Instead the Palestinian government is subjected to the most rigorous sanctions in modern times."

While Palestinians are required to disarm, that demand is not reciprocated to Israel, according to Finkelstein.

"No international demand has been put on Israel to denounce its terrorism," he said.

At the entrance of the lecture were representatives from the Student Alliance for Israel, who handed out flyers questioning Finkelstein's academic integrity and pointing out his opinions as fodder for anti Semitism and Neo-Nazi propaganda. Matt Hoffman who is with the SAFI said, "Finkelstein asserts that Jews are exploiting the holocaust to put us in an unfair position of power."

At the lecture was Henia Lewin, who is a child survivor of the holocaust was born in 1940 in Lithuania and lived in the Jewish ghetto in Kaunas.

"Finkelstein says that the [Palestinian] refugees have a right to go back to their homes, after the holocaust we couldn't go back to our homes. Some people tried to go back and were killed. The only reason Jews had a home to go back to was Israel, " said Lewin.

Lewin believes that Finkelstein is exploiting the holocaust for his own career benefits.

Also at the event were students from the Palestine Action Coalition. Yuval Sivan is a grad student at UMass, he was born in Haifa, Israel in 1981. "I don't support the state of Israel," he said. "I would like a democracy with equal rights for everyone, where Palestinians can move back to their homes. It wouldn't be considered a Jewish state; even if it was still called Israel."

Finkelstein has many adversaries in response to his opinions. Most notably is Alan Dershowitz, professor of law at Harvard University, and academic proponent of Israel.

In the lecture, Finkelstein called Dershowitz's book, "The case for Israel," "a complete fraud from start to finish." Finkelstein said that Dershowitz's claims of Israel's human rights record "bore no resemblance to what human rights organizations report," and that he could never quote human rights organization's because in doing so would contradict himself.

Finkelstein directly accused Dershowitz of plagiarism, charges that were eventually dropped by Harvard. In return Dershowitz attempted a lawsuit to prevent the publishing of Finkelstein's book, "Beyond Chutzpah," which is critical of Dershowitz and his research. Dershowitz has referred to Finkelstein as a "crackpot."

Norman Finkelstein was born in New York in 1953. His parents were Polish Jews who survived the holocaust. He holds a PhD in Political Studies from Princeton University. He has been a professor at Rutgers, Brooklyn College, New York University and Hunter College, although he has never earned tenure. Since 2003, Finkelstein has been an assistant professor of political theory at DePaul University in Chicago.

Wes Rahn can be reached at wrahn@student.umass.edu.

Duke players may sue

DUKE from page 1

I made judgments that ultimately proved to be incorrect, I apologize to the three students that were wrongly accused."

He issued what appeared to be a plea to the students not to take any further action, saying, "It is my sincere desire that the actions of Attorney General Cooper will serve to remedy any remaining injury that has resulted from these cases."

So far, attorneys for David Evans, Reade Seligmann, and Collin Finnerty have not said whether they plan a civil action against Nifong. But they have not ruled it out.

"We're certainly going to be advising him and the Seligmann family of all of their options. But nobody is racing to file any kind of a lawsuit at this point," said Jim Cooney, Seligmann's attorney.

Separately, the North Carolina bar charged Nifong months ago with several violations of professional conduct that could lead to his disbarment. The case is set for trial before a bar committee in June.

Among other things, the bar said Nifong made misleading and inflammatory comments about the athletes, even before they were charged. In the early days of the case, for example, Nifong said several times that members of the lacrosse team were not cooperating with investigators. Not true, according to court documents.

Experts said the ethics charges could form the basis for a lawsuit seeking damages from Nifong.

"Ordinarily, a prosecutor has absolute immunity for the actions he takes in preparation for a case, but there are some caveats to that, and one of them is he does not have absolute immunity for misleading statements he gives at press conferences," said Shannon Gilreath, an adjunct professor at the Wake Forest University School of Law.

Other actions Nifong took outside of the courtroom could open him up to a lawsuit, Banzhaf said. Nifong, among other things, directed the police lineup at which the accuser identified the three players; the lineup has been criticized as faulty. The bar has also accused Nifong of lying in court about having turned over all DNA test results to the defense.

Taste of UMass
2007
THURSDAY APRIL 19, from 5:00 to 8:00 PM
The nation's largest campus food service event
Food
75 food and beverage booths from around the world with healthy options
Official sanctioned Nathan's Famous Hot Dog Eating Contest, UMass Idol – Singing Contest
Fun
Cooking and Demonstration with Celebrity Chef Jet Tila
Autographs
New England Patriot Cheerleaders
Appearances
Minuteman Mascot
Entertainment
Magic Show and Battle of the Bands
Knowledge
Sustainability and Buying Local
Free
For students on the Meal Plan or $11 cash
Many great door prizes!
umass.edu/dining
AT THE MULLINS CENTER
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
All DCs will be closed at 3:00 pm and special buses to Mullins will leave at 4:00.
Doors Open at 4:30

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 117

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Eric Athas
MANAGING EDITOR Rob Greenfield
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sheryl Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jaimeson Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COMICS EDITOR Adam Szajgin
EDITORIAL EDITOR Tucker Merrick
NEWS EDITOR Matt Belliveau
SPORTS EDITOR Danny Picard
SPORTS EDITOR Jon Pelland
FEATURES EDITOR Melissa D'Amico
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Pentz
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER David Valade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallick
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Packdester
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Sydnee Towne
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Dolinitis
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonjakuakul
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Brendan Hall
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeremy Rice
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Rob Greenfield

COPY EDITOR
Courtney Souza

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

Get yourself published by writing for the Daily Collegian

Contact us at News@DailyCollegian.com

Racist remarks cost shock-jock Imus CBS radio job

By David Bauder
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Don Imus flashed gallows humor and raised more than $1.3 million for charity Thursday despite losing his TV platform, while outside the studio pressure grew on CBS Radio to fire him.

The Rev. Al Sharpton and Jesse Jackson met with CBS Corp. chief executive Leslie Moonves to advocate for Imus' removal, promising a rally outside CBS headquarters Saturday and an effort to persuade more advertisers to abandon Imus.

Sumner Redstone, chairman of the CBS Corp. board and its chief stockholder, told Newsweek that he expected Moonves to "do the right thing," although it wasn't clear what he thought that was.

"This may be our last Radiothon, so we need to raise about $100 million," Imus said at the start of the event, which has raised more than $40 million since 1990.

By 3 p.m., $1.3 million had been raised for three children's charities, an associate producer at the station said. Volunteers were getting about 200 more pledges per hour than they did last year, with most callers expressing support for Imus, said Tony Gonzalez, supervisor of the Radiothon phone bank. The event benefited Tomorrows Children's Fund, the CJ Foundation for SIDS and the Imus Ranch.

Imus, who was suspended by CBS Radio for two weeks without pay beginning next week, was in the awkward situation of broadcasting Thursday's radio program from the MSNBC studios in New Jersey, even though NBC News said the night before that MSNBC would no longer simulcast his program on television.

He didn't attack MSNBC for its decision – "I understand the pressure they were under," he said – but complained the network was doing some unethical things during the broadcast. He didn't elaborate.

He acknowledged again that calling the Rutgers women's basketball players "nappy-headed hoes" a day after they had competed in the NCAA championship game had been "really stupid." He said he had apologized enough and wasn't going to whine about his fate.

"I said it," he said. "I wouldn't be here if I didn't say it."

Sharpton and Jackson emerged from a meeting with Moonves saying the corporate chief had promised to consider their requests.

"It's not about taking Imus down," Sharpton said. "It's about lifting decency up."

Sheila Johnson, owner of the WNBA's Washington Mystics and, with her ex-husband Robert, co-founder of BET, called Imus' comments reprehensible in an interview with The Associated Press. She said she had called Moonves to urge that CBS cut all ties with the veteran radio star, and was worried that what he said could hurt women's sports.

"I think what Imus has done has put a cloud over what we've tried to do in promoting women's athletics," she said.

Several sponsors, including American Express Co., Sprint Nextel Corp., Staples Inc., Procter & Gamble Co., and General Motors Corp., have said they were pulling ads from Imus' show indefinitely. Imus made a point Thursday to thank one sponsor, Bigelow Tea, for sticking by him.

Radio personality Don Imus was fired yesterday.

The list of his potential guests is shrinking, too.

Newsweek Editor Jon Meacham said the magazine's staffers will no longer appear on Imus' show. Meacham, Jonathan Alter, Evan Thomas, Howard Fineman and Michael Isikoff from Newsweek have been frequent guests.

Don't look for Charles Gibson, George Stephanopoulos or any other ABC News personality, either. Although spokesman Jeffrey Schneider said there's no network policy forbidding them now, "I don't see any circumstance where [an appearance] would be possible."

Imus has complained bitterly about a lack of support from one black politician, Harold Ford Jr., even though he strongly backed Ford's campaign for Senate in Tennessee last year. Ford, now head of the Democratic Leadership Council, said Thursday he'll leave it to others to decide Imus' future.

"I don't want to be viewed as piling on right now because Don Imus is a good friend and a decent man," Ford said. "However, he did a reprehensible thing."

Imus' troubles have also affected his wife, author Deirdre Imus, whose household cleaning guide, "Green This!" came out this week. Her promotional tour has been called off "because of the enormous pressure that Deirdre and her family are under," said Simon & Schuster publicist Victoria Meyer.

People are buying it, though: An original printing of 45,000 was increased to 55,000.

Losing Imus would be a financial hit to CBS Radio, which also suffered when Howard Stern departed for satellite radio. The program is worth about $15 million in annual revenue to CBS, which owns Imus' home radio station WFAN-AM and manages Westwood One, the company that syndicates the show across the country.

Imus still has a lot of support among radio managers across the country, many of whom grew up listening to him, said Tom Taylor, editor of the trade publication Inside Radio.

Yet he's clearly becoming a political liability for a major corporation – CBS. (General Electric Co. owns NBC Universal, of which MSNBC is a part.) NBC News said anger about Imus among some of its employees had as much to do with ending the MSNBC simulcast as the advertiser defection.

Redstone's remarks "could be a game-changer," Taylor said.

Bryan Monroe, president of the National Association of Black Journalists and vice president and editor director of Ebony and Jet magazines, met with Moonves on Wednesday. It seemed clear Moonves and his aides were struggling with a difficult decision, he said. He urged them to take advantage of an opportunity to take a stand against the coarsening of culture.

"Something happened in the last week around America," Monroe said. "It's not just what the radio host did. America said enough is enough. America said we don't want this kind of conversation, we don't want this kind of vitriol, especially with teenagers."

Rutgers' team, meanwhile, appeared Thursday on "The Oprah Winfrey Show" with their coach, C. Vivian Stringer.

At the end of their appearance, Winfrey said: " . . . I want to borrow a line from Maya Angelou, who is a personal mentor of mine and I know you all also feel the same way about her. And she has said this many times, and I say this to you, on behalf of myself and every woman that I know, you make me proud to spell my name W-O-M-A-N. You've really handled this beautifully."

Imus said Thursday he still wants to meet with the team.

"At some point, I'm not sure when, I'm going to talk to the team," he said. "That's all I'm interested in doing."

Influential author Kurt Vonnegut dies at 84

By Cristian Salazar
Associated Press

Kurt Vonnegut mixed the bitter and funny with a touch of the profound in books such as "Slaughterhouse-Five," "Cat's Cradle," and "Hocus Pocus."

Vonnegut, regarded by many critics as a key influence in shaping 20th-century American literature, died Wednesday at 84. He suffered brain injuries after a recent fall at his Manhattan home, said his wife, photographer Jill Krementz.

Vonnegut's more than a dozen books, short stories, essays and plays contained elements of social commentary, science fiction and autobiography.

"He was sort of like nobody else," said fellow author Gore Vidal. "Kurt was never dull."

A self-described religious skeptic and freethinking humanist, Vonnegut used protagonists such as Billy Pilgrim and Eliot Rosewater as transparent vehicles for his points of view.

He lectured regularly, exhorting audiences to think for themselves and delighting in barbed commentary against the institutions he felt were dehumanizing people.

"He was a man who combined a wicked sense of humor and sort of steady moral compass, who was always sort of looking at the big picture of the things that were most important," said Joel Bleifuss, editor of In These Times, a liberal magazine based in Chicago that featured Vonnegut articles.

Some of Vonnegut's books were banned and burned for suspected obscenity. He took on censorship as an active member of the PEN writers' aid group and the American Civil Liberties Union.

The American Humanist Association, which promotes individual freedom, rational thought and scientific skepticism made him its honorary president.

Vonnegut said the villains in his books were never individuals, but culture, society and history, which he said were making a mess of the planet.

"I like to say that the 51st state is the state of denial," he told The Associated Press in 2005. "It's as though a huge comet were heading for us and nobody wants to talk about it. We're just about to run out of petroleum and there's nothing to replace it."

Despite his commercial success, Vonnegut battled depression throughout his life, and in 1984, he attempted suicide with pills and alcohol, joking later about how he botched the job.

"I will say anything to be funny, often in the most horrible situations," Vonnegut, whose watery, heavy-lidded eyes and unruly hair made him seem to be in existential pain, once told a gathering of psychiatrists.

Vonnegut was born on Nov. 11, 1922, in Indianapolis, and studied chemistry at Cornell University before joining the Army. His mother killed herself just before he left for Germany during World War II, where he was quickly taken prisoner during the Battle of the Bulge. He was being held in Dresden when Allied bombs firebombed the city.

"The firebombing of Dresden explains absolutely nothing about why I write what I write and am what I am," Vonnegut wrote in "Fates Worse Than Death," his 1991 autobiography of sorts.

But he spent 23 years struggling to write about the ordeal, which he survived by huddling with other POW's inside an underground meat locker labeled slaughterhouse-five.

The novel that emerged, in which Pvt. Pilgrim is transported from Dresden by time-traveling aliens, was published at the height of the Vietnam War, and solidified his reputation as an iconoclast.

After World War II, he reported for Chicago's City News Bureau, then did public relations for General Electric, a job he loathed. He wrote his first novel, "Player Piano," in 1951, followed by "The Sirens of Titan," "Canary in a Cat House" and "Mother Night," making ends meet by selling Saabs on Cape Cod.

Critics ignored him at first, then denigrated his deliberately bizarre stories and disjointed plots as haphazardly written science fiction. But his novels became cult classics, especially "Cat's Cradle" in 1963, in which scientists create "ice-nine," a crystal that turns water solid and destroys the earth.

He retired from novel writing in his later years, but continued to publish short articles. He had a best-seller in 2005 with "A Man Without a Country," a collection of his nonfiction, including jabs at the Bush administration ("upper-crust C-students who know no history or geography") and the uncertain future of the planet.

Wolfowitz sorry for hiring 'mistake'

By Jeannine Aversa
Associated Press

World Bank President Paul Wolfowitz acknowledged Thursday that he erred in helping a close female friend get transferred to a high-paying job. "I made a mistake for which I am sorry," he said.

The growing controversy has overshadowed major development meetings this weekend and is raising fresh questions about whether Wolfowitz will stay on the job.

At issue is the generous compensation of a bank employee, Shaha Riza, who has dated Wolfowitz. She was given an assignment at the State Department in September 2005, shortly after he became bank president.

"In hindsight I wish I had trusted my original instincts and kept myself out of the negotiations," Wolfowitz said.

He said he met Thursday morning with the World Bank's board and that members were looking into the matter. He declined to discuss what actions, if any, the board could take.

"I proposed to the board that they establish some mechanism to judge whether the agreement reached was a reasonable outcome," he said, referring to Riza's transfer. "I will accept any remedies they propose."

Wolfowitz dodged a question about whether he would resign over the flap.

"I take full responsibility for the details. I did not attempt to hide my actions nor make anyone else responsible," he said.

CDC says gonorrhea is drug-resistant

By Daniel Yee
Associated Press

ATLANTA—The sexually transmitted disease gonorrhea is now among the "superbugs" resistant to common antibiotics, leading U.S. health officials to recommend wider use of a different class of drugs to avert a public health crisis.

The resistant form accounts for more than one in every four gonorrhea cases among heterosexual men in Philadelphia and nearly that many in San Francisco, according to a survey that led to Thursday's recommendation by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

Gonorrhea, which is believed to infect more than 700,000 people in the United States each year, can leave both men and women infertile and puts people at higher risk of getting the AIDS virus.

Since the early 1990s, a class of drugs known as fluoroquinolones has provided a relatively easy cure. These antibiotics, taken as tablets, include the drug Cipro.

But a growing number of gonorrhea cases is resistant to those drugs, and officials at the CDC for the first time are urging doctors to stop using fluoroquinolones and switch to cephalosporins, a different class of antibiotics, to treat everyone.

Those drugs — which include the generic ceftriaxone or brand name Rocephin, made by Swiss drug maker Roche Holding AG — must be given as a shot and aren't as readily stocked as Cipro on most doctor's shelves.

"Gonorrhea has now joined the list of other superbugs for which treatment options have become dangerously few," said Dr. Henry Masur, president of the Infectious Disease Society of America. "To make a bad problem even worse, we're also seeing a decline in the development of new antibiotics to treat these infections."

The CDC made the new recommendation after discovering that nearly 7 percent of gonorrhea cases among heterosexual men in a survey of 26 U.S. cities last year were drug-resistant. In 2001, only about 0.6 percent of gonorrhea cases among heterosexual men were drug-resistant.

"That leaves us with a single class of highly effective antibiotics," said Dr. John Douglas Jr., director of the CDC's division of STD prevention. Other experts called the situation perilous.

"We are running out of options to treat this disease," added Douglas, who said there are "no new drugs for gonorrhea in the drug development pipeline."

Previously, CDC recommended against fluoroquinolones to treat drug-resistant gonorrhea among men who have sex with men and in certain states, including California and Hawaii where most of these cases were turning up.

Described by Douglas as a "very wily" disease, gonorrhea has worked its way through decades of other treatment regimens, from sulfa drugs used in the 1930s and 1940s, to penicillin, which was used from the 1940s until the mid-1980s.

Gonorrhea, spread through sexual contact, is the second most commonly reported infectious disease in the United States, trailing only chlamydia, which the CDC says affects more than 2.1 million people yearly in the U.S.

The highest rates of infection are among sexually active teens, young adults and African-Americans. Because many people don't have obvious symptoms, they can unknowingly spread it to others. And having it makes people more susceptible to HIV. Gonorrhea's spread is preventable through consistent and proper use of condoms, experts said.

Gained only through working at The Massachusetts
Daily Collegian as a Fall 2007 semester Advertising Representative located in the Campus Center basement or contact Alex Bender at College of Fine Arts facing financial crisis

FUNDS from page 1

"Department photocopiers should not be used to make extensive personal copies of articles, books, or parts of books. If you wish for students to read an article, make use of the library's e-reserves – at this time of year, turnaround only takes a day or so."

The unnamed source explains, "We're not being 'asked' to take budget cuts at all. This is being ordered from above; we have no recourse but to cut our copying for who knows how long.

As a dedicated teacher, I find this to be an appalling solution. Asking faculty to stop making copies, critical for teaching and research, is not the way to do it. We feel as if we're being punished for the College's mistakes."

Michaud said that there is no single cause of the deficit, and that it is difficult to calculate the start-up and maintaining cost of hiring new faculty. He continues that each department is being asked to find ways to deal with the problem, and said, "with the assistance and support of the faculty and the academic departments we have developed a carefully planned effort to monitor our spending to assure financial stability."

As part of the fall-out, a college wide faculty e-mail explained that "departments that show serious, good faith efforts at mitigation now will be given priority to have their budgets restored in the following fiscal year." Michaud describes the situation as "a real wake up call."

"Everyone has done a great job of dealing with a problem that was building up over several years. With the kind of help and collaborative spirit that we have received from the faculty and the departments, we are assured that this problem will not reoccur and that we can move ahead and plan accordingly," said Michaud.

Will McGuinness can be reached at wmcguinn@gmail.com

Finkelstein lectures about Israeli conflict

LECTURE from page 1

gated for his audacious opinion of there being a "holocaust industry," which asserts Israel uses the holocaust and anti-Semitism as a political tool.

Finkelstein calls it "the uniqueness doctrine," asserting that there is the idea that Jewish suffering was unique and therefore Israel uses that as a basis to ignore regular moral ethical standards in regard to their policy with Palestinians.

"The purpose is to turn perpetrators into victims. To focus on the suffering of Jews rather than the suffering of the Palestinians," said Finkelstein. While Finkelstein does not deny the degree of genocide during the holocaust, his believes that the suffering should not be used as a means to a political end.

According to Finkelstein there is no controversy to the issue of Israeli occupation when seen through the prism of international law.

"Why is it that when it comes to these questions that are called so controversial, there is absolutely no controversy in the ruling of the world court?" he said.

Finkelstein cites the takeover of Palestinian land by Israel in June 1967 as a violation of law, stating it is inadmissible to acquire territory by force. Finkelstein said that the proposal of a two-state settlement has been on the table at the United Nations for almost 30 years, and the vast majority of the members each year vote in support.

"Israel has been the primary obstacle to a peace agreement," said Finkelstein.

Finkelstein cites the decision of the world court ruling unanimously that the Israeli settlements are illegal.

"It is difficult to find a conflict in history where there is that level of accordance," he said. "It is remarkably uncontroversial."

Finkelstein stated that Israel must adhere to the same borders as in 1967 in order to achieve peace.

"If in the fundamental question there is no controversy, how do you explain the huge amount of controversy in the media?" he asked.

Finkelstein said it was a fabrication that the conflict is so complex and hard to define that it cannot be compared to any other conflict and a resolution is also difficult to reach.

"There's an effort to mystify the conflict and claim it is so complicated it cannot be easily understood. That it is a cosmic clash of religion and civilizations," he said. "The purpose of that is to make people suspend their legal and ethical judgments."

Finkelstein said the treatment of the Palestinians in Israel is an ethnic cleansing and that it is similar to Apartheid in South Africa and to the treatment of Native Americans in the United States.

Finkelstein asserts there is a fundamental contradiction in the demands that are made on Palestine. "Israel has failed to implement the opinion of the international court, yet they escape the imposition of sanctions. Instead the Palestinian government is subjected to the most rigorous sanctions in modern times."

While Palestinians are required to disarm, that demand is not reciprocated to Israel, according to Finkelstein.

"No international demand has been put on Israel to denounce its terrorism," he said.

At the entrance of the lecture were representatives from the Student Alliance for Israel, who handed out flyers questioning Finkelstein's academic integrity and pointing out his opinions as fodder for anti Semitism and Neo-Nazi propaganda. Matt Hoffman who is with the SAFI said, "Finkelstein asserts that Jews are exploiting the holocaust to put us in an unfair position of power."

At the lecture was Henia Lewin, who is a child survivor of the holocaust was born in 1940 in Lithuania and lived in the Jewish ghetto in Kaunas.

"Finkelstein says that the [Palestinian] refugees have a right to go back to their homes, after the holocaust we couldn't go back to our homes. Some people tried to go back and were killed. The only reason Jews had a home to go back to was Israel," said Lewin.

Lewin believes that Finkelstein is exploiting the holocaust for his own career benefits.

Also at the event were students from the Palestine Action Coalition. Yuval Sivan is a grad student at UMass, he was born in Haifa, Israel in 1981. "I don't support the state of Israel," he said. "I would like a democracy with equal rights for everyone, where Palestinians can move back to their homes. It wouldn't be considered a Jewish state; even if it was still called Israel."

Finkelstein has many adversaries in response to his opinions. Most notably is Alan Dershowitz, professor of law at Harvard University, and academic proponent of Israel.

In the lecture, Finkelstein called Dershowitz's book, "The case for Israel," "a complete fraud from start to finish." Finkelstein said that Dershowitz's claims of Israel's human rights record "bore no resemblance to what human rights organizations report," and that he could never quote human rights organization's because in doing so would contradict himself.

Finkelstein directly accused Dershowitz of plagiarism, charges that were eventually dropped by Harvard. In return Dershowitz attempted a lawsuit to prevent the publishing of Finkelstein's book, "Beyond Chutzpah," which is critical of Dershowitz and his research. Dershowitz has referred to Finkelstein as a "crackpot."

Norman Finkelstein was born in New York in 1953. His parents were Polish Jews who survived the holocaust. He holds a PhD in Political Studies from Princeton University. He has been a professor at Rutgers, Brooklyn College, New York University and Hunter College, although he has never earned tenure. Since 2003, Finkelstein has been an assistant professor of polltical theory at DePaul University in Chicago.

Wes Rahn can be reached at wrahn@student.umass.edu.

Survey shows employers in search of workers

WORK from page 1

hardest job to fill in the U.S, as well as No. 7 in the United Kingdom.

"There's an unlimited demand for accountants" said Ronald Mannino, Chair of the Accounting Department. "We could place twice as many accountants as we graduate, but not everybody wants to be an accountant" he joked.

This trend is apparently here to stay said Mannino. "Capital markets demand financial information and accountants provide said information."

Another ever-expanding field seeking talented employment is the restaurant and hotel staff of European countries, including Austria, Germany, Belgium, France, Italy, Sweden and Switzerland who all listing the position in the top 10 of their surveys.

"Most of these academic programs are located in the U.S., but Europe is where one of the strongest needs is," said head of the Hospitality and Tourism Management Department Rodney Warnick.

Warnick also explained the reasons for the needed talent. "It's because of consumer behavior. More people are traveling and eating out more. These types of consumer trends mean more opportunities for lodging and restaurant business. Companies are looking to place more professional managers in these positions."

The American field has also grown exponentially. In 1970, restaurant sales brought in $42.8 million. That number has grown to a $537 billion prediction for 2007.

"It's a multi-million dollar job right here on campus just to feed all you guys," said Warnick.

Wherever your path leads you after May 25 rest assured that the numbers are with you.

According to the Job Outlook survey conducted annually by the National Association of Colleges and Employers companies plan to hire 17.4 percent more new college graduates from the class of 2007 than they did from the class of 2006.

Chris Hynes can be reached at chynes@student.umass.edu

Emergency drill inspires rumors of outbreak

DRILL from page 1

a simulated outbreak of meningitis on campus.

Volunteers took on the roles of victims with various symptoms and degrees of contact with the outbreak, the MRC had to sort out who would need what drug and get as many people safely through the system as possible. The student nurses managed to simulate the administration of approximately 750 doses of meningitis vaccine in two hours with very few problems.

"We don't expect perfection," said Ann Becker, the Public Health Nurse at University Health Services and coordinator for the exercise.

The main purpose of the drill isn't just to make the MRC more confident in their ability to handle a situation, but to iron out any kinks in their procedures.

"[This drill] was another set of lessons on how to make the campus safer, communicate with community and educate the students," Becker said.

Educating the students became critical as several students showed up to the emergency dispensing site under the assumption that there was an actual outbreak of meningitis on campus, according to MRC volunteers. The drill had been in the planning stages for months, enough time for rumors to begin to circulate that the meningitis outbreak was something more than a scenario. Thankfully the rumor wasn't very widespread, but University Health Services staff wanted to emphasize that there was no outbreak of meningitis on campus.

Meningitis is an infection of the fluid surrounding the brain and inside of the spinal cord, which causes the membranes surrounding the brain – the meninges – to become inflamed. This inflammation causes high fever, headache and stiff neck in early stages, other symptoms include nausea, vomiting, discomfort looking into bright lights, confusion and sleepiness. As the disease progresses seizures can result, as well as damage to the nervous system.

In spite of state mandated vaccinations that have been in place since Fall 2005 the disease remains a persistent threat because of students that waived vaccination and students that were not required to receive the vaccination. While meningitis isn't as contagious as the common cold it can easily spread through shared drinks and kissing which puts college students, especially freshmen living in dorms, at increased risk for the disease. Vaccinations can decrease the risk of contracting meningitis, but the available vaccines protect only the most common strains.

"[Vaccination] is pretty effective against about 80 percent of the types of strains that cause epidemics," Becker said. Students that were vaccinated prior to 2005, when Menactra was licensed by the FDA, may not be fully protected against meningitis because certain meningitis vaccines may only be effective for three to five years.

With the weather alternating between hail and freezing rain throughout the morning there weren't as many victim volunteers at the drill as members of the MRC would have liked. However, the victim volunteers that did brave the weather, including many from Professor Dan Gerber's "My Body, My Health" class, made up for this by repeating the process as many as nine or 10 times for the lower risk victims. In spite of a relatively low turnout – the MRC predicts that in the event of an actual public health emergency about 5,000 people would show up to the emergency dispensing site – evaluators were able to spot a number of problem areas and improve upon them.

The most frequently cited bottleneck at the site was at medial control, where patients that were highly symptomatic or especially at risk were separated from the rest of the flow. Evaluators and students noted that while there were plenty of nurses there were only a few physicians, which slowed down the process of treating and evaluating special cases. Part of the problem may have been students adding to their roles after having passed through the process a number of times after having seen students like freshman Andrew Lish, at the center of a little more excitement as they were carted away on stretchers by EMTs.

"I had a broken neck and high blood pressure," said Lish.

Other students and victim volunteers that passed through medical control were fainting or dealing with pregnancy, which were a lot more fun than many of roles that only involved a little bit of acting.

In the course of other drills occurring on campus, including those with Emergency Operations Command, other problems were noted in the lack of force protection – vaccinating volunteers that will be exposed to the disease in the course of helping out – for transportation workers.

The success of the drill relied on the hard work of everyone involved, from the victim volunteers to the ROTC cadets on hand to help people navigate the site and make sure that everything was running smoothly. 240 nursing students were on hand running everything from triage to vaccine administration with incredibly professional attitudes for students that had to get up before noon. Much of the work was behind the scenes in the months before the drill.

"To do something like this, it's months and months of planning work," said Becker, planning to make sure that everything from the site to the signs was ready to go for the day of the drill. The work was borne by volunteers from many campus and local organizations, including the School of Public Health, and their work still isn't finished.

Ryan Richardson can be reached at rmrich@student.umass.edu

Duke players may sue

DUKE from page 1

I made judgments that ultimately proved to be incorrect, I apologize to the three students that were wrongly accused."

He issued what appeared to be a plea to the students not to take any further action, saying, "It is my sincere desire that the actions of Attorney General Cooper will serve to remedy any remaining injury that has resulted from these cases."

So far, attorneys for David Evans, Reade Seligmann, and Collin Finnerty have not said whether they plan a civil action against Nifong. But they have not ruled it out.

"We're certainly going to be advising him and the Seligmann family of all of their options. But nobody is racing to file any kind of a lawsuit at this point," said Jim Cooney, Seligmann's attorney.

Separately, the North Carolina bar charged Nifong months ago with several violations of professional conduct that could lead to his disbarment. The case is set for trial before a bar committee in June.

Among other things, the bar said Nifong made misleading and inflammatory comments about the athletes, even before they were charged. In the early days of the case, for example, Nifong said several times that members of the lacrosse team were not cooperating with investigators. Not true, according to court documents.

Experts said the ethics charges could form the basis for a lawsuit seeking damages from Nifong.

"Ordinarily, a prosecutor has absolute immunity for the actions he takes in preparation for a case, but there are some caveats to that, and one of them is he does not have absolute immunity for misleading statements he gives at press conferences," said Shannon Gilreath, an adjunct professor at the Wake Forest University School of Law.

Other actions Nifong took outside of the courtroom could open him up to a lawsuit, Banzhaf said. Nifong, among other things, directed the police lineup at which the accuser identified the three players; the lineup has been criticized as faulty. The bar has also accused Nifong of lying in court about having turned over all DNA test results to the defense.

Taste of UMass
2007
THURSDAY APRIL 19, from 5:00 to 8:00 PM
The nation's largest campus food service event
Food
75 food and beverage booths from around the world with healthy options
Official sanctioned Nathan's Famous Hot Dog Eating Contest, UMass Idol – Singing Contest
Many great door prizes!
Fun
Cooking and Demonstration with Celebrity Chef Jet Tila
Autographs
New England Patriot Cheerleaders
Appearances
Minuteman Mascot
Entertainment
Magic Show and Battle of the Bands
Knowledge
Sustainability and Buying Local
Free
For students on the Meal Plan or $11 cash
AT THE MULLINS CENTER
DINING SERVICES
All DCs will be closed at 3:00 pm and special buses to Mullins will leave at 4:00.
Doors Open at 4:30

Livin' Large with Luke

Photos by Toan Trinh

BONNER from page 1

get dressed and ready for the day. Today, like every other Tuesday and Thursday, Luke has to dress up for class.

As a TA for Abnormal Psychology, he has to stand out from the rest of the students. If his height doesn't help him do that, his bow tie sure will. After putting on his white button-up shirt and khaki pants, Luke picks out a stylish red and blue- striped bow tie to complete his look.

"I asked Dr. Halgin if bow ties were acceptable the first day, and he started laughing. I was just trying to make a wise crack. Then, I was like, I'm really going to wear bow ties now," said Bonner. "I like that look. Ever since Andre and Big Boi from OutKast started wearing them, I've just been into bow ties."

After pulling up a Web site on how to tie a bow tie, Luke successfully ties his on the first attempt. He's obviously a fast learner and finds success in his first attempt.

After taking his time getting ready, he's running a little late. Luke quickly eats a creamsicle yogurt before making his way to the bus stop. He could take his car, a 1999 Hyundai Elantra, but decides to take the bus because he is "deathly afraid of Parking Services."

9:30 A.M. TO 10:45 A.M. - WATER PIPES AND BREAKFAST SANDWICH

Barely making it inside the Isenberg School Of Management (SOM) room 120, Luke ducks through the doorway just in time.

Settling among his friends, the class prepares to hear a series of business proposals, including one for a business started by student Tyler Stretch called Prestige Pipes. This company, which sells homemade water pipes for tobacco, intrigues Bonner and the rest of the class.

"It's just not something you see every day in class," Bonner said.

Bonner's interest is quickly redirected by a presentation for Daybreak Breakfast, a fictitious breakfast delivery company.

Unable to fulfill his growing desire for a breakfast sandwich by placing an order with the company, Luke makes his way over to the Newman Center to get a sausage, egg and cheese sandwich on an English muffin before his next class. Waiting for his sandwich amidst a group of other students, he stands above the crowd.

11:15 A.M. TO 12:30 P.M. - MR. BONNER

After satisfying his craving for a breakfast sandwich, Bonner makes his way to Mahar Auditorium where he takes his place in front of the class, with the professor.

Bonner soon settles in a seat at the front of the hall, among a group of hockey players, as the class lecture discusses abnormal personality disorders. Part of the lecture focuses on the Dartmouth murder case, which excites Luke, less for its psychology, and more for it's inclusion of a video clip that shows the suspects at court in his hometown of Concord, New Hampshire.

Luke enjoys his role as a Teaching Assistant because he gets to help other students, get credits and simply enjoy the class.

"Rather than taking a class where I have to study all this stuff, I already know all of it, and get to enjoy the class for what it's worth."

12:45- PENNIE'S FOR CHARITY

With the end of Abnormal Psychology, Luke enters back into his role as a student, and heads back to SOM. By now he is joined by teammate Matt Pennie. The two are going to meet up with Professor Bob Marx, their advisor for a management independent study. Over a casual meeting the three discuss the progress they have made on the charity benefit concert they are organizing through the class.

The idea for the concert came last summer, when Luke and his brother Matt, a basketball player on the San Antonio Spurs, decided they wanted to throw their own concert. Initially something small, just for their friends, Luke described it as "kind of like Waynestock in Wayne's World." Yet, after they realized that they could actually make a concert happen, they decided to put their efforts toward something good.

Now known as "Matt Bonner Presents Sneakers and Speakers Charity Rockfest," the concert, being headlined by the Bonners' favorite band, Okkervil River on July 14, will help support the Concord boy's and girl's Club. More information can be found at sneakersandspeakers.com.

This isn't the only time that Matt Pennie has teamed up with Luke Bonner to create something. Bonner's blog on the UMass Athletics Web site, "The World According to Luke," was created following a conversation between Bonner and Pennie.

"Me and Pennie were just talking about some stupid stuff on media day. We were talking about if you made a real life movie of The Simpson's, what actors would you cast for each character. That conversation could last for five hours, we've had it many times," Bonner said.

"All the media people were laughing about it, and getting in on it. So they asked me if I would be interested in writing a blog on the athletics Web site every now and again. It's not just about sports, it's about whatever."

1:05 P.M. – A LITTLE BIT OF LIFE AND A LITTLE BIT OF LUNCH

Bonner and Pennie make their way toward Southwest to "go old school" and have some lunch at Hampshire Dining Commons. As they make their way down the sidewalk, a little bit of life is added to their day.

James Life, styling his bright blue jacket, gold chains and sunglasses, makes his way across the street, ignoring any of the traffic that's coming right towards him.

"James Life is the most unique person you'll ever meet in your entire life. He is the most entertaining human being to be around," said Bonner. "He is definitely worthy of his own reality show."

Walking past a truck parked outside the dining hall, Bonner stops for a moment.

"Wouldn't it be so much fun to be able to ride on the back of one of these? I always wanted to be a garbage man when I was little, just so I could ride on the back of the truck."

The thought seems to pass as quickly as it came, and he continues on his way to lunch. Despite the fact that Luke enjoyed his lunch time tacos, he later thinks about the all the dining commons on campus.

"The Southwest DCs don't have as good dish rooms as Worcester. I'm pretty sure Worcester DC throws the best parties on campus."

1:35 P.M. - PUMPING SOME IRON, GETTING REALLY JACKED

After a "splendid DC meal", Bonner and Pennie make their way to Boyden Gym, to get their lifting time in for the day. Tuesdays and Thursdays are upper body days, and even though it's hard work, he appreciates a good workout. "You know, it's getting to be summer time, you got to look good. I gained some weight and all that good stuff."

3 P.M. - WORKING ON THE GAME

Out of his dress clothes and into a uniform more suitable for him, Bonner dribbles a basketball down the court at Curry Hicks Cage in his practice uniform and size 19 basketball sneakers. It may be the off-season, but the team still tries to get together for a pick-up game, and to work on some shooting.

"Today we have to cut it short, throw something together real quick because we've got the team banquet and we pretty much don't have any guys around right now just because some people are graduating. So, right now we can only do three on three, four on four [games], but we do what we can and we work hard."

6:00 P.M. - CONGRATULATIONS, LOU BONNER?

Adding a black suit coat and dress shoes to his Teaching Assistant look, Luke is set and ready to go to the 2006-2007 UMass Basketball team's last gathering-the team banquet.

Held in the Campus Center, the team enjoys the usual dinner, speakers, and awards recognizing a variety of the team's members.

Thinking about the banquet earlier in the day, Luke expected that James Life would have the craziest outfit there, and that knowing himself, he would probably end up spilling something. But Luke did not expect to receive an award engraved to somebody else. Excited to receive the 2006-2007 Skip Connors Academic Award, Luke discovers that the plaque he is given is not engraved to him, but instead Lou Bonner. Initially disappointed, he'll later joke about it.

9 P.M. TO 11 P.M. – W.M.U.A. HEADQUARTERS

Luke now sits behind one of four microphones in the WMUA radio station, tie untied, and relaxed, along with co-host Zach Richard to kick off this week's show, called "Rock-like Substance."

A radio show was something Luke had wanted to create just for fun.

"I was going to play all wrestling entrance theme music, to be really annoying," Bonner said. "I went to the radio station to look into it, but I didn't think I'd have time to do it."

After reading Luke's blog, Zach Richard, UMass student and host of a WMUA weekly radio show, emailed him asking if he'd be interested in coming on his show.

"I always do the Song of the Day, and [Zach] liked my taste in music."

After initially coming on the show, Richard asked Bonner to join the show as his co-host, and Bonner couldn't turn it down.

"It's just once a week, 9 p.m. to 11 p.m., and I enjoy it a lot."

As Zach handles most of the on-air discussion, Luke searches the walls of the studio for the CDs he wanted to play. The walls of the studio are lined from ceiling to floor with a variety of artists, organized in alphabetical order by genre.

The band Luke first looks for?

Shearwater.

Where can it be found?

Under "Sh" in the Rock section, conveniently located on the very bottom shelf, in the tightest spot of the studio. Lying on the ground, trying to find the CD, he continually asks "why is 'sh' all the way down here?"

His height may help him on the basketball court, but when it comes to finding CDs in the WMUA studio, it might be a little problematic.

11:15 P.M. - LUKE BONNER GOES NA-NIGHT

With a seemingly successful night at the radio station, Luke is ready to head home. Heading out of the campus center, content with his day as a student, teacher, organizer and radio show host, he walks feeling as though he was 10-feet-tall. Oh wait, he almost is.

EDITORIAL OPINION

POINT-COUNTER-POINT

"Freedom rings where opinions clash." - Adlai E. Stevenson

Free Speech on Campus

Respect and cynicism

Andrew Freeman

On Wednesday, former Bush chief of staff Andrew Card stood in the Student Union ballroom and declaimed about democracy. He urged students to participate in the political process, and instructed us to be skeptical but not cynical. Yet cynicism was the order of the day for the supposedly free and open event.

I witnessed this as one of several students who protested at Card's lecture. Some police officers attempted to intimidate us, threatening to remove students carrying signs, which supposedly violated the Code of Student Conduct's picketing code. Furthermore, the administrator who introduced the lecture ordered students to be seated throughout the event, claiming that standing would violate the fire code. Cynical police and administrators sought to preemptively stifle democratic speech. Moreover, they were misrepresenting the codes, which protesters were not violating – the absence of arrests confirms this point.

Some believe that the protesters behaved disrespectfully towards Card by interrupting him during the question and answer session. To these critics, I would say democracy is not about listening to lies and propaganda into silence; it is not about observing rules of decorum and decency while your rights are abridged and the Constitution is trampled underfoot. Democracy is about speaking up and taking action.

Democracy is about speaking up and taking action. Andrew Card disrespected the American people.

Andrew Card has disrespected the American people. As founder of the White House Iraq Group, he marketed the Iraq war, a conflict that has killed over 3,200 Americans and many more Iraqis. When asked about why Bush suddenly started talking about Iraq after Labor Day, he famously told the New York Times, "From a marketing point of view, you don't introduce new products in August." Comparing a conflict in which thousands will die to a product launch is the height of cynicism. And so is ordering students to be silent in the name of "respect."

Andrew Freeman writes for Wednesdays. He can be reached at adfreema@student.umass.edu.

Cynicism with respect

Wednesday morning, the University of Massachusetts campus was treated to a speech by former White House chief of staff, Andrew Card. In his speech, Card detailed his process of coming out of the Southeastern Massachusetts town of Holbrook to become a respected national political figure. The speech, which stayed largely off the topic of policy, was informative and thoughtful, but hampered immensely by a small contingent of rude and discourteous protestors shouting off-topic remarks and insults at Mr. Card, who absorbed the barbs with the class and restraint befitting a man of his public stature.

Carter Dufrane

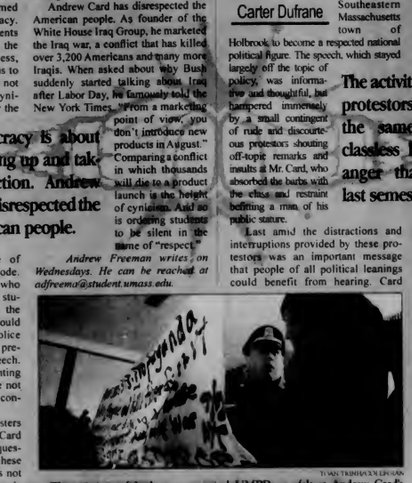
The activities of these protestors illustrate the same kind of classless hyperactive anger that defined last semester's riots.

Last amid the distractions and interruptions provided by these protestors was an important message that people of all political leanings could benefit from hearing. Card spoke strongly of positive action and involved support rather than cynicism. While the protestors were content to scream hateful insults in an attempt to stifle Mr. Card's freedom to speak, he responded eloquently with advice to forget the negative attacks and focus this activist energy towards the support of candidates that represent a change in government toward the ideals that these people seek.

The speech ended with a lengthy question and answer session open to all attendees. Despite this designated period during which all opinions were welcomed, the protestors continuously interrupted Mr. Card's speech, and spoke repeatedly out of turn whenever a contrary opinion was raised. For a group espousing freedom, the protestors acted in such a way as to stifle free speech whenever it conflicted with their individual opinions.

The activities of these protestors illustrate the same kind of classless hyperactive anger that defined last semester's riots and contribute to the idea that all UMass students are disruptive and uncivil. Speaking out against perceived flaws in government should not be condemned, but when speakers refuse to express any semblance of civility in their expression they do not contribute to proper discourse on the topics to which they are opposed. Hopefully the actions of this small minority of unruly protestors do not deter public figures from speaking at the University in the future.

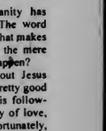
Carter DuFrane is a UMass student.



TOAN TRINH/DAILY COLLEGIAN

The presence of both protestors and UMPD was felt at Andrew Card's speech on Wednesday.

A third council?



Kevin Pascucci

In recent years, Christianity has become a four-letter word. The word alone has become something that makes many people's skin crawl at the mere mention of it. How did this happen?

From what we know about Jesus Christ, it sounds like he was pretty good guy. You would think that his followers would carry on his legacy of love, selflessness and charity. Unfortunately, many of them don't, and it's these people that have tarnished and corrupted a good thing.

Despite these problems, there is a handful of Christians that have begun to step out of line and try to make a change, and have managed to garner a rather faithful following in the process.

The son of fallen tele-evangelist Jim Bakker, Jay Bakker has started his own church, but with a much different message than his father was preaching during the 1980's. Covered in tattoos, Jay Bakker spends his time walking around New York City putting up stickers that display the message, "As Christians, we are sorry for being self-righteous judgmental bastards." This message is obviously unconventional, and is one that has gotten him ostracized from a lot of religious circles. Running his church out of a small bar in the city, Bakker focuses his efforts on accepting people and loving them unconditionally.

If Christianity wants to stay relevant in a culture that has grown sick of what they have seen, it's these people who are going to save it.

Among his opinions, Jay Bakker has stated during numerous interviews that he believes religion began going wrong when it got involved in politics – a view that couldn't be more accurate. The political system is a rather corrupt one, and unfortunately a lot of that corruption spread to Christianity when organized religion began to try and work its way into Capitol Hill and the White House.

For anyone that has seen the documentary Jesus Camp, it is no secret that there is a large number of Christians in this country who have a strong political agenda. Rather than focusing on the basic teachings of Jesus, these people have dedicated their lives to seeing the U.S. move closer and closer to becoming a Christian-run nation. I'm no Biblical scholar, but I don't recall Jesus trying to weasel his way into the Roman government.

Now though, it's hard to deny that there are numerous political issues that require our attention, it shouldn't be the job of Christ's followers to protest in God's name. There are many who feel this way within the church, and it's these people that become known as "The Emerging Church."

More concerned with social issues and helping the less fortunate, these people realize that the church needs an overhaul, and needs to change a lot of its focus. If Christianity wants to stay relevant in a culture that has grown sick of what they have seen, it's these people who are going save it.

This inner struggle within the church is much more than a matter of right and wrong, it is an effort sorely needed to get the church moving in one direction – toward bringing it back to the basics. With that said, I see men like evangelical preacher Ted Haggard on TV running their mega-churches, and then I see someone like Jay Bakker running a tiny church on the streets of New York, and I have to believe that Jesus would have chosen to be there on the streets working with those people.

After Ted Haggard's recent homosexual scandal, he was fired from his job at his church, and has not returned since. Rather than being forgiven for his deception and lies by the people of his own church, he was kicked out of the very thing he had helped build. It's this attitude of un-acceptance and unwillingness to have mercy on others that has dragged the church down even further, and it's this very attitude that the Emerging Church of Christians is hoping to change.

While there has been a lot of bad publicity for the Christian community, there has also been more and more attention being paid to those who are seeking to make a change. Jay Bakker had his own reality show on TV, and other influential progressive Christians writers like Donald Miller have seen their books make it onto the New York Times best-sellers list. As the number of influential people like them has grown, so has the number of people who identify with them and want to see a change as well.

Jay Bakker's church is called "Revolution", and that is exactly what many are hoping to see in the coming years. If Christianity is going to survive, it needs to be less concerned with politics and more concerned with people. Jesus did a lot of good in his time, and now it's our turn to make a difference in today's world.

Kevin Pascucci can be reached at kpascuc@student.umass.edu

The good, the bad and the Cory

The internet is a plethora of never-ending entertainment. One can check their grades on SPIRE and in the very same breath be reading the latest news. It's absolutely incredible how much the internet does for us. Despite this, some people see the web as an unnecessary tool, and miss existing relationships outside of their computers.

Haley Navarro

However, in today's world, it's completely plausible to become famous with social networking tools.

Let's take MySpace.com for example – plenty of music artists have gained popularity and even record contracts through it. But, some people have gained unimaginable popularity through it.

Cory Kennedy, the 'internet-it-girl,' has been under the World Wide Web's eye for some time. Being somewhat of an underground buzz was enough to land her a regular column (read: blog) at Nylon magazine, inherently. People – mostly girls - do not stop their incessant rampage about her. I've read tons of forums that discuss how they are "not paying a subscription to read about some coked up slut." But really, what makes this girl so famous?

For lack of a better term, she became an "Internet Superstar" before she was even legal to drive.

She was discovered at the El Rey Theatre when she was 15. A popular photographer named Mark Hunter, (known on the internet as "the Cobra Snake") snapped a picture of her and the rest is history. His website's fans saw her picture on it and were immediately intrigued, thus sparking the phenomenon that is Cory Kennedy. People liked the way she dressed; they consumed everything she wrote on her personal blog. She and Hunter began dating, and she would tag along to famous parties. For less of a better term, she became an "Internet Superstar" before she was even legal to drive.

But, the climax of this Cinderella story was that her parents had no knowledge of it. In the recent article in the L.A. Times, her mother claimed to have no idea about it. She recalls that Cory would ask for a ride somewhere and she'd look out the car window to see Lindsay Lohan. It's scary to think that a 16-year-old girl would produce almost 1,000 images off a Google search. Quotes such as, "Cory Kennedy is basically my hero," also appear when searching her name.

Once her parents realized that things were getting a bit out of hand, they stepped in on the situation. This obviously had no effect on her internet life. Her blog, which is the first thing that appears after a Google search, is read by people worldwide. There, she talks about her daily activities and also posts articles written about her and updates on her Nylon blog.

So here's the thing. What does one do next after posing for Dolce and Gabbana, and also being featured in Rolling Stone in Italy? I guess, traditionally, one would go about life as normal seventeen year old girls do. It seems as though there isn't really much left after one has partied with the likes of Paris Hilton. Not to mention, that Nylon's ever-growing fan base will not just read anything.

With all of its dangers of identity theft and possible child molesters, the Internet has some benefits too. I myself am a huge fan of the internet. I watch videos on it. I email my family members in different states. I check up on the latest UMass events. If somebody forgot to pick up their copy of the New York Times while they were out: Not to fear. It's Online. It's almost refreshing to see people building careers off of the internet.

Despite the seeming balance of the web's worth, there are still those who believe it to be absolutely pointless and corrupting our youth. Countless Dateline shows have been made – in lieu of all that. It's kind of like every good thing that happens involving our beloved friend, the Internet, outweighs the bad. And I'm okay with that.

What would life be like without Ms. Kennedy? Probably not much different than it is now. A large percentage of the population still doesn't know who she is. She shows us, though, that by writing where you got pizza on your blog and dating a popular photographer is a definite way to get famous. Without this recent explosion of fame, she would be doing normal teenage things just like everybody else. Within the labyrinth of the unknown, it seems that Cory Kennedy came out alright.

Haley Navarro can be reached at hnavarro@student.umass.edu.

PHOTO COURTESY FASHIONWEEKDAILY.COM

Web surfers might have noticed Cory Kennedy making waves in recent months.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

STOP WASTING YOUR TIME

I am writing to express my disdain for the SGA spending their time deliberating about how students caught in the December riots were unfairly punished. I by no means understand the University of Massachusetts Constitution, and until about five minutes ago, I didn't know one existed. Perhaps the UMass Constitution defines the semester differently; Dec. 15 was the first day of finals – the semester hadn't closed yet, so the Board of Trustees should have no laws prohibiting them from stripping a student of their semester credits for their riot involvement.

Even if the semester had already closed, the SGA is way out of line debating this decision. I am a resident assistant in John Quincy Adams dormitory, and I was on the front lines working to suppress the riot with close to 10 other RAs assisting security from 11:30 p.m. until 2:00 a.m.. We had to stop students from entering our building who weren't supposed to be there and work alongside with the Hall Directors, UMPD, and UMass Security to try to maintain order.

Maybe the SGA wasn't in the lobby of my dorm when chunks of concrete started flying through the windows of the dorm. Maybe they didn't see the UMass Chief of Police get a jug filled with water thrown at her from 20 stories up, thankfully missing, but landing with enough force to snap a person's neck. Maybe they didn't see bricks being thrown at the police. I doubt they saw garments lit on fire and then being thrown from the dorms onto bystanders.

I saw the riot first hand; I can guarantee you I saw more of that riot than the entire SGA combined. So you can understand; there were 10 windows of JQA shattered because of these students. The offices of my building were destroyed and there was over $100,000 worth of damage done to the Southwest Resident Area in the matter of two hours. The SGA's budget was just posted as upwards of $27,000. That means there was about four times the entire budget of the SGA taken from UMass that night.

Yet the SGA will still come to session to renounce the punishments handed out that night. The punishments of the riots are not to be dealt with by those who read about them in the paper. I would love to speak at every single student's judicial hearing so I could ensure that that particular student's expulsion was guaranteed, along with their credits being stripped as well. Do us a favor SGA and stop worrying about the mistreatment of criminals, they deserve criminal status.

Ross Dubois
UMass Student

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, APRIL 13, 2007 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

(MCT)

Author Kurt Vonnegut died Wednesday night due to medical complications from a fall two weeks ago, according to his wife, Jill Krementz.

'Goodbye blue Monday'

Legendary American author Kurt Vonnegut dies at age 84

BY S.P. SULLIVAN
COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

So it goes.

No, that's too cliché – it wouldn't do him justice. The best way to eulogize Kurt Vonnegut is to say of him what he said of fellow humanist and science fiction author Isaac Asimov at his funeral; Vonnegut reportedly had them "rolling in the aisles."

The 84 year-old author and outspoken humanist passed on Wednesday night due to head injuries sustained in a fall weeks ago. He left behind wife Jill Krementz and a plethora of children, seven to be exact, all grown up now, some of them biological but most of them adopted. He left, in addition, 14 novels, three collections of short fiction, a number of plays and countless essays and editorials, most recently published in left-leaning magazine In These Times.

Most are familiar with his 1969 masterwork, "Slaughterhouse-Five", an anachronistic piece of science-fiction based loosely on his own experiences as an American POW in Dresden, Germany. "All this happened, more or less," begins Vonnegut, "the war parts, anyway, are pretty much true."

The novel, although technically a work of science-fiction, is a commentary on the capacity for evil in all human beings, even those befit with a noble cause. The city of Dresden was considered a non-militarized zone; most of its inhabitants were civilians. But the city was nevertheless destroyed by the British in an incendiary bomb attack that went long un-talked about by the British and Americans alike. "Slaughterhouse-Five" is paramount of Vonnegut's work in the sense that it discussed the un-discussable and addressed very dark, very serious themes with an irreverent, unreserved humor.

The novel was banned in many schools and libraries because of its use of vernacular profanity. This more or less delighted Vonnegut, who was a fervent supporter of free speech, was redeemed when the novel became unanimously recognized as a classic.

An earlier work lacking the initial success of "Slaughterhouse Five" but that proved no less poignant was 1963's "Cat's Cradle." The book addressed issues of religion, humanity, and the social responsibility of the field of science. Vonnegut created a fictitious religion in Bokononism, whose fundamental tenets were rooted in "harmless untruths." Vonnegut's employment of Bokononism was a commentary on the usefulness of religion to the human spirit, even if it is, as Vonnegut believed, full of baloney. "Anyone who cannot understand how useful a religion based on lies can be will not understand this book either," warns the book's protagonist from the get-go.

Vonnegut himself was an avowed humanist, succeeding the late Isaac Asimov as the American Humanist Association's Honorary President. Vonnegut, however, came from a long line of Hoosier free-thinkers, and his atheist liberalism was actually rooted in many traditional Christian values. "If it weren't for the message of Jesus' Sermon on the Mount," Vonnegut has said, in reference to the Beatitudes, "I wouldn't want to be a human being. I would just as soon be a rattlesnake."

Vonnegut, however, was himself plagued by chronic depression and his own pessimism. His mother's suicide left a lasting impression on his outlook, best exhibited in "Breakfast of Champions", throughout which he toys with the notion that human beings are just hard-wired machines, the "bad" ones merely being "defective."

He also developed in his later years, and often joked that despite his heavy smoking and best efforts, he continually failed to do himself in.

Vonnegut's eagerness to pass wasn't dark, but rather wrought with his own irreverent wit. For all his criticism of organized religion, he wished to be memorialized the same way he had eulogized his friend Isaac Asimov.

"So when my own time comes to join the choir invisible or whatever, God forbid," joked Vonnegut in 1999's "God Bless You, Dr. Kevorkian," "I hope someone will say, 'He's up in Heaven now.'"

Well, I've said it, Mr. Vonnegut. Sleep well; you've done more than enough.

S.P. Sullivan can be reached at spsulliv@student.umass.edu.

James Hunter Trio to perform in Noho

BY BRAD FARBERMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Sporting a new trio and one less string, seven-string guitar legend Charlie Hunter (he used to be an eight-string guitar legend) will lead his band through a dynamic and funky performance at the Iron Horse in Northampton tomorrow night.

Hailing from Berkeley, Calif., Hunter began his odyssey in music at age 12, when he bought his first guitar for $7. At 16, he decided that he would play music for a living and at 18 he discovered jazz, the music that would most inform his playing from that point forward.

At first, Hunter was turned on by saxophonists Charlie Parker and John Coltrane, and influential guitar player Charlie Christian, before he discovered organ greats like Jimmy Smith, Larry Young and Big John Patton, whose sound he would emulate in his early years. He came into possession of his first seven-string guitar in the late 80s, and later hooked up with future Spearhead frontman Michael Franti to form the Disposable Heroes of Hiphoprisy in 1993. They spent much of that year on the road, opening stadium shows for U2 and Primus.

Later that year, Hunter split from the Heroes, craving a musical situation that Franti and company could not provide. With tenor saxophonist Dave Ellis and original Primus drummer Jay Lane, Hunter formed the first Charlie Hunter Trio. They performed a "Bay Area style of jazz" at San Francisco clubs like the Elbo Room and Up and Down Club. It was during this time, too, that Primus bassist Les Claypool convinced the trio to record for Prawn Song Records (his own imprint), a self-titled disc appeared in 1994.

That trio released a second album, "Bing, Bing, Bing!," before the group expanded to a quartet, adding the late alto saxophonist Calder Spanier, and replaced Lane with drummer Scott Amendola, whom Hunter had worked with in T. J. Kirk. "Ready… Set… Shango!," the first album credited to the Charlie Hunter Quartet, was released in 1996.

Next, the group was approached by Blue Note Records (their label since Bing, Bing, Bing!) to cover an entire album by an artist of their choice. After considering discs like Curtis Mayfield's "Superfly" and The Beach Boys' "Smiley Smile," they settled on Bob Marley's "Natty Dread," recreating the album in their own vision. They often performed their new repertoire too, at old haunts like the Elbo Room. The album was issued in 1997, featuring tenor saxophonist Kenny Brooks in lieu of Ellis.

Following the "Natty Dread" project, Hunter changed things up yet again by dropping the horns and recording an album featuring himself, Amendola, percussionist John Santos and Stefon Harris on vibes. The homless "Return of the Candyman," released by Blue Note in 1998, was dedicated to Spanier, who had died in a car accident the previous year.

Other, different projects followed. A duo record with drummer Leon Parker (1999's "Duo"); a solo guitar record (2001's "Solo: Eight-String Guitar"); playing on D'Angelo's "Voodoo" album; and a return to horns with a quintet record featuring trombone, tenor saxophone and chromatic harmonica. And, as of late, Hunter has switched it up once more.

After more than five years on the road with tenor saxophonist John Ellis (no relation to Dave) and drummer Derek Phillips, Hunter disbanded his regular trio in 1996. Filling in for Ellis and Phillips are drummer Simon Lott, from New Orleans and keyboardist Erik Deutsch, formerly of the group Fat Mama (another Fat Mama alum is drummer Joe Russo, of the acclaimed Benevento-Russo Duo). Purportedly, this newest version of the Charlie Hunter Trio "rocks" more than past groups, continuing a direction began on the last trio's "Copperopolis record," released in 2006.

The show starts at 7 p.m. Tickets are $17.50 in advance and $20 at the door. Following the trio's Northampton performance, they will continue on to Newmarket, N.H. and New York City before heading down to New Orleans for three nights at Preservation Hall.

Brad Farberman can be reached at bfarberm@gmail.com

California native, James Hunter will be performing this Saturday night in Northampton at the Iron Horse.

Smith College hosts interactive forum

Director Chris Pain brings documentary to Northampton

BY KATY BROOK
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Chris Paine, writer and director of the documentary film Who Killed the Electric Car, will be guest speaking at Smith College on Sunday night. Smith is hosting both a screening and a question and answer period after the film. Students from all five colleges are welcome to watch the film, and ask any questions they might have.

The film, released in August of 2006, details the release, success and then ultimate destruction of the EV1 electric car, which in the mid-1990s was being driven by hundreds of California drivers. Laid out like a murder mystery, the documentary sheds light on a complex web of corporate interest and political rhetoric that led to a perfectly viable, undeniably beneficial technology being literally crushed out of existence.

In a phone interview from LaGuardia airport, Paine talks about his experiences as a film maker and activist. He leads off by saying that, even over appearing on television shows and national magazines, doing screenings for students has been his favorite aspect to making Who Killed the Electric Car.

"That's where the change starts," he said, referring to students who come out to see his film, and get involved in what they believe in.

Paine himself has had a lot of experience with activism. As a student at Colgate University, he was involved in actions to stop nuclear testing in Nevada, just outside Las Vegas. The protesting was so persistent that is was effective in actually stopping the testing. When asked if he had any advice for students who want to make a difference and get involved, his recommendation is to always try and make it fun.

"It's possible to have a point of view, without soap-boxing," he says, adding that it's when he gets too angry that he finds himself immobilized. In his experience, pressing for change in a fun way demonstrates change better than any preaching or intimidation ever could.

He cites a scene from the documentary, in which he and a group of friends organized a mock funeral for the EV1s. Even with little media attention, Paine says, they made their point in an expressive, memorable, fun way. This kind of humor Paine speaks of, threads through the entire film from quirky anecdotes and interviews with EV1 owners, to plucky music. Paine successfully "[pulls] back the curtain on industry" with a dizzying amount of data and first hand testimony, all the while making it as accessible and non-intimidating as he could.

All of the hard work and humor seems to have paid off for Chris Paine and his electric cars. When asked about GM's recent plans to resurrect the electric car (with a Chevy Volt, currently in development), Paine recalls just after the film's release, being contacted by the CEO of GM, who apparently stated that trashing the EV1 was his biggest regret. Paine and his crew later met with GM at the Detroit Auto Show, where prototypes of the Chevy Volt were being showcased.

Though he's sure it wasn't the only motivation, Paine said "our film influenced that decision." Aside from its effect on the auto industry, 30,000 copies of the film have been sent to Congressmen and politicians all over the country.

Paine is remaining very active, traveling to promote his film and working with PlugInAmerica, an organization that works to spread awareness, and promote the use of plug-in cars, trucks and SUVs (which, believe it or not, actually do exist). He is also working on a new film project he describes as, "A comedy about the end of the world...a documentary, sort of," called Nice Try. It's still in its early development stages, and he hopes to get a chance to survey students at his screenings; one at Columbia, Princeton and then Sunday at Smith College. Paine is interested in getting an idea of whether people are feeling optimistic or pessimistic about the future, and where better to get a bead on developing attitudes than in a college environment?

"Little ideas go a long way," Paine says towards the end of the interview, and that idea seems to be one of the pillars of his film. Paine took a question, that seemed simple – why did GM take a product off the market, when there was so much potential profit to be made? He then revealed its complexity and the over-arching relevance it held for American society. The end result is a charming, provocative, and succinctly informative film.

Chris Paine and his film, Who Killed the Electric Car will be shown at Smith College, room 201 Seelye Hall at 7 p.m. on Sunday, Apr. 15. Admission is free to all Five College students.

Katy Brook can be reached at kbruck@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY OF CHRIS PAINE

Director activist Chris Paine went to Colgate University in New York. As an activist Paine has protested nuclear weapon testing near Las Vegas.

Colonials invade Amherst for three the Colonials coming out on top in just three of its 17 contests away from Arlington. With poor weather and numerous postponements, the Minutemen have only played five home games thus far, winning two.

BASEBALL from page 10

The Minutemen come back to Amherst after beating Connecticut, 6-4, on Tuesday in Storrs. The triumph over the Huskies came just one day after beating Boston College for the first time since 2000. The Minutemen were stellar on the mound in each of the two victories, allowing just six earned runs in 18 innings of work.

The opposite has held true for the Colonials, which have allowed 33 runs in their last two games. The pitching staff has been the story all year long, as well, with a team earned run average of 7.79. The Colonials have had problems keeping opposing runners off the basepaths, allowing 584 men to reach base (406 hits and 178 walks) in just 290 innings on the mound.

Despite having to face a solid GW lineup that's hitting .280 collectively, Colonials opponents have had a much easier time on the hill, allowing just 425 base runners to reach in 295 and two-thirds innings of work.

The Colonials feature a power-hitting lineup – 29 team home runs – led mostly by senior shortstop Michael Parker and junior outfielder Charlie Kruer. The pair of sluggers lead the team in virtually every category, tying for the team-lead in long balls at nine. Parker, a Newton, Mass. native, has been a force in the middle of the order, hitting at a .377 clip with 36 RBIs and a monstrous .659 slugging percentage.

The Minuteman lineup hasn't been nearly as powerful – just five team home runs – but features more .300 hitters (four to three) than the Colonials. Captains Bryan Garrity and Travis Munsey aren't far behind that mark either, both holding down .286 averages.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@student.umass.edu. Log onto the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.

Freshman pitcher Jared Freni has started six games on the mound for the Minutemen, going 1-2 with a 6.00 earned run average. The right hander has struck out 18 batters this season while walking nine and giving up one homerun.

Minutewomen play two against 49ers

SOFTBALL from page 10

and two runs batted in.

The 49er offense managed just 13 runs scored in its six times out against conference opponents, being shut out three times.

In the pitching circle, Charlotte's leader in earned run average is freshman Gina Allen (2.33). Although she hasn't started a game, she's picked up three wins in relief and pitched 24 innings in 14 appearances. She also has two saves to her credit.

Charlotte's starters have been the recipients of some poor luck. Senior Kristen Bowen's record sits at 8-10 despite a 2.73 ERA, while senior Christy Murray leads the team with 11 wins with an ERA approaching four (3.87).

The Minutewomen left for Charlotte around 2 p.m. on Thursday after traveling to and from Chestnut Hill, Mass., yesterday for the game with BC. UMass coach Elaine Sortino hoped to get a workout in before the team left, but poor conditions in Amherst squashed that.

"We don't have a lot of time to prepare," Sortino said. "Hopefully our seasonal preparation that will lend itself well to what we're going to do with Charlotte.

"We're going to take a good game plan into there as far as how we're going to pitch them. We'll try to figure out how to prepare our pitchers for what kind of pitching they're going to see down there."

The Minutewomen have won their last nine games and all six A-10 games so far this season. In their last time out, freshman Bailey Sanders got her first start since March 28 against Dartmouth, a 14-6 UMass win, and her first action since April 3, a 6-1 win over Rhode Island.

UMass' offense has been something of a team effort this season. From the nine-spot, freshman Whitney Williams has three hits in her last six at-bats and is third on the team with a .320 batting average.

Joe Meloni can be reached at jmeloni@student.umass.edu.

Freshman Whitney Williams has heated up at the plate recently, raising her batting average to .320, second on the team.

Billikens starting stronger in 2007

A-10 SOFTBALL from page 10

A FORDHAM FIGHTER

Fordham's Allison Iwaroswki heads into the three-day weekend coming off a solid day on Tuesday. The freshman led her squad to a sweep of a doubleheader battle of the Bronx against with a well-rounded performance against Manhattan College (2-27, 1-5 MAAC). The third baseman finished the day going 4-for-6 with four stolen bases and an RBI.

Tops in seven offensive categories including batting average, slugging percentage, home runs and runs scored, the Marlton, N.J., native has pioneered the Rams (27-13, 9-1 A-10) to the conference's best team – and second place in the A-10.

Rolling into a weekend where it takes on the Billikens after a double-header with the Iona Gaels, Fordham hovers above Saint Louis in the A-10 standings, who stand in third place with a 6-2 record.

"She most versatile player on the roster," Fordham coach Bridget Orchard told fordhamsports.com of Iwaroswki. "[She] has all tools to be extremely successful. [She is a] fierce, aggressive competitor who is always ready for a challenge."

BILLIKENS TRYING TO BOUNCE BACK

Saint Louis started off the 2006-07 season on a sour note. It came out of the starting gates limping, as it lost its first seven games. In the string of defeats, the Billikens were outscored 67-25 by their opponents.

The Missouri-based team finally turned things around in the season's eighth and ninth games, when it beat Northern Iowa, 2-0, and IUPUI, 9-1, in six innings, respectively.

In the ninth game the Billikens set a school record by tallying six stolen bases against the Jaguars.

Since that time Saint Louis is 19-12. But it needs to keep it up if it wants to stay in a respectable position in the A-10 standings.

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu.

UMass challenges defending A-10 champion Richmond

W. LAX from page 10

the team to win the conference. Richmond also entered the season with a No. 12 ranking in the Inside Lacrosse Women's Media Poll.

But the team has since fallen on relative hard times this season. The Spiders have already matched their loss total from last year and consequently plummeted out of the poll. However, the team's difficult schedule certainly has made winning difficult. Richmond lost to three of the nation's top five teams, including No. 2 Maryland (12-1), No. 3 Duke (10-2) and No. 5 Virginia (10-2).

Last Sunday, the team lost its first conference game of the season to Temple (4-7, 2-0 A-10) in a close, 9-8 contest. Richmond took the lead with 12 minutes to play, but allowed Temple to score the final two goals, including the game-winner with six minutes left.

Richmond is also one of the most experienced teams in the league. The Spiders lost only two starters from last year's record-setting team. However, it lost leading scorer Caroline McGuire to graduation. She paced the 2006 Richmond offense with 68 total points, including 59 goals.

Even without McGuire's presence, the Richmond offense still averages nearly 11 goals per game. A threesome of prolific scorers, Allison Furstenburg and the Friend sisters, Mandy and Ashley, all have at least 20 goals and 30 points this season. In fact, the sisters complement each other's game, as Mandy is third in goals per game, while her sister is sixth in assists per game in the conference.

And if stopping the Richmond offensive is not difficult enough, UMass will tangle with a stout defensive unit. The Spider defense, led by senior goalkeeper Jackie Swansburg, surrenders less than 8.5 goals per game on average – the best in the league. Swansburg leads the A-10 in almost every defensive statistical category, including save percentage.

"They have three tremendous players who do a little bit of everything on that team," Venechanos said. "They have a great lefty goalie, who's probably one of the best in the country. The team feeds off those four players for the bulk of their success."

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu.

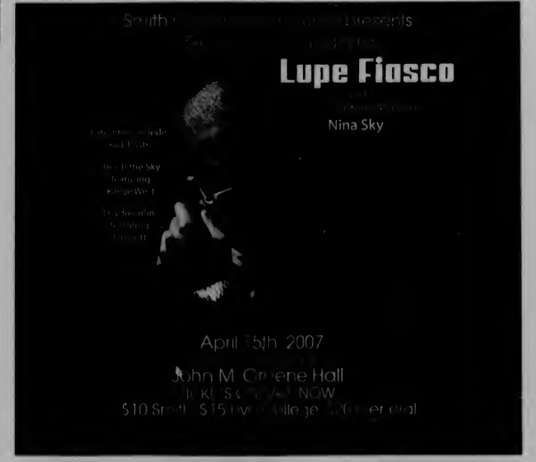
Junior Kristina Twichell ranks fourth on the team in scoring with 20 points on seven goals and 13 assists. She has already exceeded her total from last season of 19 points (13 goals, six assists).

SUMMER JOBS

Are you a creative, energetic, and nurturing person? Would you enjoy spending the summer in a beautiful natural environment working with children ages 5-13? YMCA Camp Norwich, just 20 minutes from Northampton, is now hiring Counselors, Lifeguards, and Instructors for Nature Study, Arts & Crafts, Athletics, Boating, Wood Working, Ceramics, and Music.

Call the Camp Registrar or stop by the HRYMCA for a camp brochure and camp staff application.

Hampshire Regional YMCA
286 Prospect Street
Northampton, MA 01060
413-584-7086 • www.hrymca.org



COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Junior Christina DeRosa is leading the Minutewomen with 30 points earned this season. The men and women's squads return to the UMass Track and Field Complex for the second home meet of the season.

Runners return home for second meet at new facility

MELISSA TURTINEN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The Massachusetts men's and women's track and field team will host its second home meet in 10 years at the brand new UMass Track and Field Complex next to Rudd Field.

UMass will be competing against Maine, New Hampshire, Boston College, Stony Brook, Quinnipiac and newly added Amherst College.

"Maine, New Hampshire and BC will be our toughest competitions because of the depth of their programs and the large number of people in it. The past indoor records show that they'll be tough competition," said UMass coach Ken O'Brien.

At the first home meet of the season, the Minutemen finished second overall and set four new facility records. Josh Boone succeeded in taking first place in the 1,500-meter race and Kevin Murphy took first place in the 800-meter.

O'Brien is expecting success in a variety of events this weekend.

Sophomore Peter Fortunado will be competing in the 5,000 meters, which last weekend, at the UConn Invitational, he placed first. Fortunado will also be competing in the steeplechase for the first time.

"Manuel Harris-Lopes is a key member in relays," said O'Brien.

Sophomore Kevin Ianetta is expected to lead the team in hurdles. He is the teams' top 400-meter hurdler and high hurdler.

Sophomore Steve Gerome is expected to help out the Minutemen in the hurdles, jumps and sprints.

Last weekend at the UConn Invitational, the Minutemen took fifth place out of nine teams. The Minutemen had success in the 5,000-meter event with Fortunado taking first and Andrew McCann placing third.

"All of the schools are pretty good and solid," said women's coach Julie LaFreniere. "Boston College and New Hampshire will be the toughest competition. BC specializes in distance but has field events, too. UNH and Maine tend to have a strong program. Stony Brook and Quinnipiac are distance oriented. Amherst College was recently added and they have a national quality distance squad."

Junior Christina DeRosa and freshman Lisa Wilson are expected to lead the team this weekend. DeRosa is leading the team with 30 points so far this season. Wilson is second with 16 points. Both athletes set records in the first home meet of the season.

"Those two athletes are very strong and coach-able and are good strong workers," said LaFreniere.

Freshman pole vaulter Molly Chapin was diagnosed with pneumonia. She will still compete but will stay low key, according to LaFreniere.

"Mary Serdakowski anchors the 4x1 relay, she is really starting to step it up and get into form," said LaFreniere.

Junior distance runner Amber Sayer will be running the 5,000-meter. She just started spring racing last weekend and she's starting out slow because she is just off a stress fracture.

The Minutewomen placed sixth out of nine teams at last week's UConn Invitational. DeRosa placed first in the 5,000-meter and Wilson qualified for ECAC's when she got third place in the discus.

"We're a very young team and it's going to take us a year," LaFreniere said. "It isn't going to be a dream season, but by developing us we will be taking huge steps."

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtine@student.umass.edu.

UMass in Boston for BU Invitational

BY MIKE GILLMEISTER
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

It's off to the races, or rather, regatta, for the Massachusetts rowing team. The Minutewomen head to the Boston University Invitational Regatta this weekend to take on seven of the nation's top rowing teams. Opposing crews will be Texas, Southern California, Boston University, Columbia, Dartmouth, MIT and Northeastern.

"We're expecting to go in there this weekend and give it everything we've got. We're trying to prove ourselves," said Captain Tara Guinan when asked what the team's expectations were going into this weekend.

The Maroon and White will look to improve upon a respectable third place finish at the event last year. In the regatta last season, the varsity eight came in third with a time of 7:12.0, bested only by Brown with a first-place finish of 6:56.4 and BU, with a second place finish in a time of 7:08.7.

The Minutewomen's second varsity eight rounded out the pack in their race with a fourth place finish of 7:47.0. Brown again had a sparkling first place finish at a time of 7:15.6.

In last week's regatta, the Minutewomen knocked off Colgate and Iona in Orchard Beach, N.Y., a neutral site. Guinan led the varsity quad to a first-place finish, winning by 24 seconds with seniors Hannah Brewster and Ellen Maskrey, and junior Sarah Marsan.

The UMass lightweight four boat finished in third place, with seniors Anna Malinkevich, Abby Lively and Maria Arcari, junior Sarah Potts and sophomore coxswain Molly Morgan. The openweight four finished in fourth place. Also, the lightweight four boat consisted of Malinkevich, Potts, Lively, Arcari and coxswain Ledoux.

Earlier in the weekend, the Minutewomen tied with Connecticut for second place behind a very strong Rhode Island squad.

With Brown not attending this year's regatta and UMass coming off of a rousing win, the Minutewomen look to create a fresh winning streak and build momentum going into the Atlantic 10 Tournament next week in Camden, N.J.

However, they will be up against teams the likes of the Longhorns, a perennial powerhouse on the water.

When asked about the level of competition this weekend, Guinan expects a deep field of competition against familiar opponents.

"We know them to be strong crews," said Guinan. "We've faced Columbia pretty much every year and they're a really competitive crew team. We've raced Northeastern before, they're nationally ranked. And racing these fast crews will pretty much show where we rank nationally."

Again, it should be said that the Minutewomen have had limited time on the water and because of this, through no fault of their own, may not be up to par with the rest of the crews on the water this weekend.

When asked about the effort of the team to get ready for the spring season, the captain alluded to the team's workout routine while in Florida, where the UMass rowing team spent a large amount of time with a hands-on chance to train on a body of water.

"We've been working really hard this winter to really step up this year" said Guinan.

The work ethic of the team has been under the radar for quite sometime. UMass coach Jim Dietz has had numerous people from the team call him to say that they would put in extra time. Boyden Gym rarely has a day where there aren't at least a few women from the team putting in extra work to improve on their skills.

Dietz feels this weekend poses the toughest challenge to the team thus far.

"This is probably going to be the first weekend hopefully of good weather conditions" said Dietz. "The competition is probably the best competition we've seen all year."

With heavy competition awaiting them at the Charles River Basin, the Minutewomen look to notch their third win of the year.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu

UM hosts URI in regular season finale

BY MIKE CONNORS
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The Massachusetts tennis team (10-7, 1-1 Atlantic 10) will conclude its regular season tonight when the Minutewomen take on the Rhode Island Rams at 7:30 p.m. in Amherst.

The match will be played indoors at the Bay Road Tennis Club at Hampshire College, due to a forecast of poor weather conditions.

The Minutewomen enter the match coming off one of their most exciting victories of the season. They edged Quinnipiac, 4-3, on Wednesday afternoon in Hampden, Conn. The win snapped a two-game skid from back-to-back weekend losses at the end of March.

Michele Spiess made history against the Bobcats by defeating Gabby Pasternak and attaining her 64th singles victory at UMass. In doing so, UMass' top singles player surpassed Jackie Braunstein as the all-time singles wins leader in school history.

Braunstein's previous record of 63 wins was a four-year record, but Spiess managed to break it in three. Before arriving in Amherst, she played at Louisville for one year. She had a record of 19-10 in singles action, playing primarily as the No. 1.

UMass will now have to focus its attention on URI, who hold an impressive 13-3 record on the year, including victories in all three of it's A-10 matches.

One of the Rams' few losses on the season came at the hands of the Connecticut Huskies two weeks ago. URI senior Lara Maurer grabbed the team's only point of the match at the No. 1 in the 6-1 defeat.

The Minutewomen enjoyed greater success against the Huskies. The match came early in the season back in September, and UMass pulled out a 4-3 win with strong performances from Spiess and Masha Pozar at the top two singles. They also took the doubles point by winning at the first two positions.

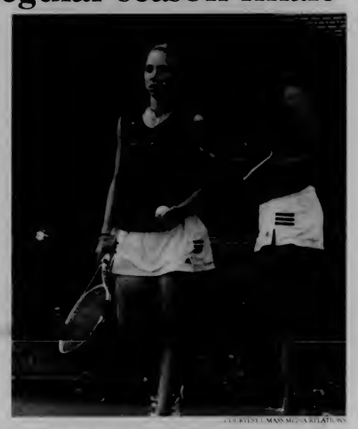
Other common opponents between the teams include Fordham, Brown and Quinnipiac. Both teams have handily outclassed Fordham and Brown, as well as clipping Quinnipiac, 4-3.

A concern for the Minutewomen could be the health of Masha Pozar. She played in her doubles match just two days ago, but was unable to participate in her normal second singles slot and had trouble walking after the match.

If Pozar is unable to play, UMass coach Judy Dixon will have to find a way to fill the void. In addition to her role in the singles play, Pozar has been playing doubles all year and has recently been teaming up with Spiess to form a nearly unbeatable tandem.

Almost as impressive as her singles record, Spiess currently stands third all-time on the UMass doubles wins list. Coming into the spring, she was eighth on the list, but the successful season has vaulted her up the list.

The school will be honoring Spiess during Friday's match. She is the lone senior on this young team and will be celebrated for her accomplishments on the court.



COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Senior Michele Spiess (left) and junior Masha Pozar have led the Minutewomen as the top two singles players on the team this season.

Once Spiess is honored and the Rhode Island match is in the books, the team will have to begin preparing for the Atlantic 10 Championships. The tournament begins a week from today in Pittsburgh, Penn.

The Richmond Spiders have taken the last three A-10 titles, and hold a record of 6-6 this year. However, after starting the season off poorly by losing their first six matches, they have won their last six matches. The winning streak includes a victory against the Minutewomen 5-2 just two weeks ago.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

Sophomore finds niche as utility player

MANCINI from page 10

versatile. I like to run and I feel like I'm pretty good at it. It's something I can do and bring to the team."

She isn't the top point scorer. However, Venechanos believes that every good team needs players that are willing to do the little things and make the team better.

"She's still trying to find herself, but I think what she does a good job of is giving us another possession, moves the ball well," she said. "She does a lot of little stuff that goes unnoticed, but you need players like that on your team to do a little bit of everything."

As a sophomore Mancini is doing anything to get on the field, her main goals are much larger. She likes being a utility player, but she wants to be one of the top players on the team.

"I want to be noticed. I want to be the go-to player, that's my goal," Mancini said.

Before UMass, Mancini did not get a lot of exposure to East Coast play. Playing on the West Coast in Hillsborough, California she felt that she needed to play better competition. She played four years at Foxcroft School in Middleburg, Virginia.

"[Playing on the east coast] helps a lot because I was exposed to better players," she said. "The reason I left [California] was so I could be exposed to higher level of play and other coaches. It was still a disadvantage coming from California, but playing on the east coast before college helped me adjust a lot faster."

The Minutewomen have struggled to score in A-10 play, averaging 8.5 goals per game. Mancini could help the scoring load if she continues to play with confidence at the attack position. Her ability to play multiple positions is why the coaching staff keeps putting her in the game.

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@student.umass.edu

CHRISTIAN GUMZ/COLLEGIAN

After spending most of her freshman season as a reserve player, Claire Mancini has broken into the regular lineup, playing several positions.

Correction

In Wednesday's Daily Collegian, it was reported in both a cutline and a story that senior captain Brett Garber has five hat tricks this season. That is incorrect. Garber has four on the year.

Remember when you felt like this?
Find it again...
UMASS
Haigis Mall bus stop•10:00 am
Amherst College
Converse Hall bus stop
10:20 am
for the FREE
Sunday shuttle
to Dwight Chapel
Dwight Chapel

CINEMARK
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL 6
367 Russell St. 413-587-4237
Schedule for Fri 4/13/07 - Thurs 4/19/07
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND & ALL AUD. ORDERS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
cinemark.com

NOW SHOWING APR. 13-APR. 19
amherst cinema
THE HOAX
...an instant masterpiece. - Richard Roeper
THE LOOKOUT FRI-WED 5:00 9:00 THURS 5:00
NOTES ON A SCANDAL
Academy Award® Winner Best Foreign Film
THE LIVES OF OTHERS
Fri: 4:00, 6:50, 09:30 Tues - Thurs:
Sat-Mon: 1:20, 4:00, 6:50, 9:30 4:00, 6:50, 9:30
God Grew Tired of Us
JANUS FILMS Now 35mm Prints!
THE 400 BLOWS THUR 4/12 7p SUN 4/15 2p MON 4/16 7p
François Truffaut
THE SEVENTH SEAL Ingmar Bergman THUR 4/19 7p MON 4/22 7p
AMITY STREET (413) 253-2547
www.AmherstCinema.org

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

		2				7	1
	6						8
2			1		3	4
2			4	3	6
		9		1
	3	8	6				7
7	5		8			6
4					9
1	9			4

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Rail with a hole
6 U-boats
10 Salon goops
14 More than chubby
15 Chamber grouping
18 Basic core
17 Lip-flapping woman
18 Whole life, e.g.
20 Unexpected success
22 Window over a door
23 Take a breather
24 Called out
25 Not bona fide
27 Sing like Bing
29 Guilt pang
33 Ten-gallon item
34 Thrash
35 Down in the dumps
37 Flared dress
39 Harpiece
41 Computer data
42 Fountain specials
44 Skater's jump
46 Vane dir.
47 Hiking housing
48 Hard, dark wood
50 Potato buds
51 Small atlas map
53 Gasp
55 Abjectly submissive
58 Surface quality
61 Held in reserve
63 Sort of seal
64 Plain stitch
65 In excess of
66 Did survive
67 Child's play
68 Nautilus captain
69 In a lowly fashion

DOWN
1 Ladies
2 Biblical victim
3 Group of contemporaries
4 Thank a lot of
5 Sudden transitions
6 Bustle
7 Container with a tap
8 Continental cafe
9 Going off
10 Daughter's boy
11 Billions of years
12 Nuts
13 Goblet part
19 ___ Dawn Chong
21 Engrave
24 Cockpit second
25 Mine passageway
26 Oscar winner Berry
28 Ruckus
30 In great confusion
31 Make smile
32 Memory units
34 Soggy
36 Taylor who played Cleo
38 Birth
40 Firearm
43 College term
45 Use the keyboard
49 Act properly
50 Call for 52 Nothing
54 Skaters' jumps
55 Rice wine
56 Goddess of the moon
57 Enemy of the Allies
58 Beginner
59 Slugger
60 Small whirlpool
62 Dream sleep

KID KOALA plus Purity Supreme: Beach Attack & DJ Cashmae
WED. APR. 18 • 8:30 PM DOORS OPEN @ 6:00 PM
29 CENTER ST. NORTHAMPTON
RJD2 plus Observer, Chicmystic
SUN. APR. 15 • 8:30 PM DOORS OPEN 7:30 PM/BALLROOM
KITTIE plus In This Moment, Fearosonic, Ruthless, Farewell Radiance
THU. APR. 17 • 7:00 PM DOORS OPEN 6:00 PM/BALLROOM
PARTICLE plus Revision
THU. APR. 19 • 8:30 PM DOORS OPEN 7:30 PM/CLUBROOM
Pearl Street Night club 10 PEARL ST. NORTHAMPTON
WIN TICKETS!
E-mail your name & favorite band to streeteam@iheg.com
TO PURCHASE TICKETS OR FOR MORE INFO VISIT OUR WEBSITE OR CALL:
WWW.IHEG.COM
413-586-8686

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"You know the guy who can pick up any girl? I'm him on crack."

-Dual Credit to: Aaron Eckhart in "Thank you for Smoking" and Adam Szajgin in "Things that are very true about me."

PAUL - BY BILLY O'KEEFFE

WHO ARE YOU?
OH, HEY THERE. I'M ASHLEY. I WORK FOR YOUR ROOMMATE
WHOA.
OH, DO YOU LIKE HIM? HE'S NOT SO GREAT IN MY BOOK, BUT I LET HIM LIVE HERE BECAUSE HE WORSHIPS ME. IF YOU SAW HOW MUCH I CAN BENCH, YOU'D UNDERSTAND.
DON'T TELL HIM I SAID THAT, THOUGH.
WELL, OKAY, BUT...
I'M STANDING RIGHT HERE, YOU DOPE! HOW DO YOU NOT SEE ME?!

HARD KNOCKS - BY LOUIS COPPOLA

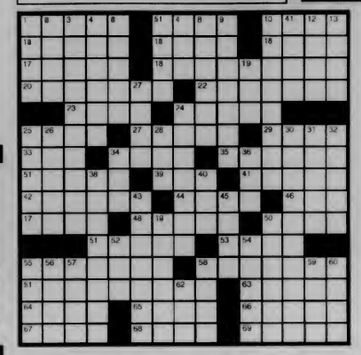
HARD KNOCKS
KNOX SAYS HE WANTS ME TO HEAR ABOUT YOUR SCRIPT. YOU HAVE FIVE MINUTES.
OKAY, SO WHAT IT'S ABOUT IS THIS TROUBLED INNER-CITY SCHOOL WHERE ALMOST ALL THE STUDENTS ARE GOING TO FLUNK OUT OR DROP OUT.
NO ONE'S EVER BELIEVED IN THESE KIDS, UNTIL NOW. THEY NEED TO PASS ENGLISH TO GRADUATE, AND THEIR ONLY HOPE...
IS A WHITE WOMAN.
I LOVE IT.

A COLLEGE GIRL NAMED JOE - BY AARON WARNER

A College Girl Named Joe
THINGS YOU NEVER WANT TO HEAR IN COLLEGE:
by Aaron Warner
SO WHAT DID YOU USE TO TEST THE NEW SHREDDER?
SOME OLD PAPER YOU WERE WRITING ON.

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK - BY JOSH SHAKES

That's my cousin Freddie. When I introduce him people ask me two questions.
Is his name really Freddie Freeloader?
The answer to that is yes.
The answer to the second question comes after you get to know him, and the answer is, not soon enough.
When is he leaving?



Continuing & Professional Education
UMass Amherst Summer 2007
Get an early start on your summer plans!
- New online Genfeds
- Same great faculty
- Smaller classes
- Two Sessions

I: June 4 – July 2
II: July 6 – August 22
(Variable date classes available)

Register now!
By visiting us at www.UMassLearn.net/ce

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Steal UMass water as often as you can as pay back for what UMass steals from you.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
In your case, it's not Friday the 13th you gotta watch out for, it's Saturday the 14th.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Grow a very long beard and hide things in it like toy trains, skittles and bottle rockets.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Forget New Dirt, let's take to the sky. The future of this university is in the monorail.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Life can be like giant zit filled with pressure. The only option is to pop that sucker.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Write a strongly worded letter to Mother Nature about her PMS influenced weather.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
If Noah really did have an ark, he would have taken seven of you on it.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
You will laugh so hard that your jugular bursts. At this point the laughter will stop.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Fishing is a great sport if you expect very little out of your mundane and boring life.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Turn all the lights in the bathroom off and chant "Bloody mary." I swear it works.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Sometimes you gotta put a little grease on the old swingset to pull off an underdog.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Imagine how a pony feels when it stands next to a horse.

Akon called and was like,
"Where are all the student comics?"
and I was like,
"I don't know dude. I dont know."

www.dailycollegian.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Like no other course, Army ROTC All money going to school and none for the weekend? We pay you to be a student and learn leadership www.umass.edu/armyrotc

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Mill Valley Estates APARTMENT FOR RENT 2 bedroom $1125, 3 bedroom $1425, 4 bedroom $2175 Accepting Applications, 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winnco.com

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

EMPLOYMENT

28 Stockbridge st: 4 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage, 1.5 Mi to campus! $2,900/Mo www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

EMPLOYMENT

Moving: Local Moving Company looking for self motivated individuals, part-time positions available immediately. Weekday availability a plus. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call (413) 584-4746

Outdoor Recreation Jobs Rafting guides full or part time Massachusetts or Maine. Will train! Contact www.moxierafting.com 800-866-6943

EMPLOYMENT

Full time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office, $9.50/hour Applications available at 235 Whitmore and are due April 13th.

Line-cooks needed Full-time Part-time available. Apply in person Amherst Brewing Co. 24 N. Pleasant st.

Attention All Juniors and Senior! April 6th is the last day to apply to become a legal Assistant with the Student Legal Services Office. Earn 12 undergraduate credits while gaining valuable experience in the legal field! Contact us at 545-1995 or stop by our office at 922 Campus Center!

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

Premium skin care and wellness Excellent training and benefits, http://new-england.myarbonne.com

Attention All Juniors and Seniors! The deadline is now extended to april 13th to apply to become a Legal Assistant with the Student Legal Services Office. Earn up to 12 undergraduate credits while gaining valuable experience in the legal field. Contact us at 545-1995 or stop by our office at 922 Campus Center.

HOUSE FOR RENT

4 bedroom in Northampton $1300 available sept. Also 3 bedroom $1200 available now or June 1st. No Pets, Skibiski Realtors 586-1827

ROOM FOR RENT

Amherst Beautiful quiet house great location. Need car. With Nice guy and daughter. Perfect for single/couple. Call Jonathan for details 413-253-2535

Amherst nice house on bus route to all colleges. 2 rooms available immediately. Each 450 mo + electric. Call Ally 413-253-4929 leave message or call 413-626-7491

Cape Cod Seeking summer roommates starting 6/10 Yarmouth, MA near beach. Female only. 617-519-0178

SERVICES

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

SERVICES

Pregnancy Testing. HIV Testing. Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst 548-9992 www.tapestryhealth.com

Legal Questions? We have answers. Contact Student Legal Services office 922 Campus Center or call 545-1995

SUMMER SUBLET

Alpine Commons apartment June-August 15th $2050/month includes utilities. 413.204.9519 or jennaw@student.umass.edu

www.dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, APRIL 13, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass hosts GW in three-game series

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After consecutive non-conference victories, the Massachusetts baseball team returns to the Atlantic 10 portion of its schedule against George Washington today for the start of a three-game home series.

The Colonials (11-22, 3-6 A-10) enter this weekend's series tied with the Minutemen (8-13, 3-6 A-10) in the conference, but are streaking in the opposite direction – losing 10 of their last 13 games, including four straight. George Washington's struggles culminated on Wednesday, losing 21-4 to a James Madison squad that also finds itself well south of the .500 mark.

UMass and GW – among other teams – are tied for ninth place in the A-10, and the winner of this weekend's series will earn a leg-up in the standings. These teams last met in 2004, with the Colonials taking two out of three in Arlington, Va. Despite edging the Minutemen in that three-game set, GW still trails the all-time series 14-11.

But this time around, George Washington doesn't have the luxury of facing the Minutemen at home. Although this season has been a bit of a struggle, GW has played rather well at home, amassing an 8-8 record.

But it's been a different story on the road, with

See BASEBALL on page 7

MICHAEL PHILLIPS/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore Adam Tempesta continues to power the Minuteman offense, leading the team with a .346 batting average, 28 total hits and six doubles. The second baseman is also fourth on the team with a .946 fielding percentage, committing two errors on the season.

Minutewomen fly south to Charlotte

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After a victory over in-state rival Boston College, the Massachusetts softball team (20-12-1, 6-0 Atlantic 10) resumes conference play with a two-game set against Charlotte (22-18, 2-4 A-10) this weekend. First pitches are set for 4 p.m. Friday and noon on Saturday.

The 49ers split the regular season A-10 Championship with UMass last season, but got off to a rough start in A-10 play to begin this season. The 49ers lost their first three games of their A-10 schedule – all home games. Fordham swept the 49ers before George Washington and Charlotte battled to a split of a doubleheader on April 1.

Last season, UMass and Charlotte split a doubleheader on April 9 in Amherst. Despite out-hitting the Rams 6-2, the Minutewomen left 10 runners on base and lost 2-1, wasting an outstanding outing from Brandice Balschmiter. She lost two games in conference last season – the other was to Saint Louis.

The Minutewomen got their revenge over Charlotte in the second game of the twin bill, however. Whitney Mollica homered and drove in four while Amanda Morin drove in three runs and scored two from the leadoff spot in UMass' 12-1 win.

Before that doubleheader, the Minutewomen and Charlotte played just once previously with UMass getting the best of the 49ers that day.

In their most recent action, the 49ers dropped two games to North Carolina State of the Atlantic Coast Conference. Overall, they've lost three of their last for games and desperately need to build some momentum if they hope to qualify for the A-10 Tournament.

A trio of seniors pace the 49er offensive assault, centerfielder Evan Miller, right fielder Kristi Killough and catcher Becky Matthews.

Typically operating out of the leadoff spot, Miller leads the 49ers in batting average (.346) and on-base percentage (.396). Against UMass last season, she was 1-for-6 and went hitless in her last three games in seven in at-bats.

Things went a little differently for Killough recently; she went 3-for-8 while connecting on her sixth home run of the season and school record 19th of her career. As a junior last season she made A-10 First Team All-Conference. In last season's action against UMass she went 3-for-6 with a homer.

Matthews has been the best of the three in her last three contests. In her 10 at-bats she has four hits

See SOFTBALL on page 7

TUAN TRINH/COLLEGIAN

Junior Lauren Proctor continues to improve offensively. The left fielder is second on the team in batting average (.371) and RBIs (25).

Fordham piling up wins in Atlantic 10

BY DOMENIC POLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Heading into Patriots' Day weekend, the Massachusetts softball team has the only perfect Atlantic 10 record, having gone 20-12-1 overall and 6-0 in the conference.

Sitting in second place is Fordham University (27-13, 9-1 A-10). The Rams have racked up more wins than any other team in the conference. The Minutewomen, however, are in the top spot with a perfect 6-0 conference record.

On the next rung of the conference ladder are the Saint Louis Billikens. With their 6-2 record, they maintain a .750 winning percentage. Saint Louis is attempting not to lose its grip on progress as it battles through the remainder of the season. It has already improved from its A-10 performance last year when it finished at 8-12, resulting in a share of sixth place in a three-way tie with Dayton and Rhode Island.

Temple University is the only other team whose conference record has not become a losing one. At 500, the Owls are 3-3 in A-10 play, while having competed in only 23 overall games this season. Temple sits just out of view of the top and will need to get its act together if it wants to make a solid run to the top of the A-10 standings.

George Washington and La Salle might be categorized as the best of the worst, as they are at the top of the pyramid of conference teams with a losing record. With records of 4-6, both the Colonials and the Explorers have a .400 winning percentage. They carry overall records of 16-15 and 11-14, respectively.

GW's last outing – a doubleheader against James Madison, scheduled for April 11 – was postponed due to rain in the Harrisonburg, Va. area.

La Salle's Angelina Bisbiglia spoke softly but carried a big stick in the second game of a non-conference doubleheader against the Towson Tigers on Wednesday. The freshman went 3-for-3, bringing in five teammates to cross the plate in the 9-1 victory.

Scrapping the bottom of the A-10 barrel with the worst record is Dayton University. Currently at 1-6, the Flyers maintain a winning percentage of .143.

Dayton has only one regular starter with a batting average above .300 – in sophomore outfielder Mollie Shrank, who is batting .317.

All hope might be lost for the Flyers, who will need an intense jumpstart if they want to make anything happen this season.

UMass Softball

See A-10 SOFTBALL on page 7

Champion Spiders infest Amherst

BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It's still early in the Atlantic 10 season, but a victory this weekend is a top priority for Massachusetts women's lacrosse team. The Minutewomen (5-7, 0-2 Atlantic 10) need a win to keep pace with the rest of the conference. But with third-place Richmond (8-5, 2-1 A-10) in town for Sunday's game, the task at hand is not an easy one.

The game is set for a noon face-off at McGuirk Stadium.

In their last contest, the Minutewomen dropped a close contest to George Washington (5-5, 1-0 A-10), 10-7. UMass dominated the first 15 minutes of play, but succumbed to the Colonials with a poor showing in the second half.

GW held leading scorer Kathleen Typadis to only two goals, although the junior forward missed part of the first half with a knee injury. The Maroon and White's otherwise balanced scoring attack was stifled by the GW defense and its own mistakes. The team managed only five shots in the final 30 minutes and committed 26 fouls.

Playing against an experienced Richmond team, the Minutewomen know that they will have to take better care of the ball than they did against George Washington. The 26 total turnovers significantly restricted their ability to establish a rhythm on offense.

"We'll go into the game and control the things that we can do," Venechanos said. "I think we've been beating ourselves the past few games – the turnovers, not taking care of the ball and not taking advantage of our opportunities. We're doing very well off draw controls, but we're simply losing the ball."

However, the Minutewomen received strong goalkeeping from fifth-year senior Lauren McCarthy the past few games. She made 10 saves against Richmond and ranks third in goals-against average in the A-10. The team also fared well on draw controls, winning an impressive eight of 12 in the first half against GW.

Last season, Richmond established a new level of program success with 16 wins. The Spiders won their first regular season title and second consecutive A-10 tournament championship in 2006.

"They're a polished team and they certainly know how to play with each other," Venechanos said. "It's going to take a total team effort from us to get the victory."

Things also looked good for the Spiders going into this season, as the league's coaches picked

See W. LAX on page 7

Mancini becomes role player for UM

BY STEVE GAMES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Last season as a freshman, Claire Mancini appeared in only one game. After working extremely hard in the off season, Mancini has bloomed into an everyday player, appearing in 10 of the team's first 12 games.

In her sophomore season, Mancini normally plays attack, but to see more playing time she has adapted to different positions on the field.

"She's a utility person for us," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said.

This season Mancini has played just about every position except for goalie. There are no stats in the book to show how hard she works in practice and in games. She has been an efficient scorer when given the opportunity, scoring three goals on five shots.

"We talked a lot at the beginning of the season about things you can control," Venechanos said. "She came in great condition, she has strong fundamentals, and that's the foundation of any good lacrosse player. What she lacks in experience, she makes up for with her skills and her hard work. When she's had the opportunity, she's stepping up and putting some goals away."

The one thing lacking in Mancini's game isn't the skills or knowledge of the game, but her confidence. The coaching staff has been telling her to believe that she is the best player on the field, or even the best player in the nation. Venechanos believes that Mancini cannot be stopped if she has her confidence riding high.

"She's one of the hardest workers on the team. Every time we give her an opportunity, she seems to step up," Venechanos said.

Mancini knows what she has to improve her level of play. She is one of the first players off the bench and provides great energy for the team.

"I'm just trying to listen to what the coaches are telling me," Mancini said. "Confidence is a really big thing for me this year; I'm just working on personal things. I'm just trying to work hard [and] do my job."

Mancini achieved career firsts in her second season. She scored her first goal against Vermont in a 13-8 Minutewomen victory. In the only start of her career she made the best of her opportunity against Albany, tallying two assists in another Minutewomen victory, 15-7.

"I've always been an attacker, and this year I've switched over to midfield and playing more defense," Mancini said. "I'm trying to learn defensive strategies. I feel like I'm

CHRISTIAN CORAZZA/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore Claire Mancini has developed into a strong contributor for the Minutewomen in her second season, playing in multiple roles on the field. She has registered five points on three goals and two assists.

See MANCINI on page 8

UMass Athletic Wrap

Sponsored by

University Health Services
Health Education

UMass Athletics
Calendar of Events

This Weekend

Friday, April 13

BASEBALL
vs. George Washington
3:00 p.m.
Amherst, Mass.

SOFTBALL
at Charlotte
4:00 p.m.
Charlotte, N.C.

WOMEN'S TENNIS
vs. Rhode Island
7:30 p.m.
Amherst, Mass.

Saturday, April 14

MEN'S LACROSSE
at Hobart
12:00 p.m.
Geneva, N.Y.

SOFTBALL
at Charlotte
12:00 p.m.
Charlotte, N.C.

BASEBALL
vs. George Washington
12:00 p.m.
Amherst, Mass.

Sunday, April 15

BASEBALL
vs. George Washington
12:00 p.m.
Amherst, Mass.

WOMEN'S LACROSSE
vs. Richmond
12:00 p.m.
Amherst, Mass.

Next Week

Tuesday, April 17

SOFTBALL
at Connecticut
4:00 p.m.
Storrs, Conn.

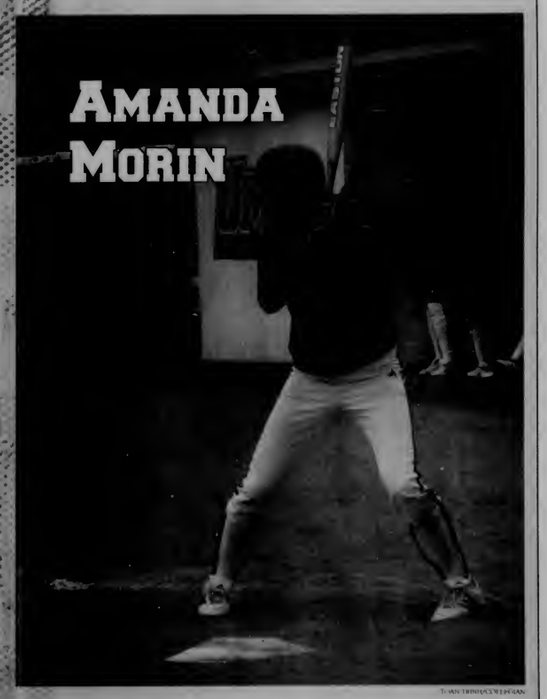
BASEBALL
Beanpot-Northeastern
TBA
Lynn, Mass.

Wednesday, April 18

BASEBALL
vs. Sacred Heart
4:00 p.m.
Amherst, Mass.

MEN'S TRACK
Holy Cross Decathalon
12:00 p.m.
Worcester, Mass.

Amanda Morin



TUAN TRINH/COLLEGIAN

University Health Services
Health Education

What if ... there was a course all about you, your friends and your health where ...
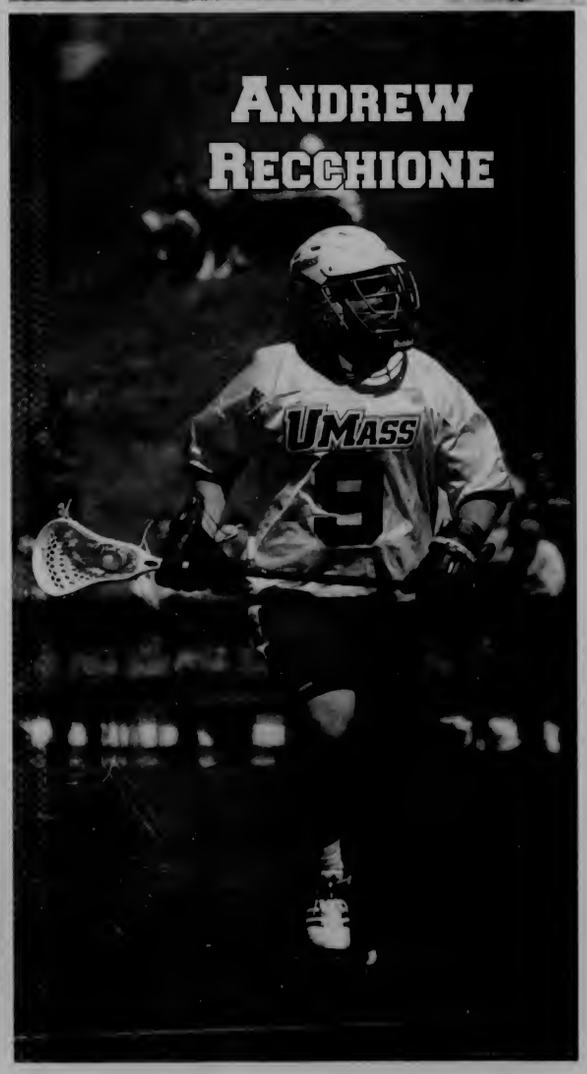
laughter, play and creativity were encouraged
and ...
you'd earn 6 credits while making a difference in the UMass Amherst community.
You'd want to sign up, right?
Health Education
University Health Services
577.5181 www.umass.edu/uhs
UMASS
AMHERST



Not Published

Holiday

COLONIALS TAKE TWO FROM MINUTEMEN PAGE 10

DICKINSON INSPIRES FAC PERFORMANCE PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

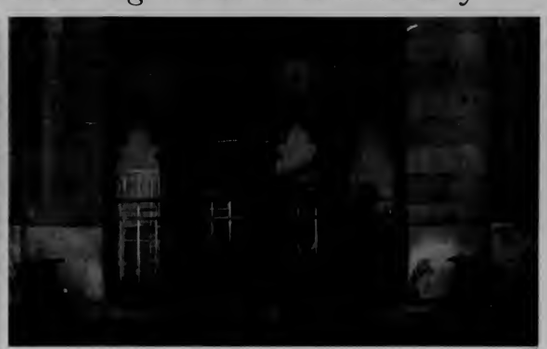
NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

RAIN / SNOW : HI: 39 LO: 35 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM TUESDAY, APRIL 17, 2007

Tragedy strikes Virginia Tech

Gunman kills 32 in bloodiest shooting in American history

Virginia Tech freshman Kevin Murphy stands in front of Norris Hall where 32 people were killed and more were injured yesterday. He said he spent most of the day in the dorm but wanted to come down and see the scene for himself.



Police officers patrol the front steps of Virginia Tech's Burruss Hall, the building located next to Norris Hall, where 32 people were killed and more were injured yesterday on the Blacksburg campus.

UM students react to Virginia Tech massacre

By Anna Dollanitis
Collegian Staff

The largest shooting in United States history occurred yesterday on the Virginia Tech campus when a gunman, whose name remains undisclosed, opened fire on two separate occasions, killing 32 people before turning the gun on himself.

The shooting began at about 7:15 a.m. at West Ambler Johnston, a co-ed dormitory, and then continued approximately two hours later at Norris Hall, an engineering building about a half-hour away, according to the Associated Press.

Two people were killed in a dormitory room, and 31 others were killed in the classroom building, including the gunman who put a bullet to his head, according to a story in the AP.

The massacre has received national attention, but the manner in which the campus handled the situation has triggered controversy, questioning the level of security on college campuses.

"My question has been, constantly, how did that man get from the left side of the campus half a mile away to the right side, with the cops and fire trucks in between? They should have had police officers and security guards quartering off areas of the campus to make sure that didn't happen," said Dr. Britt Marshall, former U.S. Deputy Marshall, INTERPOL agent, and advisor to President Jimmy Carter on the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration in a phone interview.

According to Marshall, authorities were too focused on the first scene to consider what the gunman would do next.

See STUDENTS on page 3

Man opens fire in classroom, shoots himself

By Sue Lindsey
Associated Press

BLACKSBURG, Va. — A gunman opened fire in a Virginia Tech dorm and then, two hours later, shot up a classroom building across campus Monday, killing 32 people in the deadliest shooting rampage in U.S. history. The gunman committed suicide, bringing the death toll to 33.

Students bitterly complained that there were no public-address announcements on campus after the first burst of gunfire. Many said the first word they received from the university was an e-mail more than two hours into the rampage — around the time the gunman struck again.

Virginia Tech President Charles Steger said authorities believed that the shooting at the dorm was a domestic dispute and mistakenly thought the gunman had fled the campus.

"We had no reason to suspect any other incident was going to occur," he said.

He defended the university's handling of the tragedy, saying: "We can only make decisions based on the information you had on the time. You don't have hours to reflect on it."

Investigators offered no motive for the attack. The gunman's name was not immediately released, and it was not known if he was a student.

The shootings spread panic and confusion on campus. Witnesses reporting students jumping out the windows of a classroom building to escape the gunfire. SWAT team members with helmets, flak

See VTECH on page 3

Nor'easter storm soaks UMass campus

Heavy rain floods dorm rooms in Orchard Hill

By Hayden Marx
Collegian Staff

Maurine Braun, a freshman living in Grayson Hall, awoke yesterday to find her rug soaked. She thought that maybe her roommate, Emily May had spilled something, but when she asked her, May said no.

"And I'm like oh my God," said Braun. "The window's leaking."

According to Matt Sherman, the Orchard Hill Area Governor, the residential area has had problems with water leaking through windows when hard rains combined with heavy winds. He said he believes the problem is due to weak weather stripping.

"When it's really windy the rain is forced into the cracks," said Sherman.

Sherman, who is Braun's Resident Assistant (RA), became a RA last August. He explained this is the first time an incident of this kind has occurred on his floor this year, but other floors within the building have had problems with leaking after snow falls.

Rain entered Braun's room through cracks in their window, pooling under their desks before spreading throughout the room. Braun said they had cleaned their room recently so there wasn't much on the floor.

Braun said luckily her subwoofer and her roommate's printer, which are both kept under their desks near the window, were not damaged by the water.

May said the water has mainly done damage to her notebooks and art supplies, and fortunately her artwork was not destroyed.

"If my art had gotten ruined I would be in tears right now," said May.

Braun said besides her rug, her textbooks from last semester were also soaked. She had planned to sell them back after this semester but doesn't think she will be able to now.

"They're completely water damaged. I don't think I can sell them back or even open them," said Braun. "I'm just glad I didn't have my textbooks for this semester on the floor."

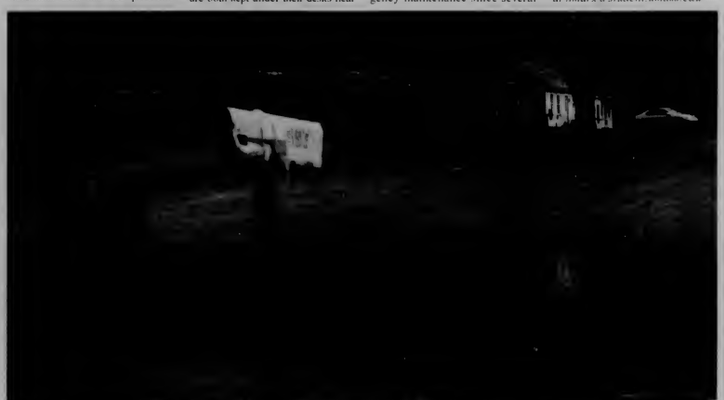
She told Sherman about the problem shortly after it was discovered. He then called emergency maintenance since several other people were having the same problem. Sherman said that the emergency maintenance person was on the phone with someone else with the same problem when he called.

Braun said emergency services gave them a "sandbag type thing" to put under her window to stop further leaking. She said emergency services did not give them a specific day when they will repair the damage.

According to Sherman, that's how emergency maintenance has always worked. He said they deal with problems based on the necessity of the repair — broken glass usually gets priority — but he expects it will be dealt with soon.

Emergency maintenance had no comment at this time.

Hayden Marx can be reached at hmarx@student.umass.edu



The nor'easter has flooded the UMass campus, as well as homes in Amherst, like the one shown above. From the beaches of South Carolina to the mountains of Maine, the record-breaking storm has been responsible for numerous power outages and at least 12 deaths nationwide.

UMass freshman found dead in Mary Lyon dorm room

By Matt Belliveau
Collegian Staff

Numerous University of Massachusetts students spent this past holiday weekend mourning the loss of a friend and classmate.

Kyle B. Brito, 19, of Onset, Mass., was found dead in his single room in Mary Lyon Hall located in Northeast Residential Area shortly after 8:20 p.m. Saturday, following a request to check on his well-being, said a UMass-Amherst Police report.

Police said Brito was last seen entering his residence hall Monday. The University received a call from a family member to check on Brito Saturday night, and shortly thereafter residence hall staff found Brito's body on the floor beside his bed.

Police believe he was dead for some time before the body was found Saturday.

Brito was a first-year student majoring in Animal Science and a member of the UMass co-ed cheerleading team.

Police said they are involved in an ongoing investigation.

"This is very sad time for UMass Amherst community. We wish to extend our deepest sympathy to Kyle's family and friends," said Dean of Students Jo-Anne Vanin.

Police said they do not suspect foul play.

The body has been taken to Providence Hospital in Holyoke, police said, where a medical examiner will conduct an autopsy later this week to determine the cause of death.

A Memorial service was held inside Mary Lyon Hall Sunday for grieving students.

Matt Belliveau can be reached at mbbelliv@student.umass.edu

U. Wisconsin greek life welcomes gay frat

By Nick Penzenstadler
Badger Herald (U. Wisconsin)

MADISON, Wis. — A gay fraternity is one step closer to becoming an official organization on the University of Wisconsin campus.

Delta Lambda Phi, which is currently classified as a "colony," is continuing its quest to become a recognized group by Interfraternity, which represents 26 fraternities and sororities on campus.

"I think it's a pretty good thing," said Eli Judge, Delta Lambda Phi treasurer. "I've been helping to get it started over the past year and a half. It's a wonderful addition to the Greek community and UW community in general."

Judge said the process for being adopted into the national fraternity is lengthy and follows the traditional rush, pledge, brother course.

Judge added that there has been a false perception that the Greek community has been unwelcoming to lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender students.

"There are many LGBT students in the Greek community right now," Judge said. "It adds a different kind of culture."

See GREEK on page 3

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVII
Issue 118

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3499 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Eric Athas
Managing Editor Rob Greenfield
Business Manager Dan Conti
Production Manager Amanda Allen
Night Supervisor Sherol Wolnik
Advertising Manager Jaimeson Porter
Advertising Production Molly Eggleston
Arts & Living Editor Morgan Rousseau
Comics Editor Adam Scaggin
Editorial Editor Tucker Merrick
News Editor Matt Belliveau
Sports Editor Danny Picard
Sports Editor Jon Pelland
Features Editor Melissa D'Amico
Circulation Manager Jeff Perez
Asst. Business Manager David Valade
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Nicole Paddester
Asst. Arts & Living Tim McCall
Asst. Arts & Living Sydney Towne
Assistant News Anna Dollamis
Assistant News Nicole Boonjakuakul
Assistant Editorial Brendan Hall
Assistant Sports Jeremy Rice
Web Editor James Hale
Photo Editor Toan Trinh

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semesters. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1958. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Belliveau

COPY EDITOR
Jamie Mason

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Tiffany Van Langen

Boston astronaut completes marathon in space

By Mike Schneider
Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — She traveled around the world almost three times and was harnessed to a treadmill so she wouldn't float away.

NASA astronaut Sunita "Suni" Williams completed her version of the Boston Marathon on Monday — more than 210 miles above Earth.

"I'm done! Woo hoo!" Williams told Mission Control after running 26.2 miles on a treadmill at the international space station.

Already traveling at 17,500 mph, Williams started the race on time at 10 a.m. EDT with race No. 14,000 taped to the front of the treadmill as the space station passed over the Pacific Ocean. She finished, unofficially, 4 hours, 23 minutes and 46 seconds later as the station traveled over Russia.

The 41-year-old astronaut, who grew up in the Boston area, had kind words for the temperamental treadmill, which has had its share of breakdowns.

"No problems. No flaws. No nothing," said Williams, who wore Boston Red Sox socks for her run. "It did everything I wanted it to do."

Two laptop computers were on either side so she could watch past Boston Marathons on a DVD and keep track of where the space station was flying. Periodically, she asked Mission Control for an update on the times of friends, including NASA astronaut Karen Nyberg, and her sister, Dina Pandya, who were running the marathon on the ground.

AP/1

Astronaut Suni Williams is seen in a video recording from the International Space Station at the NASA booth inside the Hynes Convention Center as fellow astronaut Jeff Williams, no relation, speaks with marathon runners in Boston on Sunday.

Nyberg finished in 3:32:9 and Pandya in 4:14:30 on a day when the Boston runners faced the remnants of a chilly, soaking nor'easter. The space station was a balmy 78 degrees.

"Those guys are kicking butt even though it's cold," William said when told of the times of her friends and sister.

Williams woke up several hours earlier than her crew mates because of the marathon. Also at the space station were U.S. astronaut Michael Lopez-Alegria, Russian cosmonauts Mikhail Tyurin, Fyodor Yurchikhin and Oleg Kotov and space tourist Charles Simonyi.

Williams qualified for the Boston race by finishing the Houston Marathon in January in 3:29:57. On Monday, she ran at a pace of more than 6 mph through most of her race. Like many of her counterparts on the ground, she took a couple of short breaks of a minute or two to stretch her legs or adjust her harness. Her crew mates tossed snacks of orange pieces at her in the weightlessness of space.

She also got plenty of encouragement from Mission Control in Houston.

"Keep it up. I think you're over Heartbreak Hill," Mission Control radioed Williams after she reached the 20-mile mark, referring to the race's final hill whose summit has a view of Boston's Prudential Tower.

"It's all downhill ... and into the Prudential," Williams radioed back. "We're going to make it."

Drunken teenager emerges unharmed from under train

BERLIN — A drunken man who fell under a train after being jolted out of a nap at a railway station emerged unscathed from beneath the locomotive.

The 19-year-old had fallen asleep on the station platform in Cologne but was startled by the incoming train. Losing his balance, he fell in front of the locomotive, police said.

"According to the man he fell exactly between the two tracks and just felt a light knock on the head," Cologne police said in a statement.

The shocked train driver pulled the emergency brakes only to see the man emerge unaided from under the engine. He was taken to hospital for observation.

–Associated Press

Three countries ban Antichrist

By Mica Rosenberg
Associated Press

GUATEMALA — Three Central American governments have banned a man claiming to be the Antichrist from entering their countries, outraged by his inflammatory preaching against the Catholic Church and organized religion.

El Salvador, Honduras and Guatemala have banned Jose de Jesus Miranda, who heads a cult-like movement with sermons televised from Miami to dozens of mostly Latin American nations and wants to join followers at a rally next week in Guatemala.

A former heroin addict who was briefly imprisoned as a youth in his native Puerto Rico, Miranda, 60, talks openly in a video on his Web site about how he loved cocaine and dreamed of working in a Colombian drug lab.

He has the number 666 tattooed on his arm but says he is Jesus Christ reborn on Earth, arguing Saint Paul's teachings show this is what Antichrist means.

Miranda's ministry began in 1986 in a Miami warehouse. He says it has congregations in over 20 countries, mostly in Latin America.

In one video, the leader of the "Growing in Grace" church, sporting slicked hair, tailored suits and gold chains, rolls up his sleeves to reveal the number 666 tattooed on his forearm.

Hundreds of followers have now tattooed themselves with the number saying it is a symbol of love and not the sign of Satan. They say there is no devil, no hell and no such thing as sin.

The ministry has no formal membership system, but church representatives say his television audience numbers in the millions, bringing multimillion dollar donations.

Some of his more generous followers have given him businesses, luxury cars, jewels and opulent houses in Houston and Miami Beach.

One evangelical preacher in El Salvador called him a "megalomaniac" and likened him to Jim Jones, who led 900 followers into a mass suicide-murder in 1978.

A CONSEQUENTIAL ABERRATION: GEORGE W. BUSH'S FOREIGN POLICY— AND BEYOND

STROBE TALBOTT
Former U.S. Deputy Secretary of State

Thursday, April 19, at 7:30 p.m.
Cole Assembly Room, Converse Hall
Amherst College

Free and Open to the Public

Please join us for the 9th annual

Freedom Seder

Based on the Jewish Passover ritual, the Freedom Seder uses stories, poetry, songs and traditional African American and Jewish foods to express our yearning for multicultural unity and universal liberation.

Wednesday, April 18, 2007 at 6:00PM
Campus Center 1009 (Amherst Room)
UMass Amherst

FREE with dinner included
(Kosher meals available upon request)

For more information call 413.545.9642 or www.umass.edu/jewish

UMASS AMHERST
Sponsored by the Office of Jewish Affairs, Black Student Union, Muslim Students Association, Center for Student Development, Student Affairs and Campus Life, and Campus Center Catering

Students question campus security

STUDENTS from page 1

"They assumed he shot someone and was running away. I don't want to blame anyone, but something was done horribly wrong," he said.

Virginia Tech president Charles Steger emphasized that the University closed off dormitories after the first shooting, and used e-mail to update students about the incident two hours later. An e-mail was sent to the students only moments before the second shooting took place, according to the AP.

Minshall offered a three-fold explanation for why such incidents occur. First, he described the ages of 18 to 25 as the most unstable age range.

"You have all kinds of young people trying to actualize their lives," he said. He also addressed the pressure on young people to obtain scholarships, to date, to succeed in sports, etc. "There's always drinking, camaraderie, and competition," he said.

"We live in the most violent nation in the world. The American people love their guns. And as long as you have this, you're going to have what happened happen."

This matter of national concern affected students on a more local level, however, when University of Massachusetts students asked themselves, "Could this happen at our school?"

Junior Nick Philpott's initial reaction upon hearing of the shooting was concern for his friends who attend Virginia Tech.

"I haven't been able to get in contact with them yet, but I know they're okay because of their away messages," he said.

"When events like this happen, it is a reality check. It's scary to see that this can happen anywhere," said freshman Shauna Jackson.

Junior Sarah Pinheiro said that while the possibility of violence isn't something she considers on a daily basis, situations like the Virginia Tech shooting cause her to question residence hall security, and how prepared UMass would be in the event of such a crisis.

"I always think about how random people can come in and out of the dorms and someone like a killer could be roaming around and you'd never know," said Pinheiro. "Especially since it could be either a UMass student or someone that isn't even affiliated with the school."

Pinheiro cited last year's stabbings on UMass' "Frat Row" as an incident in which violence occurred on campus perpetrated by non-UMass students.

Philpott expressed a hope that this incident will draw national attention to violence carried out by Americans, rather than emphasizing terrorist violence from other countries.

"I really don't know what UMass could do but I think that someone needs to do something to try to ensure that something like this will never happen at UMass," Philpott said.

Paying more attention to security policies rather than more strictly enforced policies – such as the alcohol policy – is one suggestion Pinheiro makes in order to make UMass more safe.

"UMass spends lots of money on things we don't need. You don't need those new buildings if your students are getting gunned down," she said.

Minshall predicts that the national reaction to the Virginia Tech shooting will be "what it always is – put a bandaid on an oil well." He predicts calls for new security and gun legislation.

"And six weeks later, the NRA [National Rifle Association] will write a check to every Congressmen in the country, and there will be no gun legislation," he said.

According to Director of News and Information at UMass Ed Blaguszewski, who briefly spoke with the UMass Police Chief Barbara O'Connor after the occurrence, "This is a scenario that the Chief has thought about and that she is concerned about, as all campus officials are." Chief O'Connor could not be reached for comment.

Freshman Jacob Chamoff rejects the idea that UMass, and other universities of a similar size, could prevent such an incident.

"It's hard to do much more on an open campus. It might help to have more police officers, but anyone can still get on campus and do whatever they want," he said.

Think other schools will try to make their campuses safer in response to this. But I still think that something like this would never happen to me, or where I am, although that's just me being naive," said Jackson.

Local police at Virginia Tech received bomb threats over the past two weeks. However, they claim there is no connection between the threats and the shootings. At least 26 people are being treated in the hospital, with at least six in surgery, according to the AP. The investigation into the exact course of events is ongoing.

Jenna Colangelo can be reached at news@collegian.com.

U.S.' deadliest shooting hits V.Tech

VTECH from page 1

jackets and assault rifles swarmed over the campus. Students and faculty members carried out some of the wounded themselves, without waiting for ambulances to arrive. A student used his cellphone camera to record the sound of shots echoing through the stone classroom building.

The massacre took place at opposite sides of the 2,600-acre campus, beginning at about 7:15 a.m. at West Ambler Johnston, a coed dormitory that houses 895 people, and continuing at least two hours later at Norris Hall, an engineering building about a half-mile away, authorities said.

Two people were killed in a dormitory room, and 31 others were killed in the classroom building, including the gunman, police said.

"Today the university was struck with a tragedy that we consider of monumental proportions," Steger said. "The university is shocked and indeed horrified."

Steger emphasized that the university closed off the dorm after the first attack and decided to rely on e-mail and other electronic means to notify members of the university, but with 11,000 people driving onto campus first thing in the morning, it was difficult to get the word out. He said that before the e-mail went out, the university began telephoning resident advisers in the dorms to notify them and sent people to knock on doors to spread the word.

Virginia Tech Police Chief Wendell Flinchum would not say how many weapons the gunman carried. But a law enforcement official, speaking on condition of anonymity because the investigation was incomplete, said that the gunman had two pistols and multiple clips of ammunition.

Flinchum said that some doors in the classroom building had been chained shut from the inside.

Police said they were still investigating the shooting at the dorm when they got word of gunfire at the classroom building.

Some students bitterly questioned why the gunman was able to strike a second time.

"What happened today, this was ridiculous," student Jason Pratt told CNN. "While they send out that e-mail, 20 more people got killed."

Students and Laura Wedin, a student programs manager at Virginia Tech, said the first notification they got of the shootings came in an e-mail at 9:26 a.m., more than two hours after the first shooting.

The e-mail had few details. It read, "A shooting incident occurred at West Amber Johnston earlier this morning. Police are on the scene and are investigating." The message warned students to be cautious and contact police about anything suspicious.

Student Maurice Hiller said he went to a 9 a.m. class two buildings away from the engineering building, and no warnings were coming over the outdoor public address system on campus at the time.

Everett Good, junior, said of the lack of warning: "I'm trying to figure that out. Someone's head is definitely going to roll over that."

"We were kept in the dark a lot about exactly what was going on," said Andrew Capers Thompson, a 22-year-old graduate student from Walhalla, S.C.

At an evening news conference, the university president and police chief said they were still investigating whether the shootings at the dorm and the classroom building were related. But earlier in the day, the chief said he believed there was only one gunman, and he was dead.

Edmund Henneke, associate dean of engineering, said he was in the classroom building and he and colleagues had just read the e-mail advisory regarding the first shooting and were discussing it when he heard gunfire. He said moments later SWAT team members rushed them downstairs "but the doors were chained and padlocked from the inside." They left the building through a construction area that had not been locked.

Henneke said it is unfair to criticize the school over the delay in warning.

"People are absolutely making too much of that. You do what you can," Henneke said. "We have a huge campus. You have to close down a small town and you can't close down every way in or out."

At least 26 people were being treated at three area hospitals for gunshot wounds and other injuries, authorities said. Their exact conditions were not disclosed, but at least one was sent to a trauma center and six were in surgery, authorities said.

Up until Monday, the deadliest mass shooting in U.S. history was in Killeen, Texas, in 1991, when George Hennard plowed his pickup truck into a Luby's Cafeteria and shot 23 people to death, then himself.

The massacre Monday took place almost eight years to the day after the Columbine High bloodbath near Littleton, Colo. On April 20, 1999, two teenagers killed 12 fellow students and a teacher before taking their own lives.

Previously, the deadliest campus shooting in U.S. history was a rampage that took place in 1966 at the University of Texas at Austin, where Charles Whitman climbed the clock tower and opened fire with a rifle from the 28th-floor observation deck. He killed 16 people before he was shot to death by police.

Founded in 1872, Virginia Tech is nestled in the Blue Ridge Mountains of southwestern Virginia, about 160 miles west of Richmond. With more than 25,000 full-time students, it has the state's largest full-time student population. The school is best known for its engineering school and its powerhouse Hokies football team.

The rampage took place on a brisk spring day, with snow flurries swirling around the campus. The campus is centered around the Drill Field, a grassy field where military cadets – who now represent a fraction of the student body – practice. The dorm and the classroom building are on opposites sides of the Drill Field.

A gasp could be heard at a campus news conference early in the day when the police chief announced that at least 20 people had been killed. Previously, only one person was thought to have been killed.

A White House spokesman said President Bush was horrified by the rampage and offered his prayers to the victims and the people of Virginia. "The president believes that there is a right for people to bear arms, but that all laws must be followed," spokeswoman Dana Perino said.

After the shootings, all entrances to the campus were closed, and classes were canceled through Tuesday. The university set up a meeting place for families to reunite with their children. It also made counselors available and planned an assembly for Tuesday at the basketball arena.

Aimee Kamole, a freshman from Martinsville, said the shooting happened on the fourth floor of West Ambler Johnston dormitory, one floor above her room. Kamole's resident assistant knocked on her door about 8 a.m. to notify students to stay put.

It was second time in less than a year that the campus was closed because of a shooting.

Last August, the opening day of classes was canceled and the campus closed when an escaped jail inmate allegedly killed a hospital guard off campus and fled to the tech area. A sheriff's deputy involved in the manhunt was killed on a trail just off campus. The accused gunman, William Morva, faces capital murder charges.

Gay frat closer to becoming official

GREEK from page 1

Drew Willert, vice president of Interfraternity, said the organization needs to pitch itself to the council for inclusion. He said organizations begin as colonies for about a year and a half until the council votes whether to include them in the Greek System.

The fraternity currently meets in the Red Gym or Memorial Union every week, and Judge said it hopes to establish a physical base soon.

"Getting fully established is a short-term goal," Judge said. "Within a decade, we could maybe get a house. I hope they just get bigger and bigger and more inviting here on campus."

Willert was welcoming to the organization and said the group has already proven its involvement in the community and around campus.

As an established organization, Willert said Delta Lambda Phi members can form a support group like every other fraternity and sorority on campus.

"They're outstanding guys – it's people supporting each other any way they can," Willert said. "It's great they have support for each other and have a place they can go and be a part of a community."

Judge said the organization's inclusion of "progressive males" is often overlooked.

"One thing that's widely not known that Delta Lambda Phi includes progressive males, so straight guys can join, too," Judge said. "It just adds a different dynamic to a group."

Taste of UMass
2007
THURSDAY APRIL 19, from 5:00 to 8:00 PM
The nation's largest campus food service event
Food
75 food and beverage booths from around the world with healthy options
Competition
Official sanctioned Nathan's Famous Hot Dog Eating Contest,
UMass Idol – Singing Contest
Prizes
Many great door prizes!
Fun
Cooking and Demonstration with Celebrity Chef Jet Tila
Autographs
New England Patriot Cheerleaders
Appearances
Minuteman Mascot
Entertainment
Magic Show and Battle of the Bands
Knowledge
Sustainability and Buying Local
Free
For students on the Meal Plan or $11 cash
AT THE MULLINS CENTER
All DCs will be closed at 3:00 pm and special buses to Mullins will leave at 4:00.
Doors Open at 4:30
DINING SERVICES
umass.edu/diningservices

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVII
Issue 118

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Eric Athas
Managing Editor Rob Greenfield
Business Manager Dan Conti
Production Manager Amanda Allen
Night Supervisor Sherif Wolnik
Advertising Manager Jasmeon Porter
Advertising Production Molly Eggleston
Arts & Living Editor Morgan Rousseau
Comics Editor Adam Stagin
Editorial Editor Tucker Merrick
News Editor Matt Bellveau
Sports Editor Danny Picard
Sports Editor Jon Pelland
Features Editor Melissa D'Amico
Circulation Manager Jeff Pontz
Asst. Business Manager David Valade
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Nicole Puddester
Asst. Arts & Living Tim McCall
Asst. Arts & Living Sudnes Towne
Assistant News Anna Dolianitis
Assistant News Nicole Boonjakuakul
Assistant Editorial Brendan Hall
Assistant Sports Jeremy Rice
Web Editor James Hale
Photo Editor Toan Trinh

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts' calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aloha Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Bellveau

COPY EDITOR
Jamie Mason

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Tiffany Van Langen

Boston astronaut completes marathon in space

By Mike Schneider
Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. She traveled around the world almost three times and was harnessed to a treadmill so she wouldn't float away.

NASA astronaut Sunita "Suni" Williams completed her version of the Boston Marathon on Monday more than 210 miles above Earth.

"I'm done! Woo hoo!" Williams told Mission Control after running 26.2 miles on a treadmill at the international space station.

Already traveling at 17,500 mph, Williams started the race on time at 10 a.m. EDT with race No. 14,000 taped to the front of the treadmill as the space station passed over the Pacific Ocean. She finished, unofficially, 4 hours, 23 minutes and 46 seconds later as the station traveled over Russia.

The 41-year-old astronaut, who grew up in the Boston area, had kind words for the temperamental treadmill, which has had its share of breakdowns.

"No problems. No flaws. No nothing," said Williams, who wore Boston Red Sox socks for her run. "It did everything I wanted it to do."

Two laptop computers were on either side so she could watch past Boston Marathons on a DVD and keep track of where the space station was flying. Periodically, she asked Mission Control for an update on the times of friends, including NASA astronaut Karen Nyberg, and her sister, Dina Pandya, who were running the marathon on the ground.

Astronaut Suni Williams is seen in a video recording from the International Space Station at the NASA booth inside the Hynes Convention Center as fellow astronaut Jeff Williams, no relation, speaks with marathon runners in Boston on Sunday.

Nyberg finished in 3:32:9 and Pandya in 4:14:30 on a day when the Boston runners faced the remnants of a chilly, soaking nor'easter. The space station was a balmy 78 degrees.

"Those guys are kicking butt even though it's cold," William said when told of the times of her friends and sister.

Williams woke up several hours earlier than her crew mates because of the marathon. Also at the space station were U.S. astronaut Michael Lopez-Alegria, Russian cosmonauts Mikhail Tyurin, Fyodor Yurchikhin and Oleg Kotov and space tourist Charles Simonyi.

Williams qualified for the Boston race by finishing the Houston Marathon in January in 3:29:57. On Monday, she ran at a pace o. more than 6 mph through most of her race. Like many of her counterparts on the ground, she took a couple of short breaks of a minute or two to stretch her legs or adjust her harness. Her crew mates tossed snacks of orange pieces at her in the weightlessness of space.

She also got plenty of encouragement from Mission Control in Houston.

"Keep it up. I think you're over Heartbreak Hill," Mission Control radioed Williams after she reached the 20-mile mark, referring to the race's final hill whose summit has a view of Boston's Prudential Tower.

"It's all downhill ... and into the Prudential," Williams radioed back. "We're going to make it."

Drunken teenager emerges unharmed from under train

BERLIN — A drunken man who fell under a train after being jolted out of a nap at a railway station emerged unscathed from beneath the locomotive.

The 19-year-old had fallen asleep on the station platform in Cologne but was startled by the incoming train. Losing his balance, he fell in front of the locomotive, police said.

"According to the man he fell exactly between the two tracks and just felt a light knock on the head," Cologne police said in a statement.

The shocked train driver pulled the emergency brakes only to see the man emerge unaided from under the engine. He was taken to hospital for observation.

Associated Press

Three countries ban Antichrist

By Mica Rosenberg
Associated Press

GUATEMALA — Three Central American governments have banned a man claiming to be the Antichrist from entering their countries, outraged by his inflammatory preaching against the Catholic Church and organized religion.

El Salvador, Honduras and Guatemala have banned Jose de Jesus Miranda, who heads a cult-like movement with sermons televised from Miami to dozens of mostly Latin American nations and wants to join followers at a rally next week in Guatemala.

A former heroin addict who was briefly imprisoned as a youth in his native Puerto Rico, Miranda, 60, talks openly in a video on his Web site about how he loved cocaine and dreamed of working in a Colombian drug lab.

He has the number 666 tattooed on his arm but says he is Jesus Christ reborn on Earth, arguing Saint Paul's teachings show this is what Antichrist means.

Miranda's ministry began in 1986 in a Miami warehouse. He says it has congregations in over 20 countries, mostly in Latin America.

In one video, the leader of the "Growing in Grace" church, sporting slicked hair, tailored suits and gold chains, rolls up his sleeves to reveal the number 666 tattooed on his forearm.

Hundreds of followers have now tattooed themselves with the number saying it is a symbol of love and not the sign of Satan. They say there is no devil, no hell and no such thing as sin.

The ministry has no formal membership system, but church representatives say his television audience numbers in the millions, bringing multimillion dollar donations.

Some of his more generous followers have given him businesses, luxury cars, jewels and opulent houses in Houston and Miami Beach.

One evangelical preacher in El Salvador called him a "megalomaniac" and likened him to Jim Jones, who led 900 followers into a mass suicide-murder in 1978.

A CONSEQUENTIAL ABERRATION: GEORGE W. BUSH'S FOREIGN POLICY— AND BEYOND

STROBE TALBOTT
Former U.S. Deputy Secretary of State

Thursday, April 19, at 7:30 p.m.
Cole Assembly Room, Converse Hall
Amherst College

Free and Open to the Public

Please join us for the 9th annual

Freedom Seder

Based on the Jewish Passover ritual, the Freedom Seder uses stories, poetry, songs and traditional African American and Jewish foods to express our yearning for multicultural unity and universal liberation.

Wednesday, April 18, 2007 at 6:00PM
Campus Center 1009 (Amherst Room)
UMass Amherst

FREE with dinner included
(Kosher meals available upon request)

For more information call 413.545.9642 or www.umass.edu/jewish

UMASS AMHERST
Sponsored by the Office of Jewish Affairs, Black Student Union, Muslim Students Association, Center for Student Development, Student Affairs and Campus Life, and Campus Center Catering

Students question campus security

STUDENTS from page 1

"They assumed he shot someone and was running away. I don't want to blame anyone, but something was done horribly wrong," he said.

Virginia Tech president Charles Steger emphasized that the University closed off dormitories after the first shooting, and used e-mail to update students about the incident two hours later. An e-mail was sent to the students only moments before the second shooting took place, according to the AP.

Minshall offered a three-fold explanation for why such incidents occur. First, he described the ages of 18 to 25 as the most unstable age range.

"You have all kinds of young people trying to actualize their lives," he said. He also addressed the pressure on young people to obtain scholarships, to date, to succeed in sports, etc. "There's always drinking, camaraderie and competition," he said.

"We live in the most violent nation in the world. The American people love their guns. And as long as you have this, you're going to have what happened happen."

This matter of national concern affected students on a more local level, however, when University of Massachusetts students asked themselves, "Could this happen at our school?"

Junior Nick Philpott's initial reaction upon hearing of the shooting was concern for his friends who attend Virginia Tech.

"I haven't been able to get in contact with them yet, but I know they're okay because of their away messages," he said.

"When events like this happen, it is a reality check. It's scary to see that this can happen anywhere," said freshman Shania Jackson.

Junior Sarah Pinheiro said that while the possibility of violence isn't something she considers on a daily basis, situations like the Virginia Tech shooting cause her to question residence hall security and how prepared UMass would be in the event of such a crisis.

"I always think about how random people can come in and out of the dorms and someone like a killer could be running around and you'd never know," said Pinheiro. "I specially since it could be either a UMass student or someone that isn't even affiliated with the school." Pinheiro cited last year's stabbings at UMass "Tent Row" as an incident in which violence occurred on campus perpetrated by non-UMass students.

Philpott expressed a hope that this incident will draw national attention to violence carried out by Americans, rather than emphasizing terrorist violence from other countries.

"I really don't know what UMass could do but I think that someone needs to do something to try to ensure that something like this will never happen at UMass," Philpott said.

Paying more attention to security policies rather than more strictly enforced policies — such as the alcohol policy — is one suggestion Pinheiro makes in order to make UMass more safe.

"UMass spends lots of money on things we don't need. You don't need those new buildings if your students are getting gunned down," she said.

Minshall predicts that the national reaction to the Virginia Tech shooting will be "what it always is ... put a bandaid on an oil well." He predicts calls for new security and gun legislation.

"And six weeks later, the NRA [National Rifle Association] will write a check to every Congressman in the country and there will be no gun legislation," he said.

According to Director of News and Information at UMass Ed Blaguszewski, who briefly spoke with the UMass Police Chief Barbara O'Connor after the occurrence, "This is a scenario that the Chief has thought about and that is concerned about, as all campus officials are." Chief O'Connor could not be reached for comment.

Freshman Jacob Chamoff regrets the idea that UMass, and other universities of a similar size, could prevent such an incident.

"It's hard to do much more on an open campus. It might help to have more police officers, but anyone can still get on campus and do whatever they want," he said.

"I think other schools will try to make their campuses safer in response to this. But I still think that something like this would never happen to me, or where I am, although that's just me being naive," said Jackson.

Local police at Virginia Tech received bomb threats over the past two weeks. However, they claim there is no connection between the threats and the shootings. At least 30 people are being treated in the hospital, with at least six in surgery, according to the AP. The investigation into the exact course of events is ongoing.

Irina Holownia can be reached at news@dailycollegian.com

U.S.' deadliest shooting hits V.Tech

VTECH from page 1

packets and assault rifles swarmed over the campus. Students and faculty members carried out some of the wounded themselves, without waiting for ambulances to arrive. A student used his cellphone camera to record the sound of shots echoing through the stone classroom building.

The massacre took place at opposite sides of the 2,600-acre campus, beginning at about 7:15 a.m. at West Ambler Johnston, a coed dormitory that houses 895 people, and continuing at least two hours later at Norris Hall, an engineering building about a half-mile away, authorities said.

Two people were killed in a dormitory room, and 31 others were killed in the classroom building, including the gunman, police said.

"Today the university was struck with a tragedy that we consider of monumental proportions," Steger said. "The university is shocked and indeed horrified."

Steger emphasized that the university closed off the dorm after the first attack and decided to rely on e-mail and other electronic means to notify members of the university, but with 11,000 people driving onto campus first thing in the morning, it was difficult to get the word out. He said that before the e-mail went out, the university began telephoning resident advisers in the dorms to notify them and sent people to knock on doors to spread the word.

Virginia Tech Police Chief Wendell Flinchum would not say how many weapons the gunman carried. But a law enforcement official, speaking on condition of anonymity because the investigation was incomplete, said that the gunman had two pistols and multiple clips of ammunition.

Flinchum said that some doors in the classroom building had been chained shut from the inside.

Police said they were still investigating the shooting at the dorm when they got word of gunfire at the classroom building.

Some students bitterly questioned why the gunman was able to strike a second time.

"What happened today, this was ridiculous," student Jason Pratt told CNN. "While they send out that e-mail, 20 more people got killed."

Students and Laura Wedin, a student programs manager at Virginia Tech, said the first notification they got of the shootings came in an e-mail at 9:26 a.m., more than two hours after the first shooting.

The e-mail had few details. It read: "A shooting incident occurred at West Amber Johnston earlier this morning. Police are on the scene and are investigating." The message warned students to be cautious and contact police about anything suspicious.

Student Maurice Hiller said he went to a 9 a.m. class two buildings away from the engineering building, and no warnings were coming over the outdoor public address system on campus at the time.

Everett Good, junior, said of the lack of warning: "I'm trying to figure that out. Someone's head is definitely going to roll over that."

"We were kept in the dark a lot about exactly what was going on," said Andrew Capers Thompson, a 22-year-old graduate student from Walhalla, S.C.

At an evening news conference, the university president and police chief said they were still investigating whether the shootings at the dorm and the classroom building were related. But earlier in the day, the chief said he believed there was only one gunman, and he was dead.

Edmund Hennekc, associate dean of engineering, said he was in the classroom building and he and colleagues had just read the e-mail advisory regarding the first shooting and were discussing it when he heard gunfire. He said students later SWAT team members rushed them downstairs. "But the doors were chained and padlocked from the inside." They left the building through a construction area that had not been locked.

Hennekc said it is unfair to criticize the school over the delay in warning.

"People are absolutely making too much of that. You do what you can," Hennekc said. "We have a huge campus. You have to close down a small town and you can't close down every way in or out."

At least 26 people were being treated at three area hospitals for gunshot wounds and other injuries, authorities said. Their exact conditions were not disclosed but at least one was sent to a trauma center and six were in surgery, authorities said.

Up until Monday, the deadliest mass shooting in U.S. history was in Killeen, Texas, in 1991, when George Hennard plowed his pickup truck into a Luby's Cafeteria and shot 23 people to death, then himself.

The massacre Monday took place almost eight years to the day after the Columbine High bloodbath near Littleton, Colo. On April 20, 1999, two teenagers killed 12 fellow students and a teacher before taking their own lives.

Previously, the deadliest campus shooting in U.S. history was a rampage that took place in 1966 at the University of Texas at Austin, where Charles Whitman climbed the clock tower and opened fire with a rifle from the 28th-floor observation deck. He killed 16 people before he was shot to death by police.

Founded in 1872, Virginia Tech is nestled in the Blue Ridge Mountains of southwestern Virginia, about 160 miles west of Richmond. With more than 25,000 full-time students, it has the state's largest full-time student population. The school is best known for its engineering school and its powerhouse Hokies football team.

The rampage took place on a brisk spring day, with snow flurries swirling around the campus. The campus is centered around the Drill Field, a grassy field where military cadets — who now represent a fraction of the student body — practice. The dorm and the classroom building are on opposites sides of the Drill Field.

A gasp could be heard at a campus news conference early in the day when the police chief announced that at least 20 people had been killed. Previously, only one person was thought to have been killed.

A White House spokesman said President Bush was horrified by the rampage and offered his prayers to the victims and the people of Virginia. "The president believes that there is a right for people to bear arms, but that all laws must be followed," spokeswoman Dana Perino said.

After the shootings, all entrances to the campus were closed, and classes were canceled through Tuesday. The university set up a meeting place for families to reunite with their children. It also made counselors available and planned an assembly for Tuesday at the basketball arena.

Aimee Kanode, a freshman from Martinsville, said the shooting happened on the fourth floor of West Ambler Johnston dormitory, one floor above her room. Kanode's resident assistant knocked on her door about 8 a.m. to notify students to stay put.

It was second time in less than a year that the campus was closed because of a shooting.

Last August, the opening day of classes was canceled and the campus closed when an escaped jail inmate allegedly killed a hospital guard off campus and fled to the tech area. A sheriff's deputy involved in the manhunt was killed on a trail just off campus. The accused gunman, William Morva, faces capital murder charges.

Gay frat closer to becoming official

GREEK from page 1

Drew Willert, vice president of Interfraternity, said the organization needs to pitch itself to the council for inclusion. He said organizations begin as colonies for about a year and a half until the council votes whether to include them in the Greek System.

The fraternity currently meets in the Red Gym or Memorial Union every week, and Judge said it hopes to establish a physical base soon.

"Getting fully established is a short-term goal," Judge said. "Within a decade, we could maybe get a house. I hope they just get bigger and bigger and more inviting here on campus."

Willert was welcoming to the organization and said the group has already proven its involvement in the community and around campus.

As an established organization, Willert said Delta Lambda Phi members can form a support group like every other fraternity and sorority on campus.

"They're outstanding guys it's people supporting each other any way they can," Willert said. "It's great they have support for each other and have a place they can go and be a part of a community."

Judge said the organization's inclusion of "progressive males" is often overlooked.

"One thing that's widely not known that Delta Lambda Phi includes progressive males, so straight guys can join, too," Judge said. "It just adds a different dynamic to a group."

Taste of UMass
2007
THURSDAY APRIL 19, from 5:00 to 8:00 PM
The nation's largest campus food service event
Food
75 food and beverage booths from around the world with healthy options
Competition
Official sanctioned Nathan's Famous Hot Dog Eating Contest,
UMass Idol – Singing Contest
Prizes
Many great door prizes!
Fun
Cooking and Demonstration with Celebrity Chef Jet Tila
Autographs
New England Patriot Cheerleaders
Appearances
Minuteman Mascot
Entertainment
Magic Show and Battle of the Bands
Knowledge
Sustainability and Buying Local
Free
For students on the Meal Plan or $11 cash
AT THE MULLINS CENTER
DINING SERVICES
All DCs will be closed at 3:00 pm and special buses to Mullins will leave at 4:00.
Doors Open at 4:30
umass.edu/diningservices

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, APRIL 17, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." - Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

It's time we reconsider honoring Mugabe's degree

The UMass Board of Trustees lists the criteria for honorary degrees as someone who has "national or international, artistic, cultural, or public service distinction in a particular field," or someone who has shown "outstanding achievement which the University wishes to acknowledge," or finally, someone who has made an "outstanding contribution to the University and/or the Commonwealth." These criteria make it seem as if we want to honor those who have really made a true impact on society, but what happens when the evil acts someone has committed outweigh the good they have done?

In 1986, Robert Mugabe was considered a humanist. Seven years prior, Mr. Mugabe had successfully freed the country of Zimbabwe from an extremely oppressive white regime. As a way of marking this achievement, the University of Massachusetts bestowed an honorary degree upon Mr. Mugabe. Unfortunately, Mugabe has changed quite a bit in the last 20 years, a change which the University of Massachusetts system should recognize by rescinding his honorary degree.

In the last 20 years as President of Zimbabwe, no one could call Robert Mugabe a humanist. He has suppressed fundamental rights and has asserted that "the police have the right to bash" protesters. He has squashed any opposition to the government by not just arresting dissidents, but beating them senseless. He has committed a war on free speech and free press and has now become the oppressor in a country he worked so hard to free.

Many people have argued that this degree was given to the Robert Mugabe of 1986, and while he has become a tyrannical dictator, he deserves to be recognized for his role in creating an independent Zimbabwe. It may be true that Robert Mugabe did deserve to be honored in 1986, but history cannot be considered to exist within a vacuum. It is impossible to ignore the man Robert Mugabe has become and because of this, he should have his honorary degree revoked.

Allowing Mr. Mugabe to keep his honorary degree devalues the ability of the University to honor deserving people and demeans the honorary degrees which have already been given out. The people who receive honorary degrees become de facto representatives of the Universities which decided to honor them. Because of this, the University should be much more selective about the candidates they choose.

As it stands now, the process for obtaining an honorary degree is complicated and bureaucratic. A nominating committee on campus accepts nominations for candidates from anyone. This committee parses the list down to eight or 10 candidates and sends it to the Chancellor. The Chancellor adds or subtracts names at his discretion and then sends it to President Wilson. President Wilson then adds or subtracts names and sends it to the Board of Trustees, who create a finalized list (after, of course, adding or subtracting names). In the end, there is a possibility that the final list could look nothing like the original compiled by the nominating committee.

A lot of people wonder why anyone should care about this issue. The question of revoking the degree is not if it will affect Robert Mugabe; odds are that he won't be distraught at the prospect of losing an honorary degree from the University of Massachusetts. The real issue at hand is whether or not the University of Massachusetts believes in the criteria it set forth for honoring those who have done good for the community. Revoking this honorary degree would show they are committed to being an institution which takes principled stands on issues it believes are right and just. Allowing Mugabe to keep his degree shows that the University is perfectly fine closing its eyes to horrible realities going on in the world.

Is that the kind of University you want to attend?

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

SHOULD THE UNIVERSITY CONTINUE TO RECOGNIZE ROBERT MUGABE'S HONORARY DEGREE?

YES NO

Vote now at www.dailycollegian.com

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

A BAD AD

I try to flip through the Collegian every day and, until someone pointed them out to me, I had missed the help wanted advertisements by Anthony's – a Springfield club – for strippers. I am confused and in shock that a student-organized paper would run such an advertisement.

Aiding a business to hire students as strippers is a poor fit for a publication based at UMass where part of their mission statement is, "to improve the lives of the people of the Commonwealth, the nation, and the world." Although a student medium may not work off of the same mission as the University, it still needs to reflect and honor what the University stands for. While I understand it is at the sole discretion of the dancer to work at Anthony's Strip Club, advertising it in a student run, widely read newspaper will not help to improve lives of the people anywhere. In fact, for the dancers, it will significantly decrease their quality of life.

Many young girls are attracted to dancing at a nightclub due to the testimonies of strippers making $500 in a night. This becomes problematic for college students because, well, we're poor! What these girls don't realize upon first entering the business is the possibility of rape, assault in the workplace, and drug addiction. Kelly Holsoppie, founder of the Metropolitan Coalition Against Prostitution and former stripper, wrote a research paper in 1998 titled, "Strip Clubs According to Strippers: Exposing Workplace Sexual Violence," discussing many of these issues. Strippers are not paid an hourly wage, and their income is therefore based on their compliance with customers. They are then forced to pay the owner for the privilege of working at the club. Strippers are considered independent contractors, which means they get no benefits, unemployment or sick days. To quote Ms. Holsoppie, "...despite the common perception that a woman can dance her way through school, many strippers report that their jobs take over their lives. Long and late hours, fatigue, drug and alcohol problems, and out of town bookings make it difficult to switch gears."

Of the strippers surveyed, 78 percent reported being grabbed by the arm, 44 percent claimed being grabbed by the arm every day, 72 percent reported being punched, 61 percent reported being spit on, 17 percent reported attempted rape, while 11 percent reported successful rape. These numbers are astonishing. Strippers are not only physically and verbally abused, but they are stalked; 72 percent reported being followed to their cars. Strip clubs greatly endorse men's violence against women. According to the strippers in this study, men often use force in an attempt to gain sexual contact with them.

I understand that in order for the UMass Daily Collegian to remain successful and of high quality, you rely greatly on your advertisers. However, I also know that as an independent paper you reserve the right to refuse to run any ad. Many, if not all, of the nation's leading newspapers have elaborate advertising policies designed to exclude harmful, offensive advertising content. This ad is not only distasteful and a poor representation of the UMass Daily Collegian and the student journalists themselves, but it poses a threat to the well-being and safety of the women on campus who even thought about selling their body for extra money. By running this advertisement, you are making this lifestyle a possibility for your peers.

Mary Ann Petti
UMass Student

Play it safe, for your own sake

Debbie Friedman

It's a beautiful fall evening in Burlington, Vt., and the heart of the city is bustling with activity. College students are waiting to enter their favorite bars on Church Street. Families are enjoying an after dinner ice cream at the famous Ben and Jerry's. And elderly couples are walking hand in hand through the impeccably clean streets. A strong feeling of peacefulness radiates throughout this charming New England hotspot, putting inhabitants and visitors at ease.

But today, the freshly sprouting spring streets of the city are different. The sense of peacefulness has been challenged by feelings of fear and grief. And the once-serene vision of this city has been shattered, all because of the senseless murder of a University of Vermont student, which occurred last October.

Michele Gardner-Quinn was abducted off the main streets of Burlington in the late hours of a Friday night, while walking back to campus alone. Her body was found shortly after in a remote area outside of the city. Brian Rooney, a 36-year-old construction worker, has since been charged with the crime, and faces life in prison. This chilling crime shocked residents of the area, who thought their city was incapable of producing a tragedy so grim. Now the case has been closed, but the lesson of what happened on that horrible night should serve as a reminder that tragedy can strike anywhere, even in seemingly safe places like Burlington, or Amherst.

Even so, many students ignore their common sense and do it anyways, since a few drinks can easily make one feel invincible.

But no matter how many times we are reminded of our vulnerability by these cautionary tales, the warnings quickly take their place in the backs of our minds, dissolved by the voice inside our head which says, "That could never happen to me."

Unfortunately, that voice inside our head is not always right. The truth of the matter is, what happened in Burlington could happen here, and that is something female University of Massachusetts students need to take into consideration.

Despite how safe you may feel in the Amherst area, walking alone at night is never a good idea, even if you talk to someone on the phone the whole way home. Even so, many students ignore their common sense and do it anyways, since a few drinks can easily make one feel invincible.

Remember, though, that those drinks actually make you more at risk, by lowering your awareness and response if an attacker were to approach you. And while it is not healthy to be in a constant state of fear, it is important to keep your guard up to some degree, in order to protect yourself.

Students can be assured, though, that there are many precautionary measures within Amherst, to help ensure the unthinkable won't happen here. For one, the Department of Public Safety provides students and campus visitors with a walking escort service to and from anywhere on campus. They operate every night from 7 p.m. to 3 a.m. The campus is also equipped with 100 yellow help boxes, which are marked by blue lights. They allow anyone to call for help with the touch of a button.

Off campus, there are many protective measures in place as well. Lieutenant Rob Young of the Amherst Police Department says the Amherst downtown area contains many surveillance cameras maintained by UMass, Amherst College, and local businesses. Additionally, the Web site Masslive.com maintains a camera in the center of town, which monitors the area 24 hours a day. The Amherst PD have used this camera to solve numerous crimes. A surveillance camera also helped solve the murder case of Gardener Quinn in Burlington, which proves its value.

Young also says that the Amherst PD concentrates most of its resources to the nightshift patrols. Officers patrol the area by car, bike and foot until 3 or 4 a.m. every night, 365 days a year. The Amherst PD even has plain-clothed officers patrolling during the nights, in areas where an incident would be most likely to take place.

As far as protecting yourself from becoming a victim, Young recommends you use your basic instincts and common sense. Travel in groups, park in the well-lit areas on Amity Street, Pray Street or South Prospect Street, and make sure you always carry your cell phone with you.

Most importantly, "if your sixth sense tells you something is wrong, it is, so don't be complacent. Any suspicious behavior should be reported to us. An officer will follow up," added Young.

While college students don't always have the best relationships with their local police department, they are here to help in cases of violent crime. If students use the resources afforded by the town and school, as well as their own common sense, it will help to ensure a tragedy – like the one that struck Burlington – won't happen here.

Debbie Friedman writes on Tuesdays. She can be reached at drfriedm@student.umass.edu.

Four up, four down at UMass

Joe Hughes

It's mid-April and the school year is only a month away from ending. Before we all leave to go work, take more classes or do whatever it is we all do all during the summer, let's reflect on some of the pros and cons of UMass.

Up: The Dining Commons

Something that students only start to appreciate when they move off-campus are the Dining Commons. Say what you will about the food, there's a smorgasbord of good stuff to choose from. Plus, it's healthy if you pick the right things. When you switch to the Off Campus Meal Plan after finally moving out of the dorms, you're going to be stuck with pizza, calzones and wings every day. It sounds like fun, but it gets old.

Down: The P2P Crack Down

UMass accordingly has the sixth highest number of person-to-person "intellectual property" sharers of any university in the country. Because of this, the Record Industry Association of America (RIAA) has cracked down on students here with a series of threats, demands and lawsuits. On top of this, they've gone about it the entirely wrong way. Demanding obscene amounts of money for tiny amounts of music downloaded, one UMass student was even sued for $3,000 by the RIAA, after having downloaded only seven songs. With lawyers costing as much as they do these days, college students don't have much other choice but to pay what they're asked for. This kind of harassment is, as a prior Collegian article pointed out, extortion.

One UMass student was even sued for $3,000 by the RIAA, after having downloaded only seven songs.

Up: The W.E.B. Dubois Library

The W.E.B. Dubois Library is perhaps the most underrated achievement of UMass. Open 24 hours a day, seven days a week when school's in session, the 26-floor behemoth has several help desks for assistance in referencing, tech support, career services and general information. There are writing labs with their own assistants and further computer labs on higher levels. Most floors have a number of small personal rooms that can be used to study in, and there is a movie room in which an excess of textbooks for hundreds of classes may be checked out for a short amount of time. A variety of films can be picked out and watched there. With a courtyard that is constantly empty, a popular snack bar, 5.8 million items, and an impressive amount of computers, the W.E.B. Dubois Library should not be taken for granted.

Down: Campus Construction

Nowadays at UMass, construction is everywhere. While construction can definitely be a good thing, the amount of work being done seems a bit excessive considering some of the things being built. For instance, the work that had been done outside the library last year seemed to take forever to complete, in the meanwhile caused a timely detour for everyone right in the middle of campus. In the end, a circular area with multiple paths leading in different directions was built, but was completely unnecessary. Our money should be put into more important things than this.

Up: North Apartments

Say what you will about the North Apartments, the fact remains: students now have more options. It's finally possible for even a freshman to have their very own room for themselves – and now there's places to live for everybody. Perhaps many have already forgotten how it was before the North Apartments were built – scores of UMass students were forced to live in hotel rooms. Hotel rooms!

Down: Textbook Prices

Why are textbooks so expensive? $100 for one book doesn't seem right, yet a price like this isn't rare nowadays. Add these sorts of fees to all of the other expenses people who attend college must pay to stay in the game, and you've got thousands of broke students ready to get nailed by the RIAA. I suppose everything has a price, especially education.

Up: Daytime Transportation

One thing taken for granted is the bus system at UMass. We have FREE transportation. For me and many others, this is virtually unheard of. Not only is it free, but the buses run to and from campus and surrounding areas every fifteen minutes until evening. It's also another job available for students who need the money. As for transportation at night in Amherst, that's a different story.

Down: The Write Up Lock Down

I don't think I'm the only one who thinks write-ups are a bit excessive in the dorms at UMass. My girlfriend got written up for putting Christmas lights up on her wall and slightly over her smoke detector, as if that would actually endanger anyone. On top of that, Resident Assistants accused her of stealing the table from the floor lounge, a table which her and her roommate legitimately bought. This may be only one story, but it is one of hundreds.

With all of the construction and recent reforms in policies, it's clear that UMass is eager for change. Let's hope that the school focuses on improving the things that matter most, and keep in my mind that this University is meant for the students.

Joe Hughes can be reached at jhughes@student.umass.edu.

ARCHIVE/UMASS PHOTO

The North Apartments have been a welcome addition to campus.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, APRIL 17, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Performance inspired by local poet

Stephen Petronio Company bases scenes on Emily Dickinson poetry

BY KATE BAUER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

You could hear them behind the heavy black stage curtain as they warmed up for their performances, feet hitting the hard wooden stage as they practiced their arabesques and arrieres and chassés. The dancers of the Stephen Petronio Company had already traveled the country with their choreographer and captain, Stephen Petronio, but on Thursday night the Fine Arts Center had the pleasure enjoying this critically acclaimed three-act performance. It was complete with music by Rufus Wainwright, both original material and three new songs using the poetic forces of Walt Whitman and Emily Dickinson.

Starting off the night's performance with the first act, "Bud Suite," two male dancers entered the stage to perform a duet of fluid, intertwining moves, using each other's bodies to tell a story of love and fragility. Set to the tune of Rufus Wainwright's "Oh What A World," the two figures on the stage intertwined and then tried to pull themselves apart, yet always remained connected. While one of the dancer's performance was flowing his companion strode across the stage taut, as if acting as the supporting beam for the relationship.

The act then switched over to four young women as they paired and meshed on the stage, dressed in white schoolgirl shirts and pink tutus, as if to emphasize their youth and virtues. As Wainwright's "Vibrate" over the speakers sang "I don't know what I'm doing, saying," the four women bent and gyrated into seemingly impossible poses, legs extended to the floor then all of a sudden up in the air, then bent behind or in front of them. Hips shaking and thrusting, the piece emphasized the experimentation of youth, sexuality, and the period of time in a youth's life where they discover who they will become.

Turning over to his next piece, "Bloom," Petronio composed his dancers into a flurry of intertwining bodies to Wainwright's "lux aeterna," which sent shivers down the audience's spine. Starting off with a stark black coloring where the dancers were placed in hare light, the scenery and lighting changed suddenly to a luscious blue to reveal the soft and ripple-like effects of the dancers' costumes as Wainwright hummed his first verse. The scenery then changed to a soft pink and purple. Wainwright switched to a verse in Latin as a light floral pattern appeared on the wall behind the dancers, signifying their 'blooming' into life. The stage was then darkened, except for a white light that cast the dancers into shadow, symptomatic of blooming's significant and yet difficult journey.

One couple withered together, sometimes fluid and soft, others violent and quick thrusts, then all of a sudden slow. As the company slowly exited the stage one remained behind, lingering in shadow as the music faded. No music, no light, her body began moving in every flowing and moveable way silent, starkly in shad-

See PETRONIO on page 6

Part of the cast and crew of the Stephen Petronio Company pose for a picture at the after-party last Thursday night following their performance at the Fine Arts Center. The company has showcased their performance to audiences nationwide.

COURTESY OF SHAWN FARLEY

Local artist, Shawn Farley, bases her art after the Surrealist Movement in the 1930's and 1940's. Her latest projects were created with objects found at local flea markets.

Farley creates art from objects found at local flea markets

BY CHRISTINA FONG
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Walking into the small gallery, located in the Augusta Savage Gallery in the New Africa House at the University of Massachusetts, the emptiness is bewildering. At first glance, the pieces plainly hung on the walls appear as though they are works of African folklore. More detailed scrutiny reveals the works to be greatly imaginative creations. Shawn Farley's featured assemblages, which are inspired by the Surrealist movement of the 1930s and 1940s, are unusual images drawn from her mystifying mind. Images change moment-to-moment when new insight causes a change in perspective. As proven by its inception in the mid-20s, surrealist art is never what is seems.

Many of her pieces are made from everyday materials Farley found in flea markets and on the streets, helplessly abandoned. She reconstructed them into bizarre structures garnished with bright acrylic paints and sometimes collages. In her note to the visitors, she said, "I recycle the discarded items of our existence-to me they are treasures."

Her artistic expressions stay true to the concept that one man's trash can be another man's treasure. She gathered common items such as keys, chains and pipes, and pieced them together, breathing life into each design.

Like many works of the surrealist movement, these feature unusual juxtapositions, automatism, and elements of surprise to present an emotion, moment or thought. The colors Farley chose to use create specific emotions are tied to each individual piece. The metal work she uses on a few pieces adds a sharpness to her generally smooth designs.

Some pieces are more easily distinguishable than others. More recognizable images include human faces and animals. Others demand a closer examination and a broader imagination of viewers to interpret them. The titles Farley gave each piece are small clues to help better understand them, although some are curiously chosen and open to discussion. Several were preceded by the term "Auto Erotic," which begs further contemplation.

"Minotaure" was aptly named as it depicts a Minotaur head with a butterfly caged in its mouth by metal wires. It's one of the more easily comprehensible. Connections can possibly be drawn from the myth of the Minotaur to the concept of metamorphosis related to the butterfly.

Another interesting piece titled "Natural Disaster" displays an unusual combination of a bird's nest with a baby's arm reaching out of a broken eggshell, two paper birds circling it, and a large red ball flying towards it. A magnifying glass is placed in front of the nest, hinting at a need to expose a blurred problem. Many references can be drawn from

See FARLEY on page 6

Umphrey's McGee continue to amaze

BY LAUREN MODISETTE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Seeing Umphrey's McGee live is anything but a predictable experience. Between the groove, covers and set list it is impossible to see identical performances.

Their jams are the biggest attraction. Sure it's great to be able to belt out the songs along with Jake Cinninger and Brendon Bayliss, but the jams are where the juice is. You never know if the sound is going to be more heavy metal, funk, blues, or rock'n'roll. Last Wednesday, April 10, they offered a mix of their traditional sound with a heavier rhythm intertwined.

Even as their local fan base continues to grow the majority of the Five College area has yet to discover their musical genius. The Calvin in Northampton wasn't packed, but there were enough "umphreaks" to make it a chore to get to the front of the crowd. After Brother's Past finished off their opening act, anticipation began to grow among their fans.

Seeing the grand entrance of Bayliss, Cinninger, Ryan Stasik, Joel Cummins, Kris Meyers and Andy Farag caused an eruption within the venue. Without hesitation they begin the night with "Professor Wormbog" and transitioned into "The Bottom Half" and "Kabump."

Being front and center does have its disadvantages. You are more prone to industrial deafness and it can be difficult to comprehend the small talk between them. But being just out of their reach gives you the opportunity to closely observe their mannerisms.

Bayliss played with a dropped jaw while Cinninger had his eyes closed as he moved with the music. Getting that close also gives you a first hand look at the way they communicate through their songs. Cinninger commanded Cummins to solo or signaled a key change before jamming into the next song.

Another amazing aspect of getting that close to Umphrey's is watching how Bayliss and Cinninger handle and play their guitars. Being able to see how they create the different sounds is one of the best parts of seeing them live. They constantly move their fingers rapidly across the neck and use unconventional picking techniques. Rather than sticking with picks the entire time you can catch them pressing the strings with their fingers to achieve their unique sound. The two guitarists will even play around with each others pedals displaying the connection and comfort they have with each other. It's like watching children at play; they are in their element and soaking up each other's energy.

Even though they play songs like "2x2" regularly they never jam through it the same way. The songs they create simply give them a back bone to work with until they take-off. They move from deep slow rhythms that tease the audience before diving back into a jam. As they slow down fans begin to stop dancing, some still bobbing their heads until they are suddenly slapped with renewed energy. They always tease their audience this way, slowing everyone down before a sudden burst. In quick

See UMPHREYS on page 6

During Umphrey's McGee's performance last Wednesday, the band played a combination of songs true to their original style and a heavier rhythm section intermixed into some songs.

'American Klepto' writer works with local theater director

BY CONNI WITTE-SULLIVAN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Last Thursday the University of Massachusetts Theatre Department hosted a reading of "American Klepto," a new play by Allison Moore, in the Curtain Theatre. The performance was the culmination of Moore's two month interaction with the university. It ended with a dialogue between her and the audience.

According to Anna-Marie Bossetta, "The idea was for Allison to visit us and work with the director, dramaturge and actors on polishing a piece she had in the works."

It is an interesting experience watching a performance while trying to mentally separate the written entity from the physical performers on stage. The emphasis of this performance was on the script itself, and this forced the conscientious audience members to push themselves and try to imagine the characters outside the actors playing them. Just as one could not successfully judge Mozart or Beethoven after seeing them played by a middle-school orchestra, the audience needed a skillful, complex and emotionally committed performance by the actors if they were to see the script as it was meant to be.

As Moore stated in a post-performance interview, "The playwright counts on the actors to bring their own dimension to the character. It is the playwright's job to put the architecture in place and leave the actor clues to the deeper structure of the character. It's like a blueprint, the writer puts all the doors and walls in the proper place, but it is up to the actor to decide whether to paint them brown or pink."

Fortunately for Moore, the actors she found at UMass were able to throw some magnificently crafted coats of complexity onto the walls of her characters.

In performing from a work in progress, nearing completion, the actors onstage were faced with a cornucopia of challenges, both new and old. The intimate nature of the theatre placed the actors close enough to recognize each member of the audience. It was an audience which consisted not only of their peers and professors from the Theatre Department, but also school officials such as Chancellor Lombardi, and the playwright herself. When audiences lose their anonymity the powers of stage fright can often increase exponentially. Thursday night's cast, however, seemed immune and was entertaining and convincing even when playing characters.

See MOORE on page 6

Sexuality plays big role in performance

PETRONIO from page 5

ow, able to hear her quick breaths as she twisted and turned.

After intermission, the performance took a different turn as Petronio introduced a segment of his "Full Half Wrong" titled "The Rite Part." As Igor Stravinsky's "The Rite Spring" began, the women entered the stage in fishnet-style costumes covered in scraps of material, including flesh-colored pieces that perhaps were made to look as if they forgot the fishnet in some key places.

Though not entirely in sync with each other, the individual dancer's moves signified their different personalities, the mixed cultures of the act, something Petronio has become known for in his pieces. As an announcer, who sounded like a character from a how-to show, noted to the audience, "these women are about to be raptured," the music turned to a tribal-like beat, a woman's voice over the music breathing heavily, and the audience was left to imagine that this woman was being pleasured in some way, or yes, even raptured.

Toward the end of the act the company entered the stage in one movement, vibrating over the dance floor, shaking torsos as they held their hands behind their backs, perhaps signifying constraint before totally giving into their pleasures. Collapsing to the floor, the performers were cast into darkness as a single dancer took the stage, bathed in a solitary light. Flashing and turning and twisting, slow and fast, then fast and slow, she quivered over the floor as if experiencing the ultimate climax.

During a question and answer session after the performance Petronio was asked about the sexual tendencies in his choreography. He replied, "Sexuality in my work is a fact, not a statement."

He noted that in all his works he likes to leave an underlying sense of trouble and violence in his work, but that to him "Bud Suite" was like a sisters' story, except for the fact that the two performers were male. A fan of Wainwright, Petronio had actually started choreographing "Bud Suite" not yet knowing if the singer/songwriter would become attached to the project. Thankfully Wainwright did agree, creating the tone of desire and need that Petronio was looking for in both "Bloom" and "Bud Suite."

Petronio said that he wanted to make a piece about how people go after or lust for one another. Once quoted as saying "the floral analogy is about growing as a person," the choreographer said that the floral reference was not just about the blooming of one's sexuality, but the chance to create something more open and less darker or melancholy than his previous pieces, and a chance to get a wider audience to come see his pieces. And yet no matter what this master chooses as his next piece, he's now found an audience eagerly awaiting whatever he brings next.

Kate Bauer can be reached at kbauer@student.umass.edu

COURTESY OF THE PETRONIO DANCE COMPANY

Choreographer Stephen Petronio said that the scene "the floral analogy" is a metaphor for growing up and dealing with ones sexuality. Sexuality is a theme repeated many times throughout the groups performance.

Jam band shows diversity at Noho show succession people are one again rocking out along side of them.

UMPHREYS from page 5

After "2x2" they moved into "Water." A slower song was disappointing after all the accumulated energy from the previous one. But even so, they incorporated some liveliness into their jams and between the verses to make up for the dragging tone. Before moving into "Uncle Wally" they give a little "Ringo" tease with the "bunch of crazy animals" riff. Whether this is just to get the fans going or their way of deciding on the next song, their teases will get you every time.

The covers are another aspect of Umphrey's live performances that make them more extraordinary than simply listening to their studio albums. They have been known to cover a wide range of songs. In the past they have covered songs by The Police, Pink Floyd, Frank Sinatra and The Doors. Wednesday Meyers graced the crowd with a cover of Metallica's "Justice for All." Considering that most of the vocals are done by Bayliss, Cinninger, and occasionally Cummins, it is certainly a treat to be serenaded by their drummer.

They have a strong fan base that is completely devoted to them. During set breaks while some made their way to the bar others sniffed out the merchandise table to preorder the night's show or a pair of underwear with "The Bottom Half" conveniently printed on the rear. "The Bottom Half" is the title of their latest record, released earlier this month.

During the second set they played "Intentions Clear" from their "Safety In Numbers" album and "Walletsworth" from "Anchor Drops." The jam before the chorus in "Walletsworth" was very bluesy and added a huge sense of emotion to Bayliss' plea "would you be my only address." A lot of the songs that have been produced in the past year or two have reflected Bayliss' divorce. He has even admitted that he tends to complain and moan in "The Bottom Half."

Some fans picked up on a "Bright Lights" tease when they covered Genesis' "Abacab." It was hard to detect because it didn't have the traditional sound that "Bright Lights" usually has. The doubt was quickly justified as they turned around and played "Syncopated Strangers." This song, along with the Metallica cover, gave this performance its heavier undertones.

At the end of the show touring "umphreaks" usually stick around in hopes of being acknowledged by the band members. This is a jam band that grows with their music. The modesty of the band seems to have diminished slightly in the past year. Previously you could always catch a member or two cleaning up the stage post-show. Lucky for the fans, Bayliss quickly returned after the encore and ran down the edge of the stage with his arm out allowing those closest to grab him. Minutes later Cinninger emerged to toss set lists to beggars and Meyers came out and mingled with those who stuck around.

In this past year, however, their need to mingle with the fans has become less of a priority. They're becoming a "big time" band and it is becoming more of a privilege to catch them after the show. They are their own kind of jam band with a distinguishing sound that defines them. It seems reasonable to expect to hear great things from them in the future.

Lauren Modisette can be reached at lmodiset@student.umass.edu.

Narration adds spice

MOORE from page 5

much older or younger than themselves.

Ironically enough, it was the crutch that was forced upon them that was their biggest difficulty. The fact that the scripts were present at all times helped to guarantee that each line would be true to the words on the page. But the binders that housed the scripts also provided an unwelcome distraction. The actors were forced to balance them open upon their forearms.

The role of the narrator in the reading added an element to the play that brought even further emphasis to the script. Rather a narrator read the lighting directions, the entrances and exits of the characters, the actions of the characters and the props they were interacting with.

It was the responsibility of the viewer to imagine a stage covered in sand and the transitions of the setting from home to desert to store. This issued a final challenge to the actors, to react to the scene changes that weren't actually happening and convince the audience otherwise. It was in the selling of this imaginary scene, a difficult task in its own right, that the actors were most hurt by the binders they carried.

The process of writing the play was been somewhat 'Atypical' for Moore, and upon completion it will likely have taken more than twice the time she normally spends. But after Thursday's performance it is clear that "American Klepto" has been worth the wait. As Grossens put it "it's a tremendous educational experience for our students to have a hand in shaping the creation of a piece by one of America's up and coming playwrights." All that is left to do now is wonder how Moore plans to improve it any further.

Conor White-Sullivan can be reached at cwhitesu@student.umass.edu.

Local artist opens UMass gallery

FARLEY from page 5

the title and the baby's arm to contemporary issues surrounding society.

With inspirations by surrealist artists such as Dorothea Tanning, Meret Oppenheim, and Max Ernst, Farley's surrealist sculptures reflect the movement of the past and a more modern take on the art form itself. She melds beauty and coarseness in her art to create something that is not always clear in meaning, but entirely intriguing. The numerous comments written in the guestbook support this idea.

The only downside to Farley's exhibition is its location. Tucked away in a small room in the New Africa House, her works aren't as well known to those beyond the New Africa House/Central community as they could be. Many are unaware of the several galleries located in Central to begin with, which means small-town artists are still receiving small-time exposure there.

The greater UMass/Amherst/Northampton population will still he able to appreciate Farley's "Myths and Moments" Exhibition until Friday, April 20 in the Augusta Savage Gallery. Admission is free and the gallery is open to the public, Monday and Tuesday, 1-7 p.m. and Wednesday through Friday, 1-5 p.m.

The New Africa House is located towards the bottom of the hill and is across from Wheeler. Shawn Farley currently resides in Northampton, and works at the UMass Fine Arts Center, continuing to create thought-provoking art that bends the visual mind.

Christina Fong can be reached at cfong@student.umass.edu

CORRECTION

In Friday's Daily Collegian the article "Smith College goes Hollywood" had an incorrect byline. The writer's name is spelt Katy Bruck. We apologize for any inconvenience this error may have created.

LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO LIVE?
KAMINS
SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS
PRESIDENTIAL APTS
COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS
PERRY APTS
177 N. PLEASANT ST
COLLEGE INN APTS
LANTERN COURT APTS
MILL HOLLOW
CRESTVIEW APTS.
55 S. PLEASANT ST 253-2515 AMHERST
LARGEST SELECTION OF APARTMENTS IN TOWN

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
is looking for new
Graphic Designers
for the Fall 2007 semester
Daily Advertising Designers
Nightly Production Supervisors
Advertising Production Manager
Major can apply. Previous design
not necessary, but encouraged.
Visit our office in the
Campus Center Basement
10am - 4pm for applications.

Want a Personal Trainer?
STOP BY THE BODY SHOP IN TOTMAN TO SIGN UP!
One Fitness Evaluation and Goals Meeting
Your Own Six Week Personal Exercise Program
Five Workouts with a Personal Trainor
Five Additional Workouts at the Body Shop
WITH A BODY SHOP MEMBERSHIP: $90
WITHOUT A BODY SHOP MEMBERSHIP: $120
CALL THE BODY SHOP WITH ANY QUESTIONS
577-4700

GW takes two from UMass

BASEBALL from page 10

throwing the ball well, and he was coming off a big win the other day, so we went with him."

Senior shortstop Lou Proietti gave UMass some much-needed momentum heading into Saturday's games by driving in three runs on a bases-clearing double with one out in the bottom of the ninth in Friday's series opener. The Minutemen lost 9-4, but Proietti's shot to right-center gave his team a reason to be optimistic.

Munsey's game-winning sacrifice bunt didn't produce the same result in Game 2 on Saturday, as George Washington took a 6-1 win to close out the series.

Munsey got his bat going early, as he lined an RBI single up the middle that scored Bill Rankin, giving UMass a 1-0 lead in the bottom of the second.

George Washington's Faizan Choudhry silenced the Minuteman bats the next five innings, allowing only two more hits in a total of seven innings pitched.

UMass starter Mike Dicato was cruising through the first four innings, but disaster struck in the fifth.

"He was locating well," Garrity said. "He was mixing his pitches up, he was throwing his knuckle-curve, curve, change, fastball at any time and any sequence. It just seemed like he hit a wall."

The sophomore had allowed only one hit going into the fifth. But two walks, two hit batters and a wild pitch later, the Colonials were leading 4-1 and Dicato's day was finished.

"I thought Mike Dicato had good stuff, then he started hitting a few people and walking a few people," Stone said. "He has to pitch better with people on base."

On a controversial play with bases loaded and UMass still leading 1-0, Dicato's 1-2 pitch with two outs to GW's RBI leader Michael Parker hit his hand and was originally called a foul ball off the knob of the bat.

After the umpires talked it over, the ruling was overturned and Parker was allowed first base, scoring the tying run. Three pitches later, to GW cleanup hitter Charlie Kruer, Dicato threw a wild pitch in the dirt that got past Garrity, scoring the go-ahead run.

Kruer added insult to injury as he drove in two more runs on a single to right field. Dicato was then pulled in favor of Smith. He picked up his fifth loss of the season.

"We had not enough offense and too many walks," Garrity said. "Those are free bases, bases that we can't afford to give up."

Tomorrow's Beanpot game was originally scheduled to be played tonight, but the poor field conditions in Lynn, Mass. moved it back a day. The game against Sacred Heart has been postponed, and no make-up date has been determined.

Danny Picard can be reached at dpicard@student.umass.edu Log onto the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.

MICHAEL FIRESTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Though he leads the team in innings pitched, senior Chris Lloyd lasted only 3 1/3 innings in Friday's 9-4 loss to Charlotte.

Rankin contributes more than numbers

RANKIN from page 10

two hit batsmen and an error on first baseman Bryan Adamski, Cassidy walked in a run to give the Colonials a 2-1 edge.

With no outs and the bases still loaded, Chris Marsicano's deep drive to right-center field threatened to break the game wide open for the Colonials. Rankin wasn't about to let that happen.

"You know, it's one of those fun things to do," Rankin said with a grin. "You don't even really think about it when the ball is hit. I just saw the ball off the bat, got a pretty good jump, and I was able to cover enough ground to get there and make a bid. Thankfully, I was able to put it in the mitt. After I caught it, I got back up and got the ball in as fast as I could."

Rankin's catch shocked everybody, especially George Washington's runner on third, Charlie Kruer.

Assuming the ball was going to hit the gap for a bases-clearing double, Kruer began trotting home. By the time he finally realized that Rankin made the catch, it was much too late to tag up, as Rankin already fired the ball back into the infield.

"That was huge," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "It was just a tremendous catch. When it was first hit it looked like it would be a double, and the baserunner at third thought it was too. He came out of nowhere and made a great play.

"I don't know what more I can say about it," Stone added laughing.

Ultimately the Colonials added two more runs in the inning, extending their lead to three.

But if Rankin's catch in the sixth wasn't enough, the senior came through twice more – without the benefit of a hit – once in the seventh and again in the eighth inning to help lead the UMass comeback.

After Garrity led off the seventh with a single up the middle and advanced to third on a failed pickoff attempt, Rankin drove him in with a groundout to second base. In a three-run eighth for the Minutemen, Rankin added to his RBI total -- without even swinging the bat – after he was hit by his team-leading seventh pitch of the season, scoring Adamski to cut the lead to one.

Rankin knows he's been struggling at the dish, but continues to do whatever he can to help the team, even if it means getting drilled by a few fastballs.

"I've been struggling to get it going," he said. "You come out here and want to help the team as much as you can, and that's what's been so frustrating. I've just been doing whatever I can, getting guys over, drawing walks and getting hit by pitches. I'm just trying my best, doing whatever it takes to help out."

"Bill brings a lot of leadership and experience to this team," Garrity said. "He's always keeping the intensity up and he's done a great job motivating everyone on the team. He never complains and he does all the things we need him to do. That's the kind of teammate you're looking for – someone you can depend on."

While Stone hopes to see Rankin pick up his production offensively, he knows he can depend on just about everything else from his senior center fielder.

"Every day for five years, his effort has been tremendous," he said. "He comes to every game and every practice with a great attitude and it's been a pleasure coaching him for five years. He's the kind of kid who gives his best everyday. You can't ask for anything more than that."

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@student.umass.edu Log onto the Daily Collegian sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.

Connolly nets second five-goal game

M. LACROSSE from page 10

The offense began things well Saturday with its highest first-quarter scoring total of the season. The Minutemen scored four goals in the first. Freshman Bobby Hayes netted the first UMass goal at the 9:29 mark after the Minutemen went down 2-0.

Senior captain Brett Garber posted the second UMass goal just 34 seconds after Hayes' to even the score at 2-all. Connolly scored the other two goals of the first frame, sandwiching a Hobart goal by Mike Suits and preceding a Hobart man-up goal.

Connolly started the second with a goal at the 13:15 mark off an assist from attack Denis Whelan.

Connolly and Garber are now leading the Minutemen in scoring with 20 goals apiece. Connolly has seven assists and Garber has four, so Connolly edges the midfielder in total points for the year with 27 to Garber's 24.

Jim Balise, who scored one goal on Saturday at the 12:44 mark of the third quarter, is third on the team in scoring with 13 goals on the season paired with seven assists.

Midfielder Rory Pedrick leads UMass in assists with 12 followed by Brian Jacovina with 11.

Moody and Federico are the 11th and 12th UMass players to crack the scoring chart this season. Moody has taken just one shot on the season, which resulted in the goal on Saturday. Federico has just 11 shots on the season.

Rob Greenfield can be reached at rgreenfi@student.umass.edu Log onto the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com

As a part of the Minutemen's season-high 17 goal performance, sophomore Tim Balise scored twice and added one assist.

Minutewomen face tough UConn squad

SOFTBALL from page 10

and is 17-8 on the season with a 1.48 earned run average. She allowed two earned runs over the weekend in her 11 innings pitched. The 49ers also scored an unearned run against the Minutewomen.

The Minutewomen take on the Connecticut Huskies (15-17, 4-7 Big East) tomorrow in Storrs, Conn. The all-time series stands at 42-41-2 in UMass' favor. Under current coach Elaine Sortino, the Minutewomen are 39-40-1 with their New England rivals.

The Huskies are hitting .260 as a team, but a strong trio headlines UConn's offense. Senior third baseman Holly Calcagno leads the team with a .337 batting average and is second on the team with six homers.

First on the team in homers is sophomore Micah Truax with seven. She already matched last season's mark with a month left in the 2007 campaign. She's also first on the team in stolen bases with four.

As a team, the Huskies don't do much running. They've attempted 21 stolen bases compared to 38 by their opponents. Their offense relies heavily on the long ball – four players on the team have at least three on the season.

However, the home run has been the undoing of the Huskies for most of 2007 as well. Opponents hit 32 homers off UConn hurlers through the first 32 games of the season and hit at a .292 clip.

Calling any of the UConn pitchers an ace would be inaccurate. Freshman Tricia Sullivan's 3.95 ERA is tops on the Husky roster, but she does lead the team in losses with seven.

Senior Krista Michalczyk leads the team with eight wins in her 18 appearances and is second on the team with a 4.20 ERA.

Last season against the Minutewomen, Michalczyk allowed four runs in her four innings pitched – just one of the four was earned. Senior Michelle Couette entered the game in relief of Michalczyk and allowed two runs in her three innings.

The Minutewomen won the game 6-4. Balschmiter didn't allow an earned run, but the Huskies scored four unearned runs to keep the game close.

Whitney Mollica led the UMass offense, going 2-for-4 with one run scored and one run driven in.

In her sophomore season, Mollica has struggled to replicate the success she enjoyed in her freshman campaign. Her batting average currently stands at .275 and her home run total (two) is good enough for third on the team. She is hitting just .262 with runners in scoring position. Against the 49ers, she went 1-for-4 with a walk in the two-game set.

Freshman pitcher Bailey Sanders pitched the final inning of the second game for UMass. In her only inning of work, she didn't allow any baserunners, coaxing two groundouts and a fly out from the 49ers batters.

Since the game with UConn has no bearing on the team's A-10 record, Sortino may decide to start Sanders and rest Balschmiter.

Fellow freshman, Jessica Serio, went hitless in her four at-bats against Charlotte and is 0-for-6 in UMass' last three contests. Her batting average for the season stands at .158.

Serio hasn't brought her struggles at the plate into the field with her. In the first game over the weekend, she caught Charlotte sophomore Jenny Rumbles trying to steal.

Jac Meloni can be reached at jmeloni@student.umass.edu Log onto the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.

MICHAEL FIRESTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Senior outfielder Travis Munsey knocked in two runs on three hits while playing all three games for the Minutemen.

EXPERIENCE
Gained only through working at The Massachusetts Daily Collegian as a Fall 2007 semester Advertising Representative
If interested please pick up an application at the Daily Collegian Office located in the Campus Center basement or contact Alex Bendit at abendit@student.umass.edu

SCHOOL OF GRADUATE STUDIES
OPEN HOUSE
ADANTI STUDENT CENTER
SOUTHERN CONNECTICUT STATE UNIVERSITY
THURSDAY
APRIL 19, 2007
3:00 - 7:00 PM
Meet with graduate faculty from more than 40 areas of study
Find out about financial aid and graduate assistantships
Get details on career services and living on campus
Choose from 55 graduate programs, including master's degree programs, sixth year certificates, and the Ed.D.
SCHOOL OF ARTS & SCIENCES
SCHOOL OF BUSINESS
SCHOOL OF COMMUNICATION, INFORMATION & LIBRARY SCIENCE
SCHOOL OF EDUCATION
SCHOOL OF HEALTH & HUMAN SERVICES
Southern Connecticut State University
SCSU
New Haven, Connecticut
1-800-4all-sou or 203-392-5240
Register for the Open House at www.gradstudies.SouthernCT.edu

Spiders hold UMass in check

W. LACROSSE from page 10

UMass was on its way to its sixth victory of the year. But despite out shooting the Spiders 22-20, committing a season-low 12 turnovers, and collecting three more groundballs than the Spiders, the Minutewomen were once again done in by a lack of urgency after jumping out on top. Too many uncontested shots and wide open lanes to the net on the defensive end didn't help matters, either.

Typadis's two unassisted goals on the day put UMass ahead 2-0 in the first 10 minutes of regulation which saw the Minutewomen dominate possession and play a majority of the early minutes in Richmond's half of the field. After the quick start, however, the Minutewomen wouldn't find the back of the net for the next 22 minutes.

The Spiders erased the 2-0 deficit eight minutes later with back-to-back goals scored 40 seconds apart. Richmond went on to tally the next six goals, including the first four goals of the second half until freshman attacker Stephanie Hopkins stopped the bleeding with her eighth goal of the season. She scored off of a free position shot with just under 17 minutes remaining in the second half.

Junior attacker Melynda Zwick capped off a revitalized UMass attack in the last 10 minutes with the team's final goal at the 2:58 mark. In their last two games, the Minutewomen have been outscored 11-3 in the second half.

"We talk about playing with a sense of urgency and now our backs are up against the wall. When we're up 2-0 we have to play with a sense of urgency then not when we're down 4-2 or 8-2," Venechanos said.

The coach was at a loss to why her team seemingly continues to lay back after jumping out to early leads and not playing a full 60 minutes.

"I don't know what it is that we have to do," she said. "We may have to get pissed or something. I don't know. I'm trying to find out myself why we don't play with a sense of urgency. Every game is precious and we talk about the moment and that's what it all comes down to."

Typadis concurred with her coach's sentiments.

"I think we just got a little too comfortable with our lead and we lost some urgency," she said. "When we're up we just have to learn to keep pushing and not letting them back in the game."

Sophomore midfielder Holly Drown was held scoreless for the first time all season after she notching eight goals in her last four games. It was only the third time all season that the scoring tandem of Typadis, Drown and Zwick did not all score in the same game. Typadis has now scored in 37 consecutive games.

Kevin Dooley can be reached at kdooley@student.umass.edu Log onto the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com

With 30 points on the season, junior attack Melynda Zwick ranks third on the team. She also scored one goal on four shots against Richmond.

Weather affects play at McGuirk

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

Some of the most memorable moments in sports were in some form influenced by the weather. Though perhaps not an experience UMass fans would like to be reminded of any time soon, Sunday's match between the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team and Richmond featured plenty of unusual weather.

Every possible wintry weather situation made an appearance at the Atlantic 10 contest, though nearly one month after the official beginning of spring. The cold air and the multiple types of precipitation affected play in several game-changing ways. However, it was evident in the 10-4 Richmond victory that the weather gave neither team at an advantage.

The most profound influence of the conditions was the transformation of McGuirk Stadium's typically artificial surface into a slippery ice patch. As the snow gradually covered the field during the first half, the players' footing became increasingly tenuous. Each team earned goals on several occasions when defenders lost position after slipping on the icy surface.

The best example of the poor field conditions occurred just 17 minutes into the first half. Richmond forward Mandy Friend brought the ball into the offensive zone and sprinted toward the right side of the 12-meter line. Friend dodged to the right as the UMass defender lost her footing in an attempt to keep pace with the Richmond forward.

Meanwhile, a wide-open Friend fired a shot past senior goalkeeper Lauren McCarthy. The unassisted score was a turning point in the game and a momentum swing in favor of the Spiders.

Before that goal, UMass dominated the time of possession and scored two of its own. Richmond then rattled off seven more unanswered goals, holding the Minutewomen scoreless to the nearly the midpoint of the second half.

Even though weather certainly played a factor in the game, junior attack Kathleen Typadis refused to use the snow as an excuse for the loss. She scored the first two goals of the game, putting the Maroon and White up 2-0, but was held scoreless for the remainder of the contest.

"We're used to playing in [this kind of weather]," Typadis said after the game. "It was sticky on the feet, but there's no excuse [for the way we played] – it shouldn't be a factor."

But then again, coach Alexis Venechanos prepared her Minutewomen for these type of game conditions.

"We've doing a lot of practice in weather like this," Venechanos said. "I think [the weather affected play], but I still think we had an opportunity to take the game over at a certain point."

Though there was little snow accumulation in the Amherst area during the hours after the game, enough white powder covered the field by halftime to blur the yellow boundary lines. In fact, stadium attendants labored unsuccessfully to reveal the lines during the intermission.

Similar to other sports, snow profoundly slows down lacrosse. Sunday's game was marked by long passes that were frequently intercepted or batted down by defenders. Ground balls were also difficult to corral, leading to frequent turnovers.

The most profound influence of the conditions was the transformation of McGuirk Stadium's typically artificial surface into a slippery ice patch. As the snow gradually covered the field during the first half, the players' footing became increasingly tenuous. Each team earned goals on several occasions when defenders lost position after slipping on the icy surface.

The best example of the poor field conditions occurred just 17 minutes into the first half. Richmond forward Mandy Friend brought the ball into the offensive zone and sprinted toward the right side of the 12-meter line. Friend dodged to the right as the UMass defender lost her footing in an attempt to keep pace with the Richmond forward.

Meanwhile, a wide-open Friend fired a shot past senior goalkeeper Lauren McCarthy. The unassisted score was a turning point in the game and a momentum swing in favor of the Spiders.

Before that goal, UMass dominated the time of possession and scored two of its own. Richmond then rattled off seven more unanswered goals, holding the Minutewomen scoreless to the nearly the midpoint of the second half.

Even though weather certainly played a factor in the game, junior

UM hosts second meet at new complex

By Melissa Turtinen
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts men's and women's track and field teams hosted just their second home meet in over 10 years at the new Track and Field Complex Saturday. The Minutemen placed second and Minutewomen placed fourth.

The men's team stepped up its game and placed second out of eight teams at the home meet last Saturday. The Minutemen took first place in five different events: the 4x100 meter relay, 3,000-meter steeplechase, 400-meter dash, 4x400 meter relay and the 100-meter dash.

The 4x100 meter relay team with senior Manny Harris-Lopes, freshman Patrick Phelan, junior Nathan Barksdale and fifth-year senior James Godinho placed first with a time of 43.07 seconds. Sophomore Peter Fortunato finished first in the 3,000-meter steeplechase and set a facility record with a time of 9:25.60. Harris-Lopes not only helped out the 4x100 meter relay team, but he also finished first in the 400-meter dash with a time of 49.52 seconds. Freshman Brian Miller took first in the 100-meter dash with a time of 11.41 seconds. The 4x400 meter relay team also took first place with a time of 3:22.73.

In the 400-meter dash, the Minutemen took the top four spots and finished very close together. Harris-Lopes took first (49.52 seconds), Junior Nils Fischer ran the 5,000 meters in 14:54.34 minutes granting him second place. Fischer's teammate, sophomore Jonathan Pierce, took third with a time of 14:56.00. Next was freshman Daniel Barry, who took fifth place with a time of 15:01.52. Freshman Andrew McCann ran in 15:03.28 placing sixth. Freshman Andrew Mulvaney placed eighth with a time of 15:04.71. In ninth place was junior Ryan Durkin, finishing with a time of 15:06.65.

In the high jump sophomore Mark Anderson placed fifth with a height of five feet, 11 inches. Sophomore Jesse Regnier placed fifth in the 3,000-meter steeplechase with a time of 9:36.96 and freshman Sonny Gamble placed eighth with a time of 9:47.83.

Freshman Ryan Diorio had a fifth place finish in the 1,500-meter run with a time of 4:00.20.

Freshman Andrew O'Donnell took fourth place in the 100-meter dash with a time of 11.57. O'Donnell also ran the 200-meter dash with a time of 23.05 seconds allowing him to take third place. In the same race, freshman Ian Hackney placed fourth with a time of 23.10.

In the 800-meter run, junior Kevin Murphy placed second with a time of 1:56.08 and Ryan Diorio finished sixth with a time of 1:58.40.

In the hurdles UMass placed in the top 10 for both the 110-meter and 400-meter. Freshman Tyler Cotto finished second in the 110-meter hurdles with a time of 15.73 seconds. Sophomore Kevin Ianetta finished third and was two tenths of a second behind Cotto. In the 400-meter hurdles, Ianetta finished second with a time of 55.86. Senior Jonathan Morse had a sixth place finish in the 400-meter hurdles with a time of 58.69 seconds. Freshman Jason Dwyer had a time of 58.70 seconds, finishing seventh.

Meanwhile, the Minutewomen had a successful day finishing fourth out of seven teams at Saturday's home meet. Taryn Trapp, Christina DeRosa, and Lisa Wilson were among the Minutewomen's top competitors for the day.

Freshman Taryn Trapp finished sixth in the 3,000-meter steeplechase. She had a time of 11:40.96, which allowed her to have the third fastest time behind Alexis Anzelone and Kate Markopoulos. Trapp also competed on the 4x100 relay team that finished fourth.

Junior Christina DeRosa placed second in the 5,000-meters and qualified for the ECAC Championships. Her time of 17.17.27 beat her former school record of 17.19.51 that she set last year.

Lisa Wilson placed first in the discus and set a facility record with a throw of 136 feet. Wilson also placed sixth in the shot put with a throw of 36 feet, three inches. In the hammer throw, Wilson threw a distance of 137 feet, eight inches allowing her to place fifth.

In the jumping competitions, UMass had four athletes place in the top 10. Senior Troyanah Evans placed fifth in the long jump with a jump of 16 feet, eight inches. In the high jump, freshman Alexandra Haller placed fourth with a five foot, one inch jump. Sophomore Elizabeth Hehl placed fifth and Katelyn O'Toole took sixth place both jumping four feet, 11 inches.

In the 100-meter dash, Dionise Miranda finished fifth with a time of 13.18 seconds. Freshman Rosalind Murphy was close behind with a time of 13.47 finishing eight and Troyanah Evans eight after placing ninth with a time of 13.63 seconds.

In the 200-meter dash, Dionise Miranda placed fifth with a time of 27.08 seconds and Rosalind Murphy placed sixth in 27.38 seconds.

In the 400-meter dash, UMass had two athletes in the top 10. Junior Brittany Canfield finished sixth with a time of 1:01.92 and freshman Nicole Scapiglia followed with a time of 1:02.50 placing eighth.

In the 100-meter hurdles, UMass had two top 10 finishes. Graduate student Mary Sedakowski placed fourth with a time of 16.70 seconds. Alexandra Haller took sixth in 17.16 seconds.

Senior Carole Kierans placed eighth in the 5,000-meter run with a time of 18:23.78.

The 4x100 meter relay team with Mary Serdakowski, Taryn Trapp, Brittany Canfield and Brittany Biakanowski placed fourth in Saturday's meet. The team finished with a time of 50.53 seconds.

Both teams have several upcoming events. On Wednesday the men's and women's teams compete in the Holy Cross Heptathlon in Worcester. On Thursday April 19 men's track will compete in the Holy Cross Decathlon and women's track will compete in the Holy Cross Heptathlon. On Saturday April 21 men's track will compete in the UConn Select Meet and the women's track team will compete in the UConn Invitational.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtine@student.umass.edu Log onto the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com

Minutewomen end season with victory

By Justin McGrail
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts tennis team (11-7, 2-1 Atlantic 10) ended its regular season on a high note last week. The team won its last match of the season against Rhode Island (13-3,) on Senior Night. Michele Spiess was honored before the match as the team's only senior.

Spiess started the match by teaming up with junior Masha Pozar. The two won a long match, nine games to seven. The other two doubles matches were easier victories. Ellen de Jong and Stephanie Gimenez won their match 8-3. Maude Leclyse and Laura Murillo won their match 8-1. By sweeping the doubles matches, the team took the early lead on URI and never looked back.

Leclyse started things in singles play by winning her match 6-3 and 6-1. Masha Pozar, despite struggling with back spasms last week, won her match in straight sets, 6-1 and 6-2. Her win gave UMass a 3-0 overall lead over URI. The Rams mounted a comeback when de Jong lost in three sets 4-6, 6-2, 0-6 and Dasa Stanimirovic lost 4-6 and 1-6. Gimenez put the match out of reach for URI by winning her singles match in convincing fashion, 6-0 and 6-1. With the victory already in hand for UMass, it was time for Michele Spiess to compete in her final regular season match.

On a night where Spiess was the focus, her opponent made it hard for her to win. Lara Maurer of URI tried playing spoiler and gave Spiess a run for her money. Spiess took the first set 6-2 without a problem. The second set was a little tougher for the senior. Maurer was able to come back and take the second set 6-3. Maurer put Spiess away in the third set. She went up 4-3 but Spiess came back and won three straight points to take the set 6-4. The victory was a fitting end to her prolific career at UMass.

Her performance against URI and her record-breaking win against Quinnipiac gave her A-10 Women's Tennis Player of the Week. She went 2-0 in singles competition and 2-0 in doubles, playing with junior standout Masha Pozar. This is the third time this season that Spiess has been honored with this award. Spiess has quite the award collection. In addition to the three Player of the Week awards, she is also the reigning Atlantic 10 Player of the Year.

The team is now looking toward the postseason. The A-10 Tournament starts on April 20th. The first round and quarterfinal matches will be held that day. The semifinals will take place on the 21st and the tournament will conclude the next day with the finals.

The Minutewomen had a strong finish to what was a solid season. The team was able to get a win for Michele Spiess in the final match of her career. They have the momentum going into the postseason where the team will be looking to win its first A-10 Championship since 2001.

Justin McGrail can be reached at jsmcgrail@student.umass.edu Log onto the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com

Medical MD & Veterinary Degree Programs

Making World-Class Physicians & Veterinarians Today, For Tomorrow's World

- Programs to meet the needs of high school and college graduates
- More than a half century old well-recognized and established European medical and veternary universities
- Programs recognized by the National Committee on Medical Education, Accreditation, and the U.S. Department of Education
- 100% financial aid is available. The U.S. government provides subsidized loans to qualified students in our programs
- Approved by New York Medical Education Board for clinical training in the state of New York. (A state with a high number of residency positions.)
- Medical and veterinary clinical clerkships/training in the USA
- Smaller class size with traditional European tutorial style education
- Programs offer opportunity to earn dual degrees – MD PhD, MD MHA, MD MSHA, MD MPHA, etc.
- Much safer campus environment, compared to many campuses in the USA, allowing retaining and strengthening of cultural identities
- English language curriculum matches to major American medical and veternary schools
- An excellent opportunity for hands-on participation for extensive training and experience.
- Alumni holding very good positions all over the USA

When it comes to medical & veterinary education, our programs set standards for excellence. With cooperation from European universities, Hope Medical Institute brings you a unique, unmatched opportunity at your doorstep.

APPLY NOW!

For the FALL 2007 or SPRING 2008 Term

For more detailed information, please contact us at:

HOPE MEDICAL INSTITUTE

11835 Rock Landing, Newport News, VA 23606-3575

PHONE: (757) 873-3333 * FAX: (757) 873-6661

The Journalism Program Lecture Series on Broadcast and the Media

THE ALUMNI ALL-STAR CAREER NIGHT & ICE CREAM SOCIAL

Tuesday, April 24 2007

Ice Cream 5 PM, Panel 5:30-7 PM

THE BLUEWALL CAMPUS CENTER WITH

Steve Buckley '79, Sports Columnist, The Boston Herald

Sandy Lish '87, Founder, The Castle Group

Maria Sacchetti '91, Reporter, The Boston Globe

Aaron Saykin '01, Reporter, The Pittsburgh Channel

Audie Cornish '01, Correspondent, National Public Radio

DON'T MISS THIS CHANCE TO LEARN ABOUT CAREERS IN JOURNALISM AND PUBLIC RELATIONS FROM SOME OF THE TOP PEOPLE IN THEIR FIELDS

This lecture is part of the Extra Credit Program and is funded by David '79 and Jeena Kanbar

FRUSTRATED? PUZZLED? DO YOU HAVE:

A grade dispute?

Teacher, roomate or job concerns?

Billing problems?

...or any other University related problems?

THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP

(confidentially, of course)

Serving the students, faculty, and staff of the Umass Community

823 Campus Center
Office Hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
Telephone: 413 - 545 - 0867
fax: 413 - 545 - 9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

Seven O's

Every Wednesday:

♦ KARAOKE ♦

♦ LIVE BANDS ♦

Friday, April 20th, 2007: MARK SNOW

Saturday, April 21st, 2007: SHUT UP AND DANCE

Sunday, April 22nd, 2007: VALLEY POKER @ 6PM

♦ Student Band Wanted ♦

Need a place to play? Come to Seven O's!

Route 116, 330 Amherst Rd, Sunderland, MA 01375, (413) 665-0786

3 PM to 1 AM M-F
1 PM to 1 AM Sat&Sun
Next To Cliff Side Apts

Free Delivery to UMass Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

			8	1
		5	7			6	8
		2				3	7
5			4	3				7
3								2
7			6	9				4
	3	8				1
	9	6			1	7
					6	4

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Six feet of water
7 Sort or kind
10 Make well
14 Tropical lizard
15 Extinct bird
16 Ms. Fitzgerald
17 Boneless cut of meat
18 Verbal picture
20 Otherwise
21 Second appearance on stage
23 ___ of Cortez
24 At present
25 Pile wood
26 Sudden feeling of anxiety
27 Unusual
28 Starlit
31 Seaside
33 Docs' grp.
36 Sub weapon
38 Spanned
40 Nevertheless
41 Type of loom
43 Puglisi's weapons
44 Woman last mentioned
45 Plays trump
47 Hilo hi
50 Actor's parts
51 Sturdy cup
54 Donates
56 Strike an attitude
57 Light musical production
58 Cut choppers
60 Perform ushering
61 Work unit
62 Rugged ridges
63 Sea eagles
64 One of the Three Stooges
65 Poe's lady

DOWN
1 High-pitched flutes
2 Nimble
3 Oklahoma city
4 Robust
5 Individual
6 ___ of honor
7 Charge a public official
8 Dart
9 Miniature race car
10 Messenger
11 Large antelope
12 Mrs. Kramden
13 By and by
19 Exchanges of sorts
22 Prolific U.S. inventor
24 Assume a fixed form
26 Soda
27 Bruins' great Bobby
28 Porker's pad
29 "The Raven" poet
30 Table scrap
32 Supernatural
33 Blockhead
34 Encumbered
35 Ward
37 Unknown John
39 Bro's sibling
42 Last B.C. era
44 Blouses
46 Befitting a gala occasion
47 Popped up
48 Outcast
49 Indian or Arctic
50 Slyishly out-of-date
51 Words to live by
52 Wedding worker
53 V formation flock
55 Agenda topic
56 Hammer part
59 Afore

THE HARP

SPECIALS!

Honey Brown, Molson

$2.00 a pint / $6.50 a pitcher

TONIGHT: • Trivia Night

WED • Open Mic Night (all are welcome)

Pizza 'til midnight 7 days a week

Voted best Neighborhood bar
Last of the River 2005 & 2006
Valley Advocate Readers Poll

COMP & All credit Cards accepted

Free wireless Internet!

163 Sunderland Rd. • N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
413-548-9000 www.theharp.net

QUOTE OF THE DAY

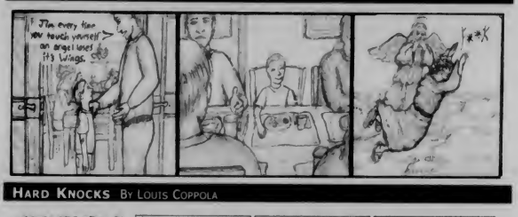
"Sometimes it would stop raining long enough for the stars to come out... and then it was nice."

- Tom Hanks in "Forest Gump"

PAUL By Billy O'Keefe

HEY, EX-GIRLFRIEND.
HEY, HOW WAS YOUR ROAD TRIP? DID YOU CATCH BIGFOOT?
NO. BUT IN FAIRNESS, I DIDN'T HAVE TIME. I GOT ABDUCTED BY ALIENS. SEE?
OH. RIGHT, SURE.
NO, SERIOUSLY. CHECK IT OUT. THIRD EYE.
OH MY GOD! WOW...
ALLERGIC REACTION. THE ALIEN WHO KIDNAPPED ME HAD A LOT OF CATS.
OH MAN, I HATE CA- WAIT, WAIT, WAIT A SECOND!

TOUCHING ANGELS By Alex Ezorsky-Lie

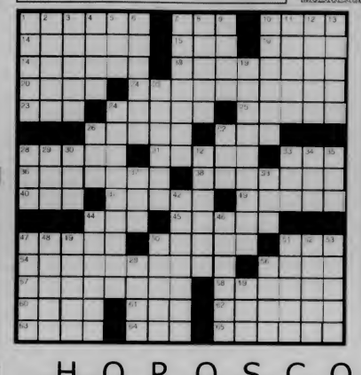


HARD KNOCKS By Louis Coppola

HARD KNOCKS
HEY, SAMSON! COULD YOU GRAB ME ONE OF MY ZAMMAS, PLEASE?
YOU'RE GOING TO BECOME ADDICTED TO THOSE THINGS.
ONE DAY I'M GOING TO COME IN AND FIND YOU OVERDOSED LIKE SOME HOLLYWOOD CELEBRITY!
THAT WOULD BE SO GLAMOROUS.

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Josh Shalek

Your cousin's name is Freddie Freeloader
Sadly, yes
Some people's names describe them well
Le Duck Nixon
Why must you drag Nixon into every conversation? Hasn't he taken enough abuse
Not enough for me
At least Nixon never pestered my CDs and left them



HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Carry extra breath mints in case some sagittarius decides to forget theirs.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Neutrality should be reserved for the ignorant and the indecisive.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
I swear, "John Tucker Must Die" is the answer to all your emotional problems.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
No one knows if avacado is a fruit or veggy, but all agree it's a chef's secret weapon.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Eating is merely a temporary fix for the hopelessly persistent problem of hunger.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Take your bad day out on others by making whale noises in the learning commons.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Like a Roman aquaduct, you work better under pressure.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Annoy your coworkers by listening to barnyard animal sounds at a heinous volume.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
If cash is tight, remember that dog food is much cheaper than human chow.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
The stupidest anyone can ever look is when they are learning to whistle.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Find an aquarius and make out with them like a middle schooler with a breath mint.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Nine days in a row of rain and minimal sunlight is wonderful...if you are a fungus.

Continuing & Professional Education

UMass Amherst Summer 2007

Here are a few of the many Gen Ed classes offered this summer

Online
- English 132 Man and Woman in Literature
- Psych 350 Child Psychology

On Campus
- Math 131 Calculus I
- Art 104 Basic Studio Drawing

I: June 4 – July 2
II: July 6 – August 22

Register Now!
By visiting us at www.128.risd.learn.net.de

Save a baby seal. Write a comic.

www.dailycollegian.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ACTIVITIES

WANTED: College Nudists Inter-College Nudist Day, May 5, at Solair in Woodstock, CT. 30+ Colleges invited. Preregister for free gift. For more info: http://www.solairrl.com/Solair-colleday2007.htm or email: Solair@SolairRL.com

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Like no other course, Army ROTC Our Nurses call the shots! Guaranteed 3 ½ to 2 year Full Tuition Scholarships plus $5,000 yearly Call 413-545-2321 www.umass.edu/armyrotc

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Mill Valley Estates APARTMENT FOR RENT 2 bedroom $1125, 3 bedroom $1425, 4 bedroom $2175 Accepting Applications. 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winnco.com

EMPLOYMENT

Brandywine Apts Now Leasing. 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July. Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

28 Stockbridge st: 4 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage, 1.5 Mi to campus! $2,900/Mo www.amherst-lincolnrealty.com 253-7879

EMPLOYMENT

Drivers and kitchen help wanted. Nights and weekends. Apply at DP Dough Downtown Amherst

Outdoor Recreation Jobs Rafting guides full or part time Massachusetts or Maine. Will train! Contact www.moxierafting.com 800-866-6943

EMPLOYMENT

Moving: Local Moving Company looking for self motivated individuals, part-time positions available immediately. Weekday availability a plus. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call (413) 584-4746

Full time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office, $9.50/hour Applications available at 235 Whitmore and are due April 13th

Line-cooks needed Full-time Part-time available. Apply in person Amherst Brewing Co. 24 N Pleasant st.

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Premium skin care and wellness Excellent training and benefits. http://newengland myarbonne.com

Attention All Juniors and Seniors! The deadline is now extended to april 13th to apply to become a Legal Assistant with the Student Legal Services Office. Earn up to 12 undergraduate credits while gaining valuable experience in the legal field. Contact us at 545-1995 or stop by our office at 922 Campus Center.

HOUSE FOR RENT

4 bedroom in Northampton $1300 available sept. Also 3 bedroom $1200 available now or June 1st. No Pets. Skibiski Realtors 586-1827

ROOM FOR RENT

Amherst Beautiful quiet house great location. Need car. With Nice guy and daughter. Perfect for single/couple. Call Jonathan for details 413-253-2535

Amherst nice house on bus route to all colleges. 2 rooms available immediately. Each 450 mo + electric. Call Ally 413-253-4929 leave message or call 413-626-7491

ROOMATE WANTED

Cape Cod Seeking summer roommates starting 6/10 Yarmouth, MA near beach. Female only. 617-519-0178

SERVICES

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992. www.tapestryhealth.com

SUMMER SUBLET

Won't Last! Puffton Village 3 bedroom apt. rent for summer and/or 07-08 school year. Air Cond. Included. Call John 774-239-8937

Alpine Commons apartment June-August 15th $2050/month includes utilities. 413.204.9519 or jennaw@student.umass.edu

www.dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, APRIL 17, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

GW colonizes Lorden Field

Colonials defeat UM despite big game from Munsey

BY DANNY PICARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Travis Munsey couldn't do it all on his own Saturday, but he tried.

The senior captain came up big in the Massachusetts baseball team's 5-4 win over George Washington in the first game of Saturday's doubleheader. His lone RBI in Game 2, however, wasn't enough to take the rubber match and head into the Beanpot on a winning note.

The Minutemen (9-15, 4-8 Atlantic 10) dropped two of three to the Colonials (12-23, 5-7 A-10) over the weekend. UMass plays Northeastern tomorrow night at 7 p.m. in the opening game of the 2007 Beanpot Tournament in Lynn, Mass.

GW	9
UMass	4
UMass	5
GW	4
GW	6
UMass	1

Munsey's bases-loaded sacrifice bunt with one out in the bottom of the eighth allowed catcher Bryan Garrity to score the game-winning run in Game 1. The suicide-squeeze attempt worked perfectly, and senior Bryan Adamski came in to pick up his first save of the season.

"The first game [on Saturday] was good," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "[Jim] Cassidy pitched very well. He kept us in the ballgame, we got something going, and came from behind. It was a good win."

Cassidy allowed four runs (one earned) on five hits and five walks in eight innings of work in Game 1 of the doubleheader. He also struck out five batters and picked up his third win of the season.

Adamski, the usual first baseman, got the call from the bullpen over the team's saves leader, Aaron Smith (4). Adamski picked up his second win of the year last Tuesday at Connecticut, and his four innings of shutout baseball against the Huskies was the main determinant in giving him the ball with the game on the line Saturday.

"Adamski threw the ball really well against UConn," Garrity said. "Coach wanted to bring him in, and if he struggled at that point, then you can bring in Smith, who's reliable too.

"But I think right now Adamski's

See BASEBALL on page 7

Rankin goes beyond the stats

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In baseball, statistics are sacred. But sometimes the numbers fail to tell the whole story.

In the case of Bill Rankin, a fifth-year senior for the Massachusetts baseball team, this definitely holds true.

If you want to know how important the left-handed center fielder is to the Minutemen, don't look at the .160 batting average or any other number, for that matter – but rather ask any one of his teammates about Rankin's many contributions.

"He always gets the job done whenever he's called upon," junior captain Bryan Garrity said. "He does all the little things that often go unnoticed, such as moving guys over or dropping a bunt down. Even when he's struggling with the bat, he finds ways to [get on-base], whether it's by drawing a walk or getting hit by a pitch."

"Bill brings it everyday, and he works hard day in and day out," added senior captain Travis Munsey. "If things don't go his way, he doesn't mope or hang his head. He's definitely a good leader and even greater teammate."

Rankin certainly didn't need to worry about going unnoticed this weekend against George Washington. Then again, when you lay-out and make a full-extension diving catch with the bases loaded – in a tie game, no less – you don't have to worry about flying under the radar.

The catch came in the first game of the doubleheader on Saturday, with the score tied, 1-1, in the top of the sixth inning. UMass pitcher Jim Cassidy cruised through the first five innings, but ran into serious trouble in the sixth. After

See RANKIN on page 7

KEITH STEPHENSON/COLLEGIAN

Junior Jim Cassidy picked up the win in the first game of Saturday's doubleheader against George Washington. He pitched eight innings while striking out five batters and allowing four runs.

UMass offense breaks out against Hobart

BY ROB GREENFIELD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In a season that has seen the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team struggle to put the ball in the net, it was indeed refreshing for the Minutemen to put up a monster number against Hobart on Saturday.

Eleven different UMass players scored in a 17-12 victory over Hobart on the road. The Minutemen moved to an even 5-5, the first time they have hit the .500 mark since before the season started.

UMass	17
Hobart	12

The Minutemen's defense allowed a season-high 12 goals, but the offense countered with its best performance of the season to get the 'W.' Sophomore attack Jim Connolly tied a career-high with five goals in the game matching his five-goal performance at Harvard earlier this season – and joined 10 other teammates who scored in the win.

UMass moved to 3-1 in the ECAC, the perfect prequel to its matchup with conference rival Georgetown this weekend.

The Minutemen took control of this weekend's game in the third quarter. UMass had a 9-7 halftime lead but dominated in the third quarter, scoring five straight goals to push the UMass lead to 14-7 at the end of the third quarter.

Hobart shortened the lead to 14-9 but seniors Sam Moody and Fred Federico scored their first goals of the season. Moody's came at 8:15 left in the game and Federico's followed at the 6:48 mark – to give the Minutemen the lead for good.

It was a big day for Federico, who cracked the scoreboard for the first time this season after missing his first 10 shots.

See M. LACROSSE on page 7

KEVIN STEPHENSON/COLLEGIAN

UMass sophomore Jim Connolly led all scorers with five goals in Saturday's victory over Hobart. He now leads the Minutemen with 27 points on 20 goals and seven assists.

JUAN TRINIDAD/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore pitcher Brandice Balschmiter improved her record to 17-8 with two wins against Charlotte over the weekend.

Maroon and White squanders early lead

BY KEVIN DOOLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Richmond Spiders used an 8-0 run spanning both halves to defeat the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team, 10-4, handing the Minutewomen their sixth loss in seven games in front of the hardy fans braving the less than desirable weather conditions at McGuirk Stadium Sunday.

JUAN TRINIDAD/COLLEGIAN

Junior Kathleen Typadis scored the first two goals in Sunday's loss to Richmond, giving the Minutewomen a 2-0 lead in the first ten minutes.

It is the first time since UMass (5-8, 0-3 A-10) joined the A-10 in 1999 that the team lost its first three games in league play. The two-time defending A-10 Champions and pre-season conference favorite Spiders (9-5, 3-1 A-10) have now won the last five tilts with the Minutewomen dating back to the 2004 season by a combined score of 64-29.

UR	10
UMass	4

Allison Furstenburg led all scorers Sunday with four goals while junior attacker Kathleen Typadis was responsible for half of UMass' offensive production on the day with her team-leading 35th and 36th goals of the year. Mandy Friend, who leads the A-10 in goals (43), had three helpers and contributed two goals in Richmond's winning effort.

UMass has now been held to under 10 goals in three of its last four games after the team had been averaging close to 12 goals a contest in its first six games. The lackluster four-goal performance marked the first time since the 2002 season that the team has scored less than five goals.

"We might just have to change some things up offensively and start moving the ball around better," UMass coach AlexisVenechanos said. "We're going to have re-examine everything after this game and see what we need to change up."

The Maroon and White must now win its four remaining contests to have any shot of advancing to the A-10 postseason in Philadelphia for the eighth time in the last nine seasons. That arduous task begins this Friday when the Minutewomen travel to Pittsburgh, Penn., to clash with the Duquesne Dukes. Game time is slated for 4 p.m.

"I'm confident that we'll be able to take it one game at a time," Venechanos said. "It's going to be crucial that we play a complete game at Duquesne. We haven't played a full game yet this season. Even in our wins, we haven't been able to play a full game yet."

"I definitely think so," Typadis said about the team's chances of reeling off four straight wins. "These teams we're going to play are good teams, but we're a good team too. I think that we work well under pressure."

A quick glance at the box score Sunday would have one believe

See W. LACROSSE on page 8

Minutewomen pass Atlantic 10 test

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In its toughest test of the 2007 Atlantic 10 season, the Massachusetts softball team (22-12-1, 8-0 Atlantic 10) swept the Charlotte 49ers (23-20, 3-6 A-10) in North Carolina this weekend – winning 4-1 on Friday and 5-2 on Saturday.

UMass	4
Charlotte	1
UMass	5
Charlotte	2

Left fielder Lauren Proctor and second baseman Stacey Cullington continued their stellar junior campaigns, pacing the UMass offense in the victories. The Minutewomen's winning streak now stands at 11 games.

In the third inning of Friday's game, Cullington came to the plate with the Minutewomen up 1-0 and runners on first and second base. After working the count, she took the payoff pitch over the left field wall, extending the UMass lead to four.

While the Charlotte pitchers managed to keep Proctor in the ballpark, her two doubles in Game 2 did enough damage. After a walk to Cullington in the UMass half of the fourth, Proctor slapped a Christy Murray offering to left-center field. Senior Jackie Teman, who pinch ran Cullington, scored all the way from first.

Senior captain Amanda Acampora also homered in Game 2 for the Minutewomen. Acampora battled to a full count before turning on a fastball and lining it over the left field wall. In her last three games, she is 3-for-7 with two homers and three RBIs.

Sophomore ace Brandice Balschmiter pitched well for the Minutewomen and got the victory in both games.

In the weekend's first contest, she walked five hitters, but otherwise kept the 49er offense in check, yielding two hits. She has now won her last 10 starts

See SOFTBALL on page 7

WASHOUT ON THE DIAMONDS PAGE 14

THE FASHION COLUMN RETURNS PAGE 9

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

SHOWERS : HI: 46 LO: 35 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY, APRIL 18, 2007

Spill causes street closure

BY DERRICK PERKINS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Hicks Way remains closed after the University of Massachusetts Police Department and the Department of Environmental Health and Safety (EH&S) responded to a diesel spill yesterday morning.

According to Donald A. Robinson, Director of EH&S, the department's hazardous materials response team arrived on the scene alongside UMPD officers after the fuel saddle tank of a delivery truck was punctured on Hicks Way this morning at approximately 9 a.m.

The response team took immediate action to contain the 25 gallons of spilt diesel fuel and prevent it from entering the storm sewage system by laying down absorbent materials across the site, Robinson said.

According to Robinson, EH&S arranged for the Physical Plant to spread sand on the scene of the spill to assist in containing the diesel fuel. Oil absorbent booms were also placed near the outfall of the storm sewage system to prevent any of the fuel from leaking into the Mill River, the discharge site for water in the storm sewage system.

Clean Harbors Environmental Services, a Norwell-based waste management company contracted with the University for hazardous material disposal, arrived on the scene at 11:30 a.m. to begin the cleanup of the site, Robinson said.

UMPD Sergeant Mark Jacques, one of the officers present at the scene, said the cleanup would not be complete until after 3 p.m. yesterday.

The truck had been transporting animals to UMass Animal Care Services, according to Robinson. All of the animals had been safely offloaded and the truck had been towed from the scene, Robinson said.

Derrick Perkins can be reached at dperkins@student.umass.edu.

What I did on Spring Break

KATHARINA MCCARTY/COLLEGIAN

Thirty-eight UMass and Five College students joined with the Latin American Studies department in traveling to Buenos Aires, Argentina this past March.

Students visit Buenos Aires

BY KATHARINA MCCARTY
SPECIAL TO THE COLLEGIAN

This past March, a group of 38 individuals including University of Massachusetts and Five College students, Teaching Assistants (TA) and one determined director of the Latin American Studies department, embarked on an alternative spring break journey to delve into the thriving social matrix that constitutes the city of Buenos Aires, Argentina. As our motley crew unloaded into JFK airport, the sleet rain hammered down unrelentingly.

With the cancellation of approximately 1,400 flights, the excitement and anticipation we carried to reach Argentina began to dwindle beneath a web of lost hope. After squatting at the airport for an exhausting 17 hours, our program director Gloria Bernabe-Ramos chose to take matters into her own hands, invigorating some of the true basic tactics of protesting that have fueled social movements in Argentina for decades. Backed by a group of unwavering students, Bernabe-Ramos sat herself down in front of the airline desk and refused to move until her students received justice and the opportunity to continue on to their final destination of Buenos Aires. She was subjected to harsh hostility and even threatened to be arrested, although in the end, her persistence and unrelenting tactics landed all 38 of us in Buenos Aries the following morning. In a day in age where protesting has been labeled as a useless tactic and social movements have been discouraged and repressed, this rudimentary form of confrontation and resistance has been kept alive in Argentina, used to implement change and keep the spirit and integrity of Argentines alive.

Once we finally reached the vibrant city of Buenos Aires we were embraced with the opportunity to not only read about these prominent social movements, but to live them in their purest form, bringing them to life through experience.

The people of Argentina have experienced a superfluity of devastation including several military dictatorships as well as a catastrophic economic crash in 2001. In opposition to these adversities, the people of Argentina have carried the heart and sole of the country by standing up for their basic human rights to live, work and think freely. Following the military dictatorship in 1976, individuals who defied the government were kidnapped and murdered. An estimated 30,000 Argentines disappeared during this time period, many being pregnant women. The babies of these women were sold or given to wealthy supporters of the military regime while their biological parents were killed. The grandmothers of these children march at Plaza de Mayo every single Thursday and have for the past 30 years, in pursuance of the discovery of there lost grandchildren and seeking justice for their murdered sons and daughters. During our visit to Argentina we not only studied this movement, we marched alongside of the grandmothers of Plaza de Mayo, spoke with them face-to-face and participated in making history.

Following the economic crash in 2001, the majority of factories in Argentina abruptly shut down, leaving thousands of people unemployed and unable to provide basic necessities for survival for themselves and their families. In oppositions to this devastation, the Argentine people began occupying the factories and attempting to reestablish production in the pursuit of reclaiming their constitutional right to work. This movement generated the recovery of many factories granting thousands of Argentines a place to work and earn a living.

Our group was able to visit three of these recovered factories and speak one-on-one with the leaders of this movement. Reading about the recovered factory movement was interesting in itself, but to stand in the midst of these factories and embrace the historical, social and political strive that was undertaken to reclaim what was so forcefully ripped from society was a feeling indescribable

See ARGENTINA on page 5

New Orleans welcomes UM students

BY NEFA ALON
SPECIAL TO THE COLLEGIAN

Broken homes, families torn apart, over a thousand deaths, a community in shambles, a city under water, those were the effects of hurricane Katrina. It was one of the deadliest hurricanes in the United States, brought to the city of New Orleans on Aug. 29, 2005.

Hurricane Katrina was immediately defined as one of the most catastrophic storms to ever hit the Gulf Coast of United States.

Seventy percent of New Orleans resides below sea level. A hurricane such as Katrina should have been expected. To protect itself, New Orleans built levees to block water against 20 feet of water. However, to withstand a level four or five storm, the levees should have been around 40-feet deep.

This past spring break, while the typical student was either relaxing at home or had escaped to a sunny paradise, the students of the University of Massachusetts Hillel organization, myself included, took the initiative and decided to go on Alternative Spring Break (ASB), along with the National Relief Network (NRN) and Operation Blessing to help rebuild New Orleans.

Honestly, at first, my motives to go to New Orleans for spring break were to help rebuild people's houses, it was a free trip and a nice escape from my everyday life here at UMass. I had no clue of how devastating the situation was, how the hurricane impacted the New Orleans residents' lives, or any specifics about the political and economical situation in New Orleans.

The area's most harshly impacted by the storms were the ninth ward, Bernard Parish and Lakeview, most of which were populated by impoverished African Americans. The part of New Orleans known for its Mardi Gras parties, the French Quarter, suffered relatively light damage. After hurricane Katrina hit it was reported that about 80 percent of the city was underwater.

In the ninth ward, people were awaiting rescue on their rooftops, while in Bernard Parish 40,000 homes were flooded. Hurricane Katrina was responsible for the death of about 1,836 individuals, most of which were part of the Numerous students of the UMass Hillel organization traveled to New Orleans to help rebuild the hurricane-ravaged land.

See KATRINA on page 5

Jazz it up

UMass Jazz Lab Ensemble, directed by John Leonard, performs a free concert in Bezanson last night.

Details of Virginia Tech campus rampage

Students participate in a candle light vigil at Virginia Tech yesterday in Blacksburg, Va. The vigil came one day after a shooter killed 32 students and faculty. The gunman later turned the gun on himself.

BY ALLEN G. BREED
ASSOCIATED PRESS

Janitor Gene Cole was cleaning bathrooms on the first floor of Virginia Tech's Norris Hall when a colleague told him there had been a shooting on campus.

We have to evacuate, the colleague said.

Cole headed for the second floor to look for a co-worker. As he walked down the hall, he saw a shape on the floor – a student, covered in blood, his body jerking.

Then, from a door about 20 feet away, the black-clad gunman burst out. Gripping the gun in both hands, the man assumed a police stance and began firing.

"He's going to kill me! He's going to kill me!" the 52-year-old Cole screamed as he spun and sprinted down the hall, a hail-dozen bullets whizzing by his head.

He took the stairs two and three at a time, ran through an auditorium and into a neighboring building.

For Cole and others in Norris Hall on this picturesque southwest Virginia campus, the nightmare began around 9:45 a.m. Monday. Only later would the full chronology of the two-tier burst of terror became clear: a day of horror that actually began more than two hours earlier with two students shot dead in a dormitory, and ended across campus with an even greater bloodbath.

In the end, 33 people would be dead in what has become the nation's deadliest shooting spree.

Just before 7:45 a.m. Monday, Josh Bull shut the door to his fourth-floor West Ambler Johnston dorm room and headed toward the elevator. When the freshman got to the double wooden doors between the men's and woman's wings, he met a paramedic.

"You shouldn't go that way," the man said. "Just use the other stairs."

Outside, the 19-year-old from Vail, Colo., saw a stretcher being loaded onto an ambulance. He assumed there had been a fight, and kept walking. He had just a few minutes to make it a half-mile across the Drillfield to his German class in Norris Hall.

Bull had no idea that a fellow student had just unleashed hell – and that he was headed into the maw.

He wasn't alone in not knowing.

It wasn't until 9:26 a.m. that the university sent out the first e-mail to students and faculty. The subject line

See SHOOTINGS on page 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 119

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Eric Athas
MANAGING EDITOR Rob Greenfield
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sherri Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jaimeson Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COMICS EDITOR Adam Szagin
EDITORIAL EDITOR Tucker Merrick
NEWS EDITOR Matt Belliveau
SPORTS EDITOR Danny Picard
SPORTS EDITOR Jon Pelland
FEATURES EDITOR Melissa D'Amico
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Pentz
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER David Valade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Puddester
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Sydney Towne
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Doliantis
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonjakuakul
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Brendan Hall
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeremy Rice
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Tom Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCENE IN 1907, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL 545-3500 BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Eric Athas

COPY EDITOR
Callie Williams

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Tiffany Van Langen

Reid warns against rush on gun control

AP

Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid cautioned Tuesday against a "rush to judgment" on stricter gun control. In the wake of the Virginia Tech shootings, a few Democrats renewed the call for gun control legislation, and more are expected to join them.

BY DAVID ESPO
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — After the worst mass shooting in United States history, Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid cautioned Tuesday against a "rush to judgment" on stricter gun control. A leading House supporter of restrictions on firearms conceded passage of legislation would be difficult.

"I think we ought to be thinking about the families and the victims and not speculate about future legislative battles that might lie ahead," said Reid, a view expressed by other Democratic leaders the day after the shootings that left 33 dead on the campus of Virginia Tech.

Democrats traditionally have been in the forefront of efforts to pass gun control legislation, but there is a widespread perception among political strategists that the issue has been a loser in recent campaigns. It was notably absent from the agenda Reid and House Speaker Nancy Pelosi unveiled earlier this year when the party took control of the House and Senate for the first time in more than a decade.

In the wake of the Virginia Tech shootings, a few Democrats renewed the call for gun control legislation, and more are expected to join them.

"I believe this will reignite the dormant effort to pass commonsense gun regulations in this nation," said Sen. Dianne Feinstein, a California Democrat who was a leader in the failed drive to renew a ban on certain types of assault weapons that expired in 2004.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.), was one of very few lawmakers to refer on gun control in the early hours after the shootings. "There will be time to debate the steps needed to avert such tragedies," he said on Monday, "but today, our thoughts and prayers go to their families."

By coincidence, Kennedy and Rep. Xavier Becerra (D-Calif.), are scheduled to attend a demonstration Friday at a firing range used by U.S. Capitol Police to draw attention to microstamping, a procedure by which serial numbers are placed on ammunition casings. The goal is to allow police and other investigators to quickly track ammunition to the gun that fired it.

The two lawmakers support legislation to require microstamping for all guns manufactured after 2009, and aides to both said they planned to go ahead with the demonstration.

Overall, though, said Rep. Carolyn McCarthy (D-N.Y.), "It is a tough sell" to pass gun control legislation. Speaker Nancy Pelosi, (D-Calif.), held a brief meeting on the subject to discuss possible legislation, but there was no apparent eagerness by Reid, House Majority Leader Steny Hoyer (D-Md.), or her to predict Democrats would lead a drive to toughen existing laws.

One senior Democrat, Rep. Charles Rangel of New York, said gun rights advocates are simply too influential to allow a tightening of gun control laws. "It's a regional thing, it's a cultural thing," Rangel said, arguing that even in areas where 85 percent of the people support more restrictions, the 15 percent minority is far more active and outspoken.

Less than a month ago, Pelosi and other Democratic leaders abruptly pulled legislation to give the District of Columbia voting representation in the House. Republicans were using the issue to try to force a vote on repeal of the capital's handgun ban, and Democrats feared it would pass.

Hoyer told reporters he thought and hoped the shootings at Virginia Tech would make it harder for Republicans to prevail when the voting rights bill returns to the House floor later this week.

He refused to be drawn into a discussion of the longer-term political consequences of the shooting, saying, "All I am saying is there will be a debate. I am not going to enter into the debate today."

Not all lawmakers were as reticent.

Sen. Larry Craig (R-Idaho), one of Congress' most persistent advocates of gun rights, noted that the student who police say was the shooter at Virginia Tech had brought a weapon onto campus in violation of restrictions. He said he doubted a law could be passed that would protect "any of us when somebody who is mentally deranged decides to do this."

One law enforcement official has said that the gunman's backpack contained a receipt for a March purchase of a Glock 9 mm pistol. The gunman held a green card, meaning he was a legal, permanent resident, federal officials said. That meant he was eligible to buy a handgun unless he had been convicted of a felony.

Democrats have grown less supportive of gun control legislation as a party in the past decade. After the shootings at Columbine High School in Colorado, then-Vice President Al Gore cast a tie-breaking vote in the Senate on legislation to reduce the availability of certain firearms. He and other gun control advocates claimed victory, but many strategists believe the vote hurt him in the 2000 presidential election.

Chimps evolving faster than humans

BY JEANNA BRYNER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Since the human-chimp split about 6 million years ago, chimpanzee genes can be said to have evolved more than human genes, a new study suggests.

The results, detailed online this week in the Proceedings of the large brains, cognitive abilities and bipedalism.

Jianzhi Zhang of the University of Michigan and his colleagues analyzed strings of DNA from nearly 14,000 protein-coding genes shared by chimps and humans. They looked for differences gene by gene and whether they caused changes in the generated proteins.

Genes act as instructions that organisms use to make proteins and thus are integral to carrying out biological functions, such as transporting oxygen to the body's cells. Different versions of the same gene are called alleles.

Changes in DNA that affect the making of proteins are considered functional changes, while "silent" changes do not affect the proteins. "If we see an excess of functional changes (compared to silent changes) the inference is these functional changes occurred because they were positively selected, because they were useful in some way to the organism," said study team member Margaret Bakewell, also of UM.

Bakewell, Zhang and a colleague found that substantially more genes in chimps evolved in ways that were beneficial than was the case with human genes.

The results could be due to the fact that over the long term humans have had a smaller effective population size compared with chimps.

"Although there are now many more humans than chimps, in the past, human populations were much smaller, and may have been fragmented into even smaller groups," Bakewell told LiveScience. So random events would play a more dominant role than natural selection in humans.

Over 250,000 still lack power in Eastern U.S., Canada

NEW YORK (AP) — More than 250,000 homes and businesses remained without power on Tuesday after a rare spring Nor'easter hit on Sunday and Monday, knocking out electric service to more than 1.3 million customers from the Carolinas to Maine and Quebec.

Duke Energy Corp. said about 93,000 customers still had no power in the Carolinas on Tuesday afternoon following the severe windstorm on Monday, down from more than 217,000 customers affected.

Duke said it could take until the end of the week to restore service to some customers in the hardest hit areas.

Energy East Corp.'s Central Maine Power Co. said crews continued to restore service to the remaining 104,000 customers without power following a strong coastal storm that blanketed that region with snow, ice and rain, the utility said in a release Tuesday afternoon.

At the peak, Central Maine said, about 127,000 customers had no service.

Like Duke, Central Maine said it could take several days to restore power to customers in the hardest-hit areas.

In Quebec, Hydro-Quebec said it restored service to more than half of the estimated 160,000 customers affected by the storm, leaving about 42,000 homes and businesses still without service Tuesday morning.

A spokeswoman for the province-owned power company said the utility expected to restore most customers over the next day or so but would likely take a few more days to restore those in the hardest-hit areas.

In addition to these three hardest-hit utilities, several other power companies reported thousands of scattered outages.

Duke, of Charlotte, N.C., owns and operates more than 43,000 megawatts of generating capacity in North America, markets energy commodities, and transmits and distributes electricity and natural gas to more than 3.5 million customers in North Carolina, South Carolina, Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky.

Energy East, of Portland, Maine, transmits and distributes energy to about 3 million customers in upstate New York and New England.

Hydro-Quebec, of Montreal, owns and operates about 35,000 MW of generating capacity, markets energy commodities and transmits and distributes electricity to more than 3.8 million customers in Quebec.

One MW powers about 800 homes, according to the North American average.

Associated Press

U.N.: AIDS ravages poor children

BY LAURA MACINNIS
ASSOCIATED PRESS

GENEVA — Hundreds of thousands of children are dying of AIDS in developing countries because they do not have access to treatment readily available elsewhere, U.N. health agencies said on Tuesday.

Only 11 percent of HIV-positive pregnant women in low- and middle-income countries are given drugs to prevent passing the immunity-destroying disease to their children during childbirth and many infants born with HIV are undiagnosed and therefore untreated, the report found.

It said that 380,000 children died of AIDS-related causes last year, mainly infections that could have been prevented.

"Children continue to be the missing face of the AIDS pandemic," Ann Veneman, the head of UNICEF, said in a statement.

The agencies' report, which outlined advances in access to HIV treatment, said the number of people getting HIV therapy in poorer countries rose 54 percent last year to 2 million, though another 5 million still lack access to the life-saving drugs.

MCT

The Rev. Doris Green, left, of the AIDS Foundation of Chicago, testifies at a Illinois House Committee hearing as Rep. Monique Davis listens yesterday.

Just 15 percent of the 780,000 children in need of HIV treatment had access it by the end of 2006, and only 4 percent were given the antibiotic co-trimoxazole, which the WHO recommends for children with HIV and those born to HIV-infected mothers when early diagnosis is impossible.

"A greater effort should be made to follow up HIV-exposed children and to determine the HIV status of all children born to mothers living with HIV/AIDS so that appropriate care and support can be provided," the report said.

Global warming may put U.S. in hot water

BY SETH BORENSTEIN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — As the world warms, water — either too little or too much of it — is going to be the major problem for the United States, scientists and military experts said Monday. It will be a domestic problem, with states clashing over controls of rivers, and a national security problem as water shortages and floods worsen conflicts and terrorism elsewhere in the world, they said.

At home, especially in the Southwest, regions will need to find new sources of drinking water, the Great Lakes will shrink, fish and other species will be left high and dry, and coastal areas will on occasion be inundated because of sea-level rises and souped-up storms, U.S. scientists said.

The scientists released a 67-page chapter on North American climate effects, which is part of an international report on climate change impact.

Meanwhile, global-warming water problems will make poor, unstable parts of the world — the Middle East, Africa and South Asia — even more prone to wars, terrorism and the need for international intervention, a panel of retired military leaders said in a separate report.

"Water at large is the central (global warming) problem for the U.S.," Princeton University geosciences professor Michael Oppenheimer said after a press conference featuring eight American scientists who were lead authors of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change's climate-effects report.

Roger Pulwarty, one of the federal government's top drought scientists, said states such as Arizona and Colorado, which already fight over the Colorado River basin water, will step up legal skirmishes. They may look to the Great Lakes, but water availability there will shrink, he said.

Reduced snow melt supplying water for the Sacramento Valley in California means that by 2020 there won't be enough water "to meet the needs of the community," Pulwarty said. That will step-up the competition for water, he said.

On the East Coast, rising sea levels will make storm surge "the No. 1 vulnerability for the metropolitan East Coast," said study lead author Cynthia Rosenzweig of NASA. "It's a very real threat and needs to be considered for all coastal development."

Rising sea level can harm Florida's biodiversity and be dangerous during hurricanes, the scientists added.

A few hours later, retired Gen. Charles F. "Chuck" Wald focused on the same global warming problem.

"One of the biggest likely areas of conflict is going to be over water," said Wald, former deputy commander of U.S. European Command. He pointed to the Middle East and Africa.

The military report's co-author, former Army Chief of Staff Gen. Gordon R. Sullivan, also pointed to sea-level rise floods as potentially destabilizing South Asia countries of Pakistan, India, Bangladesh, Indonesia and Vietnam.

Lack of water and food in places already the most volatile will make those regions even more unstable with global warming and "foster the conditions for internal conflicts, extremism and movement toward increased authoritarianism and radical ideologies," states the 63-page military report, issued by the CNA Corp., an Alexandria, Va.-based national security think tank.

Kristi Ebi, a Virginia epidemiologist on the scientific panel, said reduced water supplies globally will hinder human health. "We're seeing mass migration of people because of things like water resource constraint, and that's certainly a factor in conflict," she added.

Peter Glieck, president of the Pacific Institute, an Oakland, Calif., think tank, said the national security and domestic infighting over water comes as little surprise.

"Water is connected to everything we care about — energy, human health, food production and politics," said Glieck, who was not part of either panel. "And that fact alone means we better pay more attention to the security connections. Climate will effect all of those things. Water resources are especially vulnerable to climate change."

As water fights erupt between nations and regions and especially between cities and agricultural areas, Stanford scientist Terry Root said there will be one sure loser low on the priority list for water — other species.

"The fish will lose out and the birds and everything," she said.

Pollution will also worsen with global warming, the scientists said.

As places like the Great Lakes draw down on water, the pollution inside will get more concentrated and trapped toxins will come more to the surface, said Stanford scientist Stephen Schneider.

And even the air, especially in the Northeast, will become more deadly. More heat means more smog cooked and about a 4 to 5 percent increase in smog-related deaths, Ebi said. That's thousands of people, she said.

The scientists and military leaders held out hope that dramatic cuts in fossil fuel emissions could prevent much of the harm they are predicting. But they said the U.S. government — and the rest of the world — has to act now.

'Sleepy' crew delays flight

NEW DELHI (AP) — Passengers on a British Airways flight from New Delhi to London faced a 13-hour delay as the pilot felt he was too sleepy after a noisy night in a New Delhi hotel, newspapers reported on Monday.

Angry passengers were offloaded from the plane early Sunday morning after the pilot refused to fly until he caught up with his sleep.

"The crew hadn't had enough rest...the entire crew had a disturbed night," Radhika Raikhy, spokeswoman for BA, was quoted in the Hindustan Times as saying, adding the airline's safety rules do not allow its crew to operate in such conditions.

The Times of India said the flight and cabin crew complained of not getting enough rest as their hotel was too noisy.

The flight, BA 142, finally took off 13 hours later to the fury of passengers who were sent to city hotels to wait out the delay as the crew rested, newspapers reported.

Please join us for the 9th annual

Freedom Seder

Based on the Jewish Passover ritual, the Freedom Seder uses stories, poetry, songs and traditional African American and Jewish foods to express our yearning for multicultural unity and universal liberation.

Wednesday, April 18, 2007 at 6:00PM
Campus Center 1009 (Amherst Room)
UMass Amherst

FREE with dinner included
(Kosher meals available upon request)

For more information call 413.545.9642 or www.umass.edu/jewish

UMASS AMHERST
Sponsored by the Office of Jewish Affairs, Black Student Union, Muslim Students Association, Center for Student Development, Student Affairs and Campus Life, and Campus Center Catering

MONEY FOR COLLEGE
NOW
Because Aunt Joan needed more Botox®*.
She got a facelift, you got the tuition bill.
Not to worry. a Campus Door student loan can cover up to 100% of your education costs with online approval in less than a minute.
All without the painful side effects.
campusdoor.com
CAMPUSDOOR
GREAT FUTURES START HERE®

Taste of UMass
2007
THURSDAY APRIL 19, from 5:00 to 8:00 PM
The nation's largest campus food service event
Food
75 food and beverage booths from around the world with healthy options
Fun
Cooking and Demonstration with Celebrity Chef Jet Tila
Autographs
New England Patriot Cheerleaders
Appearances
Minuteman Mascot
Entertainment
Magic Show and Battle of the Bands
Knowledge
Sustainability and Buying Local Competitions
Official sanctioned Nathan's Famous Hot Dog Eating Contest, UMass Idol – Singing Contest
Prizes
Many great door prizes!
Free
For students on the Meal Plan or $11 cash
AT THE MULLINS CENTER
DINING SERVICES
UMass Amherst
All DCs will be closed at 3:00 pm and special buses to Mullins will leave at 4:00.
Doors Open at 4:30
umass.edu/diningservices

Bush administration bars lenders from student database

By Nancy Zuckerbrod
Associated Press

WASHINGTON—The Bush administration has put a federal database containing sensitive financial information about college students off limits to lenders — at least for now.

Typically, lenders and guarantee agencies have access to the database to help determine the eligibility of an applicant for federal student aid.

Education Secretary Margaret Spellings stated in a letter Tuesday to Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., that the department had noticed an uptick in the usage of the database by lenders, loan holders and guarantee agencies.

Such activity could indicate the system is being mined for potential marketing data, something that isn't allowed.

Spellings said during the temporary suspension, the department would conduct a review of who is using the database and why. Since 2003, she said, the department has invested more than $650,000 in system security and monitoring tools and processes to ensure the integrity of student information.

Kennedy, who chairs the Senate education committee, had sought the suspension following a story in The Washington Post over the weekend about the potential misuse of the database.

"I appreciate the secretary's willingness to take action to protect personal student information," he said. "I look forward to working with her to ensure that students receive their loans without sacrificing their privacy."

Education Department spokeswoman Katherine McLane said the agency had been considering the suspension of the database for some time.

The department's inspector general issued a report in 2005 raising concerns about access to the database.

Concerns about possible abuses of the database come as the student loan industry is under investigation by congressional Democrats and New York Attorney General Andrew Cuomo.

U.Texas financial aid officer resigns

By Kevin Drawbaugh
Associated Press

Another student financial aid officer from a major university has resigned from a federal advisory panel amid a widening scandal involving student loans, the U.S. Department of Education said on Tuesday.

At the request of Secretary of Education Margaret Spellings, University of Texas at Austin financial aid director Lawrence Burt has quit a departmental advisory panel on student financial assistance, said a department spokeswoman.

On Monday, the department said Ellen Frishberg, a senior financial aid officer at Johns Hopkins University, had resigned from a separate panel under similar circumstances.

Both financial aid officers have been swept up in a controversy focused on relationships between university officials and financial companies that lend money to students to cover the substantial and fast-rising costs of college.

The scandal comes at a tough time for the $85-billion student loan industry. It is already under pressure in Congress from lawmakers such as Massachusetts Democratic Sen. Edward Kennedy, who want to change how the nation's complex student aid system works, directly threatening the business models of lenders such as Sallie Mae and JPMorgan Chase.

Sallie Mae, formally known as SLM Corp., announced on Monday it had agreed to be bought out for $25 billion by two private equity groups and two of its rivals — JPMorgan and Bank of America.

Virginia-based Sallie Mae, the nation's largest student lender, has been a key target in the recent investigations.

Threats rattle schools in seven states

AUSTIN, Texas—Campus threats forced lock-downs and evacuations at universities in Texas, Oklahoma and Tennessee and two public schools in Louisiana on Tuesday, a day after a Virginia Tech student's shooting rampage killed 33 people.

In Louisiana, parents picked up hundreds of students from Bogalusa's high school and middle school amid reports that a man had been arrested Tuesday morning for threatening a mass killing in a note that alluded to the murders at Virginia Tech.

Schools Superintendent Jerry Payne said both schools were locked down and police arrested a 53-year-old man who allegedly made the threat in a note he gave to a student headed to the private Bowling Green School in Franklinton. Both towns are in southeastern Louisiana.

"The note referred to what happened at Virginia Tech," Payne said. "It said something like, 'If you think that was bad, then you haven't seen anything yet."

In Austin, authorities evacuated buildings at St. Edward's University after a threatening note was found, a school official said.

Police secured the campus perimeter and were searching the buildings, St. Edward's University spokeswoman Mischelle Amador said. She declined to say where the note was found and said its contents were "nonspecific."

The two other scares were determined to be unfounded.

At the University of Tennessee at Chattanooga, officials ordered three campus administration buildings evacuated for almost two hours Tuesday morning in response to a telephone bomb threat. The city's bomb squad searched the buildings but found nothing, campus spokesman Chuck Cantrell said.

Cantrell said there was no reason to believe the bogus threat was related to the shootings at Virginia Tech, but "we just chose to err on the side of caution today."

The other, at the University of Oklahoma, had started with a report of a man spotted on campus carrying a suspicious object, officials said.

The man was carrying an umbrella, not a weapon, and he later identified himself to authorities, University of Oklahoma President David Boren said in a statement. Boren initially had said the person was believed to carrying a yoga mat.

"We now consider the matter closed," Boren said. "We always want to err on the side of caution in a situation like this."

At St. Edward's in Austin, students who live on campus were being allowed to return to their dormitories as police finished searching each building, Amador said. Faculty, staff and all other students were asked to stay away from the campus, and morning and afternoon classes were canceled. About 5,200 students are enrolled at the Catholic university south of downtown Austin.

Amador said the university's reaction was not influenced by Monday's attack at Virginia Tech.

"No matter what day or when this would have happened, we will always take the necessary precautions to protect our students, our faculty, our staff, the entire university community," she said.

Associated Press

Virginia Tech students Lindsay, left, and Katrina sign a makeshift memorial on their way to the campus chapel yesterday, following Monday's shooting rampage that left more than 30 people dead.

Google™

Use email?
Google wants your opinion.

Schoolwork, activities, parties - if you're like most students, you've got a lot on your plate. With Google, your school can give you Gmail and other tools to help you make the most of your time - for free. Already, schools like Arizona State University and Northwestern University are working with Google. Maybe your school should be next.

Take the Google student survey. Does your school's email system give you the tools you need to manage your life effectively? Are there ways Google could help make it better?

Visit http://google.com/studentsurvey and tell us about it.

New Orleans welcomes UM students

KATRINA from page 1

older generation of New Orleans of 40-plus years. This was the generation responsible of heading political offices, the school board of education, small business owners and many people that were considered of high-esteem in the city.

You may ask: what is the consequence of the many early deaths of a community's great thinkers? A community in shambles, no public institutions such as federal aid programs, schools, youth community centers, soup kitchens or religious centers. Our job as a group of students representing UMass was to rebuild public institutions, private homes and most importantly the communities' faith that everything was going to turn out for the best. We arrived at the Operation Blessing campsite on March 18, at about 3 p.m. The camp staff took our pictures to be used for our ID cards, which identified us as NRN volunteers. All the UMass Hillel Students, myself included, went into the tent to listen to a lecture about what were the tasks we were going to be doing throughout the following week, and general information about the city of New Orleans and the effects of Hurricane Katrina.

Upon our arrival we were split into different work groups with different schools. One work group went to a youth center to paint fences, clean up a park and talk to the community.

There was another group called "Rat Control" whose job was to clean out rotting food left in people's houses and make sure there were no rats or animals which could contract diseases in the living communities.

Many workgroups were sent to the upper and lower ninth ward, where the hurricane had the most devastating effects. Half the workgroups build new houses, while the other half gutted houses down to the foundation to evaluate the house and see if it's worth rebuilding.

My work group was sent to the upper ninth ward. Our job was to gut a house for a very nice lady who didn't have the resources or the time to fix up her house, cook for her family and maintain a job all at the same time. The first day we came to gut the house, we talked to the family and found out that before Hurricane Katrina it had been a thriving neighborhood where many upper-middle class families lived. After the Katrina most of their neighbors moved out, and have yet to return.

On the second day at the campsite during lunch break the house owner was so sweet she made us a cookout for lunch. We had hamburgers and hotdogs in her backyard and talked with her about sports and her interests. On our last day at that specific worksite the house owner cooked us a six-cheese lasagna, which cost about $70 to make.

She wouldn't accept any money from us, cooking was her way of giving something back to us for kindly volunteering to work on her house; it was her way of showing "southern hospitality."

She was so happy, not just that her house was being attended to, but to know that people cared about her situation, that we would come down all the way from Massachusetts to help out in the efforts to rebuild New Orleans. Come to think of it, none of the residents showed the least bit of sadness. All of them were very excited and happy to see volunteers, and to know that we hadn't forgotten them, even though it is now over a year and a half after the hurricane happened.

Upon our leaving, one of the girls in our group said she wished it were Mardi Gras in New Orleans. When the house owner heard the word "Mardi Gras" a big smile came across her face and she ran to the backyard to bring us something. It was a huge bag of Mardi Gras beads of different colors, shapes and designs: gold, dice, Christmas themed, any kind of bead you could imagine, she had it. All of us girls were so happy, we put on as many beads as humanly possible and started taking pictures and posing with the family.

After the great meal we enjoyed with the family and the excitement of the Mardi Gras beads, there was yet another surprise to come. A couple of the neighbors came down and asked the boy in our group if he wanted to join them for a game of basketball. The boys played basketball as if they were close neighbors that had known one another their whole lives. All the girls stood on the grass and took pictures while admiring the boys playing basketball. To me, it was mind-blowing that in such few days we created such a tremendous bond with the house-owner and her family and friends.

One of the days we were at the work site the house-owner's daughter came by. She told us how grateful she was that we were working on her mother's house and that if we ever came back down to New Orleans their home was open to us. I was happy and felt lucky to have the opportunity to go down to New Orleans for a week and to help rebuild the community's faith. At first I thought I was doing a good deed or a "mitzvah" for the people of New Orleans, but I came to find out that they had done that for me instead. They instilled a sense of friendship, hospitality and unity in me, that I hadn't felt before. I now know that I went down to New Orleans because we are all human beings, neighbors and friends, and we need to help one another selflessly.

Consider another fact before Katrina about 30 percent of the population of New Orleans lived below the poverty line and the majority of that 30 percent were African Americans. One out of three families in New Orleans couldn't afford a car and most couldn't afford house insurance. Most are unable to send their children to private schools, to pay for health insurance or indulge in many of the other pleasures we all enjoy.

After Katrina, some families who did not have house insurance received a Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) trailer. These trailers are 30-feet long (the equivalent of barely two rooms) which is not nearly big enough for four or more people to live in.

Currently most families in New Orleans are left stranded with no means of transportation, no home, a practically non-existent public school system and very little support to handle the emotional difficulty from the loss of loved ones.

You may ask yourself: "Why am I listening to this? Hurricane Katrina happened over a year and half ago." This is true, but the passage of time has not eased the multitude of problems New Orleans is faced with. If anything, it has made them more apparent. The good news is that there is a way you and all UMass students can help in the Hurricane Katrina relief efforts.

UMass students participated in everything from gutting houses, removing rusty nails, cleaning up parks, aiding in the construction of new houses and most importantly: building a heart to heart relationship and a sincere compassion for the families and homeowners whose lives were so horribly interrupted by Hurricane Katrina. Although students worked rigorously from 6:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. every day, they still had the energy and the devotion to listen to New Orleans residents' stories, and to help homeowners heal and lessen the pain and suffering that ensued after the catastrophe.

There are many opportunities for UMass students in New Orleans. One example: a couple of grad students from UMass got together and started the "Trumpet" in New Orleans. A newspaper published by and for the public of New Orleans to let each other know of updates after the hurricane and resources for the community.

Right now New Orleans has an opportunity for a fresh start. To rebuild all its private and public institutions and start from scratch. It's a city waiting for entrepreneurs to come. There are many jobs for teachers, nurses, politicians and everyone who is willing to call New Orleans their home. Heck, even the McDonalds in New Orleans pays $8.50 an hour, a dollar more than minimum wage here. If you are thinking of going and finding a place where your skills are highly sought, then New Orleans is your city.

Of course you can spend your vacation relaxing at home on an island paradise, or work to save up money. But why not do something better for humanity? By giving only one week of your time to an alternative break program you could help people regain hope, a sense of pride and, most importantly, their basic right to have a roof over their head. Every U Mass student who has the opportunity should go to New Orleans; it's an opportunity that will leave you with a lifetime of amazing memories guaranteed.

Details of Virginia Tech campus rampage

SHOOTINGS from page 1

read, "Shooting on campus."

"The university community is urged to be cautious and are asked to contact Virginia Tech Police if you observe anything suspicious or with information on the case," the message read.

About 20 minutes later, junior Alec Calhoun was in professor Liviu Libresco's solid mechanics class on the second floor of Norris when shots rang out from the German class next door.

It sounded like the pounding of an enormous hammer, so Calhoun thought it was just construction. Then he heard the screams, and realized the sounds were gunfire.

As the shooter — armed with two semiautomatic pistols, a 22-caliber and a 9 mm — moved to the room across the hall, several classmates dashed to the windows, kicked them open and pulled out the screens. Then they jumped from the second-story ledge to the cold ground below — breaking legs and ankles in the process.

Calhoun decided to abandon his makeshift fort and jump.

As he reached the ledge, the two people immediately behind him were shot. Calhoun landed in a bush, then ran to safety.

The diminutive Libresco — who had survived the Nazi Holocaust — stayed behind in an apparent attempt to bar the door. He was killed.

Freshman Hilary Strollo was in her intermediate French class when the gunman entered the classroom. He moved methodically through the room, firing several bullets into each victim — emptying five or six clips in all.

Strollo was shot in the abdomen, head and buttocks. One bullet passed through her liver and exited out her side. She was hospitalized Tuesday near Blacksburg.

Virginia Tech Police received the first 911 call from Norris at 9:45 a.m. When they arrived, they found the front doors chained shut from the inside.

Outside Norris, there was also pandemonium.

The wind was blowing hard and cold for a mid-April morning, and it was spitting snow.

Senior Ben Anderson of Burke, Va., was on the Drillfield with two fraternity brothers collecting donations for a local fire department when the shooting started. Police cars careened in from both directions, and officers jumped out with guns drawn, running for Norris Hall.

Freshman Andrew Huang was on his way to class when he heard shots and saw police. Unsure what to do, he followed a gang of fellow students into the center of the Drillfield, assuming that was as safe a spot as any.

At 9:50 a.m., a second e-mail went out warning students and staff to "stay put."

"A gunman is loose on campus," it read. "Stay in buildings until further notice. Stay away from all windows."

In the third-floor provost's office in neighboring Burruss Hall, administrative assistant Nadine Hughes fielded calls from concerned colleagues at colleges around the country.

Helpless to assist the wounded and dying next door, Hughes did the only thing she could think of: She pulled a miniature tract from her purse and began to pray.

But even then, much of the campus was oblivious to the carnage playing out just buildings away. When class ended at 10:10 a.m., students and faculty filed out to find the building locked down. They gathered in a conference room and watched the events unfolding on television.

When an announcer said the death toll had surpassed 20, the group let out a collective gasp. Hesas called her mother to tell her she was OK, then wept silently with the others.

A third e-mail, time stamped at 10:16 a.m., announced that classes were canceled.

Not until 10:52 a.m. was the fourth e-mail issued, this one informing students of the shootings at Norris.

"Police have one shooter in custody and as part of routine police procedure, they continue to search for a second shooter," it said.

Finally, around mid-afternoon, authorities announced that the gunman — later identified as Cho Seung-Hui, a senior with a history of bizarre, anti-social behavior — had apparently acted alone, and that he had taken his own life.

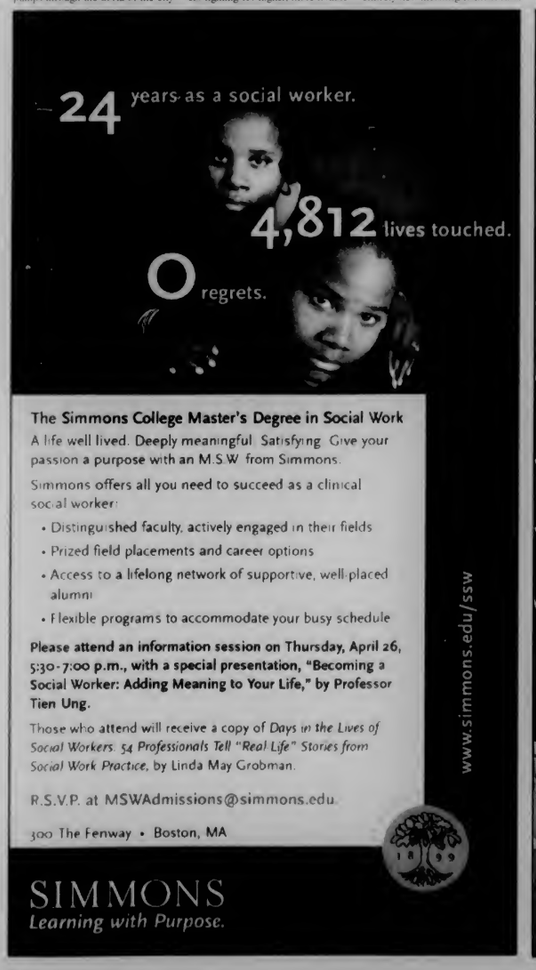
Five College students visit Buenos Aires

ARGENTINA from page 1

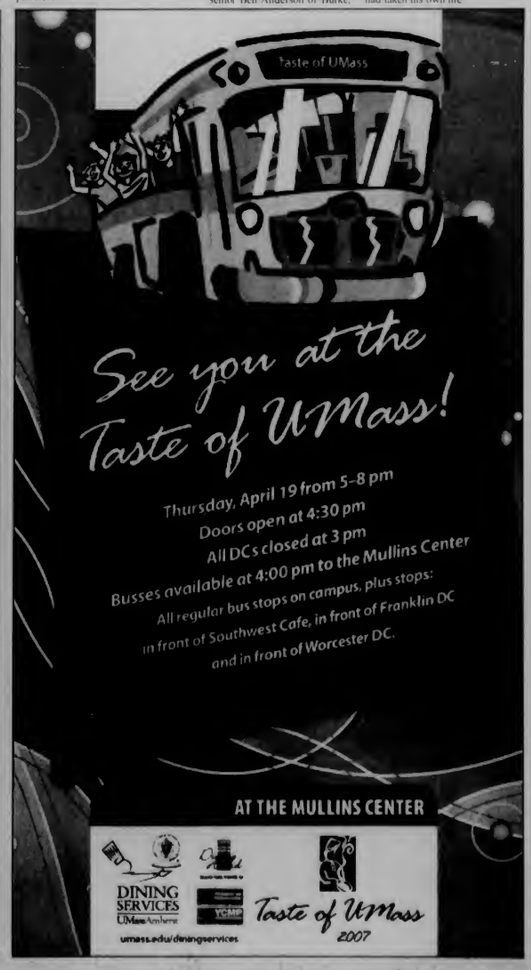
with words.

Frequent protesting is a consistent vital source of productivity in Argentine culture. It is the blood that pumps through the aorta of the city of Buenos Aries. Walking through the city on any given day you are likely to unintentionally land yourself in the midst of a marching protest. During our trip we were not only able to be a part of the organized protest of subway workers fighting for higher, more livable wages, but we were also able to sit in on a meeting with the subway workers as they organized their techniques and rallied up their people in an effort to fight for something that they truly believe in.

Having this experience brought an entirely new meaning to the idea of higher education. This trip brought the words in our text book to life and turned history and anecdotes into a breathing reality. They say a picture is worth a thousand words, but an experience like this is absolutely priceless.



24 years as a social worker.
4,812 lives touched.
0 regrets.
The Simmons College Master's Degree in Social Work
A life well lived. Deeply meaningful. Satisfying. Give your passion a purpose with an M.S.W. from Simmons.
Simmons offers all you need to succeed as a clinical social worker:
• Distinguished faculty, actively engaged in their fields
• Prized field placements and career options
• Access to a lifelong network of supportive, well-placed alumni
• Flexible programs to accommodate your busy schedule
Please attend an information session on Thursday, April 26, 5:30-7:00 p.m., with a special presentation, "Becoming a Social Worker: Adding Meaning to Your Life," by Professor Tien Ung.
Those who attend will receive a copy of Days in the Lives of Social Workers: 54 Professionals Tell "Real-Life" Stories from Social Work Practice, by Linda May Grobman.
R.S.V.P. at MSWAdmissions@simmons.edu.
300 The Fenway • Boston, MA
www.simmons.edu/ssw
SIMMONS
Learning with Purpose.



Taste of UMass
See you at the Taste of UMass!
Thursday, April 19 from 5–8 pm
Doors open at 4:30 pm
All DCs closed at 3 pm
Busses available at 4:00 pm to the Mullins Center
All regular bus stops on campus, plus stops:
in front of Southwest Cafe, in front of Franklin DC
and in front of Worcester DC.
AT THE MULLINS CENTER
DINING SERVICES
UMass Amherst
umass.edu/diningservices
Taste of UMass
2007

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 18, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Virginia Tech Shooting shines spotlight on gun control

When tragedy strikes, the nation watches and the nation mourns. Very soon after, we seek to place blame. Does it rest solely with the gunman? Was there some institutional or societal trigger that helped to cause this? Monday's shooting at Virginia Tech will certainly raise these questions and a whole host more. Gun control will be brought up, as will the second amendment, but how long will it be until these issues are lost to other news flashes? At what point do we finally get the answers we need and make changes that will last longer than the time until the next killing spree?

Youth has a way of clouding memory, making it hard for many of us to remember any school shootings before about 15 years ago. A quick Internet check shows that the number of incidents has indeed been staggering in the last 10 years alone. Meanwhile, other Western countries have largely been spared; not entirely free of such shootings, but the rate at which they occur is dramatically lower. So, what has changed in America, or, at the very least, what is different about our country that these shootings should happen with such regularity?

America is much larger than our peer-nations, but even if we include all of Europe together, the numbers still don't add up. This country is very much a "melting pot" of different peoples – a characteristic sure to create some tension. Yet racial tension is not unique to America's borders. Also, the copycat crime scenario is probably true to some extent. Once a large school shooting is ingrained in the national consciousness, and a disturbed individual is searching for a way out, they might choose to follow somebody else's example.

The most obvious difference is, of course, the preponderance and easy availability of firearms in this country. We simply have a lot of guns at easy access. It would be hard to believe that this is not somehow related to the higher number of school shootings here. In fact, there is a lot of research showing that the higher the availability of firearms the higher your chances of being shot are. No surprise there, really. So, why then are we so surprised when these mass shootings occur?

All of the ingredients are present for more mayhem. Any society with a large enough population will have people with mental or emotional problems. The larger the society, the greater the risk that one of these people will slip through the cracks and not receive any help. When you add a gun into the mix the odds of a bad outcome increase greatly.

A gun lowers the bar significantly. You don't need any training or even any skill to use a gun at close range. A gun in the hands of somebody intent on causing harm almost guarantees that somebody will die. And depending on the type of gun and how it is loaded, the number of people that can be killed by a single weapon is very large.

The popular refrain from firearm supporters is that "Guns don't kill people; people do." Strictly speaking, that may be true, but a gun enables that person to kill far more easily and efficiently than they otherwise could. If nothing else: guns don't kill people; guns make it possible for people to kill more people. Consider for a moment, if Cho Seung-Hui only had access to a knife, the death-toll would undoubtedly be lower.

The gun lobby in this country is very strong, so don't hold out much hope that there will be any more change after Monday's tragedy than there was after Columbine eight years ago. Yet do worry that the current state of gun legislation may actually become worse after this. There has been a recent trend in a number of states to expand upon the concealed weapons laws to allow more people to carry guns and to expand upon the places where they may take them. It would be saddening, but not overly surprising, if some Virginian legislator proposes a bill to allow college students to carry concealed firearms.

In a time when college students such as ourselves could stop at a handful of stores within five miles of campus (starting with WalMart) and purchase enough firepower to wreak havoc, to suppose that this is not an enabling cause for the deadly effects we see on the news is truly troubling. We should hope eventually to see the many facets of the issue and stop ignoring one of the largest simply because it is politically dangerous to discuss limiting guns.

Unsigned editorials reflect the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Gunman's weapons

Affidavits for search warrants filed with the court presume Cho Seung-Hui had multiple firearms, including the two handguns found at the scene of Monday's Virginia Tech shootings.

Glock 19
Caliber 9 mm
Length 6.9 in. (17.5 cm)
Height 5 in. (12.7 cm)
Magazine 15 rounds standard; optionally 17, 19 or 33 rounds
Origin Austria
Walther P22
Caliber .22 Long Rifle
Length 6.3 in. (16 cm)
Height 4.5 in. (11.4 cm)
Magazine 10 rounds
Origin Germany
2.61 in. (6.63 cm)
6.14 in. (15.6 cm)

© 2007 MCT

Source: Glock, Walther, U.S. Bureau of Engraving and Printing, McClatchy Washington Bureau
Graphic: Angela Smith, Melina Yingling

Taking a drive by

Nick Milano

Republicans and conservatives in general enjoy lamenting about the lack of an unbiased media. In their view, the liberal media prefers to report on stories that advance the cause of Democrats and hurt their political opponents. This observation is ignored by members of the media who claim they are objective and do not skew the facts. Yet recent evidence has shown the contrary.

This evidence, in the form of three different news stories, backs up claims by conservative commentators like Bill O'Reilly and Ann Coulter that a subjective media does indeed exist. Because of the bias, events that should make for spirited debate instead incite outrage at these commentators.

The first of the aforementioned stories concerns the outing of Reverend Ted Haggard, one of the most widely known religious leaders in the country. When it was revealed that he had been given "massages" by a gay prostitute and purchased methamphetamine, he was shamed into resigning from his post as President of the National Association of Evangelicals, an organization 30 million strong.

This information seemed to encompass more headlines than the disappearance of Natalee Holloway. Like the discovery of Vice President Dick Cheney's lesbian daughter, nothing is more newsworthy than a sex scandal. Haggard's situation will forever be the punch line for jokes from comedians like Bill Maher and Jon Stewart.

Another case illustrating the veracity of claims concerning a liberal media is the situation involving the recent raid on a factory in Massachusetts, just one of many around the country. The factory had been under investigation for employing illegal immigrants and in one raid 361 workers were arrested. What made headlines was why it was wrong for these illegal immigrants to be imprisoned; the fact that they came here illegally and have not paid any type of income tax was ignored. Surely the welfare of their children is something to be concerned about, but, because the media outlets who covered the incident questioned the lawfulness of the raid, a liberal position was presented. This situation is still in the newspapers very often as the care of the children of the illegal immigrants begins to sort itself out.

To determine the bias of the media, it is important to see what is reported, but perhaps even more important is finding out what stories are left out of the news cycle. Recently, an illegal immigrant drunkenly smashed his vehicle into another car. Alfredo Ramos, only 22 years old, killed two teenage girls, Allison Kunhardt and Tessa Tranchant. The two were only 17 and 16 years old, respectively. In a world where tragedies are pounced upon by an unrelenting media, how did this terrifying event go unreported?

Normal media reaction to a tragedy concerning young, innocent and pretty girls quickly develops into 24-hour coverage. As reports come straggling in, the "breaking news" is analyzed 10 times over. Real-life horror stories like Natalee Holloway's disappearance and the runaway bride attract viewers and readers like nothing else. Even stories involving D-list celebrities like the verdict in the case involving the custody of Anna Nicole Smith's baby are considered breaking news for all the major news organizations.

Strangely enough, the two girls' deaths at the hands of a drunken illegal immigrant were ignored. It took Bill O'Reilly to turn it into a national news story, and one that is now covered for all the wrong reasons. O'Reilly sparked outrage for focusing on the crimes of the perpetrator and not the suffering of the victims. All of this is another example of the liberal media, for O'Reilly's character – not his argument – has been under attack.

Strangely enough, the two girls' deaths at the hands of a drunken illegal immigrant were ignored.

It is his argument that deserves the recognition. Ramos was previously arrested four different times for crimes tied to alcohol consumption. O'Reilly writes in a column on his Web site that Ramos was released "with only a $250 fine after Ramos pleaded guilty to DUI, his fourth conviction." The fact that his license was also suspended is laughable because as an illegal immigrant, he could not have a license to begin with. Why did the media choose to write off the debate?

Many people understand that what O'Reilly says and writes is some of the most subjective and outrageous arguments in media. He is often laughed out of the room for his loud denouncements of Democrats and the liberal political agenda; he thinks the world will end if liberals have their way. Despite all this, he should not be ignored by a liberal media because it does not like him as a person. O'Reilly is correct; those two girls would still be alive today if Ramos was held accountable for even one of five previous crimes. Instead, because of the lenient approach Virginia Beach takes towards illegal immigrants, Ramos slipped through the reach of the law and murdered two girls. Like many other askew reports, that is and should have been the story.

Nick Milano can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu

Sorry, but apologies lack meaning

Dan Nicastro

I'm sorry. No, seriously, I am. I'm sorry that I have contributed to the demise of western civilization by reflexively using the phrase "I'm sorry." It's gotten to the point where I apologize for things beyond my control, such as the fact that it's snowing in April, or the fact that George W. Bush is president. I know these things aren't my fault, but it's been driven into me that an apology solves everything. Unfortunately, people in positions of power have a lesson from sorry as well, discovering that apologizing seems to absolve public figures of any wrongdoing.

First, it was Mel Gibson's turn. Mr. Gibson was once a successful movie star who was considered a (reasonably) sane, talented individual. Unfortunately, Gibson's true personality came out when he was pulled over for drunk driving. He went on a tirade against not only the officer who pulled him over, but the entire Jewish population. But "Mad Max" understood that if the power of his words could get him into trouble, they could also get him out, as he publicly apologized for his alcohol-fueled outburst. While there are still a great number of people who think Gibson is a crazy, anti-Semitic ass, there are still others who genuinely believed his apology, even though Gibson has continued to make racially insensitive remarks since his initial atonement.

Next there was Don Imus. Imus made a career of being offensive, ridiculing blacks, women and homosexuals daily for years. But on one not so special day, Imus added one more racially insensitive comment to his resume and was attacked from all sides. Rutgers University, Jesse Jackson and Al Sharpton demanded an apology, which Imus grudgingly offered up. Not only did Imus apologize, but guests of his show who hold high-ranking positions either in government or the media have apologized for him. It's true that his radio broadcast was canceled, but Rutgers has accepted his apology and is trying to move on from the situation. In other words, the "healing process" has begun. However, Imus has reluctantly apologized for his hate-filled words in the past and it's clear these apologies did not stop him from continuing to make offensive comments. There's nothing to suggest that he won't continue to do the same.

After the apology, people didn't seem to care about him anymore.

And what about Mark Foley? Foley was a Representative from the state of Florida who abused his position to have sex with his congressional pages. After he was forced to resign his post, he made a tearful apology. While he is still considered a pedophile, pundits said his apology was the first step towards "healing." After the apology, people didn't seem to care about him anymore, as he was thrown out of the 24-hour news cycle and not heard from since.

We've lost the meaning of the phrase "I'm sorry." It's become a phrase which is thrown around very casually. It's even built into our culture. We like to see people apologizing, which is why programs like "Oprah" or "Larry King Live" are popular. It doesn't even matter if those apologizing really are sorry for their actions. As long as the words are said, all is forgiven.

I'm not saying that forgiveness is a bad thing. On the contrary, forgiveness is, as the saying goes, divine. It's a necessary part of human life and coexistence. The problem is that we accept obviously meaningless apologies. An apology holds no weight if it's not backed up by a change in behavior, or if no compensation is offered to those who have been harmed.

So why is this a problem? People say stuff they don't mean all the time. If they seem to be sorry, why should anyone care? Three words: George W. Bush. He is a prime example of why the devaluation of the apology is a horrible thing. People have clamored for Bush to publicly apologize for getting us involved in the Iraq War, but what would happen if he did? Most likely, if Bush apologized for getting us involved in the Iraq War, he would refuse to change any of his war policies.

The only thing that would be different would be the fact that Bush came out and said he was sorry. If the examples above tell us anything, the scariest part about this is that people may actually forgive him and cut him some slack. If people did accept his sham apology, Bush would be allowed to unquestioningly continue waging a war which has to date killed over 3,300 Americans.

Letting public figures off the hook when it's clear they have not changed their behavior is not only wrong, it can be dangerous. Apologies are meant to convey true feelings of remorse and guilt, and they can only begin the "healing process" if the person delivering the apology is really committed to changing their behavior. For starters, I'm going to try and stop apologizing. But if it's not possible, I'm really, really sorry.

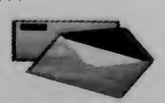
Dan Nicastro writes on Wednesdays. He can be reached at dnicastr@student.umass.edu.

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

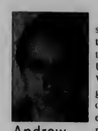
E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: 413-545-3699

Mail: Letters to the Editor, 113 Campus Center, Amherst, MA 01003



Educating Dirty



Andrew Freeman

This past Friday, prospective students and their parents were treated to a bit of theater at the University's Open House. Vice Chancellor Gargano gave out free University of Massachusetts apparel, and led the parade of praise for UMass. In addition, faculty trustee Brian O'Connor boasted about the New Dirt construction projects as well as the University's commitment to teaching. He claimed that a professor would not be hired without being willing to "get down and dirty with the undergraduates."

That same day, an article in the Collegian reported that the College of Humanities and Fine Arts (CHFA) was running a $600,000 budget shortfall. The College, which encompasses the English, History, Foreign Language and many other departments, has instructed faculty members to take measures to save money. Yet it is not clear where the deficit has come from. One faculty member told the Collegian in an e-mail that: "We've not been told anything about how we incurred this debt or why we faculty members have to make amends for it."

While administrators were singing the praises of the University, one of the largest colleges is compelling faculty to cut back on photocopying and phone calls. Such a situation is not unusual – it is an increasingly commonplace scenario at UMass. Many programs are under-funded, while large sums of money are allocated to pay for other things. This is not coincidental: it represents the will of campus administration.

There is money to go around at UMass. The New Dirt construction is slated to cost more than $2 billion over the course of the next several years. This money is coming from the state, from loans and from University funds. If the University can receive and allocate money for construction, surely UMass can fund other projects.

On a smaller, but no less significant scale, University administrators have received substantial raises over the past two years. Funding for administration salaries increased from $8.17 million to $11.9 million between March of 2004 and October of 2006, according to data obtained by the UMass Voice newspaper. For example, Chancellor Lombardi received a $97,500 raise over those two years, engorging his salary to $347,499. The millions given to administrators could have staunched the CHFA budget, along with a myriad of other needs.

Campus administration wants to transform UMass into something different.

So it's not a matter of lack of funding, but one of lack of will. Campus administration wants to transform UMass into something different. While the precise direction that students will be dragged in is difficult to say, a few conclusions can be drawn based on administrative decisions.

The new UMass will not be diverse. The University currently makes no effort to recruit underrepresented minority students. Moreover, it has cut funding for support services that cater to such students. For example, the ALANA Support Services' budget lost nearly $200,000 in funding and over half of its staff between 2001 and 2004, according to a document from the UMass Students First campaign. As a result of these decisions and the continuation of fee increases, the population of UMass will likely have even fewer first-generation college students and fewer people of color.

The new UMass will eliminate multigenerational housing. Five more dorms are scheduled to be turned into all-freshman housing. This, combined with the elimination of same-room reservation, will push more upperclassmen off-campus. Freshmen will be unable to form lasting communities in their dorms, since they will be moving out after their first year. Moreover, freshmen will be living without access to more experienced students, who can provide advice on subjects ranging from academics to safe alcohol use.

The new UMass will continue to grow more expensive, pricing out low-income students. Fees rose three percent from 2005 to 2006 and 3.4 percent for 2006 to 2007, according to The UMass Voice, and there has been no effort at all to roll back these increases.

The new UMass will grow more selective and more elitist. Gargano lauded his audience on Friday, citing the prospective students' high SAT scores and grade point averages. He declared them the "brightest and smartest class" yet, revealing his high opinion of current UMass students.

In all their discussion of improving UMass, the administrators use striking rhetoric, particularly in their emphasis on dirt: "the New Dirt," "getting down and dirty." They betray the result of their policy – campus life is getting dirtier, sullied by their poor priorities and mismanagement. Undergraduates have felt it for years, as have the graduate students. Even the faculty is suffering, as the CHFA budget shortfall indicates.

We do not have to tolerate this sordid state of affairs. One alternative vision of UMass is being promoted by the group Students First. The group, launched by campus activists and members of the SGA, seeks to preserve multigenerational housing and restore funding for student support services, among other goals. Yet whether through this group or some other organization, students should take ownership of their campus and decide whether they agree with the direction it is heading. We can promote an inclusive, democratic vision of UMass, or we can watch the University sink into the mud of administrative mismanagement.

Andrew Freeman writes on Wednesdays. He can be reached at adfreema@student.umass.edu

Keeping a better watch

NEWS: ATTORNEY CHARGES MOTOROLA $11,000 AN HOUR IN COURT CASE!
LAW BOOKS!? BUT JUST THE OTHER DAY YOU WANTED TO PLAY THIRD BASE FOR THE CUBS!
STAYSKAL THE MEDIA SERVICES '67

In this day and age, it is no secret that fad-diets don't work. For those of us who are tired of hearing the shrill cries of frustrated fat-fighters as they crash and burn on the bathroom scale, I bring good news.

Susie Orbach, celebrated author of "Fat is a Feminist Issue," has announced plans to sue Weight Watchers International Inc. on behalf of clients who have spent a significant amount of money on a process that dooms them to fail in the majority of cases, often leaving them fatter than they were before. Orbach hopes to bring these litigious issues surrounding diet and weight loss to the public's attention.

Jessica Puritz

I believe that this proposed lawsuit is a worthwhile endeavor in that it will raise awareness of the problems associated with the diet industry and the messages it sends consumers.

Far from another frivolous lawsuit, Orbach is doing a great service to our society by opening up a critical discourse on a subject long thought to be unarguable. The United States, steeped in the traditions of the Protestant work ethic, is the perfect breeding ground for the multibillion-dollar diet industry to saturate us with a plethora of dissenting opinions on exactly how one should diet. Thus, we are tricked into thinking that we are exposed to a well-developed discussion reflecting all sides of the debate. However, one critical voice is missing: the one telling us not to participate.

Weight Watchers employs specific language to avoid calling itself a diet, illustrating the industry's discomfort with itself. "Dieting" is now as retro as moon boots, exposed for the myopic panacea that it was in the 1970s. Every disgruntled former point-counter loves to tell you that 95 percent of diets fail. Weight Watchers now markets the same plan as a "lifestyle."

The issues that Orbach refers to include: promoting a diet mentality that mentally and physically harms people, setting people up to fail, promising unsustainable results and physically disturbing the body's natural disposition to maintain a certain weight.

Healthier, gentler alternatives exist, though often eclipsed by diet-industry heavyweights like Weight Watchers.

Orbach supports a more natural approach to health. Intuitive Eating, the nutrition program that recently garnered renewed attention via American Idol runner-up, Katherine McPhee, is one example. McPhee, who suffered from bulimia, had rediscovered the pleasures of eating without guilt, improved her body image and even lost a significant amount of weight in a healthy manner through the program.

The multibillion-dollar diet industry relies on dieters failing but maintaining hope that the next new diet will be their salvation.

The concept of a "set point" is paramount. Each person has a naturally set rate of burning calories, which slows when the person begins to diet. Because the dieter cannot maintain the sparse calorie-intake that the diet demands, the regimen inevitably ends. When the dieter returns to eating more, his or her metabolism continues to burn slowly. This causes the dieter to regain the weight and begin a vicious cycle of weight gain and loss.

Orbach believes a more successful approach would involve re-learning how to eat based on our biological hunger. The body self-regulates when it is allowed to do so, and dieting only interferes with the process. The body wants to maintain the set point, so metabolism speeds up when food intake is increased, just as it is slows down when underfed.

Intuitive Eating is known as highly successful, but, because it works, it does not sustain a returning customer base. In May of 2006, The American Journal of Health Promotion found that, "those who scored higher on an intuitive eating scale had more pleasure and enjoyment when eating, lower BMI scores, fewer dieting behaviors and less anxiety."

The multibillion-dollar diet industry relies on dieters failing but maintaining hope that the next new diet will be their salvation. That way, they buy more pills, shakes, books and Weight Watchers memberships. In "Foucault Goes to Weight Watchers," Cressida J. Heyes writes: "The Corporate Weight Watchers' Web site even candidly sells the company as a good investment by saying: 'Meeting members typically enroll to attend consecutive weekly meetings and have historically demonstrated a consistent re-enrollment pattern across many years.'"

These organized diet plans have taught us as a culture that we cannot be trusted with food. They have tricked us into believing that we need professional maintenance to engage in a biological process we have always known instinctively.

Regardless of the lawsuit's success, it will be of great benefit to the public. We have internalized the false notions that thinness and restriction are noble, worthy aspirations, and that strict dieting is the way to health. Hopefully, we will begin to look critically at the industry and think productively and rationally about our own choices.

Jessica Puritz is a UMass student

A regression of rights

Teresa Franco

Purity Balls, a fairly new phenomena in the evangelical community, take the term "daddy's little girl" a little too literally. The ball is a practice in which fathers vow to protect their daughters' virginity until the day they hand her over to her husband on her wedding day.

With the time, money and effort put into the ornate décor of the ballroom, it could easily be mistaken for a high school prom except the girls are escorted by their fathers rather than teenage boys. The girls dress up in princess-like outfits including satin gloves that go up to their elbows. Their hair is pinned up in intricate up-dos with a few curls loose and a tiara holding the ensemble together.

If you are to wander onto the Web site of the founders' of this event, you will see a video of delicate looking ballerinas prancing around in angelic tutus around a giant cross while the fathers watch from the side. Images of girls doing the tango and being spun and dipped by their fathers also appear in the video.

To hold a ceremony where she signs off her sexual choices as a woman for her father to decide reeks of oppression.

The evening begins with the host of the event shouting "Are you ready to war for your daughter's purity?" to the men in the crowd. During the ceremony the fathers and daughters sign a contract that starts off "I (daughter's name)'s father choose before God to cover my daughter as her authority and protection in the area of purity."

This tradition was started in Colorado about nine years ago, and a few other states – mostly in the conservative south – have started to host these ceremonies. This summer, these Purity Balls will spread their Victorian-age venom all the way to the northeast. In June, New York City will hold its first annual Purity Ball.

Though the intentions of fatherly love are a bit endearing, a large portion of the girls who participate in these Purity balls are barely old enough to understand what sex is. Therefore, they are in no way ready to agree to something they do not comprehend. Their fathers have got their morals completely warped. While they are trying to prevent young men from taking advantage of their daughters' bodies, these dads are doing the same to their daughter's underdeveloped minds. The fathers use the fact that if given a pretty dress, a crown and a night to be treated like a princess, a little girl will agree to anything as bait for girls to go along with the agreement. These men are not realizing a girl's sex life is personal – to have those rights as a sexual being taken away from her at a vulnerable age is an utter disgrace.

Teaching young girls to make wise decisions sexually is one thing, but to hold a ceremony where she signs off her sexual choices as a woman for her father to decide reeks of oppression. It's understandable that it's a masculine urge for a dad to want to shelter his daughter from the cruel intentions of boys, but to completely strip away a freedom women in the United States are fortunate enough to have is pure discrimination.

The followers of these pledges believe this is a way for girls to have more self respect for themselves than girls who go sleeping around. However, a girl who agrees to the pledge could possibly grow up thinking she is to have no sexual desires at all. It implies that her husband has full control of her sexual urges and she is to only participate in sexual relations under her husband's will. Her life as a sexual being will be protected by her father as a girl and then owned by her husband when she weds. How is this self-respect?

This Puritan-like practice is a punch in the stomach to all the women warriors who have made their lives into a mission for us to have as many equal rights as possible. It's a stumble backward in the progress that has been made for in the area of women's rights. This does not mean a woman who wants to save herself for her husband on her wedding night should be looked down upon – as long as the decision is something she truly feels strongly about. One she is choosing on her own.

What these fathers do not realize is that not only are they putting restrictions on their daughters' sex lives but her role in society in general. A father who makes this vow to keep his daughter pure wants his daughter to grow up to be a strong-willed and independent woman. How can she believe this if one of the most important decisions for her body as a woman is not hers to make?

Teresa Franco can be reached at tfranco@student.umass.edu

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

UMASS AND DOWNLOADING

The editorial in the April 12 Daily Collegian by Kaitlyn Silva entitled "It's time to right the RIAA" contains a number of inaccuracies. In particular, the sentence, "Having programs such as KaZaa and Limewire on any computer on campus is a huge mistake, as UMass monitors all of your Internet access and will readily give your information to the RIAA after finding illegal downloads on your IP address," is simply wrong.

UMass does not monitor the content of your Internet activities. UMass does not look for illegal downloads. UMass does not readily give your information to the RIAA. The RIAA detects and initiates all of its complaints about copyright violation, without any assistance from UMass. UMass does not voluntarily provide information on students to the RIAA, the only times it has provided any information has been when it has been so ordered by a Federal or Massachusetts court.

There is certainly much controversy surrounding copyright law in the electronic age, but let's not confuse those issues with inaccurate information.

If you have any additional questions, please call.

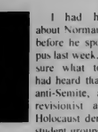
Andrew Vernon
Manager, OIT Help Desk

YESTERDAY'S POLL RESPONSE:

No: 84% Yes: 16%

(Question: Should the university continue to recognize Robert Mugabe's honorary degree?)

Motivated by hate



Ben Duffy

I had heard much about Norman Finkelstein before he spoke on campus last week, but I wasn't sure what to expect. I had heard that he was an anti-Semite, a Holocaust revisionist and even a Holocaust denier. Jewish student groups on campus were angered that he was invited to UMass.

After hearing him speak, I am still unsure if he can be properly labeled as a Holocaust revisionist because he spoke so little on the subject. His only references to the Holocaust were in the context of suggesting that the state of Israel uses the Holocaust and the broader theme of anti-Semitism as a shield to block all criticism. According to Finkelstein, Israel always invokes memories of the Holocaust whenever it comes under attack.

On one hand, Finkelstein's moderate tone made him sound a lot more reasonable than I had expected. On the other hand, plenty of charlatans have mastered the art of sounding reasonable while at the same time spewing garbage. Noam Chomsky comes to mind.

Finkelstein spent most of his time criticizing Israel's human rights record. He sees Israel as the oppressor of Palestinians, and he rejects the invocation of the Holocaust or anti-Semitism as justification for that oppression.

I certainly hate to see ethnic groups exploiting past sufferings for present-day gain. I loathe race pimps and grievance mongers like Clyde Bellecourt, Elaine Brown and Jesse Jackson. I detest their air of infallibility, their presumption of entitlement and their ability to tar all opponents as bigots. I hate the way that every grievance monger tries to outdo every other grievance monger, trying to prove that his group's sufferings are the greatest in the history of the world and therefore justifying the most compensation.

Ethnic oppression is not unique to any particular time or place. Yes, Germans oppressed Jews. European, American and Canadian whites oppressed the native tribes of the Americas. The English oppressed the Irish, and the Turks oppressed Armenians. At different times in history, Protestants have oppressed Catholics, and vice versa. Seventy years ago, the Japanese oppressed China, and today China oppresses Tibet. History is one long tale of the strong beating up on the weak.

While Finkelstein fell short of saying that anti-Semitism does not exist, he certainly seemed to marginalize it, as if it plays no role in the long-standing conflict in Israel. At one point, he compared the settlement of Israel by Jews to the settlement of North America by Europeans. He explained that no reasonable person would ever accuse American Indians of "anti-Europeanism" simply because they resisted the conquering of their lands, and no reasonable person should conclude that Palestinians are motivated by anti-Semitism either.

Not all critics of Israel are anti-Semites, but nearly all anti-Semites are critical of Israel.

I will grant Finkelstein this: not every person who has ever criticized Israel has done so because he has a burning hate for Jews in his heart. But I would wager that nearly all dyed-in-the-wool anti-Semites hate Israel. Not all critics of Israel are anti-Semites, but nearly all anti-Semites are critical of Israel. Anti-Semitism is not just some kind of Zionist invention.

One particularly rabid anti-Semite is Sheik Hassan Nasrallah, the Secretary General of Hezbollah. He gained a lot of attention this summer when his terrorist organization waged war against Israel. Nasrallah once admitted to Lebanon's Daily Star newspaper, "If [the Jews] all gather in Israel, it will save us the trouble of going after them world wide." Nasrallah is the type of person who wakes up every morning dreaming up new ways to kill Jews. If he's not an anti-Semite, I don't know who is.

If you need another example, consider David Duke, former Grand Wizard of the Ku Klux Klan. Duke is an all-around bigot, but seems to reserve a special hate in his heart for Jews. His Web site features a video of Duke in Syria, where he repudiated American support for Israel. "I come from the peace-loving people of America, to your great peace-loving president of Syria," he said to a crowd of flag-waving Syrians. The crowd reacted by chanting "With our souls, with our blood, we sacrifice for Dr. Bashar." The former Grand Wizard explained, "It is only the Zionists who want war rather than peace" and finished by leading the crowd in chanting "No war for Israel." Duke's official Web site titles this video, "Dr. David Duke improves American Image in the Entire Arab World."

Other anti-Semites who have nothing positive to say about Israel include Louis Farrakhan of the Nation of Islam and Jean Marie Le Pen, the leader of the National Front, France's far-right political party. For further documentation of anti-Semitism directed at Israel, I would suggest watching "Blaming the Jews Hate in Islamic Culture" or Wayne Kopping's "Obsession."

I find it more than a little curious that Finkelstein downplayed the very real ethnic bigotry at play in the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. Israel's human rights record is not beyond criticism, and no amount of abuse that Jews may have suffered in the past justifies further abuse in the future. Nonetheless, Israel has real enemies who hate it simply because it is the land of the Jews.

Ben Duffy writes on Wednesdays. He can be reached at bduffy@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 18, 2007 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

RJD2 and company performs at Pearl Street

Rock'n'roll, folk, and hip hop collide at Northampton show

BY CONNOR WHITE-SULLIVAN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The skill of a sample-based artist lies in his or her ability to abduct the most minute incidental fractions of music, whisk them away from their original home and introduce them to the obscure fragments that perfectly complement them, layering track upon track – like bricks and beams in the construction of a musical cathedral. The end result is a collage of these musical fragments, where these pieces that were once so different become part of a whole. It was as a sample-based artist that RJD2 rose to prominence.

On Sunday April 15, 2007, students of the five-college area filled the Pearl Street Nightclub in Northampton to see RJD2 and his opening acts, Happy Chichester and Bus Driver.

One would be hard pressed to find a collection of sounds so vastly different on tour together anywhere else. RJD2 did not simply feed the audience formula songs they had already heard and liked. Instead, he gathered a collection of experiences so remarkably distinct that if exhibited individually one might never imagine seeing them together. Yet Sunday night, RJD2 displayed that he could craft a tour just as skillfully as any song and the music fit as tightly as pieces in a puzzle.

Chichester became involved in the tour when RJD2 approached him about playing in the band. The two had grown up in the same neighborhood of Columbus, Ohio, and RJD2 was composing his band exclusively from musicians he had played with as a kid. Chichester, having just finished a solo album agreed to sign on if he were given an opening slot.

At 8:30 on Sunday night, as Chichester walked across the stage to his acoustic guitar, the crowd was still thin, and the people were mostly clustered about the room talking amongst themselves. As he placed his harmonica over his head and started strumming, a few focused their attention on the stage, but most just continued talking, a few pondering out loud what the hell this guy was doing at an RJD2 concert.

But Chichester was quick to put all doubts to rest. His gaunt face and large eyes were framed by the dark hair that stuck out from beneath his grey wool cap, and his sweater was tight fitting everywhere but the sleeves, giving him the look of a street urchin from 18th century England. His face proclaimed that he had to be at least in his late 20s, but his expression of bliss when he heard the crowd screaming at the end of his songs was euphoric and almost childlike, as if each time he opened his eyes it was as he was seeing and hearing the crowd for the first time.

While whining his high notes, he bore his teeth and pulled his face into a painfully forced smile which took little change to become a frown, each muscle in his face clenched and drawing every possible line into view. He hunched his shoulders and flexed each muscle in his body and face as though he was compressing the air in his lungs, and forcing it through the grimace on his face.

His movement on stage was equally compelling. The jerking steps and haphazard movements he made while playing guitar became a frantic tapping of his feet, and a crossing and uncrossing of his legs once he transitioned to piano. Throughout the entire performance he writhed on stage, his tongue flicking through the air propelling droplets of spit into the audience while he sang in a sweet tone with a slight rasp, like Ben Kweller with a light brushing of sandpaper. Yet when he stopped and joked with the audience or explained the history of a song, it seemed as though none of those movements had been scripted as part of any act, and he was simply a man completely possessed by the music.

The performance was even more remarkable in the context of the day's events. Only a short time before going on stage, Chichester heard the news of his friend Mark Greenwood's death. Greenwood had spent 25 years as a trombone player for the temptations and had contributed to the album version of "Moonlight" on Chichester's album. As Chichester played that song, which he dedicated to Greenwood, glints of light shimmered from his face, like shards of glass caught between his clenched eyelids, and illuminated the path the tears took down his face. Chichester's emotional investment in the show did not go unrewarded, the seven songs he played garnished some of the loudest cheers of the night and brought him a group of fans seeking his autograph at the shows end that nearly rivaled the size of RJD2's.

About 15 minutes after Chichester had left the stage the lights came back up. The empty stage stayed lit for other five minutes or so before a stocky man with a blond beard and a party hat over his mouth walked on stage and started turning knobs and flicking switches on a small sound board just left of center stage. Between sets an eclectic mix of old school hip-hop and techno had come through the speakers at about the volume of Happy's performance. But as the man with the party hat over his mouth hovered over his equipment and looked offstage toward the right, the music faded into a pounding bassline speckled with high pitched synth notes. The audience and the "man at the machines" later identified as ACTMC, waited while the volume in the room increased to the point where the air being pushed from the speakers was shaking the cloth on their pant legs.

Bus Driver strode across the stage with a slow, business like demeanor; removing a thick pair of glasses with dark square frames—like the ones worn by Steve Urkel in "Family Matters" as he went. His expression was both serious and serene as he placed the rubber band of a party hat under his chin and pulled the small shiny cardboard cone to its place atop his large afro-clad head. His demeanor changed when he reached the front of the stage and the microphone with the effects pedal. There, with his eyes close and teeth exposed, he moaned a long deep sound, like a dying moose, and standing the way he was - knees bent just enough to get under the mic, back arched and chin flung up towards the sky.

He rapped at a break neck speed, and flung his arms about with a pace to match it, while making ample use of the effects mic. But the amount of energy he put in seemed impossible to maintain, and by the second song he was already drenched in sweat despite the clubs abnormally low temperature.

At one point, while wiping the sweat from his face and "stalling" to keep himself out of cardiac arrest, Bus Driver asked the audience to "pretend it's the summer of 1982 and Crack has

See RJD2 on page 10

RJD2 performed songs from his latest rock'n'roll album, "The Third Hand," as well as his more hip hop oriented material from his first two albums "Exotic Talk" and "Since We Last Spoke," last Sunday.

A conversation with Assembly of Dust

BY LAUREN MOOISETTE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Assembly of Dust played at the Iron Horse Thursday April 12. By the time the doors opened there was a long stream of fans lining Center Street.

AOD is a jam band that has been compared to classic rock legends such as The Grateful Dead and Crosby, Stills, Nash and Young.

For the first hour of the performance, the band played acoustic electrics and John Ieeese played a stand-up bass. This gave their sound more of a country sound, which can be disappointing to a classic-rock lover. It wasn't until they switched back to the traditional electric that the rock 'n' roll began to spill out.

Even though the Iron Horse is a smaller venue, it was full of AOD fans. Many were suggesting older records from Strangefolk in order to get a complete sense of the band while others belted the lyrics right along with the band's lead singer, Reid Genauer.

Assembly of Dust formed after Genauer left Strangefolk and began attending Cornell University. The band was formed before he graduated and since then has landed a job at eMusic.com. He says that in the three years that he has been juggling the band and his job there hasn't been much of a problem and doesn't anticipate encountering any.

Some songs they played included "40 Reasons" and "Track 1.mp" from their "Recollection" album, released earlier this year.

Assembly of Dust is still rising. As their fan base expands their name will become more recognizable. A short interview with Genauer reveals the attitude the band members have about the music they create and their hopes for the future.

INTERVIEW WITH GENAUER

MOOISETTE: How have the musicians you have shared the stage with influenced the music of AOD?

GENAUR: They have had an influence on our music generally and our style specifically. Even then their influence was applied before meeting them. Meeting them was like making a full circle.

MOOISETTE: Describe the process of creating a song?

GENAUR: There are a few variations. The common theme is that Nate and I bring material to the band and then we lock ourselves away in a woodshed. We talk about it, the feel, how it presents itself. Then we run through changes and teach it to the band. We're actually due for sesh.

MOOISETTE: How long does it usually take?

GENAUR: It's kind of like studying for a test: it takes the passage of time to become real. A lot of times it doesn't come together until weeks later – time is an interesting component. It needs repetition, confidence and time to let it reveal itself and its dynamics.

MOOISETTE: How does the improvisational aspect of your live performances work? How do you communicate with each other?

GENAUR: Most of our songs have a designated solo section. Often the soloist drives it. The lead instrument gets support by suggesting the supporting parts from the rest of the band. For instance, even when Adam is driving the ship Herrick might adjust the beat. There's also an element of conversation, blind luck and leadership – but we also have visual and verbal cues.

MOOISETTE: Do you perform with a set list or fly by the seat of your pants?

GENAUR: We prepare set lists. Part of the art of the show is the set list. We will alter it according to the mood of the crowd or the timeframe, but we follow it 80-90 percent of the time. Dynamics are really important and ending with an uplifting song.

MOOISETTE: How long does it take to produce a studio album?

Genaur: Over the course of months it takes about 30-full days in the studio.

MOOISETTE: You mentioned to a Jam Base reporter that when you were in Strangefolk it got to the point where it wasn't fun anymore. When does it get to that point?

GENAUR: It gets to that point when it does: when your objective as a musi-

See AOD on page 10

Assembly of Dust plays a mix of acoustic and electric rock'n'roll. Reid Genaur does most of the songwriting for the band, but on their latest album, band member Nate Wilson wrote two songs.

New organization grows its own food

BY KATIE MAGINNIS
COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

Do you know where your food comes from? Many residents of the Puerto Rican community in Holyoke can answer "yes" to this question, because they have gotten involved with Nuestras Raices. Formed in 1992, Nuestras Raices (Spanish for "our roots") is a non-profit organization that promotes sustainable development in the city of Holyoke, Mass. This organization has embraced the idea of sustainability through various projects involving locally-grown food, community connections and environmental stewardship.

One of the projects that this organization has undertaken is El Jardin Bakery. Using a specially designed wood-fired brick oven, the folks at this bakery prepare loaves of sourdough bread to be sold in a handful of locations across Western Mass. What makes El Jardin Bakery unique is that it uses only organic whole-grain ingredients to make its bread, rather than processed ingredients that have been grown with the use of pesticides that are harmful to the environment. Furthermore, the bakery employs people from the local Puerto Rican community, helping to build positive relationships and reduce poverty within the city.

In addition to the bakery, many members of Nuestras Raices have also been building community gardens. In eight locations across the city, empty lots that had once been run-down sites where garbage was dumped are now being transformed into beautiful gardens, helping to improve the air quality as well as the aesthetic appeal of Holyoke.

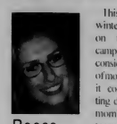
Aside from these physical improvements, the Holyoke community is also benefiting from the social interactions and economic revenue generated by the gardens. Many people participating in these gardens are elderly folks who have grown up farming in rural areas of Puerto Rico. Through the multi-generational teamwork required to maintain the urban gardens, these elders are now able to instill a sense of cultural pride in the younger generations by passing on their knowledge. In terms of economics, the gardens are improving the lives of low-income families by providing them with cheaper organic foods, some of which can also be sold to increase the families' income.

One of the most recent projects at Nuestras Raices is the Tierra de Oportunidades, a four-acre farm that has been set up along the banks of the Connecticut River. Members of this farm grow vegetables, fruits, berries, herbs and flowers to be sold at the Holyoke Farmer's Market. To increase community involvement, they have built a stage and gathering area with picnic tables to host outdoor events. Also, the farmers are aware of the environmental threats of invasive species growing along the river. Efforts are being made to replace these harmful plants with native species of trees and bushes.

On Saturday April 14th, members of Nuestras Raices opened up this farm to the greater public for a community work day. Volunteers from the area helped to clear more land for planting, spread mulch near the picnic tables and uproot strawberry plants for crop rotation.

Katie Maginnis can be reached cemaginn@student.umass.edu

Spring fashion is around the corner



Reece Coppolino

This persistent winter weather on the UMass campus has led to considerable lack of motivation when it comes to getting dressed in the morning. It has teased us with temporary periods of spring-time, which has only left us more eager to break out the flip-flops. Don't fret, spring will soon travel north, and we can finally jump in to the new styles of the season.

The new trends of spring 2007 offer a balance between boldness and softness. Old-world romance has made its return bearing bright, lively hues. This season the '60's-mod look has also reappeared on the scene. The renowned fashion icon of the 1960's, Twiggy, has made quite an influence.

Bold primary colors are ruling this spring, especially yellow. Spring shoppers will begin to find yellow hues splashed on articles of clothing in stores from Los Angeles to Milan. If wearing such a bold color makes you nervous, many accessories, from headbands to handbags, can provide yellow as an accent color.

According to Leatrice Eiseman, author of "More Alive with Color" and executive director of the Pantone Color Institute: "orange has had its heyday, and now it's time for its next-door neighbor, yellow. It's been a hot color on European runways for the past two seasons, and now it has jumped across the pond. Everyone needs cheering up these days, and nothing's better for making sad spirits soar than eyeing a bunch of sunny daffodils. So, the timing is right for yellow's big moment."

Yellow hues compliment all brunettes' hair shades; however, blondes will have a harder time wearing this bright of a color. While most blonde shades get drowned out by yellow hues, champagne to platinum blonde shades have proven to be an exception. Reese Witherspoon shined in a canary yellow Nina Ricci dress at the Golden Globes this year. Another brave star, Michelle Williams, stepped out in a marigold Vera Wang gown at the 79th Annual Academy Awards. Honey-blondes should look into another primary color for this season.

See FASHION on page 10

This spring, 1960's mod and boldly colored fashion has returned to the runway in various fashion shows.

NEW MUSIC WEDNESDAY

Bright Eyes returns with 6th album

BY ALLIE ROTH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Bright Eyes "Cassadaga" is the full-length follow-up to last month's "Four Winds EP." This album appears to be all about collaboration and range. With the large menu of partners like Maria Taylor, M. Ward, Sherri and Stacy DuPree (of Eisely) and Rachel Yamagata, Bright Eyes presents a group of 13 songs with ranging lyrical structures and moods. Some of the songs are political. Some of the songs are heartbreaking. Some of the songs are even catchy and danceable. There are many references to places like Glendale, New England, Rome, Los Angeles and Babylon. There are many references to meaning, feelings, death and religion. In total, Bright Eyes is in their normal and usual form.

The album starts off with a spoken word introduction into a song, similar to the opening story-and-song on "I'm Wide Awake, Its Morning." "Four Winds," which was found on the EP of the same name, is the second track and a perfect country-laced lead in to the rest of the album.

"Soul Singer in a Session Band" is really the standout track. It is a duel personality song in the way that it is as catchy as it is heartbreaking. The use of lap steel and organ highlights the country-laced undertones in Connor Oberst's voice. His lyrics point to a character who feels surrounded by a world void of all meaning. "I had a lengthy discussion about The Power of Myth/ With a post-modern author who didn't exist/ In this fictitious world all reality twists/ I was a hopeless romantic now I'm just turning tricks…Just like that Soul Singer in the session band."

As a follow up to Bright Eyes' search for meaning, there comes "Cleanse Song." It gives the sort of advice that many stressed out folks need: to just take a moment and breathe. "And if life seems absurd/ what you need is some laughter/ and a season to sleep and a place to get clean." The flute, oboe and clarinet allow the listener to feel weightless as the song float along.

"I Must Belong Somewhere" was a track only heard during Bright Eyes' live performances, but it finds its way into the recorded library now. It uses repetition and parallel structure to paint a picture of disregarding everything to have a place to belong.

Every Bright Eyes album needs one or two throwback tracks. On this album, it is "Make a Plan to Love Me" and "No One Would Riot For Less." In the former song, the repetition of "Make a Plan to Love Me" becomes more bitter and insecure over time. The latter song has a mood similar to that of "When the President Talks to God." Both songs utilize backup vocals of Stacy and Sherri DuPree and let them contrast from Oberst's foreground vocals. The female vocals allow for a light sound to a song that would otherwise be quite raw. This neutralizing female voice is something Bright Eyes has been lacking on many past albums. It's refreshing to see it throughout "Cassadaga" and, with all hope, in future albums.

Allie Roth can be reached at aroth@student.umass.edu

BRIGHT EYES

"CASSADAGA"

SADDLE RECORDS

4/5

Connor Oberst and his band Bright Eyes have released two different discs so far this year. Last month the band released "Four Winds EP" and this month they released their 6th studio album "Cassadaga."

Want a Personal Trainer?

STOP BY THE BODY SHOP IN TOTMAN TO SIGN UP!

- One Fitness Evaluation and Goals Meeting
- Your Own Six Week Personal Exercise Program
- Five Workouts with a Personal Trainor
- Five Additional Workouts at the Body Shop

WITH A BODY SHOP MEMBERSHIP: $90
WITHOUT A BODY SHOP MEMBERSHIP: $120
CALL THE BODY SHOP WITH ANY QUESTIONS
577-4700

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
is looking for new
Graphic Designers
for the Fall 2007 semester
Daily Advertising Designers
Nightly Production Supervisors
Advertising Production Manager
Major can apply. Previous design
not necessary, but encouraged.
Visit our office in the
Campus Center Basement
10am - 4pm for applications.

A CONSEQUENTIAL ABERRATION: GEORGE W. BUSH'S FOREIGN POLICY— AND BEYOND

STROBE TALBOTT
Former U.S. Deputy Secretary of State
Thursday, April 19, at 7:30 p.m.
Cole Assembly Room, Converse Hall
Amherst College
Free and Open to the Public

RJD2 show a success

RJD2 from page 8

just come out...it's the opening day for Crack and their having a party and me and ANIMC are there...forget about all your homeopathic remedies and mystical ways, right now it's all about Crack." The action on stage certainly would have fit the bill at such a celebration, and progressing from Chichester to Bus Driver was like jumping out of a sauna into mound of snow, but the two dramatically different flavors perfectly prepared the pallet for RJD2.

The difficulty one finds when trying to accurately brand a label onto RJD2's music is no accident. As he stated in a pre-performance interview "I try not to have much of an opinion on a genre as a whole, I find it doesn't serve the listener very well. It's the publics responsibility to find the music they like and in each genre there are going to be good artists and bad artists."

Though RJD2's previous material had been more along the lines of hip hop and electronic music, "The Third Hand" was "more inspired by rock 'n' roll albums I would have liked to sample than the process of sampling rock 'n' roll records."

So when RJD2 walked on stage this time, he walked to a guitar and brought a band with him onstage. With the aid of the band, RJD2 balanced the newer rock 'n' roll songs with live renditions of some fan favorites from the previous albums, notably "Exotic Talk" and "Since We Last Spoke."

Though not all of the fans were drawn to the newer material, they were not disappointed; as the live renditions were enthralling and had the crowd waving their arms the way Busdriver had been hoping for. About halfway through the performance, the band left the stage and the lights died down. RJD2 then took his place behind a stack of turntables and began to craft the compositions that had won him most of these fans in the first place. With the lights off the attention went to the screen set up on the stage, which at first held a close up of RJD2's hands as he scratched and tapped out beats on a soundboard. But as the set continued, the screen began to display geometric images and scenes of chaos and devastation.

RJD2 claimed that his goal has always been "to create music that you can actively listen to...I want it to be as intense as possible."

On Sunday night, RJD2 met his goal.

Connor White-Sullivan can be reached at cwhitesu@student.umass.edu

Assembly frontman talks about making their latest LP

AOD from page 8

cian is more about money and fame or supporting an organization rather than making the music. If it's not fun, it's not worth doing. If you're not playing the music you're inspired to make, then what's the point?

MODESETTE: Can your fans ever expect you to go mainstream?

GENAUR: I don't think going mainstream is either black or white. If it means being on TV and having a larger fan base – yes. If it means matching outfits and bleach blonde hair – no.

MODESETTE: Who does most of the song writing for the band?

GENAUR: I do my lion's share of the song writing but Nate wrote two songs on "Recollection" – "Grand Decision" and "Walking on Water." Oddly enough, they are the first and last songs on the album.

MODESETTE: What have been some challenges you (as a band) have been faced with?

GENAUR: Building a fan base, logistically and financially making sense of it. Two of us live in New York and three live in New Hampshire, which makes it inconvenient to find time to rehearse and get gigs. But we've been blessed with a fairly smooth ride. We have a vision and we're living it.

Lauren Modisette can be reached at lmodisett@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY OF ASSEMBLY OF DUST

Assembly of Dust started after Reid Genaur quit the band Strangefolk and started going to Cornell University.

Insight comes from all directions.

You bring something unique to the table, and at Ernst & Young, you'll be encouraged to speak up and contribute. Because we know that bringing together people with different backgrounds and perspectives lets us deliver quality results for our clients. It's why we've created a work environment of mutual respect that promotes your personal and professional growth and success. So visit us on campus or at ey.com/us/careers.

FORTUNE® 100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR 2007

Audit • Tax • Transaction Advisory Services

ERNST & YOUNG

Quality In Everything We Do

© 2007 Ernst & Young

Yellow is the new orange

FASHION from page 9

cobalt blue. This bold color will compliment the yellow tones in honey blondes.

One of the most exciting items to shop for when spring rolls around is the casual dress. This season offers many different styles of casual dresses. The baby doll dress was a favorite of last season and it is no exception for this season as well. Fabric flowing from high-waists create a romantic look that highlights femininity. Shift dresses, which offer a loose structure that hangs straight from the shoulders, have resurfaced from the '60s. Jumpers and pinafores can be paired with tights and flats for a fun, casual look this season. Pockets are a great addition to any dress, creating a balance between simplicity and elegance.

Another popular item to shop for this season is the spring jacket. The swing jacket has made a comeback this season with its generous amount of fabric and flared edges. Cropped puff sleeves are chic and they separate spring jackets from any other season. The baby doll-cut jacket, a fitted top with loose flowing fabric, can add a darling look to any outfit. Ruffles, bows and oversized buttons are cute embellishments to any type of spring outerwear.

Other trends for this season have taken some influence from recent seasons, as well as, previous eras in time. Some looks that have maintained their style power from the past few seasons include: skinny jeans, tunics, sweetheart style tops, mandarin collar blouses, ballet flats, wedges and aviators. A new style of jeans this season is the wide-leg trouser jean, which has emerged from the '70s era. The 1950's bow-tie heels have also recently gained some serious attention. This bow-tie style can be worn on flats or open-toes as well. Mary Jane pumps, a style influence by the 1920s, are now appearing on spring fashion runways and in store windows. An array of fashionable footwear will be stepping out this season for sure.

For this spring, handbags are coming out in smaller, more compact styles. The clutch is a strapless handbag that is carried by hand or propped under one's arm. It is large enough to carry the necessities, as well as, a few extra unneeded items; however, the wristlet is just big enough to fit a slim phone, wallet and possibly some chapstick. It offers a clip-on strap that can hang comfortably from the wrist. The wristlet strap connects to the bag with a keychain ring, which provides an extra holding area for personal belongings. The satchel, a larger vintage style of handbags, has remained a favorable accessory for this season. The style of handbags this season has made a shift from prodigious and oversized to sweet and simple.

The styles of spring 2007 have presented a strong emphasis on softness and femininity with excessive flowing fabrics and delicate embellishments, while incorporating power and confidence with bold hues. These new fashions offer the ultimate sense of expression a girl could give off this year. I suggest, once the weather clears, to dive right into these new looks, minutemen.

Reese Coppolino can be reached at rcoppoli@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY OF MARC JACOBS

The key to every fashion season

UMass not settled on closing situation

BASEBALL from page 14

"Obviously you want to win the tournament, but we just have to work on the little things that bring us into the weekend," Garrity said. "[The weekend games] are the games that matter. We can win all the weekday games we want, but if we don't win our A-10 games, we don't get into the postseason."

CLOSER BY COMMITTEE?

Junior reliever Aaron Smith, otherwise known as "Smitty," came into last weekend's three-game set against George Washington as the team's most successful closer.

Smith's four saves in 11 appearances stood as a team-high, but with a 5-4 lead heading into the top of the ninth in Game 1 of Saturday's doubleheader, UMass coach Mike Stone decided to put the ball in the hands of his first baseman instead of Smith, who was used in a middle relief role in Game 2.

Senior Bryan Adamski retired the side in order to earn his first save of the season against the Colonials. The decision not to use Smith was based on strategy and scouting reports more than anything else.

"It depends on the situation," Stone said about his team's closer situation. "[Bryan] pitched very well against [Connecticut] the other day, and we made that decision based on what he had done there. He throws harder and he has a good slider, and this was really the situation for him to be out there.

"Different situations call for different people," he continued. "And we know what they can bring, and we have to make the decisions based on the information we have at the time."

Adamski picked up his second win of the season last Tuesday at UConn. He pitched four shutout innings in relief during UMass' 6-4 win over the Huskies in 10 innings, and also went 1-for-3 with two runs scored and an RBI before taking the ball.

Adamski is no stranger to the pitcher's mound. He had the second most appearances for the Minutemen last season (16), the second most wins (3), the lowest ERA (3.60) and the most saves (5).

Danny Picard can be reached at dpicard@student.umass.edu. Log on to the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.

Junior Bryan Garrity has knocked in 10 runs this season for UMass while registering a .274 batting average. The team's captain has started all but two games behind the plate for the Minutemen.

TODAY'S COLLEGIAN

With her home run against Charlotte, senior Amanda Acampora is now second on the team with six round-trippers.

Acampora, Cullington slugging for UM percentage – all of which are the second highest on the team.

SOFTBALL from page 14

She is also first in doubles and fourth in runs scored, with numbers of 10 and 19, respectively. She is also a solid left fielder, with one error on the season.

UMass coach Elaine Sortino is quick to point out Proctor as the squad's go-to player.

Once, when asked to comment on what it is exactly that her left fielder brings to the table, Sortino merely gave a confident grin, shrugged her shoulders and said, "LP is LP."

HOLY MOLINARI!

Fear filled the hearts of all UMass softball fans during the home opener, when Candice Molinari hit the dirt after being struck in the hand while attempting to swing at an inside pitch.

The center fielder's finger swelled up and she was taken from the UMass softball complex for medical attention. Sophomore Davina Hernandez went in for her fallen captain, playing both games of the scheduled doubleheader going 1-for-6 with an RBI.

Molinari did not miss a game after that, returning five days later to go 1-for-5 with two walks and two runs scored.

Getting an eager, leaning start down the first base line on every pitch, the left-handed Molinari exhibits great presence at the plate.

She leads the Minutewomen with 41 hits – 39 of which have been singles – and a .387 batting average.

BACK, BACK, BACK... GONE

Seven Minutewomen have contributed to the team's home run total (20) this season.

The team's offensive leader is Stacy Cullington – the second baseman has socked eight round-trippers. The junior also leads the team with 62 RBIs and a .626 slugging percentage.

The next biggest bat is that of designated player Amanda Acampora. The senior captain has hit six homers while registering 45 RBIs and a .511 slugging percentage.

The team's other six homers come from five different players – Proctor (1), Hernandez (1), sophomore third baseman Whitney Mollica (2), sophomore right fielder Samantha Safato (1) and freshman outfielder Carly Normandin (1).

HEAD OF THEIR CLASS

With their perfect conference record, the Minutewomen remain at the top of the A-10 standings. The Fordham Rams (31-13), however, are inching up on them with an 11-1 A-10 record. The only other team with a conference record above .500 is the Saint Louis Billikens (21-24, 6-5 A-10), with their mark of .545.

Temple and Saint Joseph's are the two next highest UMass looks to come out swinging in the City of Brotherly Love in order to keep this weekend's opponents low on the A-10 ladder.

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu.

Great Natural Fiber Spring Clothing!

The Mercantile

11 East Pleasant Street
Amherst, Ma 01002
(413) 549-1396

And

108 Main Street
Northampton, MA 01060
(413) 584-1204

STUDENT ALUMNI ASSOCIATION UMASS AMHERST

You are cordially invited to attend the

UMass Amherst

Commencement Ball 2007

Enchanted Voyage

Thursday, May 24, 2007 • 9:00 p.m. - 1:00 a.m.

Student Union Complex

Formal Attire - Cash Bar

Light Hors d'oeuvres • Desserts • Dancing • Horse & Carriage Rides

$20 per person

Tickets may be obtained at UMassAlumni.com/students, Alumni Association Office, Memorial Hall (545-2317), or Student Alumni Association table on the Campus Center Concourse April 25-26, May 1-3, and May 8-10

Commencement Ball 2007 is supported by:

UMass Amherst Alumni Association • Alumni Student Loan Consolidation Program • Coca-Cola Student Alumni Association • Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and Campus Life • Auxiliary Services Housing and Residential Life • College of Engineering • College of Social and Behavioral Sciences School of Nursing • College of Natural Sciences and Mathematics • Commonwealth College Isenberg School of Management • Dean of Students Office • College of Humanities and Fine Arts

THE RESULTS ARE IN! WE ASKED, YOU TOLD US.

"TOP 5 REASONS TO PARTY SMART"

PARTY SMART

5 ... so you can hug a person instead of a toilet.

4 ... so you don't kill your liver. College is 4 years, but you have your liver for life.

3 ... to be a good friend – you may need to help someone else.

2 ... to make yourself proud – you can pay better attention to what's going on around you.

1 ... because no one wants to be "that guy" or "that girl."

Sponsored by: Campus and Community Coalition To Reduce High Risk Drinking

CONGRATULATIONS to first place winner Matthew Sloan and runners-up Kimberly Small, Kevin Libby and Loretta Connolly!

Rowers hit with bad luck in Boston

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — As if facing the nation's top rowing teams was not enough, the Massachusetts rowing team went toe-to-toe with the elements as well. The Minutewomen earned one win on the weekend, and one second-place finish at the BU Invitational.

With perennial powerhouses Texas and Southern California on the water, the Minutewomen were faced with a formidable task. However, it is unknown how much closer the races would have been if the conditions had not tampered with the day's events.

With strong winds and the temperature on the water dipping below 50 degrees, the day was anything but normal for the teams competing. The rain also proved to be a big factor for the rowers from each team.

In particular, bad luck struck the UMass Varsity Eight race when one rower caught a crab, which means that her oar did not come out of the water cleanly. Often times when this happens, the handle of the oar can come back and forcefully hit the person in the boat, sometimes even throwing them from the boat.

In this case, the rower remained in the boat, but the force of the blow caused a disruption to the flow of the Massachusetts boat, ultimately leading to a third-place finish. Yet the silver lining in this race was that UMass stayed just three seconds behind the Texas boat, which was six seconds from the lead itself.

UMass coach Jim Dietz said himself that the strongest performance came from the Varsity Eight squad that kept pace with the Longhorns throughout its entire race.

"We were really moving well in that race before we had the crab," Dietz said. "That hurt us tremendously but overall the goal of the weekend was to race the women several times as hard as we possibly could. And if that was the goal, then we met the goal because the conditions were so adverse."

Another noteworthy performance came from the UMass Varsity Lightweight Eight, who gave the Maroon and White its only victory of the day on Saturday. Senior Maria Arcari said that this win was particularly impressive because this lineup of women had only been rowing together for a short time.

"Considering that we've only practiced this lineup a couple of times, I think that we did fairly well," Arcari said.

Opposing the Minutewomen in this race were three MIT boats, the closest of which being a Novice Eight boat that was seven seconds behind the first place UMass boat.

Even while emerging victorious, the weather again seemed to hinder the flow of the race. Junior Sarah Potts credited her fellow rowers for sticking to strong, fundamental rowing that helped them persevere in order to emerge victorious.

"Under the weather conditions, our goal was to keep strong and have good technique through the water because that was the most important thing and it worked out well in our favor," Potts said.

Potts also mentioned that there was rarely a regatta with perfect weather.

Also adding to the tumultuous pace of the day's events, the Varsity Lightweight Eight squad had to deal with a mishap at the beginning of their race.

"The start was unclear due to the wind carrying the sound of the announcer, so the other boat started ahead of us so we came from behind to pull through for the win," Potts said.

The Minutewomen have little time to reflect on their performance at the Charles River this past weekend. They travel to Camden, N.J., this upcoming weekend to battle conference foes in the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

However, senior Abby Lively spoke positively of the experiences of her boat this past weekend, saying that the harsh conditions better prepared the team for the A-10 Tournament, which should be held under better weather conditions.

"Racing in such bad conditions gives us good preparation for racing in more bad conditions because you never know what you are going to run into," Lively said. "So it's always nice to have preparation [for such conditions]."

While getting even one win against the nation's top competitors, UMass will now take on familiar teams in the A-10 Tournament who also, unlike Texas and Southern California, have not had the luxury of practicing year-round in mild weather conditions. The battle-tested Maroon and White will look to add a record-setting 12th A-10 Championship trophy to its trophy case.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

UM needs to finish stronger

GAMES from page 14

UMass has leaned on junior Kathleen Typadis for offensive production. Her 36 goals are by far the best on the team. Only three other players (Holly Drown, Melynda Zwick and Meghan Reddy) have scored 10 goals or more.

for the four-game losing streak, but Venechanos is still trying to figure out what type of team she is working with.

"I don't know why we don't play with a sense of urgency," she said.

The young coaching staff is still new to the program and the team. Venechanos is still learning how to motivate these players, most of whom she didn't recruit herself.

The players could learn something from their coach, who has been part of multiple championships as a player (Maryland) and as an assistant coach (Northwestern).

If there is something the young coaching staff lacks in experience, they make up for it with their passion for the game. With the Minutewomen down, 9-4, late in the second half and the game in hand, Venechanos was still yapping in the referee's ear and shouting for her team to keep pushing. She never quit and neither did the team, they just didn't play a great game.

The team itself might be relying too much on junior attack Kathleen Typadis. She scored the first two goals against Richmond and no one else could step up. Both of her goals were unassisted as she managed to find her way to the net like she's been doing all season. No one else could score until the game was out of reach.

They didn't play aggressive enough against Richmond. They had only 12 turnovers, which tells you they took care of the ball, but they didn't take enough chances to score on offense.

It has also been a tale of two periods for the Maroon and White. In the three A-10 games, the Minutewomen are outscoring their opponents in the first period, 13-12.

It is a different story in the second period, the Minutewomen struggle to score and struggle to defend their opponents. They are being outscored, 19-8, in the second period during A-10 play.

You could point to a number of reasons why they are not getting it done in the second half, but great teams do not fold late in the game. They need to play with more intensity and attack the goal aggressively. Venechanos has been preaching those things to her team. They could easily be 3-0 and in first place in the A-10, but they are not completing games.

"We haven't played a full game yet this season," Venechanos said. "Even in our wins, we haven't been able to play a full game yet."

The Minutewomen do not lack talent, they potentially have A-10 all-conference players on the defense, offense and midfield. At this point in their season, it's win or go home early. Even if they don't make the A-10 playoffs, the team will be returning its top-five point leaders.

Steve Games is a Collegian Columnist. He can be reached at sgames@student.umass.edu

Fordham first team in A-10 to 30 wins

A-10 SOFTBALL from page 14

ted five errors, but still defeated the Flyers, 5-4.

Rothwell tried to make up for her poor performance in Game 1 with a 2-for-4 day including a two-run homer.

Rams reach 30

The Fordham Rams recorded their 30th win of the season on April 10 in a 3-1 win over Manhattan.

The Rams (31-13, 11-1 A-10) are the first A-10 team to reach the 30-win plateau this season. Overall, FU has won 23 of its last 24 games – its last loss came against St. Joe's on April 3.

Most recently, the Rams swept a two-game set from Saint Louis on April 15. Freshman pitcher Nicole Ayres got the win in both games for the Rams improving her record to 13-3.

She allowed two earned runs in 9 1/3 innings pitched against the Billikens, lowering her earned run average to 2.22.

Despite Ayre's great rookie season, junior Allison Twarowski leads the Rams with a 1.56 ERA in 14 appearances.

The Rams boast one of the deepest staffs in the conference. On top of Ayres and Twarowski, senior Sara Kinney is 11-5 with a nifty 2.47 earned run average.

FU travels to Amherst for two games with UMass on April 4 and 5. The Minutewomen occupy the top spot in the conference and, barring a loss between now and then, will enter the weekend in first place. The potential late-season matchup between the A-10's top two teams has to have fans of the two teams excited.

Fordham faces a tough test if they hope defeat UMass. The Minutewomen are undefeated at home this season (6-0) and have dominated the all-time series with the Rams (29-2).

Philly's Top pair

Temple senior Adrienne Repsher and Saint Joe's sophomore Dani Gonzales shared this week's A-10 Player of the Week honors.

Gonzales did everything for the Hawks this weekend. At the plate, she went 5-for-9 with two home runs and seven runs batted in. From the pitching circle, she won three games and saved one for St. Joe's. On the season, she is 5-3 with a 3.93 earned run average along with her .329 batting average and three home runs.

Across the city, Repsher's .456 batting average leads the conference. Her 5-for-5 day propelled the Owls to a doubleheader sweep of Wagner. On the afternoon, she hit two homers while driving in five.

Joe Meloni can be reached at jmeloni@student.umass.edu.

Georgetown alone atop conference

ECAC LAX from page 14

lific scorers took over the game, firing 33 shots toward the Loyola net.

Midfielder Andrew Brancaccio scored a game-high three goals, including two late in the fourth quarter that put the game out of reach for Greyhounds. The freshman earned ECAC Rookie of the Week honors for his late-game heroics.

Armed with a strong RPI and several quality wins, the Greyhounds will look to improve their tournament resume in the next few weeks. Loyola's strength of schedule ranks 13th in the nation and the Greyhounds own victories over No. 4 Duke (10-2) and No. 17 Syracuse (4-6), but that can only take a team so far. If Loyola wins its two remaining conference games, then things should fall into place for the Greyhounds.

But the team's greatest opportunity to make a statement in college lacrosse comes on a May 5 date with No. 10 Johns Hopkins (5-4). The road game will by no means be a simple victory. It will instead allow the Greyhounds to prove that their win over Duke in early March was not a fluke and that their inability to dominate a weak conference should not affect postseason possibilities.

Surrendering the ECAC's automatic bid to Georgetown, Loyola has the best chance of any team in the league of receiving an at-large bid. However, Massachusetts (5-5, 3-1 ECAC) can put itself in first place if the Minutemen defend their home turf against Georgetown this weekend.

Returning the Favor

Just in case Rutgers (4-5, 2-2 ECAC) wanted to know how Loyola felt after receiving a 10-goal beating nearly two weeks ago, Syracuse gave the Scarlet Knights a shellacking of their own. Ironically, the 13-goal defeat came less than a week after U.S. Lacrosse named head coach Jim Stagnitta its Coach of the Week.

Perhaps taking out their frustrations on a disappointing season, the Orange defeated Rutgers 22-9. Just five days earlier, Syracuse came close to knocking off No. 1 Cornell (10-0). The Orange capped a furious comeback by tying the score with only 28 seconds left. Just 24 seconds later, Cornell found the back of the net and escaped from the Carrier Dome with its perfect season in tact.

Against Rutgers, Syracuse did most of its damage in the first half, taking a 15-3 lead into the intermission. Attack Kenny Nims led all scorers with five goals, including three tallies in the second half.

The loss to Syracuse inflated Rutgers' goals-against average to 10.09. Though, goalie Bill Ohn still leads the league in that category, despite surrendering 11 goals in less than 20 minutes on Sunday.

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu

FRUSTRATED?
PUZZLED?
DO YOU HAVE:
A grade dispute?
Teacher, roomate or job concerns?
Billing problems?
...or any other University related problems?
THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course)
Serving the students, faculty, and staff of the Umass Community
823 Campus Center
Office Hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
Telephone: 413 - 545 - 0867
fax: 413 - 545 - 9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL - W. SPFLD
Special Student Rate
Local National Placement
Includes Certification
1-800-357-3210
BostonBartender.com

Plan Ahead for Next Year
Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments--1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include heat, hot water, and cooking gas
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.
NEW PUFFTON VILLAGE
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

"Results you can feel ...without the side effects."
• headaches • neck pain
• back pain • sports injuries
• auto injuries • and more...
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractor
Participating provider for HMO's
Student Insurance, Blue Cross, GIC, Car Insurance & most others
www.AmherstFamilyChiro.com
Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health
Most insurance accepted.
228 Triangle Street
Amherst, MA
(near Bertucci's)
549-1500

The Journalism Program Lecture Series on Broadcast and the Media
THE ALUMNI ALL-STAR CAREER NIGHT & ICE CREAM SOCIAL
Tuesday, April 24 2007
Ice Cream 5 PM, Panel 5:30-7 PM
THE BLUEWALL CAMPUS CENTER
Steve Buckley '79, Sports Columnist, The Boston Herald
Sandy Lish '87, Founder, The Castle Group
Maria Sacchetti '91, Reporter, The Boston Globe
Aaron Saykin '01, Reporter, The Pittsburgh Channel
Audie Cornish '01, Correspondent, National Public Radio
DON'T MISS THIS CHANCE TO LEARN ABOUT CAREERS IN JOURNALISM AND PUBLIC RELATIONS FROM SOME OF THE TOP PEOPLE IN THEIR FIELDS.
This lecture is part of the Extra Credit Program and is funded by David '79 and Jeena Kaufer.

TOHIOS on the go
Specials of the Week
Buy 2 CalZones GET 1 FREE!
5 FREE WINGS With Purchase of any Large Pizza
(413) 256-4110 Call Now!
Sun-Wed Open 'til 1am
Thu Open 'til 2am
Fri-Sat Open 'til 3am

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

		5				2
	5	7				1
	2		9		5	6	3
		6	8			1
1							8
	8			3	6
9	1	4		6			8
2					9		7
6					5

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Racing circuits
5 Skiers' ride
9 Broom stroke
14 Landed
15 Seniors' grp.
16 To the point
17 One who performs
18 Work on the hedges
19 Bump in salary
20 Left alone
22 Ebert's former partner
23 Feels poorly
24 Fork part
25 Burning food
28 Twisting and turning
32 Roof overhang
33 Mends by reweaving
34 Negative conjunction
35 Hebrew month
36 Entices
37 Roll-call response
38 "Kidnapped" auth.
39 Contrasting strips
40 Concentration gp.
41 Reversals
43 Separated
44 Pub offerings
45 Installed, as carpet
46 Souped-up car
49 Deluges
53 Hunter in the sky
54 Palace lover
55 Small recess
56 Act part
57 Idyllic place
58 Needle case
59 Pert
60 Do a postal job
61 "Wild at Heart" star Laura

DOWN
1 Alan or Cheryl
2 ___ vera
3 Pizza orders
4 Decorative strip
5 Reveal by gossip
6 Explodes
7 Extra dry
8 Letters in record time?
9 Orchestra section
10 Mink's cousin
11 Actor Estrada
12 Latin I verb
13 Rind
21 Barbecue fare
22 Traffic advisories
24 Becomes weary
25 Phobias
26 Soup server
27 Nautical command
28 Electoral districts
29 Air thumbs
30 Scandinavian
31 Avarice
33 Immerses
36 Entwined
37 Set
39 Hogwash!
40 Den
42 Some noblemen
43 Mom or dad
45 Paramour
46 "Bonanza" character
47 Puget Sound whale
48 Gravatts
49 Hubbub
50 Observe with care
51 Junket
52 Body covering
54 ___ Plaines, IL

THE HARP
SPECIALS!
Honey Brown, Molson
$2.00 a pint / $6.50 a pitcher
THURSDAY: • RUDY BROWN
FRIDAY: • THE DIRTY HIT
Pizza 'til midnight 7 days a week
Voted best Neighborhood bar East of the River 2005 & 2006
Valley Advocate Readers Poll
OCMF & All Credit Cards accepted
Free wireless Internet!
163 Sunderland Rd. - N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Blues is easy to play, but hard to feel."
-Jimi Hendrix

TWO DUDES By Aaron Warner

FINALLY, DUDE... SPRING BREAK!
FOR ONE WEEK COLLEGE STUDENTS EVERYWHERE PARTY HEARTY INSTEAD OF GOING TO CLASSES, STUDYING, OR TAKING EXAMS.
ARE YOU SURE IT STARTS THIS WEEK?
I'VE BEEN DOING THAT SINCE HIGH SCHOOL.

HARD KNOCKS By Louis Coppola

HARD KNOCKS
SO, SAMSON, WILL YOU ACT IN MY MOVIE?
I'LL DO IT.
WELL, I MEAN, THERE'S NO MOVIE YET...
I'LL DO IT.
AND I CAN'T PAY YOU OR ANYTHING.
I'LL DO IT.
ACTUALLY, YOU'LL PROBABLY NEED TO FRONT ME SOME MONEY.
NO PROBLEM. I'M A MODEL.

A COLLEGE GIRL NAMED JOE By Aaron Warner

I COULDN'T BE ANY HAPPIER BEING WITH YOU, RYAN.
I'VE WANTED A LONG TIME TO FIND SOMEONE WHO MAKES ME FEEL LIKE YOU DO, AND I JUST WANT YOU TO KNOW HOW MUCH YOU'VE COME TO MEAN TO ME.
OKAY... YOU CAN THROW YOUR LAUNDRY IN WITH MINE.

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Josh Shalek

How much debt would you have to be in to skip town?
Five debers
Five bucks? That's it
No amount of debt is too small for me to not pay it
I shouldn't have loaned him those DVDs
You LOANED something to Freddie Freelander?

Unjustified Imprisoned... FREE COMEDY
FREE COMEDY
STUDENT VALLEY PRODUCTIONS' 11TH ANNUAL
COMEDY JAM
Two nights of comedy featuring troupes from New York, Boston, Chicago, New Hampshire, and Amherst!
FRIDAY AND SATURDAY
APRIL 20TH & 21ST
8PM, BARTLETT 65
FREE FREE FREE FREE
SVP
Sponsored by the Limon Arts Council and the Student Government Association.

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Putting thumbtacks in your pocket may seem smart for a moment but you'll regret it.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Walking to class in the rain is as good as a shower.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Math classes would be much better if Count Chocula was a UMass professor.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
If you are stranded in the woods burn your package of Fritos for warmth.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
It is never a good idea to name your child something that rhymes with "oral."

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
It is beneficial for the soul to dance like a tru playa' in public view.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
It is not worth fighting with your mother. It is impossible to argue with a crazy person.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Take it upon yourself to address the nation's dwindling rolly-polly populations.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
There's more than one way to skin a cat but there's only one right way to eat it.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
If only boyfriends and girlfriends came with a money back guarantee.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
It is completely acceptable in all academic circles to steal other people's ideas.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
It is alright to not tie your shoes in a pillow factory because even if you trip you're gold.

Townehouse of Amherst Condominums
Walk to Campus!
Hurry, Get 'em before they're gone!
50 Meadow St. Amherst, MA
Tel: 413.549.0839
Fax: 413.549.8487

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ACTIVITIES

WANTED: College Nudists Inter-College Nudist Day, May 5, at Solair in Woodstock, CT. 30+ Colleges invited. Preregister for free gift. For more info: http://www.solairrl.com/Solair-collegeday2007.htm or email: Solair@SolairRL.com

ANNOUNCEMENTS

For the coed who met Dr. Ben the speedskater on the bus. Please call 413-256-1589

Like no other course, Army ROTC Learn, Lead and Succeed Be and do something bigger than yourself. Full Scholarships plus $5,000 yearly Call 413-545-2321 www.umass.edu/armyrotc

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Mill Valley Estates APARTMENT FOR RENT 2 bedroom $1125, 3 bedroom $1425, 4 bedroom $2175 Accepting Applications, 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winnco.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing. 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Center of town, 1,2,3 bedrooms hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

EMPLOYMENT

Need a summer job? College Pro painters is hiring. Work with friends, steady hours, learn a valuable skill. Must be willing to work in the following areas: Milford, Millbury, Grafton, Auburn. Interviewers being held now. Please email collegepronorthbridge@yahoo.com

Drivers and kitchen help wanted. Nights and weekends. Apply at DP Dough. Downtown Amherst.

EMPLOYMENT

Moving: Local Moving Company looking for self motivated individuals, part-time positions available immediately. Weekday availability a plus. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call (413) 584-4746

Outdoor Recreation Jobs Rafting guides full or part time Massachusetts or Maine. Will train! Contact www.moxierafting.com 800-866-6943

Full time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office, $9.50/hour Applications available at 235 Whitmore and are due April 13th.

Line-cooks needed Full-time Part-time available. Apply in person Amherst Brewing Co. 24 N. Pleasant st.

Premium skin care and wellness Excellent training and benefits, http://newengland.myarbonne.com

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

Attention All Juniors and Seniors! The deadline is now extended to april 13th to apply to become a Legal Assistant with the Student Legal Services Office. Earn up to 12 undergraduate credits while gaining valuable experience in the legal field. Contact us at 545-1995 or stop by our office at 922 Campus Center.

HOUSE FOR RENT

4 bedroom in Northampton $1300 available sept. Also 3 bedroom $1200 available now or June 1st. No Pets, Skibiski Realtors 586-1827

ROOM FOR RENT

Amherst Beautiful quiet house great location. Need car. With Nice guy and daughter. Perfect for single/couple. Call Jonathan for details 413-253-2535

Amherst nice house on bus route to all colleges. 2 rooms available immediately. Each 450 mo + electric. Call Ally 413-253-4929 leave message or call 413-626-7491

ROOMATE WANTED

Cape Cod Seeking summer roommates starting 6/10 Yarmouth, MA near beach. Female only. 617-519-0178

SERVICES

Are you getting ready to move off campus? Know your rights and responsibilities before you sign your 1st lease. Contact the Student Legal Services offices at 545-1995 or stop by at 922 Campus Center.

SERVICES

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing. Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992. www.tapestryhealth.com

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

SUMMER SUBLET

Won't Last! Puffton Village 3 bedroom apt. rent for summer and/or 07-08 school year. Air Cond. Included. Call John 774-239-8937

Alpine Commons apartment June-August 15th $2050/month includes utilities. 413.204.9519 or jennaw@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 18, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Washed out in Beantown

Tournament moved back a day due to rain

BY DANNY PICARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

UMass Baseball

The Massachusetts baseball team's 2007 schedule has hardly gone as planned. Yet another change was made due to poor field conditions, this time for the annual Beanpot Tournament. The first-round game against Northeastern, which was originally scheduled for yesterday, will instead take place this evening at 7 p.m. in Lynn.

Simultaneously, UMass' game against Sacred Heart – which was rescheduled from a March 27 cancellation to this afternoon – has been postponed once again. No make-up date has been determined.

The Minutemen (9-15, 4-8 Atlantic 10) lost to the Huskies (16-9) last year in the consolation game at Fenway Park, 7-6, after falling to Boston College, 11-10, in the first round. This year's format is the same as in past years, and is similar to that of hockey's version.

The winner will take on either BC or Harvard in the Beanpot Championship at 3 p.m. next Wednesday at Fenway Park. The consolation game will be played at noon.

Any opportunity to suit up on Yawkey Way is a special one, whether it's the consolation game or the championship.

"It's just a regular weekday game for us," captain Bryan Garrity said. "We come out and try to win every game we play, but [the Beanpot] is a little more special because you get the opportunity to play at Fenway."

What is more concerning to the Minutemen is their weekend sets against A-10 teams. While the thought of winning the Beanpot at Fenway is exciting, it's all meaningless if they don't take care of the games that count.

See BASEBALL on page 11

FILE PHOTO / UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Senior Bryan Adamski recorded his first save of the season against GW this weekend. He leads the Minutemen with a 2.45 ERA in 11 innings pitched.

Rivalry with UConn on hold for now

First half of home-and-home series cancelled due to rain

BY DOMENIC POLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Weather proved a nuisance to the Massachusetts softball team, as the Maroon and White's matchup at Connecticut was cancelled due to rain yesterday. The game will not be made up.

The Minutewomen (22-12-1, 8-0 Atlantic 10) must wait to try to extend their 11-game winning streak until the weekend, when they play four games in Philadelphia. The team is scheduled to square off against Temple (9-14, 3-3 A-10) on Friday at 3 p.m. and Saturday at noon before a doubleheader with Saint Joseph's (12-16, 3-3 A-10) on Sunday.

UMass Softball

UMass now looks forward to getting their mitts on the Huskies (15-17) on April 25, when it hosts UConn at the UMass Softball Complex.

This is not the first time nature tampered with the Minutewomen's schedule this season. UMass' home opener against St. Bonaventure was postponed due to heavy rain.

IS THERE A PROCTOR IN THE HOUSE?

Lauren Proctor has been one of the most solid players for the Maroon and White all year. A magician at the plate, the junior possesses an ability to slap a pitch into a hole anywhere on the field. Her healthy left-handed swing allows her to pull the ball into the right-centerfield gap. She can also take an outside pitch and deposit it between the third baseman and shortstop.

The left fielder has built a stellar junior campaign as she is one of the biggest factors for UMass' success.

Proctor has a .379 batting average, 39 hits, 28 RBIs, 54 total bases and a .524 slugging

See SOFTBALL on page 11

UMass must win out to reach A-10s

The season isn't over for the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team, but after its third straight loss to an Atlantic 10 opponent, the chances of clinching a playoff spot seem discouraging. It is possible, however. The Minutewomen must win their last four games to even have a chance at earning the final playoff spot.

Last season, their 4-3 record put them in the playoffs, but they won a tiebreaker over Duquesne, who was also 4-3. Even if the Minutewomen win the rest of their games, there is still doubt as to whether they make the playoffs depending on how the final standings turnout.

Steve Games

Coach Alexis Venechanos knows that the team has to win out. Her focus this week is to not stress about the need to win four in a row, but rather the next game.

"Our backs are against the wall, we have to win out to get into the A-10s," Venechanos said following a 10-4 home loss against Richmond.

The Minutewomen started 0-2 in A-10 play, but they were able to recover and win four of their final five games. An 0-3 start is a larger hole to recover from, and the Minutewomen's longest winning streak this season, three games, seems so long ago.

Perhaps the team is not in rhythm like it was earlier in the season when they would easily score over 10 goals per game. The schedule has the team playing long stretches, and then having long stretches of days off. In the beginning of the season, the schedule was set up for the Minutewomen to play six games in 19 days then have 10 days off. In mid-season, they played four games in eight days and then had a week off.

Obviously it is good for the team to recover from injuries, but each time the Minutewomen came off long periods of rest, they lost. Both Richmond and George Washington started A-10 play a week earlier.

Both teams are rolling through the conference and look good enough to make the playoffs. Even a strong team like Richmond lost after having 12 days off – the Spiders had 20 turnovers in that loss.

UMass isn't making any excuses.

See GAMES on page 12

Junior Kristina Twichell and the Minutewomen have struggled against conference opponents this season, going 0-for-3 in A-10 play so far.

49ers back on track after dropping URI

Dayton struggling on offense while Fordham is flying high

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

FILE PHOTO / FORDHAM MEDIA RELATIONS

Fordham senior Sara Kinney's 2.47 earned run average is third on the team while her 11 wins ranks second among Ram pitchers.

A-10 Softball

After dropping two games to Massachusetts over the weekend, Charlotte improved its standing in the Atlantic 10, defeating Rhode Island 5-0.

The teams scheduled a doubleheader for the day, but poor weather wiped out the second game. The game has not been rescheduled.

Sophomore second baseman Sarah Malene paced the 49er offense going 2-for-3 with two RBIs. In the bottom of the fourth, Malene came up with the bases loaded and smacked a single up the middle, scoring two runs to put the 49ers (23-20, 3-6 A-10) up by three.

Charlotte senior Kristen Bowen recorded her ninth win of the season and 16th complete game against the Rams.

The 49ers 3-6 conference mark puts them in ninth place in the 11-team field, followed only by URI (7-22, 1-6 A-10) and Dayton (5-20, 1-8 A-10).

Charlotte's next action comes this afternoon against in-state rival Appalachian State.

The 49ers resume A-10 play with a doubleheader against Saint Louis (21-26, 6-5 A-10) at home on April 21. The all-time series between the A-10 foes stands at 9-16 in favor of the Billikens.

FLYERS STILL GROUNDED

After notching its first A-10 win of the season against URI (7-22, 1-6 A-10), Dayton has dropped its last five games.

While in Philadelphia, Penn., over the weekend, the Flyers lost both ends of a two-game set with Saint Joseph's (12-16, 4-4 A-10). A doubleheader with Temple was on the schedule for Sunday, but the rain that rocked most of the eastern states washed the games out.

The Flyers wasted a solid outing from senior pitcher Chelsea Grozenski by making three errors and leaving seven runners on base in Game 1. St. Joe's gave the Flyers every opportunity to get back in the contest with two miscues of its own and six runners left on, but the Flyers failed to take advantage.

In the third inning, after retiring the first two batters, a double from St. Joe's junior Carly Kinkler sparked a two-run rally for the Hawks.

Next batter Erika Rosenwinkel singled to center scoring Kinkler. After Grozenski walked the following two hitters, she should have been out of the inning, but a fielding error by senior shortstop Sheena Rothwell allowed Rosenwinkel to score.

The sixth inning saw the Hawks push two runners across the plate without getting a hit. Rothwell made two more errors in the inning, making way for another two-out rally.

In Game 2, the Hawks commit-

See A-10 SOFTBALL on page 12

Loyola reeling after losses in key games

BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Loyola Greyhounds – a team once thought to be an obvious pick to make the NCAA tournament, now may find themselves on the outside of the field of 16 at season's end.

Since the NCAA Tournament committee typically places significant emphasis on how a team finishes out its schedule, the opportunity is still there for Loyola (5-4, 3-2 ECAC). But having lost its last two games, Loyola needs to return to its winning ways.

ECAC Lacrosse

In fact, the team squandered an opportunity to positively seal its postseason fate last Saturday, but lost a 10-8 match with league-leading Georgetown (8-2, 4-0 ECAC). The Greyhounds are ranked No. 12 in the April 9 edition of the Nike IL Media Poll. But the team will most likely drop in the rankings after its fourth loss of the season.

Loyola's struggles against Georgetown were not unlike three of the team's other four losses. In each contest, the Greyhounds maintained a lead in the second half, only to choke during the final minutes. They lost their first two games of the season by allowing the game-winning goal during the final minutes.

Playing on the road, Loyola managed only three scores in the second half, despite receiving a strong effort on offense from its bench. A 5-4 first-half lead turned into a 7-6 deficit by the end of the third quarter. The Greyhounds lost further control, going down by three goals just a few minutes later.

Not only did the Loyola offense slow to a crawl as the game progressed, the team failed to stifle Georgetown's potent attack. The Hoyas and their pro-

See ECAC LAX on page 12

COURTESY GEORGETOWN MEDIA RELATIONS

Junior attack Matt McBride and the Hoyas defeated Loyola, 10-8, over the weekend to continue their undefeated conference season.

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

SHOWERS : HI: 55 LO: 35 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, APRIL 19, 2007

BEANPOT OPENER RESCHEDULED PAGE 14

MCCARTHY WINS PULITZER PAGE 7

UMass to hold vigil for Virginia Tech victims

BY ALYSSA MONTALBANO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Students at the University of Massachusetts will have the opportunity tonight to show their compassion for the victims of the tragedy that hit Virginia Tech University.

In memory of the 33 people killed, all of the members of the UMass community are invited to join together in the Campus Center auditorium from 6 to 7 p.m. tonight, for an hour-long vigil of remembrance, reflection and healing.

On April 16, 2007 tragedy struck Virginia Tech when a 23-year-old gunman opened fire, killing 33 people at two different locations on campus.

The vicious shooting that occurred was the deadliest mass shooting in U.S. history. Campuses all over the nation are holding vigils to mourn the loss.

During the hour, there will be contemplative music, and the community will be given the opportunity to compose letters or artwork of condolence for Virginia Tech. Following the vigil, participants have the choice to form small discussion groups with helping professionals.

There will also be scheduled speakers who have been profoundly touched by the recent events at Virginia Tech, and they will offer brief reflections.

Among the UMass speakers scheduled are Andrew Ramsey, student of Comparative Literature in Commonwealth College; Mara Seidel, JCSC Fellow at Hillel; Christian Rojas, Assistant Professor in the Department of Resource Economics.

"My sense is that this is something the community needs. A lot of us need to come together to deal with the feelings that we have and be able to share them," said Rabbi Saul Perlmutter.

This event is organized by members of the Religious Affairs Committee.

Alyssa Montalbano can be reached at amontalb@student.umass.edu

Preventative measures

UMass police, administration discuss emergency preparedness

BY WILL MCGUINNESS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

As the events of Monday morning settle in, college students nationwide are fully beginning to comprehend the deaths of 33 of their own, and sympathize with the others affected by the shooting.

However, as the tragedy begins to sink into the American psyche, questions simultaneously arise as to how such an event could happen, and how, if possible, it could be prevented.

With a population of 25,000 enrolled students, Virginia Tech closely resembles the University of Massachusetts population, but UMass student and Fairfax County, Virginia native Emily Trayers feels the resemblance is deeper.

"Virginia Tech and UMass are similar; both are large state universities with and international student communities, and we are both comforted by the comfort of rolling hills," she said.

Trayers, a native of the same county as a large number of the Virginia Tech students, also said that "the healing process for V-Tech students has already begun."

In light of the shootings and the parallels of Virginia Tech and UMass, UMass Director of Environmental Health and Safety and Special Assistant to the Vice Chancellor of A&F for Emergency Preparedness, Donald Robinson, commented on UMass' ability to respond to a shooting of that magnitude.

"The role of the EOC is to support the response to any incident," Robinson said. "This is referred to as an all-hazards approach.

"From the EOC we should have access to all communication modalities on campus," he added. "We are continuing to review and improve the communication systems and will closely monitor the VT situation to see if there are additional areas for us to improve upon."

Trayers reflected, "Terrorism and random violence know no race, no gender and no generation."

When asked about UMass' plan against something of this enormity, Robinson said, "We have spent considerable time on the issue of emergency preparedness."

See SHOOTING on page 5

Police confirmed that Seung-hui Cho, 23, was the gunman who killed 32 people and then took his own life at Virginia Tech.

Camping out for a cure

Members of the Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity have been camping out on the library lawn since April 16 in an effort to raise money for the American Cancer Society. They hope to exceed last year's fundraising total of $1,500.

SGA senators plan for Lobby Day, allocate funds

BY AMBER L. VAILLANCOURT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Short and sweet is one way you could describe the 1,524th regular meeting of the Student Government Association (SGA) at the University of Massachusetts last night.

Announcements included reminders about several events transpiring within the next week. The fifth annual Relay for Life will take place on April 29 at Amherst College. State Representative Ellen Story will be the keynote speaker at the event.

Also, the 26 senators present were reminded about the 11th annual Comedy Jam presented by Student Valley Productions (SVP).

The event will take place on both April 20 and 21 in Bartlett Hall in room 65 from 8 p.m. to 11 p.m.

Senators spoke about the Public Higher Education Network of Massachusetts (PHENOM) Lobby Day, which will take place on April 25 at the State House in Boston.

Senator Ruth Thompson reported to the Senate on the Ways and Means Committee, explaining the remaining meetings of the committee, which consist of finalizing the budget, distributing budgets and letters to Registered Student Organizations (RSOs) and handling appeals of RSOs if they have extenuating circumstances.

Senator Carla Dominguez reported on behalf of the Finance Committee, releasing the current budget, which sits at $11,088.

With just four meetings to go before the end of the semester, Dominguez explained to the Senate that she felt the Finance committee was in good shape.

One-thousand dollars was recently allocated to the Radical Student Union to use as an honorarium for guest speaker Brian Tokar, an activist, author and speaker who lectures about biotechnology.

Motion 2007-344 was passed unanimously by the Senate to support the allocation.

Tokar has simultaneous degrees from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT) in both biology and physics, and also a master's degree in biophysics from Harvard University.

Tokar's lecture presented by the Radical Student Union will take place on April 24 at 7:30 p.m. in the Lincoln Campus Center.

Senator Dominguez also

See SGA on page 5

RIAA cracks down on illegal downloads

BY DEBBIE FRIEDMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

As the Recording Industry Association of America (RIAA) continues to crack down on college students who illegally download music, University of Massachusetts students in particular are feeling the heat.

According to a memo released by the RIAA, a third wave of 413 pre-litigation settlement letters have been sent to 21 universities nationwide. Thirty-two of those letters have been sent directly to the University of Massachusetts.

In February 2007, the RIAA launched a more aggressive program aimed at deterring and educating college students about illegal file trafficking. This program provides the opportunity for students to "resolve copyright infringement claims against them at a discounted rate before a formal lawsuit is filed," according to the memo.

Recent survey data is one of the major reasons why the recording industry continues to step up its deterrence campaign against college students. The RIAA memo specifically cites findings released by the Student Monitor in the spring of 2006, showing that more than half of college students download music and movies illegally.

Additionally, a survey conducted by Survey U in late March 2007 states that "67 percent of students on college campuses are still not

See RIAA on page 5

Flood causes damage to O-Hill dorms

BY LORAINE BURGER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It seems that spring progresses, more snow, wind and rain arrives. Since early last week, Amherst has experienced at least an inch of precipitation each day, and it has yet to stop.

While most students complain about walking to class in the rain, some Orchard Hill residents have a few more complaints than most on the University of Massachusetts campus.

Over the weekend, several lower floors of Field and Grayson residence halls experienced flooding in their dorm rooms.

The middle floors of the halls were more flooded than lower floors because the rain water wasn't coming from the ground up.

It was coming straight through the walls from the horizontal rain that fell overnight. Textbooks and papers, among other things, weren't damaged beyond being water-logged.

"I had a friend over the night before who was sleeping on the ground," said Margit Andreassen, a freshman and Field Hall resident. "At about 9:45 we noticed a puddle and that half the carpet was soaked."

Students were told that there was a problem with the sealants around their lower windows and that maintenance staff would arrive Tuesday to fix the problem.

Tuesday came and went, and students of Field Hall have yet to hear from them.

No electronics were reported to be damaged.

"The Commonwealth of

See FLOODING on page 5

Students in the Grayson and Field residence halls have complained of property damage due to the ongoing rain.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVII
Issue 120

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Eric Arbaa
Managing Editor Rob Greenfield
Business Manager Dan Conti
Production Manager Amanda Allen
Night Supervisor Sherol Wolnik
Advertising Manager Jamieson Porter
Advertising Production Molly Eggleston
Arts & Living Editor Morgan Rousseau
Comics Editor Adam Stagnin
Editorial Editor Tucker Merrick
News Editor Matt Bellaveau
Sports Editor Danny Picard
Sports Editor Jon Pelland
Features Editor Melissa D'Amico
Circulation Manager Jeff Dentz
Asst. Business Manager David Valade
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Nicole Poddester
Asst. Arts & Living Tim McCall
Asst. Arts & Living Sydnes Towne
Assistant News Anna Dohanitis
Assistant News Nicole Boonjakuakul
Assistant Editorial Brendan Hall
Assistant Sports Jeremy Rice
Web Editor James Hale
Photo Editor Toan Trinh

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the fall and spring semesters of the University of Massachusetts Amherst academic year. The Collegian is independently funded, including its advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life. By the end of its first year in 1891, the Weekly Collegian changed its name to the Tri-Weekly Collegian. In 1906 it was the Tri-Weekly Collegian. In 1956 it became the Daily Collegian. The Collegian has been independently owned since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 A.M. and 3:30 P.M.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Rob Greenfield

COPY EDITOR
Nicole Boonjakuakul

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

If you see news happening, call us at 545-1809 and snap a photo with your cell phone, then send it to news@dailycollegian.com

Experts share tips for staying safe on college campuses

By Lexie Clinton
The Daily Cardinal (U. Wisconsin)

MADISON, Wis. — Every campus crime sends shock waves across the isthmus, but the question still remains for every student leaving the University of Wisconsin's College Library at 3 a.m.: Am I safe?

Talking to different safety experts produced different advice but they all agreed students have a significant role in their own safety.

After hearing about the incidents of sexual assault, abduction and robbery affecting UW-Madison students this school year, Katherine Andriole, assistant program director at Security on Campus, a nonprofit, said students need to recognize the Madison environment simply may not be safe.

"If there really is a safety concern on campus, it is not a wise decision to walk home late at night, regardless whether you've been drinking or you're walking home from the library," Andriole said. "Avoid any vulnerable situation that you could put yourself in when you know your campus is not safe," she said.

The UW-Madison Police Department suggests when walking alone one should "walk in a brisk manner on well-lighted streets away from bushes or alleys," "have keys and cell phone accessible," while keeping hands free and maintaining an assertive posture.

Also, UWPD Lt. Eric Holen said, "If someone has a perception that they're not safe, hopefully they'll use some of the resources available that are designed to make them safer."

Students regularly use university-funded resources, like SAFEwalk, SAFEride and SAFEbus. But in some situations, the resources do not always cater to the student on the go.

"I usually wait for the bus, but sometimes it just takes too long and you don't know if it's coming soon, so I end up walking," said UW-Madison sophomore Lauren Dahlin.

In situations like this, Erin Weed, author of "Girls Fight Back!: The College Girl's Guide to Protecting Herself," recognizes walking alone is inevitable.

"I've heard many personal safety experts give advice like, 'Whatever you do, never ever walk alone at night.' What? Is that even practical or possible?" Weed writes in her book.

Instead, Weed says fight back.

If an attacker does approach, Weed says it is important to create verbal and physical boundaries. She recommends using this phrase: "Stop. Leave me alone. I don't want any problems."

When words are not enough, Weed recommends using physical force. She says even the smallest frames can effectively fight back.

Some basic tips include using the heel of the palm to upwardly strike an attacker's nose, bending down to the ground to build up forceful kicks or using carefully placed eye jabs.

Taking a self-defense class is the best possible way to train the body, Weed says, and UW-Madison provides students with that option.

There is a Chimera Self Defense Program offered in Gordon Commons that teaches verbal assertiveness skills and physical techniques to reduce the risk of harassment and assault. A six-hour course is $20.

Even if students learn specific techniques and utilize safety resources, being intoxicated can significantly impair their sense of safety, experts say.

"We are constantly seeing cases of sexual assault where alcohol is involved," Andriole said. "Statistics range anywhere from 60 to 90 percent depending on who you ask, but it's really common to have the two connected."

Andriole said students sometimes do not report crimes that happened when they were intoxicated because they think it could somehow be used against them or they could receive a citation.

However, Andriole said victims, particularly those of sexual assault, should not hesitate to contact authorities, regardless if they have been drinking. She said she knew of "no cases off hand where a victim has reported some type of crime and has given context – 'I was intoxicated' – and has therefore gotten in trouble."

Amherst Police log

Man arrested for stolen street signs, marijuana

Tuesday
April 17

3:19 p.m.

A man reported larceny on Northampton Road, claiming that two Hispanic males have been taking cans from trash bags at his residence.

5:01 p.m.

An animal complaint was reported on Pine Street when a skunk had been found lying on the ground in a lethargic state for several hours. The animal was later put down.

5:40 p.m.

A man reported a disturbance at the bus stop on University Drive. He said that another man had been harassing him. The suspect was gone upon the police's arrival.

5:58 p.m.

A man called police from the post office on University Drive reporting that he received a package that was labeled with a biohazard sticker, and claimed that his hands were irritated after touching the package. Police investigated and found no harm from the package. The man was brought to Cooley Dickinson Hospital for treatment.

6:12 p.m.

A woman reported fraud when her mother opened a credit card in her name and spent approximately $1,000. The woman contacted her mother who said she would pay the balance; she has not done so yet.

9:49 p.m.

A reoccurring male party was acting strange in Judie's Restaurant; workers asked him to leave. The male identified himself to police as "Dave," which turned out to be false. Police are investigating the male's identity who is possibly the same man involved in similar incidents at Mt. Holyoke College.

Wednesday
April 18

3:02 a.m.

Nathaniel C. Milch, 18, of Pelham, was summoned to court for receiving stolen property and possession of a Class D substance. Police confiscated $250 of stolen Amherst street signs and a small amount of marijuana.

Compiled by Holly Seabury

Lawmakers debate in-state tuition for immigrants

By Ken Maguire
Associated Press

BOSTON — The state's Board of Higher Education on Thursday steps back into the debate of whether to let undocumented immigrant students pay the same in-state tuition at state colleges as Massachusetts residents.

The board has a motion before it to receive a two-page "questions-and-answers" document that states the cost to accept these students "would likely result in extra revenue to the schools and the commonwealth."

The document, crafted by a subcommittee, states that the debate around the issue is likely to continue in the Statehouse because of pending legislation, and intends to answer frequently asked questions.

The document states that "there appears to be some misunderstanding about the issues and potential impact" of legislation allowing undocumented immigrant students to get in-state tuition.

It cites a Massachusetts Taxpayers Foundation report from January 2006 that says between 400 and 600 students might enter Massachusetts schools as a result of such a bill, and that it likely would result in $2.5 million of extra revenue.

Out-of-state students pay on average $30,000 more than in-state peers over the course of four years at a Massachusetts school, the document states.

Board chairman Aaron Spencer did not return a call to comment Wednesday. Ali Noorani, executive director of the Massachusetts Immigrant and Refugee Advocacy Coalition, applauded the questions-and-answers memo.

"It's really important because it sticks to the facts," he said.

Ten states – California, Illinois, Kansas, Nebraska, New Mexico, New York, Oklahoma, Texas, Utah and Washington – offer some unauthorized immigrant students in-state tuition rates, according to MIRA.

Gov. Deval Patrick on Wednesday reiterated his support for allowing undocumented immigrants to get in-state tuition.

"My view is the same as it's always been," he said. "I understand there are strong views on both sides of the question. I think it's a question of fundamental fairness and we ought to do it."

Board member John Brockelman, a former executive director of the state Republican Party who has raised concerns about the proposal, did not return a call.

House lawmakers in January 2006 soundly rejected a bill that would let undocumented immigrant students pay in-state tuition.

Google™

Use email?
Google wants your opinion.

Schoolwork, activities, parties - if you're like most students, you've got a lot on your plate. With Google, your school can give you Gmail and other tools to help you make the most of your time - for free. Already, schools like Arizona State University and Northwestern University are working with Google. Maybe your school should be next.

Take the Google student survey. Does your school's email system give you the tools you need to manage your life effectively? Are there ways Google could help make it better?

Visit http://google.com/studentsurvey and tell us about it.

Patrick orders energy use reduction

By Ken Maguire
Associated Press

BOSTON — Governor Deval Patrick ordered state agencies Wednesday to reduce energy consumption by 20 percent in five years in the most recent of several "green" moves made early in his administration.

He also has supported a plan to build 130 windmills in Nantucket Sound and has committed Massachusetts to the nation's first multistate program to reduce emissions of greenhouse gases that contribute to global warming.

Patrick signed an executive order requiring agencies to reduce their energy consumption 20 percent in five years and 35 percent by 2020.

It also requires agencies to reduce greenhouse gas emissions 25 percent over the next five years and 80 percent by 2050.

Executive orders can be rescinded by a new governor, however.

The governor said 170 light bulbs in his office have been replaced with compact fluorescent bulbs.

In total, 1,000 bulbs will be changed at the Statehouse, eventually resulting in a savings of $15,000 per year in energy costs and fewer carbon emissions.

"It's a small start, but such small starts add up to big savings in our pocketbooks and for our environment," Patrick said.

His executive order also prohibits the purchase of incandescent light bulbs "unless absolutely necessary for special purposes, and there will be no more leaving lights on at night and on the weekends," Patrick said.

Osram Sylvania, the lighting subsidiary of German manufacturer Siemens AG, donated the energy-saving compact fluorescent lamps, or CFLs, to the Statehouse.

The bulbs were introduced to the market decades ago, but their adoption has gathered momentum recently amid worries about human impact on global warming and rising energy costs.

The governor urged residents to follow suit and replace their bulbs, which can retail for $6 apiece compared with less than $1 apiece for incandescent bulbs.

"You get back in savings what you put in," Patrick said. "You may not be able to pay $6 or $8 bucks. Start with one ... and build from there."

CFLs on the market today are around three times as energy-efficient as incandescent bulbs patented in 1880 by Thomas Edison – and last much longer. But consumers have been reluctant to adopt them for a variety of reasons, most importantly because they cost more per bulb.

To reach their goals, Patrick's order states agencies must obtain 15 percent of their electricity from clean renewable sources by 2012 and 30 percent by 2020; and use biofuels for 5 percent of heating oil next winter, 5 percent in 2008-09.

Samuel Krasnow, a policy advocate for nonprofit research group Environment Northeast, said utilities offer good efficiency programs, including rebates that can halve the cost of the new bulbs "to help customers get over that first hurdle."

With this proposal, he said, Massachusetts would join California in setting models for energy efficiency.

California's law, written by Democrats and signed last year by Republican Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger, requires California to reduce emissions by an estimated 25 percent by 2020 – an estimated 174 million metric tons.

Earlier this year, Australia's government announced plans to ban incandescent bulbs within three years.

In January, Patrick signed Massachusetts into the Regional Greenhouse Gas Initiative, designed to curb carbon dioxide emissions from power plants by 10 percent by 2019.

It has already been signed by governors from Connecticut, Delaware, Maine, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York and Vermont.

Former Gov. Mitt Romney opted out of the agreement in 2005, saying it could drive up energy costs for consumers.

Patrick acknowledged that joining the pact could drive up electricity bills by $3 to $16 on the average household with an annual energy bill of $950.

Taxpayers avoid penalties for server delay

By Jordan Robertson
Associated Press

SAN JOSE, Calif. — Taxpayers who couldn't electronically file 11th-hour returns using Intuit Inc.'s TurboTax, ProSeries and other software won't be penalized for delays caused by the company's overtaxed servers, the Internal Revenue Service said Wednesday.

"We will do everything we can to assist taxpayers affected by the situation," said IRS spokesman Bruce Friedland. "If people couldn't e-file last night, we encourage them to file as soon as they can."

A record number of returns from individual taxpayers and accountants on Tuesday choked the Mountain View-based company's computers, leading to delays in customers receiving confirmation that their returns had been submitted successfully, Intuit spokeswoman Julie Miller said.

As the midnight filing deadline approached, the problem got worse.

Usually, it takes only a few minutes after hitting the submit button for TurboTax users to get a confirmation. By Tuesday evening, it was taking hours. Returns are not transmitted to the government until Intuit processes them and sends a notice to the taxpayer.

The company's server farm near San Diego processed more than a million returns Tuesday alone, twice the amount during the peak filing day last year, Miller said.

And once the system reached its capacity, many filers were simply turned away. The company said it does not yet know how many people were affected, and it has not received reports of users mistakenly paying multiple e-filing fees as they tried to resubmit their returns.

Penalties for late filing start at five percent of the unpaid taxes per month, and max out at a total of 25 percent. The IRS said it would extend the deadline to midnight April 19 for people who encountered problems.

Customers lit up Intuit's online customer support forums with complaints, with some angrily swearing off Intuit's software altogether for future returns and others threatening to sue the company if they were penalized by the IRS.

Beyond Intuit's consumer products, the delays also hampered professional tax preparers who use the company's Lacerte brand software.

Wesley Fachner, a certified public accountant in Campbell, Calif., said the slowdowns started Monday and got worse Tuesday, with backups cropping up for nearly all of the 20 returns he filed those days. The system would alert him that the files were having trouble transferring, or were sitting in a queue behind other returns and weren't being processed.

"I just kept sending it until it got through – it was stopping my work process and I wanted those things out of my hair," he said. "Eventually, there must have been a little gap and it would get through."

Fachner said he had no plans to stop using Intuit software.

"If it had been happening in March, I would have been a little upset – that would have shown their systems weren't in good order," he said. "But on the 16th and 17th of April, with the volumes they were getting hit with, I can't say it's their fault."

Kansas City, Mo.-based H&R Block Inc., whose TaxCut software also allows people to file electronically, said Wednesday it did not experience any slowdowns despite a similar spike in traffic. The company did not provide details on the number of filings it received.

Technology experts were flabbergasted that Intuit was caught off guard by a surge in activity on its busiest day of the year.

"The irony is that most servers are just at 18 to 20 percent of their capacity. This was probably not a capacity issue but a configuration issue," said Bruce Milne, vice president of products and marketing for 1by1performix Inc., an Austin, Texas-based company that makes IT capacity planning software. "They probably could have avoided this whole thing altogether without a lot of extra expense" by performing more capacity analysis beforehand, he said.

Comedian requests paternity test in response to lawsuit

Kali Bowyer filed a lawsuit against comedian Chris Rock, alleging that he is the father of her 13-year old son, Jordan.

By Russ Bynum
Associated Press

STATESBORO, Ga. — Chris Rock has asked a Georgia court to start paternity proceedings to determine if he's the father of a 13-year-old boy whose mother tried to file a paternity lawsuit against the actor and comedian last month.

Rock "desires to contribute to the support, maintenance, and education" of the boy if there's evidence to prove he's the father, according to papers that Rock's attorney filed Monday in Bulloch County, Superior Court.

Kali Bowyer, who lives in Bulloch County, sought last month to file a paternity lawsuit against Rock seeking child support and medical coverage for her son, Jordan. She withdrew the lawsuit after court officials told her it was outside the southeast Georgia County's jurisdiction because Rock is a New Jersey resident. However, Rock, who has two young children with his wife of ten years, Malaak, is requesting that the matter be taken up in the Georgia court.

"She is looking forward to establishing that Mr. Rock is the father of their son and bringing the case to a swift conclusion," Brett Kimmel, Bowyer's attorney in New York, said Wednesday.

Kimmel declined to answer questions about what sort of relationship Bowyer claims to have had with Rock, or why she waited 13 years to seek a paternity claim. Bowyer told the Statesboro Herald last week that she and Rock "were friends and we spent time together."

Rock's attorney, John Mayone of Atlanta, and his publicist, Leslie Sloane, did not immediately return telephone calls by The Associated Press seeking comment.

Rock recently directed and starred in the film "I Think I Love My Wife," and is behind the hit television series, "I very body Hates Chris," which is based on his childhood.

Taste of UMass
2007
THURSDAY APRIL 19, from 5:00 to 8:00 PM
The nation's largest campus food service event
Food
75 food and beverage booths from around the world with healthy options
Competition
Official sanctioned Nathan's Famous Hot Dog Eating Contest,
UMass Idol – Singing Contest
Prizes
Many great door prizes!
Fun
Cooking and Demonstration with Celebrity Chef
Jet Tila
Autographs
New England Patriot Cheerleaders
Appearances
Minuteman Mascot
Entertainment
Magic Show and Battle of the Bands
Knowledge
Sustainability and Buying Local
Free
For students on the Meal Plan or $11 cash
AT THE MULLINS CENTER
DINING SERVICES
All DCs will be closed at 3:00 pm and special buses to Mullins will leave at 4:00.
Doors Open at 4:30

Police find body of missing volunteer

BY OLIVER TEVES
ASSOCIATED PRESS

Julia Campbell's Internet blog said she was "buhay pa," a Filipino phrase for "still alive."

The Jan. 13 posting, which detailed her experiences surviving a typhoon, explained that she had adopted the phrase soon after arriving in the country two years ago, calling it the most familiar response when Filipinos are asked how they are doing.

Family and friends were hoping for a similar message from her after she disappeared April 8 while on a trip to see the famed mountainside rice terraces of Banaue, in a remote part of Ifugao province.

But on Wednesday, soldiers found Campbell's body buried in a shallow grave in a dry river bed in the area of the northern Philippines where she was hiking by herself. Police said they believed foul play was involved.

Campbell's family has said the daughter of a former U.S. Marine captain was an "alert and careful traveler" who would not easily be duped by people with "malevolent intent."

"She knows how to look out for herself. Julia Campbell is not an easy target," the family said in a profile they put together during the 10-day search for her.

Senior Superintendent Pedro Ganir, Ifugao's provincial police chief, told The Associated Press by telephone that a stray dog had dug out one of Campbell's feet by the time soldiers discovered the body, which was covered with dirt in the creek.

A pair of reading glasses and a sandal were found nearby, he said.

Ganir said Campbell was last seen buying a soda at a store in the town of Batad. She had bought a bus ticket to return to Manila by April 9, indicating she did not plan to extend her stay or embark on a long hike, he said.

A former long-distance runner from Fairfax, Va., Campbell, 40, had worked as freelance journalist for The New York Times, Fox.com, CourtTV.com, People magazine and Star magazine. In December, she contributed a story for CNN after superty phoon Durian devastated the Philippines' Albay province, where she worked as an English teacher.

Her family said she was a certified yoga instructor who loved to sample different cultures, citing her extensive travels throughout Europe, Morocco, Cambodia, Thailand and Vietnam. They also described her as a caring person who would give away her last cent to anyone in need, working as Red Cross volunteer after the Sept. 11 attacks.

"These qualities and the many others she embodies led her to embrace her most recent career choice to join the Peace Corps," her family said.

In a May 27, 2005, blog entry – two weeks before she was officially sworn in as a volunteer – Campbell anticipated the "beginning of my journey here," where she would "no longer have the comfort of fellow Americans within reach."

Last October, she began teaching English at the Divine World College in Legazpi city in Albay province, southeast of Manila, and had about two weeks left in the term. Her immediate superior, Assistant Dean Nora Gallano of the school's College of Liberal Arts, called her a kind, generous, friendly person who was dedicated to her work.

Campbell earlier worked at Donsol High School in nearby Sorosogon province, where she helped restock its library by mobilizing friends and relatives in a campaign she called "A Book and A Buck."

She also helped launch an ecology awareness campaign and build an Eco Center in Donsol, which has been attracting tourists to watch the whale sharks that visit the fishing town every December-June.

Last November, she weathered superty phoon Durian, one of the strongest storms to hit the country in recent years. It killed more than 1,000 people as it slammed into Legazpi and sent tons of debris cascading down the slopes of the Mayon volcano.

"For a few minutes there, as the flood waters rushed inside my little apartment on Marquez Street, I wondered, 'Is this the way it's going to be?' I'll drown right here inside my tiny apartment far away from my family and friends?" she wrote in her blog.

Court supports abortion procedure ban

BY MARK SHERMAN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court's conservative majority upheld a nationwide ban Wednesday on a controversial abortion procedure in a decision that sets the stage for additional restrictions on a woman's right to choose.

For the first time since the court established a woman's right to an abortion in 1973, the justices said the Constitution permits a nationwide prohibition on a specific abortion method. The court's liberal justices, in dissent, said the ruling chips away at abortion rights.

The 5-4 decision written by Justice Anthony Kennedy said the Partial Birth Abortion Ban Act that Congress passed and President Bush signed into law in 2003 does not violate a woman's constitutional right to an abortion.

Siding with Kennedy were Bush's two appointees, Chief Justice John Roberts and Justice Samuel Alito, along with Justices Antonin Scalia and Clarence Thomas.

The law is constitutional despite not containing an exception that would allow the procedure if needed to preserve a woman's health, Kennedy said. "The law need not give abortion doctors unfettered choice in the course of their medical practice," he wrote in the majority opinion.

Doctors who violate the law face up to two years in federal prison. The law has never taken effect, pending the outcome of the legal fight.

Kennedy's opinion was a long-awaited resounding win that abortion opponents expected from the more conservative bench.

In dissent, Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg said the ruling "cannot be understood as anything other than an effort to chip away at a right declared again and again by this court."

Dr. LeRoy Carhart, the Bellevue, Neb., doctor who challenged the federal ban, said, "I am afraid the Supreme Court has just opened the door to an all-out assault on" the 1973 ruling in Roe. Wade.

The administration defended the law as drawing a bright line between abortion and infanticide.

Reacting to the ruling, Bush said that it affirms the progress his administration has made to defend the "sanctity of life."

"I am pleased that the Supreme Court has upheld a law that prohibits the abhorrent procedure of partial birth abortion," he said. "Today's decision affirms that the Constitution does not stand in the way of the people's representatives enacting laws reflecting the compassion and humanity of America."

It was the first time the court banned a specific procedure in a case over how – not whether – to perform an abortion.

Abortion rights groups as well as the leading association of obstetricians and gynecologists have said the procedure sometimes is the safest for a woman. They also said that such a ruling could threaten most abortions after 12 weeks of pregnancy, although Kennedy said alternate, more widely used procedures remain legal.

The outcome is likely to spur efforts at the state level to place more restrictions on abortions.

"I applaud the Court for its ruling today, and my hope is that it sets the stage for further progress in the fight to ensure our nation's laws respect the sanctity of unborn human life," said Rep. John Boehner of Ohio, Republican leader in the House of Representatives.

Jay Sekulow, a prominent abortion opponent who is chief counsel for the conservative American Center for Law and Justice, said, "This is the most monumental win on the abortion issue that we have ever had."

Said Eve Gartner of the Planned Parenthood Federation of America: "This ruling flies in the face of 30 years of Supreme Court precedent and the best interest of women's health and safety.... This ruling tells women that politicians, not doctors, will make their health care decisions for them." She had argued that point before the justices.

More than 1 million abortions are performed in the United States each year, according to recent statistics. Nearly 90 percent of those occur in the first 12 weeks of pregnancy, and are not affected by Wednesday's ruling. The Guttmacher Institute says 2,200 dilation and extraction procedures – the medical term most often used by doctors – were performed in 2000, the latest figures available.

Six federal courts have said the law that was in focus Wednesday is an impermissible restriction on a woman's constitutional right to an abortion.

"Today's decision is alarming," Ginsburg wrote in dissent for the court's liberal bloc. She said the ruling "refuses to take ... seriously" previous Supreme Court decisions on abortion.

Ginsburg said the latest decision "tolerates, indeed applauds, federal intervention to ban nationwide a procedure found necessary and proper in certain cases by the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists."

Ginsburg said that for the first time since the court established a woman's right to an abortion in 1973, "the court blesses a prohibition with no exception safeguarding a woman's health."

She was joined by Justices Stephen Breyer, David Souter and John Paul Stevens.

The procedure at issue involves partially removing the fetus intact from a woman's uterus, then crushing or cutting its skull to complete the abortion.

Abortion opponents say the law will not reduce the number of abortions performed because an alternate method – dismembering the fetus in the uterus – is available and, indeed, much more common.

In 2000, the court with key differences in its membership struck down a state ban on partial-birth abortions in a challenge also brought by Carhart. Writing for a 5-4 majority at that time, Justice Breyer said the law imposed an undue burden on a woman's right to make an abortion decision in part because it lacked a health exception.

The Republican-controlled Congress responded in 2003 by passing a federal law that asserted the procedure is gruesome, inhumane and never medically necessary to preserve a woman's health. That statement was designed to overcome the health exception to restrictions that the court has demanded in abortion cases.

But federal judges in California, Nebraska and New York said the law was unconstitutional, and three appellate courts agreed. The Supreme Court accepted appeals from California and Nebraska, setting up Wednesday's ruling.

Kennedy's dissent in 2000 was so strong that few court watchers expected him to take a different view of the current case.

Kennedy acknowledged continuing disagreement about the procedure within the medical community. In the past, courts have cited that uncertainty as a reason to allow the disputed procedure.

Dr. Leroy Carhart is one of only three doctors in Nebraska known to perform abortions.

Crews move rocks in search of miners buried in wall collapse

BY DAVID DISHNEAU
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BARTON, Md. — Crews moved thousands of tons of rock Wednesday in a bid to find two men trapped under at least 40 feet of rubble at a surface coal mine.

Part of one high wall of the open pit mine collapsed Tuesday, burying the men as they operated machinery, said Bob Cornett, acting district manager for the federal Mine Safety and Health Administration.

The wall at the Tri-Star Job No. 3 mine near Barton was 100 to 125 feet high.

Its collapse created a layer of rocks that ranged from 40 feet to 80 feet deep, but rescuers believe the collapse pushed the men and their equipment toward the shallower end.

"There are some very large rocks on that side that you can see gaps, spaces, vacuums or holes that potentially, if the machinery was pushed that way, there could be air pockets," Cornett said.

Workers used a large power shovel to load trucks with rock at a rate of about 2,500 tons an hour Wednesday, but work was slowed by the instability of the debris and a boulder the size of two pickup trucks, Cornett said.

The miners were working at the bottom of the pit, alongside the high wall – essentially the side of a hill, when it collapsed.

He said one man was using a tracked backhoe and one was using a loader.

Both pieces of equipment have enclosed cabs and CB radios, although the miners had not communicated with anyone since the collapse.

Cornett said he did not believe the machines were equipped with emergency breathing apparatus. The so-called "self-contained self-rescuers" provide one hour of oxygen.

"We will continue this as a rescue operation until we know it's not," he said.

The cause of the collapse was not known, but the heavy rain during the weekend could have been a factor, Cornett said.

The mine in western Maryland is operated by Tri-Star Mining Inc. of Barton. Owner George R. Beener was at the site, according to a woman who answered the phone at a mine office. She said the company had no comment and would not identify herself.

According to MSHA, the mine has had no fatal injuries since at least 1995 and was not cited for violations in its most recent inspection, which began March 5.

It employed 51 people at the end of 2006 and produced nearly 653,000 tons of coal last year.

The company operates at least two other surface mines in Maryland, according to Ron Wyatt, a family liaison for MSHA.

CORRECTION

The caption of yesterday's front page feature photo titled, "Jazz It Up," incorrectly identified the director of the Jazz Lab Ensemble as Frank Newton. The director is Andy Snicker.

CENTRAL
UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS

APOLLO SUNSHINE
10:30 - 11:30
THE CORNERBOYS 9:15 - 10:15
MELODEEGO 8:00 - 9:00
FIVE ACROSS THE EYES 6:45 - 7:45
DEADSPIN 6:00 - 6:30
FREE ADMISSION - RAIN OR SHINE
AT VAN METER COURTS
4.20.07 RUN FOR THE HILL

AmericanAirlines®
AA.com/college
Sponsored by UMass Central Area Government, an alcohol-free event, all bags are subject to search.

Navigating the Corporate Environment
Tuesday, April 24, 2007
Memorial Hall, 5:30 p.m.
WITH ALUMNUS GUEST SPEAKER
JAMES PAPPAS '75,
Managing Director, Vice President of Putnam Investments
Gain a better understanding of what is ahead of you, as you prepare to make the transition from student to a member of corporate America. Learn valuable insight on what to expect your first year on the job and how to maximize your potential for future success.
Campus to Career PROGRAMS
FREE ADMISSION • FREE PIZZA • FREE REFRESHMENTS
To register, visit the Alumni Association web site at UMassAlumni.com/students.
Sponsored by
ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
alumni loan consolidation program
www.UMassAlumni.com/studentloans
(800) 936-4975
STUDENT ALUMNI ASSOCIATION UMASS AMHERST
For more information, contact Kate Robert at 545-3086 or krobert@admin.umass.edu

Campus, UMPD discuss emergency preparedness

Virginia Tech students stand outside West Ambler Johnston Hall, where the first shootings took place at approximately 7:15 a.m. Monday.

SHOOTING from page 1

He stressed the importance of informing the students as quickly as possible if such an occurrence should arise.

UMPD Chief of Police Barbara O'Connor said of the University Police officers' ability to react to the situation, "If UMass police are trained in responding to active shooter situations, we have a plan and proper equipment as well as a full scale disaster plan. That said, as an open campus, we can plan, prepare and work towards prevention, but no one can guarantee complete security."

Deputy Chief of Police Patrick Archibald added, "If a person intends to do harm to themselves or someone else [be it one or in the case of VT, many others] and it's not brought to the attention of authorities before the harm is carried out, this is impossible for us to intervene to prevent the harm.

Once the harmful act is being carried out our efforts at UMPD are then fully directed on minimizing and stopping the harm.

"To inform people on the scale that we are discussing here, one must use technology to be effective and timely," he added.

"E-mail is, of course, the most likely method of notification. The use of dorm phones is not a good use of time/effort. Many students do not have their dorm phones set up. Each police cruiser is equipped with a public address system. This is a device that could be used if needed," he said.

While the country may attempt to point a finger, Trayer said that "they [Virginians] are more interested in finding meaning, then finding blame.

"I have a renewed affection and appreciation to my home state."

Trayer said that everyone she knows is safe and Ok.

Speaking largely on the issues of their luck and the incident's affect on the nation, she declared, "We recognize that although this tragedy occurred in Virginia, it has a universal pain. If there is a lesson we can learn from this horror, perhaps it is to live our lives with greater purpose. We just cannot walk away from this next week, when the media coverage ends. We have to remember how vulnerable we are and how precious our lives are. Today I am a Virginian, as we all are."

"Events such as those at Virginia Tech touch all of us in higher education and remind us of the vulnerabilities that are present on any campus," said UMass Chancellor John V. Lombardi in a statement released yesterday.

"Although we have been spared the direct impact of this tragedy, we can nonetheless share in the pain of loss experienced by our colleagues at Virginia Tech," Lombardi added.

Will McGuinness can be reached at wmcguinn@gmail.com

Virginia Tech timeline

New information

Monday, April 16

7:15 a.m. Gunfire reported in West Ambler Johnston dorm; two found dead

9:01 a.m. Package recieved at Virginia post office and addressed to NBC News in New York

9:45 a.m. 911 call alerts police to gunfire at Norris Hall; police find 31 dead including gunman

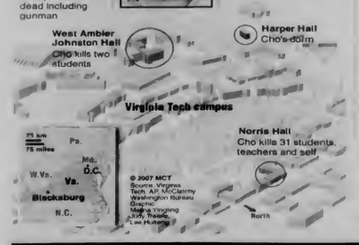
Tuesday, April 17

Gunman identified as Cho Sueng-Hui, senior English major and resident of Harper Hall

Wednesday, April 18

Authorities reveal that in 2005 Cho was confronted by police after stalking two female students and spent time in a mental facility

4:42 p.m. AP reports NBC received a package from Cho including a 1,800-word recorded manifesto, 23 video files and 29 photographs; package handed over to FBI



Sources: Virginia Tech, AP, McClatchy Washington Bureau, Google, Wikipedia, Yahoo Answers, Flickr, Huffington Post

Students express fear over downloading consequences

RIAA from page 1

concerned with their illegal downloading habits," according to an April 4th Daily Collegian article. Finally, the market research firm NPD found that college students accounted for an estimated 1.3 billion illegal downloads in 2006.

UMass junior Alex Bader is one of the many students who has paid the price for illegally downloading music. He received a letter from UMass during the second wave of the RIAA's campaign, back in February 2006. The letter informed him that the RIAA had identified his IP address, and was issuing a subpoena in order to get the school to release his name.

"I got the letter three days before the deadline to appeal the subpoena was going to end, so I didn't have time to try and fight it," said Bader. However, Bader feels the appeal process is more of a formality than a realistic option.

"It seems like there is not much that can be done to stop the RIAA from obtaining your identity once a subpoena is issued," he said.

At that point, Bader was referred to the Legal Services department, where he decided to settle out of court in order to avoid paying fines of up to $750,000 per song.

The process ended a few months later in May, when representatives from the RIAA and Bader's attorneys agreed on a settlement amount of $3,750.

Looking back, Alex Bader has mixed emotions about what happened to him and what continues to happen to college students all around the country.

"I think it's kind of greedy for the RIAA to go after college students so much, especially at public state schools, because they already have bad financial situations," he said.

"But at the same time, tons of people are downloading thousands of songs for free, and the record industry is not seeing the royalties," he added.

As far as UMass is concerned, Bader feels that they could do more to protect their students.

"Legal services does provide very helpful attorneys for a small fee, but I know that many other universities look out for their students more," he said. "It seems like UMass doesn't want to deal with the problem, so they push it over to the students," added Bader.

Director of News and Information at UMass, Ed Blaguszewski, maintains that the University only gives up the names of students when the law requires them to.

"Otherwise, we inform students of RIAA notifications based on our knowledge of the IP addresses, but we do not share students' identities," said Blaguszewski.

Yet even with many students feeling the direct impact of the RIAA's deterrence program, the effectiveness of the campaign still remains unclear.

Rolling Stone Magazine released some of the recording industries figures in a 2005 article. They found that in August 2003 (the month before lawsuits started) there was an estimated 3.85 million users engaging in peer-to-peer file sharing Two years later, in April 2005, that number rose to nearly 8.63 million, showing that the legal actions had an adverse effect on the problem.

Despite these findings, General Counsel and Executive Vice President of the RIAA Steven Marks feels that the program will be successful.

"Without question, this new enforcement initiative has invigorated a meaningful conversation on college campuses about music theft, its consequences and the numerous ways to enjoy legal music," he said.

But UMass sophomore Ezra Prior thinks the RIAA is being a little too optimistic in their hopes for this program.

"I don't think these lawsuits will stop people, because they won't realize the possibility of being charged until it happens," he said.

Bader agreed, saying that although it has stopped him from downloading, it hasn't stopped his friends.

"Even after seeing what I went through, they still don't think it's going to happen to them," he said.

Debbie Friedman can be reached at dtfriedm@student.umass.edu

Woman honored for hard work with RSOs explained how the Finance Committee had been discussing the creation of a 'Treasurer' position in the SGA.

SGA from page 1

Dominguez reasoned that a Treasurer would help cut the vast workload as well as help get money into RSO accounts faster.

In motion 2007-S45, the SGA agreed to recognize Jennifer Eastman Lawrence for her 10 years of hard work and advocacy she has done for various RSOs on campus.

Lawrence, who is working her last week as the Customer Service Manager of the Center for Student Development, has "gone above and beyond the job description," Senator Dominguez said.

There were also six motions on the agenda for the Senate's meeting about breaking ties from this past election for various positions within the area governments.

Of the 36 students who were involved in those ties, only one actually attended the SGA meeting.

The one student was Shannon McCarthy, a freshman majoring in Political Science who lives in Southwest. McCarthy, who was elected to the seat of Treasurer for the Southwest Area Government in motion 2007-S46, explained that she received three e-mails from Sarah Morgan, the Chancellor of Elections, explaining the situation.

McCarthy won her seat with five votes, and thought that the other students involved in ties might not have shown up because their nominations "might be a joke, some of them only got one or two votes."

Morgan included the fact that several students said they would be present for the tiebreaking, but only McCarthy showed.

Peter Barros, the Speaker of the Senate, urged the senators to go into their living areas and find students who would be interested in filling these positions.

"It would be really bad if we had to have a special election for these seats," Barros said.

Amber Vaillancourt can be reached at availlan@student.umass.edu

Principal loses bet, kisses feet

A former principal who kissed the feet of three male students to settle a bet on a volleyball game has been convicted of a misdemeanor sex charge.

Robert Holloway resigned from St. Anthony of Padua School in this town west of Cleveland after the 14-year-old students and their parents reported the foot-kissing to police in February 2006.

Holloway told authorities he paid each student $15 and kissed their bare feet 50 times each in the school's library and gym to pay off the bet on a student-teacher volleyball game.

"They didn't think he would literally do it," police Sgt. Mark Carpentiere said.

Holloway pleaded no contest Tuesday to sexual imposition and unauthorized use of public property, also a misdemeanor, and was found guilty. He faces up to 15 months behind bars when sentenced in June.

"It's not behind me yet," Holloway said as he left court.

-Associated Press

Property damaged in dorm flooding

FLOOD from page 1

Massachusetts could be liable for the negligence of university employees [or] agents up to the amount of $100,000 per claimant per incident," said Charles DiMare, directing attorney of Student Legal Services at UMass.

DiMare went on to say that the claimant would need to be proved by a predominance of evidence that the University violated a duty of care owned to students who reside in Orchard Hill.

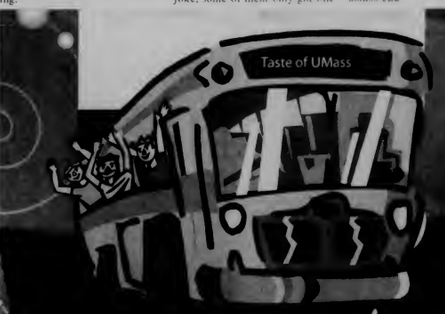
"I had some papers and a book on the ground," said Andreassen, "but I was actually pretty lucky, my computer was on the floor but it was on a pile of shoes. And I had to spend about 10 dollars on laundry because I had to [wash] it all."

The puddles were mopped, the windows were temporarily sealed and books eventually dried out. If anyone did experience any permanent damage due to the flooding, however, they're encouraged to talk to resident directors or contact the Student Legal Services Office.

Loraine Burger can be reached at lburger a student umass edu

SKYPLEX
SPRINGFIELD'S HOTTEST NIGHTCLUB
3 CLUBS & 3 DJ'S ALL UNDER ONE ROOF!!!
"LA & NYC NIGHTLIFE COMES TO SPRINGFIELD"
Thursday - 18+ College Night "Hot Body Contest"
Friday - 18+ "Underground Electronic Dance Party" Downstairs
"Top 40" Upstairs
Saturday - 21+ "Party VIP Style"
WANTED: HIP YOUNG PROMOTERS/HOSTS • Earn $$$$
Calling all DJ's
Do you do campus and house parties? Looking for a chance to work at the HOTTEST Nightclub? Here's your chance to become a Club DJ! Signup online at www.info.skyplex.us
18+ $2.00 off admission before midnight with this ad
21+ FREE admission before midnight with this ad
code:umass
10 Stearns Square Springfield, MA 413-827-9000

Taste of UMass



See you at the Taste of UMass!
Thursday, April 19 from 5–8 pm
Doors open at 4:30 pm
All DCs closed at 3 pm
Busses available at 4:00 pm to the Mullins Center
All regular bus stops on campus, plus stops:
in front of Southwest Cafe, in front of Franklin DC
and in front of Worcester DC.
AT THE MULLINS CENTER
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
umass.edu/diningservices
Taste of UMass 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, APRIL 19, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A disrespectful display

Greg Collins

The mark of a fool, it's been said, is if you continue to do the same act and expect different results. Unfortunately, the UMass Amherst Police Department, academic departments on campus who host speakers and the speakers themselves all are guilty of dismissing the quotation's message.

Last Thursday the speech of President Bush's former White House Chief of Staff Andrew Card was predictably interrupted by hostile protesters. But rather than concentrate on the utterly disrespectful nature of the dissidents, focus should be centralized on the inaction of leaders of the Civic Initiative (the host of the event), Card himself, and, most importantly, the police chief. The failure to immediately remove the protesters when it became clear they would disrupt Card's freedom of speech, was a direct slap to the face of the respectful attendees who had the right to hear him speak without interruption.

There were clear signs that Card's speech would be disturbed even before he began to talk. When asked respectfully by police officers to relinquish large posters students had carried into the Student Union Ballroom (following the poster size guidelines outlined in the campus picketing code), they refused to listen to the order and proceeded to stand in the back of the room. Once it became transparent that they would not move or give up the posters, the students were told to sit down throughout the speech, a directive they also rejected. When I asked the police at that point why they were allowed to do so, I was told that they were doing something about the situation.

During Card's speech these protesters hissed and hollered back at his rhetoric. Additionally, they carried students across the front of the room as a message of war criminals and held up a large banner in the middle of an aisle, blocking the viewpoint of those behind it. Throughout the question and answer session, an incredibly rude protester began screaming back at Card when other people were waiting in line to ask him a question.

Regrettably, Card played into the hands of the protestors.

Regrettably Card played into the hands of the protesters. Within the context of his back-and-forth rhetoric with the disrupters, his disposition was calm, cool and collected. Yet his decision to directly respond to the protesters, when it was not their turn to ask a question, is as blameworthy as the dissidents' offensive behavior.

If he truly wanted to engage in a constructive dialogue with questioners, then he would have immediately stopped talking and demanded that the police officers escort the man out of the room. This would have eliminated any threat that the protester posed to the peaceful interlocution. And if the concern was that this man would have been perceived as a "martyr," then he would have had fifteen seconds of narcissistic martyrdom to his twenty or so disgusting protesters. To those who attended the speech not to hear protests, but rather to listen to genuine analysis from a respected political figure, he would not have been perceived of as a martyr.

Police Chief Barbara O'Connor insisted that these protests were protected by law, yet Chapter 269 of Section 1 of the Massachusetts General Law suggests otherwise. According to the law, "...if ten or more persons, whether armed or not, are unlawfully, riotously or tumultuously assembled in a city or town...[authorities shall] command all persons so assembled immediately and peaceably to disperse; and if they do not thereupon immediately and peaceably disperse, each of said magistrates and officers shall command the assistance of all persons there present in suppressing such riot or unlawful assembly and arresting such persons. For the purposes of this section, the University of Massachusetts at Amherst shall be considered to be a town."

The Card protests created such a tumultuous situation that the speaker was unable to continue his speech and question and answer session in peace. The decision by the police to refuse to arrest the protesters, after they had requested them to stop disrupting the event, was inconsistent with state law.

It is remarkable that the current UMass administration, academic departments, and police continue to turn a blind eye to discourteous protesters on campus. Comparable disruptions when Mike Adams and Israeli journalist Yakov Katz spoke last November were met with similarly apathetic reactions by law enforcement officials and the host speakers. The question these people should ask themselves is why they stubbornly continue to allow protesters to dictate the cadence of the events when they know full well that the speeches will eventually be disrupted. The decision by Card's protesters to continue to yell rudely throughout the event is quite logical considering that the police, Card, and the event's host encouraged this disrespectful dissidence by doing little to stop them.

Now criticizing their inaction is assuming that the attendees did actually expect to hear political discourse uninterrupted. If these people wanted to hear the protests, then the disruptors deserve to be defended. But this is not what I wanted, and I am sure many others felt the same way.

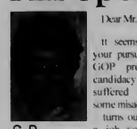
Unfortunately, Card, the UMass administration, and the police committed a grave disservice to these people by allowing the protesters to dictate the course of events, as they have continually done in the past, and by justifying this under the guise of "freedom of speech."

Not only will speakers, UMass, and the police make repulsive protesters irrelevant, if in the future, they do act, but they also will not be perceived as fools. Instead, they will be seen as upholders of academic and political integrity.

To expect anything less from this university is foolish on our part.

Greg Collins writes on Thursdays. He can be reached at gcollins@student.umass.edu.

An open letter to Mitt Romney



S.P. Sullivan

Dear Mr. Romney,

It seems that in your pursuit of the GOP presidential candidacy you've suffered through some misadventures – turns out landing a job you're not qualified for is a lot tougher than George Bush made it look.

If it's not the cool kids picking on you for not being the right kind of Christian, it's the gun nuts telling you you're not nutty enough. So I thought it might be prudent of me to give you a little pep-talk, before you get Dukakis'd right out of this election altogether.

First off, let me be the first to congratulate you on picking the right party. Sure, some might see you as a bit of a paradox – a former senator and governor from the bluest of the blue states, running now for the GOP candidacy by appealing to the sort of conservatives Rush Limbaugh wishes would lighten up.

I understand, though, what you were trying to accomplish as Republican governor of the state that begat Ted Kennedy. You're a Mormon, after all, and what do you do when you see a bunch of wretched souls that have strayed from the righteous path? You convert! A valiant effort, but it doesn't seem to have worked – from the looks of things this state is as liberal as ever. That's quite alright, though. Al Gore lost his home state of Tennessee in 2000, and look how that turned out for him – OK, maybe that's not the best example.

But notwithstanding, the Republican ticket is the way to go. I mean, it is the party of Big Business and the ticket of choice for affluent white folks everywhere – where's Barack Obama going to get his funding from, downtown Chicago?

The GOP is also God's party, and since you're technically a Christian it's the obvious choice. Yet of course, there is a bit of a problem with the fact that you're a Mormon. It is true that the GOP loves its Christians, but the American people tend to favor White Anglo-Saxon Protestants as the best bet. We were gracious enough in 1960 to elect a Catholic (after being assured that yes, he was in fact housebroken), but the tenets of Mormonism are just a little too zany. You say God spoke to Joseph Smith in 1829? That's a little ridiculous, don't you think? Everyone knows God hasn't really talked to anyone since at least the 1700s. A burning bush, immaculate conception, this stuff we can buy. But Native Americans being a lost tribe of Israel?

You tried winning the Second Amendment voters over with your hunting stories – good move.

Come on.

You've also come under fire for some of the claims you've made about your political sensibilities and your lifestyle; some say you outright contradict yourself. But they said the same things about John Kerry in 2004 and look how things worked out for him – OK, another bad example.

You tried winning the Second Amendment voters over with your hunting stories – good move. But then the liberal media got wind of the fact that you've only been hunting twice in your life. Ouch. What they failed to emphasize, however, wasn't how often you shot firearms at innocent creatures, but the zeal with which you did it.

"Shooting a rabbit with a single-shot .22 is pretty hard," you told the American people, according to CNN. "And after watching me try for a couple of weeks, [my cousins] said, 'We'll slip you the semiautomatic. You'll do better with that.' And I sure did." Now that's a real American.

I must admit, though, that your opponents do appear to have you at a disadvantage. John McCain has the option of playing the war hero card, which usually scores a candidate some major points. But if we learned anything from the 2004 presidential elections it's that we're at war, and we need warhawks, not war heroes. John Kerry had a purple heart under his belt (literally, it was somewhere around his ass) while his opponent protected Texas from the Viet Cong. The difference was that George Bush supported the war in Iraq and, thus, the troops.

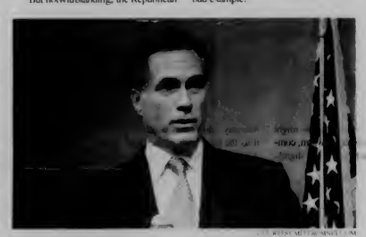
As for Rudy Giuliani, he has the major edge of having been mayor of New York during 9/11. I don't think that this is particularly fair, though. You could've done just as good a job had you been mayor.

Thankfully, our bumbling War on Terror is creating more and more disgruntled Islamic extremists by the day. You just keep your fingers crossed that the next terrorist attack happens in Massachusetts, and be the first guy on the scene with some band-aids and a broom; then you can ride that wave all the way to the White House.

So back up, Mr. Romney. The road to the White House is a long and arduous one, and after you secure the much sought-after GOP candidacy you'll have to take on the Democratic candidate. It might be John Edwards, who beats out even the likes of you for the title of most wholesome-looking rich white guy. It might even be Barack Obama, in which case you might have to come face-to-face with an African-American for the first time in your life.

Either way, it's going to be a tough battle, but you've got God on your side – even if it is that weird Mormon God.

S.P. Sullivan writes on Thursdays. He can be reached at spsulliv@student.umass.edu.



Former Mass. Governor and presidential candidate Mitt Romney has work cut out for him in his bid for next year's GOP nomination.

This one's a true spectator's sport

George Kennedy

I ran the Boston Marathon on Monday and wanted to avoid writing about it at all costs. I felt that if I wrote about the marathon I would give the impression of an arrogant self-promoter.

The truth is: I am an arrogant self-promoter; however, I have sense enough to know when I am going a bit overboard.

But this is not about me. Yeah, I ran and admittedly, walked more than a few minutes of the 26.2 miles. It was the other runners, the great spectators and the thousands who had run the course before that makes Boston the so-called "Holy Grail" of running. This is truly a spectator sport. Just as much as it is about the athletes and the great feat they are accomplishing, it would not be the Boston Marathon without the roughly 500,000 spectators that line the streets from Hopkinton Center to Boylston Street.

Everyone had their reasons for running. There were nearly 1,200 runners associated with charities. In 2006, those charity runners raised $7.5 million for 18 different causes. There were people running to honor a lost loved one, as well as cancer survivors. There were men and women who were twice my age on the course running anywhere from their 16th to their 26th marathon. So many runners and so many great causes to run for made it a great thing to be part of.

Boston's marathon is set apart from any other because of the spectacle that you find on either side of the course. Going through Framingham, I could smell the sweet smell of charcoal and burgers coming from front yards as families gathered to watch the estimated 21,000 run this year. If you have a house on the route, it is like having front row seats to the Super Bowl. The fans really do make you feel like you're in it anyway. I wore a UMass long sleeve, and it was a wise decision. People wrote their names on their shirts so that onlookers could have a name to cheer on. I was glad I wore the UMass gear because at times, all I could hear was "UMASS!" and "GO ZOOMASS GO!" I will never get a chance to represent my school in an NCAA sporting event, so this was as close as it was going to get for me, and I soaked it in.

It was the other runners, the great spectators, and thousands who had run the course before that makes Boston the so-called "Holy Grail" of running.

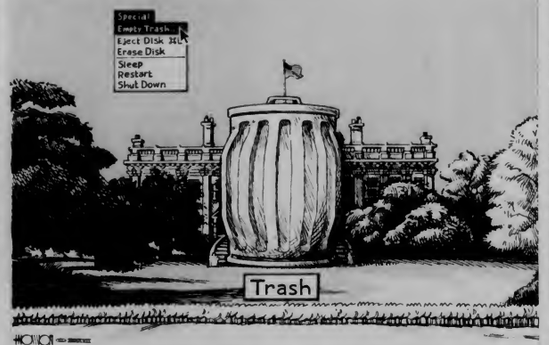
Beyond one particular hill at mile 12 you begin to hear a shrieking that rattles the eardrums. It is the girls of Wellesley College, and it is an incredible sight to witness. For nearly a half mile, the streets are lined with the all-female student body of Wellesley. Three, four and five girls deep at times with their arms outstretched to slap you high five. You can't help but smile and appreciate that it seems like the whole college emptied out to cheer on all of the tremendous athletes that day – not to mention, they're all female.

Here's an example of how amazing the fans and spectators were: around mile 19, I was really struggling and was starting to drag my feet. One of the onlookers jumped over the guardrail and started jogging with me and talking to me to get my mind off how exhausted I was. She ran with me for nearly a quarter-mile, asking me anything to get my mind off the race and keep my feet moving. The fans cheer and act as if you are the front of the pack.

When you come to that last two miles, the streets are packed with people cheering on all the great runners. Just the sight of the number of people that came out simply to watch a footrace gives you an understanding of why the Boston Marathon is considered one of the greatest sporting events in the country, or even the world. When you turn that last bend onto Boylston Street and you see the large blue banner for the finish line, it is the sight you've been waiting to see all day (with, arguably, the exception of a man who ran with a stick tied to his head with a beer can attached to the end of the stick).

Sure, there was a winner and medals were handed out, but this day is about every person who mustered the strength to run. Even if they did not finish, merely attempting to run a marathon is a feat. This day is about every person that weathered the elements to run, and cheer on those who ran. The Boston Marathon truly is an event where runner and spectator alike earn the label: "Participant."

George Kennedy can be reached at gkennedy@student.umass.edu.



LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

PRAYERS FOR VA. TECH, PRAISE FOR UMASS SAFETY

I am so glad for my safety that we have so many cameras installed in the dorms. Unfortunately, Virginia Tech did not have the luxury that our campus has, and had no way of tracking the coming and going of the killer and victims in their residence hall. Our cameras have caught countless thieves attempting to take laptops and other valuables. They have caught scammers walking through the halls trying to take student's money. As an RA, I have seen a drug dealer wandering through my dorm caught on camera and arrested for soliciting drugs door to door.

Also, in the event that a tragedy of this magnitude does occur on our campus, these cameras will capture valuable information for our future safety. Instead of complaining about our campus spending thousands of dollars on our personal security, we as students should be thankful that we live on a campus that cares to install these cameras. It prevents crime at best, and at worst, shows us the identity of criminals after they have committed their crime. I, for one, thank the campus for trying to make my living space a safer place to be. We all should be thankful.

Stephanie Wamboldt
UMass Student

DOWN: NORTH APTS.

I am writing this letter in response to Joe Hughes' article from Tuesday April 17, "Four up four down at UMass." I first want to say that I don't disagree with the whole piece. I was just too outraged at the obvious lack of perspective the author displayed when talking about the North Apartments to not respond. The North Apartments are a Down for UMass. They are one of the many cons working against students who come from the lower side of the economic ladder, and they are pushing everyone further into debt.

Mr. Hughes was right that some people used to live in off-campus hotels that I have heard were not much fun, and made students feel very disconnected. But building North Apartments was not a true solution to the housing problem UMass continues to face. The creation of a less-than-1,000 student living facility (750 single rooms), which is only accessible to the UMass community who can afford to pay an even more exorbitant amount to live on campus, shows the University's true intention in new student recruitment – the best, the brightest, and those whose parents can fully foot the bill.

I say: 'Down: North Apartments.'

Students now have the ability to live better than their peers and foster division among socio-economic classes. In an already divided, diversity-lacking school the construction of North Apartments is an extension of the racist and classist attitudes of the current administration of this inaccessible PUBLIC University. Perhaps more high rises would have been the best choice to fit as many UMass students into one place in order to reduce living costs for the entire campus community.

Anthony Hall
UMass Student

WRITE LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

GET HEARD
GET SEEN
MAKE YOUR VOICE COUNT

Send all letters to:
EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

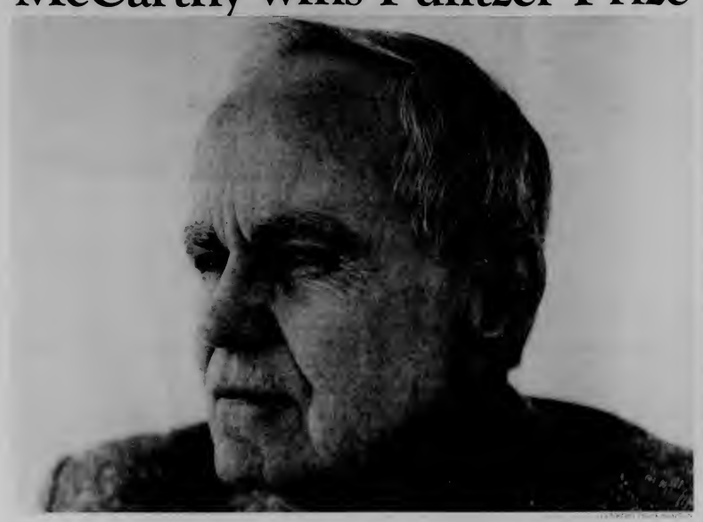
THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, APRIL 19, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

McCarthy wins Pulitzer Prize



Cormac McCarthy is the author of the new book "The Road," which was just awarded a Pulitzer Prize on Monday. It was also recently selected to be the next Oprah Winfrey's Book Club read.

By Emily Egger
Mustang Daily (Cal Poly)

(U-WIRE) SAN LUIS OBISPO, Calif. – The newest book by author Cormac McCarthy, "The Road," describes a time in America when nothing good remains. The Earth has been destroyed by some sort of apocalyptic disaster, leaving most of humanity dead amid tons of debris.

The only people left are described as cannibalists, beasts who roam the cold Earth in search of food. Also still alive, however, are our protagonists: a father-son pair journeying together across the barren landscape in search of a warmer place to go.

The father and son are thought to represent the good that is now so scarce in the world. They travel together for months toward what used to be the southeastern shore of the United States.

The father is an intelligent, well-educated, vastly traveled man, who draws on his experiences and knowledge to survive.

However, the blood he coughs up each morning is a daily reminder of his illness and impending death, a fact will leave his son completely alone in an already desolate world.

In contrast to his father, the boy is innocent; in his father's opinion, he is far too trusting of strangers. He seems unaware of the depth of their despairing situation, even optimistic at times.

This conflicts with his father's ever-present fear of calamity and the potential evil of other humans they encounter.

This profound dread increases to the point that he carries two guns with him, to be used by him and his son to commit suicide, if they were ever faced with capture by an evil stranger.

Even more dramatically, he contemplates euthanizing his son, in order to spare him the experience of living after his father dies.

The boy and his father stand out against this dire backdrop as instruments of light, as two of the final beings on earth that represent what is good.

And, while the story takes an even darker turn, McCarthy doesn't leave his characters or his readers stranded on the ominous road forever. The novel ends in hope, although perhaps not in the way the readers might expect. There is no happy, warm, comforting ending, although it is a slightly optimistic one.

Many critics believe that McCarthy is trying to represent the current state of the world through this book; some think the story is about finding faith even in the worst of situations, which could easily apply to current events. Whatever McCarthy is really trying to say, though, requires the reader to decide for themselves. The general themes will become easily recognizable from the very beginning. The title sets up the entire book as a metaphor, and the dangers that the two encounter mirror the risks of life.

This thread continues throughout the book until the very end. Also similar to life, the book is long and sometimes horribly gloomy.

Depressing or not, almost everybody agrees this book qualifies as good literature. It won a Pulitzer Prize on Monday, and Oprah Winfrey selected it as the latest pick for her book club. Also (and maybe due to this recent publicity), "The Road" is topping best-seller lists all around the nation.

Perhaps its message of finding hope in the direst of situations is what most appeals to American readers. Maybe it's the reputation of McCarthy, who many say has cemented his place as a legendary American author with this book. Or maybe it is the centuries-old story of life as a journey that applies to all individuals, and that has already resonated with millions of readers.

Wedded? What for? Think hard before saying 'I do'

By Jasmine Monteiro
Collegian Columnist

Jasmine Monteiro

Society has required us to adhere to a set of rules: go to college, get married, have some babies – not necessarily in that order. Nevertheless, I'm surprised to see how many young people are willing to get married at their age; sometimes when I talk to young people who are in that position I just think, "Wow, that used to be me." I see it, recognize it, and most importantly, I realize that I never want to be like that again.

The point is it even amazes me how much I have grown, and how much I have learned in such a short period of time. What I want and need in a relationship is completely different than it was even two years ago. So I wonder how young people really know that their current beau is "the one."

I heard that when you find the one for you, you just know. I suppose that is possible, but what exactly is it that we just know? We know that they will make us a better person. We know that they will accept us for our strengths and weaknesses. We know that they will be there when times are tough.

Honestly, I believe that some people feel this way because they are just too afraid to be alone. Not every young marriage fails; however, the ones that do will most likely be the ones that held on because they were too afraid to let go. Without a sense of self and security, there is no partnership – just insecurities and unnecessary dependencies. After all, if marriage is suppose to be forever, what are we in a rush to make it there for? Would it be so horrible if we waited and found out that our current boy friend/girlfriend isn't someone we could say, "I do" to? You know what they say, better late than never.

One of the biggest problems I have with young marriages is the fact that these couples are not financially stable, nevermind emotionally stable. You're so grown up that you're still living in your parent's house, and they're doing your laundry, right.

I don't think many young people understand or appreciate the sanctity of marriage – and who could blame them? People can just hop on a plane to Vegas, have too much to drink, and somehow end up marrying their second cousin once removed. It's just too easy. But even though more marriages are leading to divorce, no matter what the age is, young people are still at a disadvantage; they haven't completely grown up.

Even though most of us want to be married eventually, we usually need some time to enjoy ourselves. That's why many young people go straight to college after high school. They want to make something out of their life or find something that intrigues them. If you can't find your niche in college, or have no desire of going, the next logical step seems to be to get married.

If you're at a point in life where you don't know where you want to go or what you want to do, marriage can seem like an easy out or a way to even further postpone your plans. But the reality of it is it's only going to be harder as time goes on. What if you want to go to college, or begin a career that requires you to travel? You don't have the luxury of acting upon impulses because it's not just about what you want anymore.

So before you walk down the aisle make sure you understand what you're truly gaining, as well as losing. That doesn't mean to let go of a good catch. But pause to think about how much you've grown and how much you will continue to grow, and make sure this person will always learn and grow with you.

Jasmine Monteiro can be reached at jmonteir@student.umass.edu.

Willow manipulated into wattle can be used for walls

By Beth Botts
Chicago Tribune

CHICAGO — Long before there was vinyl fencing, there was wattle. What?

Wattle is the ancient craft of interweaving flexible branches to make fences and other structures. Many people have lived in huts made of wattle. Nowadays, it most often is in the form of fences, arbors, trellises, tuteurs and rustic furniture.

It is engaging not only for its natural materials but also for its traditional air: think of English cottage gardens. "It's very pretty and surprisingly sturdy," says Jan Little, manager of horticulture education at The Morton Arboretum in Lisle, Ill.

Artists have taken the basic idea and run with it. Evanston, Ill.'s Tor Faegre takes advantage of slender branches' natural curves to make furniture of surprising elegance. And Patrick Dougherty, who twines thousands of twigs into monumental, swooping sculptures, started a new work Friday at the arboretum.

Yet making a simple low fence or a bean pyramid is well within the skills of an average gardener. "I'm always amazed at how people pick it up," says Faegre, who will be teaching twig-art workshops at the arboretum this summer and fall.

You do need good branches: stout ones for the posts and long, straight, flexible ones, stripped of leaves and side twigs, for the weaving.

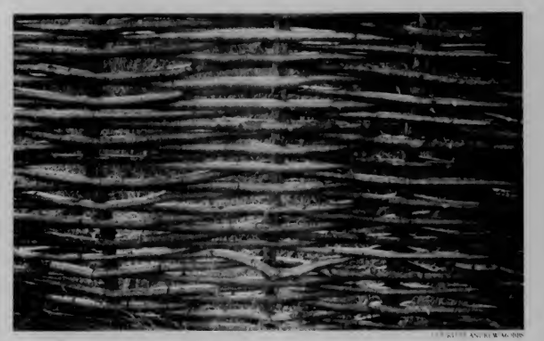
Willow is commonly used because it is supple and grows quickly. Traditionally in England, willow trees were coppiced – cut off every year to make them grow watersprouts – to keep a steady supply of wood for wattle. Other species also can work; Little suggests dogwood. Don't use forsythia or honeysuckle, which are brittle.

The best source of branches is your own garden or your neighbors' (with permission, of course). When you are pruning for the good of the plants, set aside the long, straight branches of flexible wood.

It's important to weave the branches before they dry out and get stiff. Faegre suggests using wood within a week of cutting or standing branches with the cut ends in water until you are ready.

If you really get into wattle,

See WATTLE on page 8



Willow branches are the right balance of strength and suppleness to be weaved together. These woven branches can be used to make walls or fences.

Starbucks is best known for its easily accessible coffee houses, but it has recently expanded its business to include entertainment.

Starbucks produces green video game

By Anthony Noto
Daily Targum (Rutgers)

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J. — The fictional town of Evergreen needs your help. Your mission: Explore the town, look for ways to reduce the impact of global warming and conserve as much energy as possible. At least, that's the premise of a new and free online game created by the partnership of Starbucks Coffee and Global Green USA, a national environmental organization.

"Planet Green Game" is a hybrid, being both educational and commercial. By correctly answering softball quiz questions and scoring points on a variety of mini-games, players can learn of different ways to help the environment.

Each destination a player visits presents its own specific challenge. Players can even visit Starbucks in the game to learn about a promotion to encourage caffeine lovers to bring their own mug in during the month of April.

"It's an innovative way to raise the profile of the climate issue," Starbucks Director of Environmental Affairs Ben Packard said.

The game is part of Starbucks' strategy to "green up" its brand. In the past, the company proudly announced how much of its coffee is Fair Trade Organic and what percentage of its cups are made from recycled material. There's even an earthy feel to its color scheme, which has always centered on a forest-green logo.

According to its Corporate Social Responsibility Report, the well-known retail chain has taken particular interest in Morningside Park in New York City, where it created an Earth Day tradition where volunteers gather to clean up the the park and plant shrubs. Now, the company looks to cross-promote with Global Green USA using Flash-based multimedia.

"We're the second largest retail purchaser of renewable energy," Packard said. "We realized that we're part of everyday lives, and feel responsible to engage customers on important issues, like climate change."

The company came up with the idea as another way to engage its customers and partners, partly inspired by a previous educational title called "Save Darfur."

"By playing 'Planet Green Game,' we want to inspire people to become part of the solution," Packard said. "To understand the simple and complex actions that could be taken."

Headquartered in Southern California, the group has been partnering with Starbucks for the last couple of years to educate the public about threats and help influence corporate leaders to make changes.

"It's a continuation in our efforts to help the community and environment," Packard said.

Ruben Aronin, director of communications for Global Green, said making the general public more aware is a major part of the organization's goal.

"Media climate is generating a lot of interesting ways to help get the message across," Aronin said.

Global Green provides information, fact sheets and reports – and now, a free educational online game.

"I feel a lot of people in the political arena, virtually all candidates, are making carbon emission regulation part of their priorities," Aronin said, agreeing energy conservation is becoming more prominent.

"The United States is the backwater of the world," Aronin said. "By switching over to alternative sources of energy and educating customers and shareholders on what can be done, low-income communities will benefit. The tide is finally turning."

Reusing nature for art and function

WATTLE from page 7

you might want to grow your own willows. For our area, Jim Brockmeyer, owner of Bluestem Nursery, a willow specialist in Laurier, Wash., suggests tall Salix viminalis 'Superba,' a tall shrub with yellow-green bark; Salix interior, with reddish-brown new growth; or a low shrub, Salix rigida 'American McKay.'

Because willow roots very easily, it's possible to make living fences, huts, tunnels and other structures from it. It's a craft that is increasingly popular in the United Kingdom. Faegre says even children can make a simple fence by bending willow branches into a series of overlapping hoops that well may root.

Wattle garden structures, exposed to weather and wet soil, don't last forever. Unless they root, the posts eventually will rot out at the soil line, Little says. Dougherty gives his sculptures a couple of years, but Faegre points out that it's easy to repair the woven part of wattle: Just collect some more sticks and weave them in.

Give wattle a try, and then consider whether some of the prunings you have been discarding might have a future beyond the landscape waste pickup.

Take a chance, try wattle at home

How-to for weaving willow

With help from Evanston twig artist Tor Faegre, here's a good small project for trying out the willow wattle technique: a low fence as an accent or outline for a garden bed. You can work up to more elaborate structures. Fresh-cut willow is supple and easy to work with, though twig artists also use other flexible branches. This makes a fence section roughly 48 to 52 inches long and 1 foot high.

WHAT YOU'LL NEED:

– SIX STURDY BRANCHES FOR POSTS, AT LEAST AS THICK AS YOUR THUMB AND ABOUT 2 FEET LONG

– 50 TO 60 FRESH-CUT SMALLER STRAIGHT BRANCHES, 1 FOOT TO 3 FEET LONG, NONE LARGER THAN YOUR LITTLE FINGER, STRIPPED OF LEAVES AND SIDE BRANCHES

– HAMMER OR WOODEN MALLET

– PRUNERS

HOW TO CONSTRUCT:

1. With hammer or mallet, pound posts solidly into the ground in a row, evenly spaced about 10 inches apart.

2. Choose a long, supple branch and begin to weave it in and out of the posts, leaving 3 to 4 inches protruding past the first post. Overlap branches at a post to continue the length of the row.

3. Starting from the other side of the first post, weave a shorter branch above the first on the alternate side of the posts. Continue down the row with more branches, making sure the overlap never occurs at the same post in adjacent rows. (Think bricklaying. You don't want a seam above another seam.) Continue to weave back and forth, alternating until the fence is 1 foot high.

4. Go back and weave small branches into any remaining gaps.

5. With pruners, trim posts evenly, about 1 inch above top row. Trim weaving evenly, about one inch beyond first and last posts. Trim off anything that sticks out more than one inch.

Bucky Covington offers up debut CD

BY HOWARD COHEN
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

Bucky Covington has sipped from the garden hose, used pliers on his TV and, with his siblings, ridden sprawled out on the hump of the family Chevette.

Ordinarily this should be of no consequence, but the 29-year-old finalist from last year's edition of "American Idol," whose self-titled debut CD hit stores Tuesday, has released his first single, "A Different World," a nostalgic song detailing the myriad ways in which America has changed over the years.

Sample lyrics: "We were born to mothers who smoked and drank/Our cribs were covered in lead based paint/No child proof lids, no seat belts in cars/Ride bikes with no helmets and still here we are ... No bottled water, we'd drink from a garden hose/And every Sunday, all the stores were closed."

Yes, it wasn't that long ago that Publix Super Markets were closed on Sunday. Flamingo Park Pool in Miami Beach had a high diving board. Every PE class had a kid who was picked last, who prayed the softball wouldn't come his way while quivering in the outfield.

Covington laughs before you even finish the question: How can someone born in 1977 sing about the pre-CD, pre-cell phone, pre-Internet, pre-litigious days with such authority?

"I have been asked that question," Covington says on the telephone from Nashville, and then lists all the reasons why he is the right man to sing this traditional country tune, a rising Top 30 hit established country artist Tracy Lawrence reportedly intended to record before Covington acted faster.

"I sucked at basketball and baseball so bad I won't even watch it now," Covington says. "I was that kid looking through the glove. We did have the model TV with channels 3, 6 and 12 and the top knob broke off it and we had to use the pliers [to change the channel]. We had seat belts in the car but we didn't use them. Someone lay across the hump on the floor board. We were drinking out of the garden hose, had to wait for the brown water, the rust, to come out first to drink it.

"I think I'm on the border [age-wise]," he adds. "The people who wrote the song aren't that much older than I am – two or three years. When I got the song I thought, 'This is awesome, but are people going to think I'm too young? Alan Jackson can sing it.' But ... I had to go with me."

The real Covington — born William Joel Covington, named in part for his mother's favorite singer Billy Joel — appears a blend of his old-fashioned, small town North Carolina upbringing and modernity. You can hear it in the appealing country-rock music on his CD.

"I do remember when CDs first came out. Who needs a CD when you have a perfectly good cassette tape," he jokes. An iPod? "I have two. Can't figure out how to download off the computer."

But Covington, who performed on the club circuit nights while working days at his father's auto body shop before "Idol," is much more assured when dealing with his career. On "American Idol," he often underwhelmed – Idol's theme nights make little sense for a guy with a core sound. Queen Night? Stevie Wonder Night? Not with his expressive country voice.

"'Superstition' is a great song, but it ain't me," says Covington, who was influenced in part by Travis Tritt and Tim McGraw. "I had a great time on the 'Idol' tour, bunch of great people, great learning experience. The only down side is these weren't songs I picked. You can tell when someone else picked that song for you."

Luckily, the head of Lyric Street Records, the Disney-owned Nashville label behind Rascal Flatts, overlooked all of that.

"I watched 'Idol' and dug his personality but didn't think he'd ever have the opportunity" to record appropriate music, says Doug Howard, a senior vice president with Lyric Street. "When [Sawyer Brown singer] Mark Miller ... called me about Bucky, we had him come into our studio and sing something he recorded. It was a whole different experience than I saw on 'Idol.'... He sang and I thought, 'I get this guy.' On top of that, personality is such a part of this business. Everyone talks about that X Factor. He just charmed me."

The next challenge was playing Nashville's Grand Ole Opry stage. Covington has now done so twice.

"The Opry stage will wear you out," he says. "The biggest difference is on the 'Idol' stage I didn't know if I had a shot at a career. On the Opry stage I was working on my career."

To get this far, however, he had to clear a few hurdles. His marriage to Crystal was the first casualty in February.

"We were married for seven years. We were young, 21. It got to the point where it was too much fussin' and fightin' so we decided to split up. But we're getting along better than ever. She's a good person," he says.

Next, he had to field calls from opportunists who were all talk but said all the wrong things.

"When I left the show you could imagine," Covington says. "One guy says, 'I'm going to make you the next Elvis. I'm not going to be happy unless you make $7 million a year.'"

Covington's response: "Have a nice day." Click.

"Mark Miller calls me up and the first thing he says is, 'What do you want to do?' That got my attention. He was asking the right question. I want a 30-year career. That's my main goal. I love all types of country music. I want great songs but I want variety, some ballads that bring a tear out of you and I want some rocking country and some straight old school."

On "Bucky Covington," one of the most solid albums to come out of the pre-fabricated "Idol" franchise, producer Miller and his client achieved that blend. Now it's up to Covington, whose twin brother Rocky has joined his band as a drummer, to prove it on tour sans comments from Simon, Randy and Paula.

"People say it's got to be tough singing in front of judges like that (on "Idol.") Not really," Covington says. "If you sing in bars about one in the morning, people get real honest."

Bucky Covington, above, was a finalist in last year's "American Idol." His debut CD titled "A Different World" was released Tuesday.

SEAmester

A nine-week semester of maritime studies and seafaring adventure aboard a traditional schooner

■ SAIL 3000 miles aboard a traditionally rigged schooner.
■ STUDY humanities and sciences.
■ GROW as a person and build confidence that lasts a lifetime.
■ VISIT ports on the East Coast, the Bahamas and the Caribbean.
■ IMMERSE yourself in hard work, the sea & maritime traditions.
■ EARN 12-15 credits in nine weeks that will change your life.

Are you ready for your next challenge?
Now accepting applications for Fall 2007 & Spring 2008!

For more information and to apply:
Visit: www.umassd.edu/seamester
EMail: continuinged@umassd.edu • Phone: 508-999-9202

No sailing experience necessary.

Sponsored by University of Massachusetts Dartmouth and the Ocean Classroom Foundation

UMass Dartmouth
PROFESSIONAL & CONTINUING EDUCATION

OCEAN CLASSROOM

Spring ushers in fresh food, flowers – sometimes together

BY ALLISON ASKINS
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

The view from the kitchen window includes all varieties of blooming beauties these spring days.

Why not add the petals of some of those flowers to the dishes you are cooking.

The petals of pot marigolds, or calendula, are recommended for salads, as are chive blossoms, rose petals and dandelions.

The bright yellow dandelion you remember from warm afternoons during childhood also can be battered and fried. The delicate young flowers are said to taste like fried mushrooms when prepared this way.

Try that with chive blossoms as well.

More often than not, the petals of flowers are the most edible part of the plant, and are best used as confetti on salads. The stems or white base of the petals tend to be too bitter to eat, while the petals will be spicy and peppery.

"Usually you just sprinkle for color," said Diane Martin-Berry of Rebekah's Garden at the State Farmers Market in Columbia, S.C.

Fellow employee Debbie Hacker has a son-in-law with an affection for day lilies.

"He picks my day lilly buds and fries them up," she said. "They're like fried green tomatoes."

Shawn Jadrnicek, a Clemson extension agent in Colleton County, S.C., with expertise in edible flowers, is fond of day lilies, too.

"My latest favorite is stuffed day lily with cilantro guacamole and a cherry tomato," he said.

"Some of the flowers are tasteless and just provide color while some, like the flowers of herbs, can add significant spice or flavor to foods," Jadrnicek said.

When cooking with flowers use only those that you grew yourself without chemicals or flowers that you know have been grown without pesticides. Organic herbicides are safe, but be sure to wash all flowers before eating.

Flowers have been eaten for centuries across all cultures. In addition to the flavor they add, flowers provide color and whimsy to dishes. Consider a corn muffin with marigold petals or a vanilla cake served with rose-scented geranium blossoms the next time you're looking for ways to dress up ordinary recipes.

Another fun way to enjoy flowers is in an herbal salt available at Mary & Martha's Kitchen Shop on Forest Drive, South Carolina.

There you'll find $8 bottles of Bella Cucina rosemary and lavender salt or Tuscan rose and peppercorn salt used to sprinkle on salads or an Italian flat bread that also is available at the kitchen shop. The two-pound package of flat bread is $20, but will last for many servings.

Simply drizzle the large sheets of bread with olive oil and the seasoned salts and warm in the oven.

The floral flavors are delicious on the thin, crispy bread and a great way to wow dinner guests this spring.

Edible flowers abound below

EDIBLES IN THE RECIPES BELOW –

Calendula: Also known as a pot marigold, a yellow orange flower that is strong and bitter. Good in salads, cooked in rice dishes or used in baked goods.

Chive blossom: Lavender flower topping the chive that has an oniony flavor. Good for flavoring butters and sauces or fried in a tempura batter.

Dandelion: Yellow flower with a sweet, honey-like flavor if using young blossoms. Older blossoms are bitter. Can be fried, put in batters or used in salads.

Marigolds: Yellow orange flower with a bitter taste. Can be used as garnish in salads or to flavor rice dishes.

Nasturtium: Flower with a wide range of colors and a peppery taste. Great as appetizers holding cold salads or to flavor vinegars. Good blended in butter.

Scented geranium. Flower with a variety of colors; the flavor is similar to scent of leaves. Can be used in baking and as a garnish.

Sweet woodruff: White flower with a sweet, nutty flavor reminiscent of vanilla. Use as a garnish, in salads or with fruits.

OTHER EDIBLES–

A partial listing

Day lily: Flower with a wide range of colors having a vegetal taste. Can act as a laxative so use sparingly.

Hibiscus: Rose, red flower with a citrusy flavor.

Lavender: Lavender colored flower with a perfumey flavor that can be strong.

Pansy: Delicate flower with many color variations. Vegetal flavor in petals; wintergreen flavor if whole flower eaten.

Rose: Flower with a wide range of colors and a perfumey taste. Remove white base of petal, which is bitter.

Violet: Purple, white flower with a sweet, perfumey flavor.

Yucca: Light green flower with a taste similar to artichokes or raw squash. Remove base of flower to prevent bitterness.

Try these recipes that use flora as a key ingredient

CHIVE BLOSSOM DIP

Makes 2 cups or 32 servings
1/4 cup chive flowers, petals pulled off stem
1/4 cup chives, minced
2 cups sour cream
1 teaspoon salt
1/4 teaspoon cayenne pepper
Combine all ingredients and chill for two hours.
Dip with crudites or blue corn tortilla chips.
From Quail Mountain Herbs, quailmountain.com
NUTRITIONAL INFORMATION PER SERVING:
Calories, 26.6; protein, .5 grams; carbohydrates, .7 grams; total fat, 2.6 grams; cholesterol, 5.3 milligrams; saturated fat, 1.6 grams; dietary fiber, .08 grams; sodium, 6.5 milligrams; sugar, .07 grams; vitamin A, 37 retinol equivalents; vitamin C, 1.9 milligrams; calcium, 16.7 milligrams; iron, .06 milligrams; alcohol, 0 grams.

NOTE FOR ALL RECIPES:
Information is meant only as a guide; the FSHA Research program does not compensate for crop-growing conditions, and some methods of cooking affect nutrient content.

ORANGE ALMOND SALAD WITH FRESH TARRAGON AND EDIBLE FLOWERS

8 servings
For the dressing:
1/2 cup white wine vinegar
1.5 tablespoons chopped fresh tarragon
1 cup vegetable oil
2 teaspoons sugar
1 teaspoon Dijon mustard
1/4 teaspoon each, salt, pepper and garlic powder

For the salad:
1 or 2 heads red Romaine lettuce
1 or 2 heads baby green bibb lettuce
1 11-ounce can mandarin oranges, drained
1/2 cup slivered almonds, toasted
1/2 cup fresh chives or green onions
Petals from 10 to 12 calendulas, mums and marigolds, combined to form a confetti.

Combine dressing ingredients in a jar with a tight lid. Shake well to blend and chill.

To prepare salad, line a large salad bowl with Romaine leaves. Tear remaining lettuce leaves into pieces and place in a bowl with remaining salad ingredients.

Shake dressing well. Pour over salad and toss gently.

Serve tossed salad and sprinkle petals from 10 to 12 flowers over salad like confetti.

From Quail Mountain Herbs, quailmountain.com
NUTRITIONAL INFORMATION PER SERVING:
Calories, 286.3; protein, 1.6 grams; carbohydrates, 6.1 grams; total fat, 29.4 grams; cholesterol, 0 milligrams; saturated fat, 3.1 grams; dietary fiber, 6 grams; sodium, 19 milligrams; sugar, 4.4 grams; vitamin A, 118.8 retinol equivalents; vitamin C, 19.2 milligrams; calcium, 28.5 milligrams; iron, .7 milligrams; alcohol, 0 grams.

NASTURTIUMS FILLED WITH GUACAMOLE

20 servings
1 large avocado, preferably a Hass avocado
2 teaspoons lime juice
1 small ripe tomato, very finely chopped
2 tablespoons finely minced onion
1 jalapeno or serrano chili, seeded, finely minced
1 small clove garlic, finely minced
Salt
About 20 nasturtium blossoms
1 small jicama
Lime juice

Peel avocado and remove pit. Mash avocado with a fork and add 2 teaspoons lime juice. Blend in tomato, onion, chili and garlic. Add salt to taste. Let stand, covered, while preparing the nasturtiums and jicama.

Rinse nasturtiums carefully and pat them dry. Peel the jicama and slice it about 1/4-inch thick. Cut slices into pieces about 2 by 2 inches, large enough to accommodate a nasturtium filled with guacamole. Squeeze a little lime juice over the jicama slices.

The guacamole, flowers and jicama can be kept for a few hours in the refrigerator before assembling.

When ready to assemble, hold flower at the base and use a teaspoon to fill with guacamole. Set each filled flower on a slice of jicama and arrange on a serving platter.

Serve immediately.

From "Flowers in the Kitchen" by Susan Belsinger (Interweave Press, 1991)
NUTRITIONAL INFORMATION PER SERVING:
Calories, 28.7; protein, .5 grams; carbohydrates, 4.1 grams; total fat, 1.4 grams; cholesterol, 0 milligrams; saturated fat, .2 grams; dietary fiber, 2.3 grams; sodium, 2.4 milligrams; sugar, .9 grams; vitamin A, 9.8 retinol equivalents; vitamin C, 8.7 milligrams; calcium, 6.3 milligrams; iron, .3 milligrams; alcohol, 0 grams.

BERRIES WITH SWEET WOODRUFF

6 servings
2 cups ripe strawberries
1 cup raspberries
1 cup blueberries
1 handful sweet woodruff sprigs
1 bottle Asti Spumante
1 large handful sweet woodruff blossoms

Rinse berries and drain well. Halve the strawberries if they are large.

Put berries and woodruff sprigs in a shallow bowl and carefully cover them with 2 to 3 cups Asti Spumante.

Cover bowl with plastic wrap and refrigerate for one to two hours, stirring once or twice.

Remove from refrigerator 15 to 20 minutes before serving.

Take out and discard woodruff sprigs. Toss berries lightly with the blossoms, and transfer berries and their liquid into a serving dish or individual serving dishes.

Pour a splash of Asti into each dish as it is served to give it a bit of fizz.

Note: Sweet woodruff can have a blood-thinning effect if eaten in large amounts, according to an N.C. State Web site about edible flowers, ces.ncsu.edu/depts/hort/hil/hil-853.html.

From "Flowers in the Kitchen" by Susan Belsinger (Interweave Press, 1991)
NUTRITIONAL INFORMATION PER SERVING:
Calories, 40; protein, .7 grams; carbohydrates, 9.6 grams; total fat, .4 grams; cholesterol, 0 milligrams; saturated fat, 0 grams; dietary fiber, 2.9 grams; sodium, .9 milligrams; sugar, 5.5 grams; vitamin A, 6.5 retinol equivalents; vitamin C, .36 milligrams; calcium, 14.2 milligrams; iron, .4 milligrams; alcohol, 0 grams.

DANDELION "MUSHROOMS"

4 servings
15 dandelion flowers, rinsed in water, but still slightly moist
1/2 cup all-purpose flour
2 tablespoons butter
Dredge moist flowers in flour.
Heat butter in a heavy frying pan. Add flowers and fry quickly, turning to brown all sides.
Serve hot.
From "Edible Flowers: From Garden to Palate" by Cathy Wilkinson Barash (Lulerum Publishing, 1993)
NUTRITIONAL INFORMATION PER SERVING:
Calories, 106.2; protein, 1.6 grams; carbohydrates, 11.6 grams; total fat, 5.9 grams; cholesterol, 15.3 milligrams; saturated fat, 3.7 grams; dietary fiber, .4 grams; sodium, 239.3 milligrams; sugar, .04 grams; vitamin A, 35.5 retinol equivalents; vitamin C, 0 milligrams; calcium, 54.5 milligrams; iron, .7 milligrams; alcohol, 0 grams.

ROSE ANGEL CAKE

10 to 16 servings
For the rose geranium jelly
1 pint apple jelly
1/2 cup rose geranium petals

For the cake:
1 angel food cake cut into three layers
Orange juice
Vanilla ice cream, softened

Place one layer of angel food cake in a tube pan.

Lightly sprinkle the layer with orange juice.

Spread a thin layer of rose geranium jelly over cake.

Place next layer of cake atop the first.

Sprinkle lightly with orange juice and spread thickly with ice cream.

Add last layer of cake.

Sprinkle lightly with orange juice and spread with jelly. Spread with ice cream.

Put cake in freezer until ice cream hardens.

Remove from freezer and gently unmold onto a serving plate. Spread ice cream over entire cake and return to freezer until ice cream hardens.

When ready to serve, slice and serve garnished with rose geranium petals.

From "Edible Flowers: From Garden to Palate" by Cathy Wilkinson Barash (Lulerum Publishing, 1993)
NUTRITIONAL INFORMATION PER SERVING:
Calories, 174.4; protein, 1.6 grams; carbohydrates, 42 grams; total fat, .9 grams; cholesterol, 0 milligrams; saturated fat, .5 grams; dietary fiber, .7 grams; sodium, 173.5 milligrams; sugar, 17.6 grams; vitamin A, 12.4 retinol equivalents; vitamin C, 8.1 milligrams; calcium, 39.5 milligrams; iron, .2 milligrams; alcohol, 0 grams.

Pansies make beautiful and tasty additions to salads and deserts throughout the spring and summer.

Roses are not only beautiful to look at, they're also fine to eat. Below is a recipe for Rose Angel Cake that uses rose jelly.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
is looking for new
Graphic Designers
for the Fall 2007 semester

- Daily Advertising Designers
- Nightly Production Supervisors
- Advertising Production Manager

major can apply. Previous design nce not necessary, but encouraged.

Visit our office in the Campus Center Basement
10am - 4pm for applications.

EXPERIENCE

Gained only through working at The Massachusetts Daily Collegian as a Fall 2007 semester Advertising Representative

If interested please pick up an application at the Daily Collegian Office located in the Campus Center basement or contact Alex Bender at ebender@student.umass.edu

49ers stay dominant

Charlotte ranked No. 23 in latest national baseball poll

BY SCOTT FELDMAN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The Charlotte 49ers continued their dominance of Atlantic 10 baseball with a three-game sweep of the Rhode Island Rams last weekend, winning by scores of 2-1, 4-2 and 5-2.

A-10 Baseball

The 49ers' starting pitching staff stayed in for 26 of 27 innings, allowing five runs over three games. Star pitcher Adam Mills gave the best performance in Charlotte's first victory, allowing three hits while pitching his sixth complete game. The only run URI scored was unearned.

Mills has been especially dominant in A-10 play, allowing only one run in 36 innings of pitching for an ERA of 0.25. His overall ERA is 0.95.

Charlotte's offense has the ability to light up the scoreboard. The 49ers lead the A-10 in batting average (.315), doubles (91), triples (23), RBIs (241) and runs (267). Kyle Rochelle (.415) and Brad McElroy (.401) are first and second in batting average in the conference.

Sophomore outfielder Sean Barksdale and the Temple Owls are 3-6 in their last nine Atlantic 10 games, and are 4-8 overall in the conference.

Charlotte was recognized as the favorite to win the A-10 title this year, and so far its play has met expectations. They led the conference in both overall record (30-6) and in conference play (11-2). They were ranked 23rd in the nation in the latest National Collegiate Baseball Writers Association poll.

As for URI, the Rams had a rocky start to their season winning only two of their first 18 games. They did slightly better in league play, posting a 5-8 record, but Rhode Island's abysmal team ERA of 6.24 will likely keep them out of contention for the A-10 title.

GW PITCHER WINS AWARD

George Washington Colonials pitcher Derek Haese was awarded the 2007 Jackie Robinson award, which is given yearly to the player who exemplifies the qualities of perseverance and courage that Jackie Robinson displayed.

Haese began his career with the Colonials in 2004 throwing only one inning his first year. Refusing to quit, Haese worked hard and would earn a spot in the bullpen the next year. By 2006, he was one of the best relief pitchers the Colonials had, winning six games and throwing for an ERA of 2.06.

The presentation comes on the heels of the 60th anniversary of Jackie Robinson breaking baseball's color barrier. Robinson was the first African American player in major league baseball, becoming a pioneer for racial integration in sports.

XAVIER STILL PERFECT AT HOME

The Xavier Musketeers improved to 10-0 at home on Tuesday, holding off a late surge by the Miami (Ohio) Redhawks for a 4-3 victory.

Xavier got out to a 4-0 lead in the seventh, with the final run coming off a Robbie Kelley home run in the bottom of the seventh. That home run would prove to be the margin of victory, as Miami scored three runs in the top of the eighth to cut the lead to one. The Redhawks would manage to load the bases in the top of the ninth, but Xavier relief pitcher David Hartman induced a groundout to seal the victory.

The win improved Xavier to 16-20 overall, while Miami would drop to 18-13. Although the Musketeers overall record has been sub-par, they are tied for second in the A-10 thanks to a 10-2 record in league games.

HENS PECK OWLS LATE

The Temple Owls (11-22) lost 7-6 to the Delaware Blue Hens (14-16) in heartbreaking fashion, blowing a ninth inning lead to lose in extra innings.

The Owls fell behind early, 5-3, before rallying in the seventh, scoring three runs to gain a 6-5 advantage. Junior outfielder Stan Orzechowski would drive in the go-ahead run with his third single of the game. Orzechowski reached base on all six of his plate appearances, hitting three singles, drawing two walks and getting hit by a pitch.

Delaware center fielder Brandan Menchaca blasted a game-tying solo shot in the bottom of the ninth. In the 10th, Delaware retired the side in order, loading the bases off two walks and a fielding error. A walk-off single by Alex Buchholz completed the Blue Hens' rally.

The pitching was very sloppy throughout the game with 10 players getting hit by pitches between the teams. The current NCAA record for batters hit in a single game is 12.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu.

Junior Brad McElroy and the Charlotte 49ers currently lead the Atlantic 10 with an 11-1 conference record. They have won their last nine conference games, and 14-of-16 overall.

St. Bonaventure holds first place in A-10 after win over Dukes

BY MELISSA TURTINEN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

After another week of Atlantic 10 women's lacrosse, St. Bonaventure is in the lead followed by George Washington and Richmond who are tied for second. Duquesne and Temple are next with 2-1 conference records. La Salle, Massachusetts and St. Joseph's are all tied with a 0-3 record.

A-10 Lacrosse

ST. BONAVENTURE LEADS A-10

St. Bonaventure played one game this week where it beat Duquesne 15-9 (April 10). This made St. Bonaventure 3-0 in league play and 5-4 overall. Not only do the Bonnies lead in conference play, but they also took the top of the leader board in goals scored per game with an average of 13.78.

In the April 10 win, junior goalie Eboni Preston made 17 saves and freshman Patty Nessle scored two goals and had an assist. Nessle has started every game this season and scored a goal in her last five games.

St. Bonaventure hosts Temple tomorrow at 4 p.m. The Bonnies also have a game on Sunday April 22 at home against Massachusetts at noon.

GEORGE WASHINGTON TIED FOR SECOND

George Washington moved to second place in conference after winning two games this week. GW's record moved to 3-1 in league play and 7-5 overall after beating La Salle 20-10 on April 13 and Temple 7-6 on April 15. Senior Kristin Karcsh averaged five points per game this week.

George Washington travels to Georgetown tomorrow at 3:45 p.m.

RICHMOND 9-5 OVERALL

The Richmond Spiders played one game this week against Massachusetts. The Spiders came out on top beating the Minutewomen 10-4 on April 15. This win allowed Richmond to tie for second place in the A-10 with a 3-1 record and a 9-5 season record.

Sophomore Allison Furstenburg had her eighth hat trick of the season, scoring four goals in the game. This was the third time this season senior goalie Jackie Swansburg limited the opponent to five or less goals. Swansburg leads the league with an 8.09 goals against average and a .540 save percentage.

PLAYERS OF THE WEEK

George Washington junior midfielder Kristin Karcsh and St. Bonaventure junior goalie Eboni Preston were named this week's A-10 co-Players of the Week.

Karcsh has scored at least one point in all of GW's 12 games this season. In GW's last two games, April 13 against La Salle and April 15 against Temple, Karcsh scored six goals and handed out four assists in both wins. Her 10 points in two games allowed her to move into a second-place tie in league point standings. In GW's game against La Salle Karcsh earned nine of her 10 points for that week. She now sits in second place all time for most points in a single game.

Preston had a career-high 17 saves against Duquesne on April 10, maintaining the Bonnies undefeated conference mark. SBU was out-shot by Duquesne 34-25, but Preston helped only allowing nine goals.

ROOKIE OF THE WEEK

Freshman Duquesne midfielder Sarah Cates earned her second A-10 Rookie of the Week honor. In the April 13 game against Saint Joseph's Cates scored a goal and had three ground balls. On April 15 when Duquesne took on La Salle, Cates had a game-high six ground balls and a hat-trick, including the game-winning goal.

Melissa Tartinen can be reached at mturtine@student.umass.edu

St. Bonaventure sophomore Katelyn Faas scored seven goals in leading the Bonnies over Binghamton 19-7. Her 3.56 goals per game average leads the Atlantic 10 in 2007.

Senior midfielder Ashley Friend's 32 points are good enough for third on Richmond. Her sister Mandy leads the Spiders with 53.

FOUR Seasons
WINE • LIQUOR • CIGARS
333 Russell St., Rt. 9
Hadley, MA 01035
584-8174
Sale date: 4/19/07 - 4/25/07
not responsible for typographical errors

Beer

Bud Light 18 pk cans $12.99*	Amstel Light 12 pk btl $11.99*	Pacifico [illegible] 12 pk btl $13.49*	Kilkenny Irish Red [illegible]
Natural Light Ice 30 pk can $12.99*	Sea Dog Blue Paw 12 pk btl $11.99*	Red Hook Ales 12 pk btl $10.49*	[illegible]
Pabst Blue Ribbon 24 pk btl $12.99*	Newcastle Brown Ale 12 pk btl $10.99*	Saranac 12 pk btl $9.99*	[illegible]

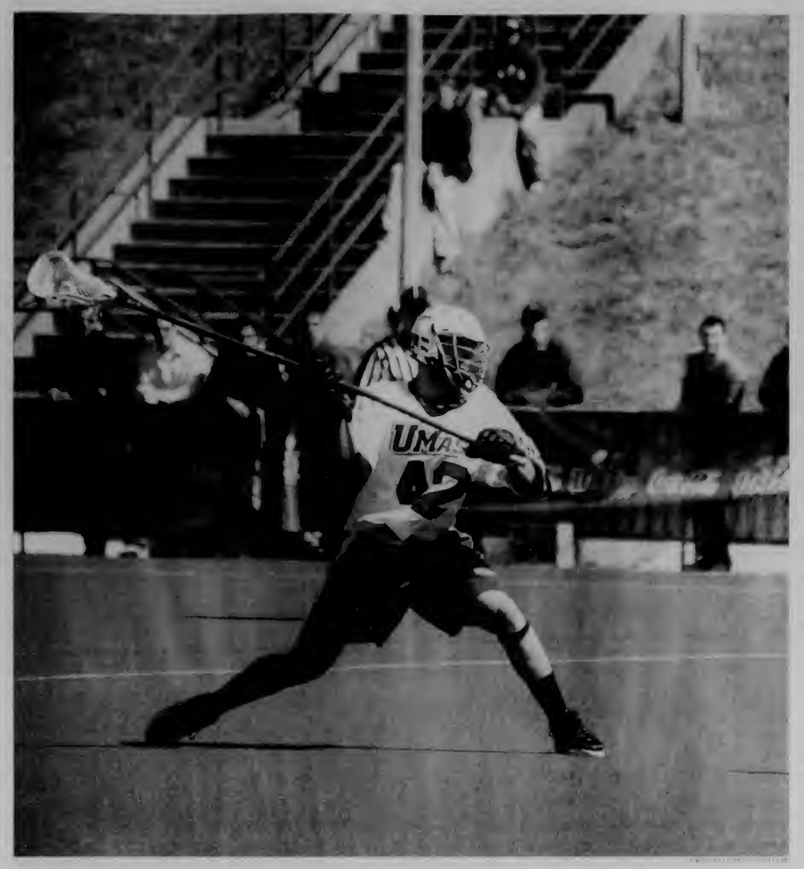
all beer prices plus dep.

Liquor

[illegible]	$36.99	Tanqueray RANGPUR Gin 750 ml. $19.99
[illegible]	$23.99	Tanqueray Gin 750 ml. $18.99
[illegible]	$29.99	Jose Cuervo Gold 750 ml. $18.99
[illegible]	$27.99	Jose Cuervo Flavored Tequila* 750 ml. $18.99
[illegible]	$9.99	Cuervo Tropical Margarita
[illegible]	$36.99	Captain Morgan Spiced Rum 750 ml $12.99
[illegible]	$26.99	Captain Morgan Parrot Bay Rum* 750 ml. $12.99
[illegible]	$23.99	Including Coconut, Mango, Pineapple, Passion Fruit
[illegible]	$20.99	Smirnoff Vodka 80° 750 ml. $10.99
[illegible]	$20.99	Smirnoff Twist Flavored Vodka* 750 ml. $10.99
		Including Strawberry, Watermelon, Rasberry, Black Cherry

SALE 4/19-4/25
10% off 6 bottles* of wine
EVERYDAY
MIX & MATCH
*Regular priced 750 ml bottles of varietal wines
Hours: Monday - Saturday 9am - 11pm Sunday 12pm - 11pm

LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO LIVE?
KAMINS
SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS
■ PRESIDENTIAL APTS
■ COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS
■ PERRY APTS
■ 177 N. PLEASANT ST.
■ COLLEGE INN APTS
■ LANTERN COURT APTS
■ MILL HOLLOW
■ CRESTVIEW APTS.
55 S. PLEASANT ST. 253-2515 AMHERST
LARGEST SELECTION OF APARTMENTS IN TOWN



Senior captain Dan Whipple recorded a career-high eight groundballs on Saturday at Hobart. His efforts earned him ECAC Defensive Player of the Week honors, although the 12 goals allowed was a season high for the Minutemen. UMass hosts Georgetown on Saturday at Garber Field.

Whipple receives accolade

M. LAX from page 14

Defense has unquestionably been the strength of the Minutemen this season, but needed the offense to step up Saturday.

Although UMass only trailed in the beginning of the game (2-0 with 11:33 remaining in the first quarter), its defense struggled to keep the Statesmen off the board, thus making it difficult for the Minutemen to pull away in the first half.

Their biggest lead of the afternoon came after they scored five straight goals to take a decisive 14-7 advantage with just under four minutes to go in the third quarter.

The ECAC must have seen something it liked because it named senior Dan Whipple the Defense Player of the Week. The long-stick midfielder is no stranger to accolades as he was named a Preseason All-American.

Despite the high score for the Statesmen, Whipple (career-high eight groundballs) and the rest of the UMass defense did a good job keeping the opposition's leading scorers off the stat sheet, Jamie Kirk and Daryl Veltman – at least by their standards.

Those two are among the most potent scorers in the country. Entering Saturday's game, Veltman had 27 goals and six assists while Kirk had eight and 29. But UMass held the pair to four goals and three assists, including shutting Veltman out through the first three quarters.

The Hobart game bloats the Minutemen's defensive stats slightly, but they are still impressive. UMass continues to allow fewer than eight goals per game at 7.98 and hold opponents to a poor shot percentage (24.8 percent).

SMOKING FRESHMAN

After being thrown directly into the starting lineup, rookie Bobby Hayes has been impressive in his first year with the Minutemen. UMass coach Greg Cannella selected Hayes as his No. 1 faceoff man.

Hayes has the task of replacing All-American Jake Deane in that regard and so far there has been mixed results. He won 14-of-27 draws against Hobart's Dan Spinella. Hayes has won 50.6 percent of his faceoffs this season (83-for-164) – last season Deane won 61.5 percent of his draws.

The real surprise has been the freshman's offensive production. He's scored multiple points in the Minutemen's last two games and three games overall. Hayes ranks sixth on the team in scoring with 11 points on seven goals and four assists.

Jon Pelland can be reached at jpelland@student.umass.edu. Log onto the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.

Get Ready to Celebrate!
Israel Independence Day 2007
Amherst Town Common

Rail Location: Amherst High school
Monday, Apr. 23, 2007
5-8 pm
Large free concert
Israeli food with a student discount
Bedouin Tent with hookahs and backgammon
Raffle Prizes including first prize FREE flight to Israel
...and much more!

THIS EVENT IS MADE POSSIBLE IN PART BY A GRANT FROM COMBINED JEWISH PHILANTHROPIES IACT INITIATIVE
MAJOR FUNDING IS PROVIDED BY THE JEWISH ENDOWMENT FOUNDATION OF WESTERN MASSACHUSETTS, A COMMITTEE OF THE JEWISH FEDERATION OF WESTERN MASSACHUSETTS
SPONSORED IN PART BY ISRAEL ON CAMPUS COALITION ISRAEL ACTION GRANT PROJECT AND SUPPORTED BY THE AVI CHAI FOUNDATION, THE CHARLES AND LYNN SCHUSTERMAN FAMILY FOUNDATION AND MORRIS B. SQUIRE
The Upper Pioneer Valley Yom Ha'atzmaut Committee includes representatives from Hadassah, UMass Hillel, Smith College Hillel, Amherst College Hillel, Mt. Holyoke College Jewish Student Union, Hampshire College Hillel, UMass Student Alliance for Israel, UMass Jewish Student Union, Hamagshimim, Congregation B'nai Israel, Congregation Sons of Zion, Jewish Community of Amherst, Temple Israel, Congregation Rodphey Sholom, Beit Ahavah, Lander-Grinspoon Academy, Combined Jewish Philanthropies of Jewish Federation of Western Massachusetts

Soderberg's removal, and other observations

GREENFIELD from page 14

guess these naïve AD's have to learn that the hard way.

Here are some other recent topics of conversation:

• Barry Bonds — Can someone just take a crowbar and pull a Tonya Harding on this guy? No one outside of San Francisco likes him, and (heard this before?) it would be a disgrace of colossal proportions if he broke Hank Aaron's record. Aaron has decided not to be in attendance, joining Bud Selig in the wings as Bonds destroys baseball's holiest record. Selig, being responsible for the perpetuation of the Steroid Era through his naivety, should end this. Suspend him. Ban him. Do something to end this cheater's career.

• Zach Johnson — Who? Yeah, exactly. He is the 2007 Masters Champion. Tiger got within one stroke but blew it at the end when he dunked it in the water on the 15th hole. It made for some awful TV. I'll bet the ratings had crashed before Tiger's ball got to the bottom of the water hazard. All of us golf-watchers have to face the facts – golf is nothing without Tiger in contention.

• The Phoenix Suns — They'll never win an NBA Championship with Mike D'Antoni as their head coach. They are fun and explosive, but defense wins championships, and they don't have any of it. D'Antoni has specifically said that he won't change his style and that they will just outscore everybody. Well, offense disappears as the tension mounts, and the tension is at its highest in the playoffs. Do the math. You can't win if you can't stop anybody.

• Madden '08 — Apparently, several athletes have turned down an offer to be on the cover of the next Madden video game. Some candidates have turned it down because they can make more money with other endorsements, but the Madden Curse is well known. Several athletes who have appeared on its cover have gotten injured — Donovan McNabb, Michael Vick, Shaun Alexander, to name a few — and it has significantly affected their respective careers. Dan Patrick, on his ESPN Radio show, said that they should put Osama Bin Laden on the cover so something bad happens to the guy. Not a bad idea.

• NCAA Committee bans text messaging to recruits — Bummer. Now coaches have to tell how much extra cash they're giving their recruits during the actual recruiting period.

• Travis Ford — Athletic Director John McCutcheon extended Ford's contract. McCutcheon has to make that thing airtight. Ford probably won't be around to see it expire.

• The American League East — Top to bottom, it's one of the best divisions in baseball this season. The Devil Rays and the Blue Jays don't have the pitching to compete with the better AL teams, but they certainly have enough pop in their lineups. Akinori Iwamura, Rocco Baldelli, Delmon Young and Carl Crawford are solid for the D-Rays. Lyle Overbay, Vernon Wells, Troy Glaus (Injury is his hometown) and Alex Rios are steady for the Blue Jays. But beyond Kazmir, Halladay and Hurnett for these teams, it's BP. Not good in games vs. the Sox and Yanks.

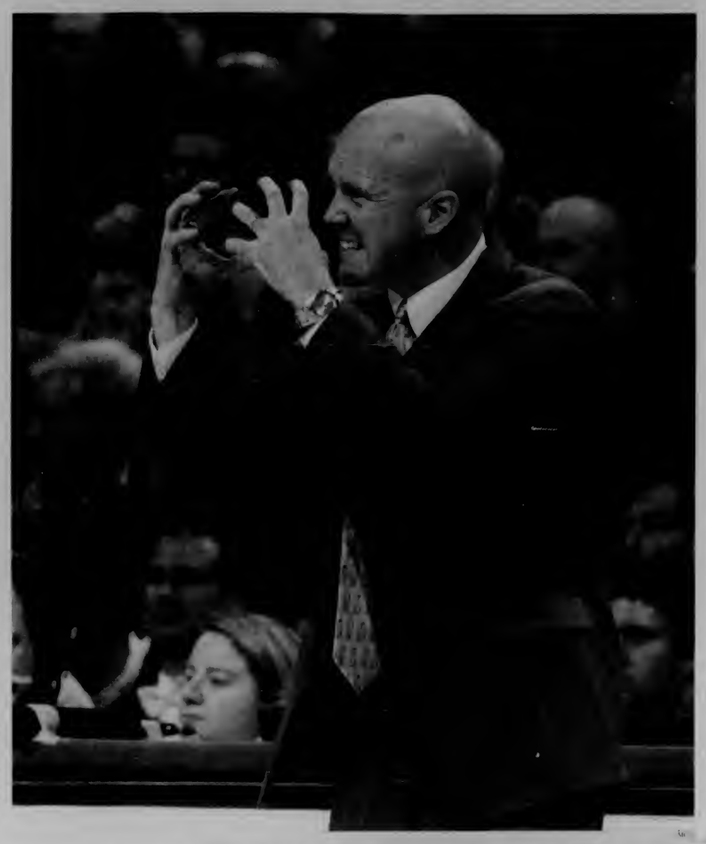
• Daisuke — I hope all of the hype machines have calmed down for now. He is a good pitcher, maybe one of the better throwers in the major leagues. But he is not a golden god. That title is reserved for the Jewish guy playing first base.

• A-Rod — Alex Rodriguez is the best player in baseball right now. His swing is beautiful. He's so messed up psychologically that I have found myself actually rooting for him. He tries to make everyone happy and in the process makes no one happy. This season he's just playing, and it's scary for American League pitchers. Also, he could be with the Sox next season — trying to make you happy.

• The NBA — I don't even watch it anymore. It has gotten so bad. None of the players care (a select few do) and the actual game is an embarrassment to basketball everywhere. It's all individual, one-on-one stuff now. Nobody plays together and nobody plays hard. It's just embarrassing to watch guys that are getting paid that much money and slacking off that much. Guaranteed contracts have absolutely killed the NBA. Now the best basketball in the world is played in Europe, far away from AAU and the Sportscenter mentality. It's going to be a European league eventually.

• The Celtics — Just give up. If any of you out there are hanging on to that last shred of hope, just let go and save yourself the mental anguish. Danny Ainge and the Celtics owners are a public humiliation. Ainge has been getting a free ride in Boston, which somehow has looked the other way while he's destroyed the franchise. Hopefully he won't leave it in complete shambles like a certain Louisville coach, Getting Greg Oden or Kevin Durant might help. But it will be just a bandaid over the real wound if Ainge doesn't stop making ill-advised transactions.

— Rob Greenfield is a Collegian Columnist. He can be reached at rgreenfi@student.umass.edu.



Former Saint Louis men's basketball coach Brad Soderberg was fired from the University earlier this week after leading his team to the semifinals of the Atlantic 10 Tournament last season. The Billikens upset UMass in the quarterfinals, ending the Minutemen's hopes of an NCAA bid.

PRAISE YE THE LORD:FOR IT IS GOOD TO SING PRAISES UNTO OUR GOD; FOR IT IS PLEASENT: AND PRAISE COMELY.
PSALM 147:1

FRIDAY
APRIL 20TH @ 7:00PM
Engineering Building (ELSC 11) RM 119
Amherst, MA
UMass Gospel Choir
Presents our first annual
GOSPEL EXPLOSION!!
Special
Guests include:
Atlantic Union Gospel Choir
of course...
UMASS AMHERST GOSPEL CHOIR!!
...and many more

KISS A SENIOR Goodbye
Send your favorite graduating Senior a...
UMass Amherst Champagne Glass or a Class of 2007 Coffee Mug
...full of Hershey Kisses to celebrate graduation!
It's one graduation gift they won't forget!
Only $6.00 per glass or mug
Available at the Student Alumni Association table at the Campus Center Concourse April 25-26, May 1-3 and May 8-10 or at UMass/Alumni.com/students.
ALUMNI
STUDENT ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

Check out the Daily Collegian Sports Blog
DAILYCOLLEGIANSPORTS .BLOGSPOT.COM

Hair By Harlow
SALON & DAY SPA
EXPERIENCE...
• Rejuvenating facials
• A variety of massages
• Nail pampering
• Hair design
Brazillian Waxing!
220 NORTH PLEASANT STREET
AMHERST, MA 01002
PHONE: (413) 253-8897

over jeans
Citizens of Humanity
Seven for all Mankind
Mavi
ZANNA
downtown Amherst

Where are YOU living next semester?
CHECK OUT PUFFTON VILLAGE!
Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments--1,2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include heat, hot water and cooking gas
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis courts.
PUFFTON VILLAGE
1040 N. Pleasant St. #410
Amherst, MA 01002
413-549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

The Journalism Program Lecture Series on Broadcast and the Media
THE ALUMNI ALL-STAR CAREER NIGHT & ICE CREAM SOCIAL
Tuesday, April 24 2007
Ice Cream 5 PM, Panel 5:30-7 PM
THE BLUEWALL CAMPUS CENTER
Steve Buckley '79 Sports Columnist The Boston Herald
Sandy Lish '87 Founder The Castle Group
Maria Sacchetti '91 Reporter The Boston Globe
Aaron Saykin '01 Reporter The Pittsburgh Channel
Audie Cornish '01 Correspondent National Public Radio
DON'T MISS THIS CHANCE TO LEARN ABOUT CAREERS IN JOURNALISM AND PUBLIC RELATIONS FROM SOME OF THE TOP PEOPLE IN THEIR FIELDS
This lecture is part of the Extra Credit Program and is funded by David '79 and Teena Kantor

Seven O's
EVERY WEDNESDAY:
♦ KARAOKE ♦
♦ LIVE BANDS ♦
FRIDAY, APRIL 20TH, 2007:
MARK SNOW
SATURDAY, APRIL 21ST, 2007:
SHUT UP AND DANCE
♦ STUDENT BAND WANTED ♦
NEED A PLACE TO PLAY?
COME TO SEVEN O'S!
ROUTE 116, 330 AMHERST RD SUNDERLAND, MA 01375 (413) 665-6788
3 PM TO 1 AM M-F
1 PM TO 1 AM SAT&SUN
NEXT TO CLIFFSIDE APTS.

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

		6	1		5		2
5			7			4
					3			5
3		8			4
	7	9				2	4
			3			9		6
2			5
		4			7			2
	8		4		2	3

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Facts can be turned into an art if one is artful enough."
-Paul Simon

PAUL BY BILLY O'KEEFE

THAT EMPLOYEE OF YOURS... YOU TWO AREN'T DATING, RIGHT?
CONSIDERING SHE'S YOUR ONLY EMPLOYEE, I GUESS THAT'S UP TO HER.
YOU'RE PLAYING WORLD OF BATTLECRAFT!!
REALLY, HEDMAN I'M A BUSINESSMAN WHAT WOULD DATING AN EMPLOYEE DO TO THE MORALE OF MY COMPANY?
WHATEVER. LOOK, ENOUGH BEATING AROUND THE BUSH. IF YOU WANNA TAKE A SHOT AT HER, GO AHEAD. NOW LEAVE ME BE. I'M A BUSY MAN.
UH, YEAH—DURING BUSINESS HOURS ON THE COMPANY COMPUTER WHICH MAKES IT A TAX WRITE-OFF.

FACEBOOK BY ALEX EZORSKY-LIE

Man, I have no friends! Maybe I should join a chat room or somethin.
HEY. Have you heard of PUTTING A FACE BOOK IN FRONT OF YOUR FACE?
WOW I HAVE SOO MANY FRIENDS NOW!
YEAH
FACEBOOK

TWO DUDES BY AARON WARNER

EVERY WEEK WE SHOW UP AT YOUR MOM'S HOUSE AND JUST SIT HERE WHILE SHE MAKES US DINNER, DUDE. SHE MIGHT BE GETTING TIRED OF THIS ROUTINE.
THAT'S A GOOD POINT, DUDE. MAYBE WE SHOULD GO SOMEPLACE ELSE.
TONIGHT WE'RE EATING IN THE LIVINGROOM, MOM.

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK BY JOSH SHALEK

Your cousin ran to Texas. He's not very bright.
What the cave ants are to Kafka, you are to Freddie Prinze.
He steals from Ernesto. Maybe Ernesto should be punished for being callous.
Maybe you should be punished for harboring Freddie. Ask your pain.

ACROSS
1 PC graphic
5 Mahal
8 Decrees
14 City slicker
15 Coloration
16 Diacritical mark
17 Small carpets
19 Pie (frozen treat)
20 Weighty books
21 Greeting card poet
22 Black or Red
25 Shorten, as text
27 Cavity
28 T. Garr movie
30 Perform a task again
32 Persia, today
33 Man from Manila
36 Fasten, as buttons
40 Among the missing
41 Part of SST
42 Have supper
43 Lanchester or Maxwell
44 Rollins of jazz
45 Automaker Ferrari
46 Baudelaire or Frost
48 "Catch-22" star
49 Wee crawler
52 Seated patrons
56 Maia Hari, e.g.
57 Affectionate touch
59 Hold up
61 Familiar with
62 Lists
66 New York skater
67 Twitch
68 Lay asphalt
69 Birch relatives
70 Matched collection
71 Pour out

DOWN
1 Neighbor of Wash
2 Mongrel
3 Lyrical poem
4 Orderly
5 Gardener's green digit
6 Boring tool
7 Singer Colter
8 Serious situation
9 Went quickly
10 Yucky
11 Tight perm
12 Actress Marisa
13 Sly noise
18 Gallivant
22 Say cheese!
23 Flynn of films
24 Build up
26 Waste pipe
29 In reserve
31 More peculiar
33 Tax evaluators
34 Truth: to Shakespeare
35 Traveler's stop
37 Sounds from a sty
38 Open, in a way
39 Showy flower
47 Dismissal
48 ___ Clayton Powell, Jr.
49 Legend maker
50 Twangy
51 Current vogue
53 Cuts and spices
54 Tighten a brogue
55 Choose by ballot
58 Knife blade
60 Little puppy barks
63 Use a phaser
64 December 24th or 31st
65 Use a Singer

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The Moan and Dove
you probably won't like our bar.
that's ok.
we probably won't like you.
themoananddove.com
460 West St. • Rte 116
Amherst, MA • 256-1710
3pm 'til 1 am every day

Unjustlied Imprisoned... FREE COMEDY
FREE COMEDY
STUDENT VALLEY PRODUCTIONS' 11TH ANNUAL
COMEDY JAM
Two nights of comedy featuring troupes from New York, Boston, Chicago, New Hampshire, and Amherst!
FRIDAY AND SATURDAY
APRIL 20TH & 21ST
8PM, BARTLETT 65
FREE FREE FREE FREE
Sponsored by the Umass Arts Council and the Student Government Association

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Relax your tortured soul, hot dogs are not actually dog of any kind. Right?

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
It's a hard moment when you realize the best thing about your band is your name.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
If you don't like the cheeks on your face at least you have two more you can work on.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
If you feel the need to paint yourself blue like a smurf, use the right paint.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Moby deserves to be eaten. Straight up eaten.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Nothing says "Milk me and I'll give you Feta" like a goatee.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
You are like the titanic. Your heart's made of steel but it breaks like ceramic.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
For some odd reason, you will find that on this Thursday you are not thirsty at all.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
It's twice as wasteful to spend time regretting the time you spent in a state of regret.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
No matter how crappy, free stuff is always way cooler than not free stuff.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
You are a goldfish in a very tiny bowl making sad kissy faces waiting to be fed.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Keep close tabs on your roommates or they will steal your identity and your toothpaste.

Chicago Pizzaria
Free Delivery!
PIZZA - CALZONES - SUBS - WRAPS
SALADS - PASTA - DINNERS
RIBS - SEAFOOD - SLICES
PARTY SIZE PIZZA NOW AVAILABLE!
CALZONE SLICES...LIKE NO OTHER!
NOW OPEN FOR LUNCH!
HOURS
Sun-Wed: 11am-2am
Thurs-Sat: 11am-3am
Order For DELIVERY or PICK-UP
(413) 549-6073
150 Fearing Street
Next to Patterson Dorm
Amherst, MA 01002

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Like no other course, Army ROTC Minor in Leadership and get paid for it! Graduate as an Army Officer full time/ part time after college www.umass.edu/army-rotc

APARTMENTS FOR RENT

Mill Valley Estates APARTMENT FOR RENT 2 bedroom $1125, 3 bedroom $1425, 4 bedroom $2175 Accepting Applications, 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winnco.com

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

APARTMENTS FOR RENT

Center of town, 1,2,3 bedrooms hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

EMPLOYMENT

Need a summer job? College Pro painters is hiring. Work with friends, steady hours, learn a valuable skill. Must be willing to work in the following areas: Milford, Millbury, Grafton, Auburn. Interviewers being held now. Please email collegepronorthbridge@yahoo.com

Drivers and kitchen help wanted. Nights and weekends. Apply at DP Dough. Downtown Amherst.

EMPLOYMENT

Moving: Local Moving Company looking for self motivated individuals, part-time positions available immediately. Weekday availability a plus. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call (413) 584-4746

Outdoor Recreation Jobs Rafting guides full or part time Massachusetts or Maine. Will train! Contact www.moxierafting.com 800-866-6943

Line-cooks needed Full-time Part-time available. Apply in person Amherst Brewing Co. 24 N. Pleasant st.

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/ hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

HOUSE FOR RENT

4 bedroom in Northampton $1300 available sept. Also 3 bedroom $1200 available now or June 1st. No Pets, Skibiski Realtors 586-1827

PERSONAL

For the coed who met Dr. Ben the speedskater on the bus. Please call 413-256-1589

ROOM FOR RENT

Amherst Beautiful quiet house great location. Need car. With Nice guy and daughter. Perfect for single/couple. Call Jonathan for details 413-253-2535

ROOM FOR RENT

Amherst nice house on bus route to all colleges. 2 rooms available immediately. Each 450 mo + electric. Call Ally 413-253-4929 leave message or call 413-626-7491

ROOMMATE WANTED

Cape Cod Seeking summer roommates starting 6/10 Yarmouth, MA near beach Female only. 617-519-0178

SERVICES

Are you getting ready to move off campus? Know your rights and responsibilities before you sign your 1st lease. Contact the Student Legal Services offices at 545-1995 or stop by at 922 Campus Center

SERVICES

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992 www.tapestryhealth.com

SUMMER SUBLET

Won't Last! Puffton Village 3 bedroom apt. rent for summer and/or 07-08 school year. Air Cond. Included. Call John 774-239-8937

Submit your classified online! Just visit www.daily collegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, APRIL 19, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

In his last three games, all UMass wins, sophomore Jim Connolly scored nine goals and handed out two assists. His five-goal performance against Hobart on Saturday netted him ECAC Offensive Player of the Week honors. The Minutemen's 17 goals marked a season high.

Plenty of scoring leads UM

Connolly honored by ECAC for five-goal day

BY JON PELLAND
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It seems like the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team is returning to the form it enjoyed last season when the Minutemen reached the NCAA Championship game. UMass' 17-12 win over Hobart Saturday was its third in a row – its longest streak of the season.

The 17 goals scored and 12 allowed are both season highs for the Minutemen (5-5, 3-1 ECAC).

UMass Lacrosse

Earlier in the year, UMass coach Greg Cannella said scoring 10 goals was something the Minutemen strive for, and with good reason. They have won 26 straight games when scoring at least 10 and 38 consecutive games when scoring 11 or more goals.

Sophomore Jim Connolly led a group of 11 different UMass scorers. He beat Statesmen goaltender, Max Silberlicht, five times to tie a career high. The attack scored three of his team's first five goals, including back-to-back tallies to tie the game at three and then take a 4-3 lead.

Connolly's fifth goal capped the scoring for both sides with just three seconds remaining in regulation. His performance ties him with senior Brett Garber for the most goals on the Minutemen (20, Garber scored twice against Hobart).

For his efforts, the ECAC honored Connolly as its Offensive Player of the Week. He's tied his career high in goals twice after setting the mark last season against Hofstra. He scored five goals against Harvard on March 10.

Along with Connolly and Garber, attack Tim Balise was UMass' third multiple-goal scorer. Balise has now scored multiple goals five times this season, including four of the last five games. This after he recorded just two points all of last season.

DEFENSE DIPS IN WIN

Including Saturday, the Minutemen had allowed opponents to score 10 goals on four occasions this season – Harvard (10), Albany (10), Loyola (10) and Hobart (12).

See M. LAX on page 11

Brad Soderberg was fired as the men's basketball coach at Saint Louis earlier this week after leading the Billikens to the A-10 semifinals.

Soderberg's firing, and other notes

Rob Greenfield

Saint Louis men's basketball coach Brad Soderberg was fired last Tuesday just a few weeks into the recruiting cycle. Soderberg's removal comes on the heels of a 20-win season. Apparently taking a team with mediocre talent and putting it in a position to make the postseason (many thought Saint Louis was more than fit for an NIT bid) isn't good enough these days.

This ridiculous move by the SLU Athletic Department makes me think there was something else going on here besides just the record. I'm not a small cog in the gigantic fabric of administrators with coaches. Executives, athletic directors, sponsors and general managers – everyone with dollar signs for pupils – are all guilty.

In the world of the here-and-now, wins need to be immediate and the product needs to be refreshing, new and everything that you ever wanted it to be. If the mountains don't shake and the seas don't roar as soon as your candidate walks through the door, then you have the wrong guy.

It's just ridiculous. Making your mark on a program takes time, patience and persistence. There are coaches who deserve to be fired, who have squeezed their last bit of welcome out of their bosses with incompetence and mediocrity. But the majority of firings come too quickly and ultimately hurt teams, players and programs.

Soderberg is the latest victim, and Saint Louis basketball wasn't going to the NCAA Tournament next season, whether Soderberg was there or not. I

See GREENFIELD on page 12

Beanpot opener rescheduled for today

If college baseball's version of the Beanpot is going to take place this year, the four teams involved will need some help from Mother Nature.

The Massachusetts baseball team had to wait yet another day to play the tournament's opening game against Northeastern. It marked the second postponement of the contest this week, and has now been pushed back from Tuesday to today at noon, due to poor field conditions at Fraser Field in Lynn, Mass.

The rain continued to fall all day yesterday in Boston, so there is a possibility that the game may be moved from Lynn to Friedman Diamond on the Northeastern campus. The move could occur because the Huskies play on a field turf surface. The final decision on today's game status will be made immediately before the first pitch.

The two cancellations complicated things for UMass' starting rotation, as sophomore Ryan Walczak (0-1) will now make his second start of the season against Northeastern if the game is played.

Walczak's only other start came against Hartford back on March 28. He picked up his first loss of the season in the 8-2 loss, allowing four runs (two earned) on five hits and a walk in four innings of work. He holds a 5.71 ERA this season in 17 1/3 innings and six appearances.

The Minutemen will save their stronger starters for the weekend series against La Salle at Earl Lorden Field, barring any more poor weather in New England.

Chris Lloyd, Jim Cassidy and Jared Freni are the probable starters for UMass against the Explorers. The series starts on Friday at 3 p.m., with games following on Saturday and Sunday at noon.

-Danny Picard

Sophomore designated hitter Jim Macdonald leads the Minutemen with two home runs and 19 RBIs. UMass opens up a three-game set with La Salle this weekend at Earl Lorden Field after the opening round of the Beanpot Tournament this afternoon.

THE DAILY COLLEGIAN APARTMENT GUIDE

Presidential Apts
Colonial Village Apts
Perry Apts
177 N. Pleasant St.
College Inn Apts
Lantern Court Apts
Mill Hollow
Crestview Apts

253-2515 55 S. Pleasant St., Amherst

Designed for your convenience ... with all the charm of scenic New England

- central heat and hot water included
- individually controlled room zone AC
- 2 full baths in all 2 & 3 BR apts
- 2 and 1/2 baths in each 4 BR apt
- wall to wall carpeting
- central laundry facilities
- modern appliances - including disposals and dishwashers

Mill Valley
E·S·T·A·T·E·S
420 RIVERGLADE DRIVE, AMHERST MA 413-253-7377

YOU HAVE YOUR REASONS FOR LIVING OFF-CAMPUS...

So Do We.

BRANDYWINE APARTMENTS
549-0600
www.Brandywine-Apts.com
16G Brandywine Drive
Amherst, MA 01002

Plan Ahead for Next Year

Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments--1,2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include heat, hot water and cooking gas
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis courts.

NEW PUFFTON VILLAGE

Office Hours 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

MOVING ON?
POTTER'S
AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Rent a Truck or Cargo Van
Starting at $19.95
Special Reduced Rates
Monday to Thursday
• Round Trip Rentals to and from Boston, New York & New Jersey
• One Way Rentals
• Hand Trucks & Furniture Pads Available for Rent
• Boxes & Moving Accessories Available for Sale
The Economical Way To Move
549-RENT (7368)
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.pottersauto.com

FACTORY DIRECT
DISCOUNT MATTRESS
WAREHOUSE, INC.
FORMERLY SLEEPY HOLLOW
LOWEST PRICES IN THE VALLEY!!
Futons
Mattresses
Platform Beds - 100% Hardwood
TO BELCHERTOWN RT. 9
AMHERST COLLEGE
HAMPSHIRE MALL
TO NORTHAMPTON
www.directdiscountmattress.com
(413) 253-BEDS (2337) RT. 9 Amherst
SUN-MON: 12-4 TUES-SAT: 10:30-6

- Kamins Real Estate
- Mill Valley Estates
- Brandywine Apartments
- Puffton Village Apartments
- Potters Auto Rentals
- Sleepy Hollow Bed Co.
- The Salvation Army
- Cliffside Apartments

NEED TO FURNISH A NEW HOME?
This is the place to do it!
THE SALVATION ARMY
Find things that you won't see anywhere else!
A unique selection of... bed frames
lamps computer desks electronics couches tables
dressers... and much more!
Inexpensive...
Incredible supply of clothing!
Thousands of brand name pieces go out on the floor every single day!
and fun!
HELP WANTED!
• Work Study opportunity for students available
• Flexible positions open
• Flexible hours to work around academic schedules
Apply at the Hadley store
(413) 582-0403
See store manager for application
Join our reputable team!

Come live by the Cliff Side...
CLIFF SIDE APARTMENTS
UTILITIES INCLUDED
Heat, Hot Water & Electricity!
*Small 1 Bedroom $710.00 per mo: Great for 1 person!
*Large 1 Bedroom $775.00 per mo: Comfortable for two!
*2 Bedroom $860.00 per mo: Easily split the cost with a roommate!
Security Deposit
Minutes From UMASS and Interstate 91

BEANPOT BLUES PAGE 12
SCENES FROM VT VIGIL PAGE 4

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN
NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890
SUNNY : HI: 67 LO: 34
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM
FRIDAY, APRIL 20, 2007

UMass remembers

Campus commemorates lives lost at Virginia Tech

Approximately 600 people attended a vigil in the campus center auditorium yesterday, to honor those killed in Monday's shooting at Virginia Tech. The vigil was organized by the Religious Affairs Committee and the Center for Student Development and Campus Life.

UMass vigil remembers VT victims

By David Humphreys
Collegian Staff

A vigil sponsored by several campus organizations took place last night to support members of the University of Massachusetts community and remember the victims of Monday's shooting at Virginia Tech.

The vigil, organized by the Religious Affairs Committee and the Center for Student Development and Campus Life drew in a crowd of approximately 600 people.

Chris Clark, chairperson of the Religious Affairs committee and a campus minister at the Newman Center, said that it is important for a group experiencing shock and grief to be able to gather in a safe space and process what they are going through.

Greg Callanan, a senior, said that although he was only able to stay for part of the vigil, it is important to support Virginia Tech.

"People join Facebook and other groups that are types of non-active support," Callanan said. "Giving a little bit of your time in a vigil is active support for a cause. It is important to come together as a college campus and community."

Callanan, who was driving through Virginia when he found out about the shooting, wondered how this could possibly happen to any body.

"It could happen anywhere," he said.

"Whenever you have an event of this magnitude, it raises fear, paranoia and uncertainty... these are all normal experiences for people to feel at a time like this," said Dr. Jen Lexington, a therapist at UMass Mental Health Services.

Senior Katie Poulin said that she is glad the campus can come together to show their support for the people from Virginia Tech and for each other.

"Having support is something we need to do as a college community. I know people from Virginia who were missing the support that we have here at UMass," senior Katherine Harris said.

The vigil featured various campus speakers, a moment of silence, a reading of the names of those known to be deceased and an emotional song by the UMass Chamber Choir to close the event.

Genevieve Feldman, a sophomore, said that it was a great honor to attend a vigil like this and see the community connecting this way.

Feldman, who grew up near Blacksburg, Va. said that she went to the vigil because she wanted to show support to the friends she has in the area and those going through a hard time, as well to show her respect for the Blacksburg community.

See VIGIL on page 3

Student groups host events to raise money

Cara Grannemann and Eden Univer
Collegian Staff

In the wake of Monday's shooting at Virginia Tech in which 33 people – including the gunman – died, various organizations at the University of Massachusetts are holding events to raise money for the Blacksburg community.

The Central Area Government (CAG) will hold a Spring Festival and Concert tonight to benefit the Hokie Spirit Memorial Fund. The concert is the main attraction of this event and the band Apollo Sunshine will be headlining. According to a press release, the Spring Festival and Concert will be held on the hill next to Van Meter and will run from 6 p.m. to 11:30 p.m. The event is free of charge and open to the public.

American Airlines donated two tickets to be raffled off at this event to raise funds for the victims of Virginia Tech. Each ticket for the raffle will be sold for one dollar, but people can also purchase a pack of six raffle tickets for five dollars. According to the press release, each airline ticket is valid to travel anywhere in the continental U.S., Canada, Mexico, Bermuda, the Bahamas, or the Caribbean. All of the proceeds will go directly to the Hokie Spirit Memorial Fund.

"We hope there is a good turnout so that [we are able to] give a sizable donation," said Zach Caunter, Governor of the CAG.

According to the Hokie Spirit Memorial Fund's Web site, all funds donated will go to assistance for victims and their families, grief counseling, memorials, communication expenses, comfort expenses, and more.

In addition to fun and entertainment, the fundraising part of the festival and concert will provide students with an outlet to help the victims of Virginia Tech.

"I think it hits very close to students," said Caunter, "this is a way for them to help indirectly."

According to Caunter the event had been planned for some time, but the recipient of the fundraising was not chosen until after the recent events at Virginia Tech took place. That is when the decision was made to have the proceeds go to help the victims of this tragedy.

The CAG has not attempted an event like this in some time. "It's been about 10-15 years that there has been a concert at the top of the hill," said Caunter. "Hopefully we can make it an annual affair."

The Spring Festival and Concert promises a night of music, fun, and support for a good cause.

The Greek community at UMass is also sponsoring an event to raise money for Virginia Tech victims' families.

This Saturday, from 12-8 p.m., the Alpha Epsilon Pi fraternity will

See FUNDRAISERS on page 3

UMass student braves weather to run 111th Boston Marathon

By Melissa D'Amico
Collegian Staff

The rain pauses just as I settle among hundreds of others on Main Street. Although a break from the rain is nice, it really doesn't do much because my shoes are already soaked all the way through, without a chance of drying before I need them to perform. We have 10 minutes. Looking around I see nothing but ponchos, baseball caps, men and women of all ages getting out their last minute words of encouragement while tightening their shoelaces and securing their iPods. Some do nothing but stare blankly ahead, while others joke and gossip as though they're just hanging out.

Overwhelmed by the masses that engulf me, I can't believe what's happening. I've been preparing for this day for the past nine months, and now that it's finally here, it doesn't seem real. Am I really about to do this? I'm about to put on my own iPod, when I

See MARATHON on page 2

Daily Collegian features editor Melissa D'Amico completed the Boston Marathon on April 16.

Lot 44 is site of car vandalism

By Derrick Perkins
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts student Jeff Nollner is calling on the University to take measures to halt acts of vandalism in campus parking lots after his own vehicle was defaced two weeks ago.

Nollner said he found his truck, a red Toyota Tacoma, with two flat tires in Parking Lot 44, by the North Residential Area, on Easter weekend. A UMass police officer confirmed for him that both of the tires on his truck had been slashed. Costing roughly $400, the damage prevented Nollner from being able to visit his family on Easter.

"[The UMPD officer] said they couldn't really do anything about it because there was no way of finding out who did it," he said. "They said they filed a report, but I haven't heard anything about it."

According to Nollner at least one other car in the lot had also had its tires slashed that same night. He also recalled having previously seen vandalized vehicles in Lot 44 numerous times, including vehicles with smashed windows, windshield wipers

See VANDALISM on page 3

UMass student Jeff Nollner, whose car was vandalized in a parking lot by the North Residential Area, said that Lot 44 should have more surveillance.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 121

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Eric Athas
MANAGING EDITOR Rob Greenfield
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sherel Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jasmeson Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COPIES EDITOR Adam Staigen
EDITORIAL EDITOR Tucker Merrick
NEWS EDITOR Matt Bellbrian
SPORTS EDITOR Danny Picard
SPORTS EDITOR Jon Pelland
FEATURES EDITOR Melissa D'Amico
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Pinto
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER David Valade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Puddester
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Sidney Towne
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Dolaniits
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonjakuakul
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Brendan Hall
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeremy Rue
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED PRIMARILY ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALOE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914, AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Eric Athas

COPY EDITOR
Courtney Souza

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

If you see news happening, call us at 545-1609 and snap a photo with your cell phone, then send it to news@daily-collegian.com

Crossing the finish line

MARATHON from page 1

decide against it. I want to experience every second of this.

Announcers call the start of the second wave, and I move silently with the pack as we begin walking down the street. The ponchos, jackets and gloves which were so tightly held onto just moments ago, are sent flying to the sidewalks and railings that block us in. Realizing that there is no turning back now, I take one last deep breath and brace myself for what's to come.

Just feet in front of me, I catch a glimpse of the blue and white writing that stretches across the street. Both excited and scared, I step over the painted starting line and onto my first steps of the Boston Marathon.

APRIL 16, 2007

Patriots' Day, the third Monday of every April, is a day in which many people in Massachusetts commemorate the Revolutionary War battles of Lexington and Concord, or even the traditional home game of the Boston Red Sox. But for me, Patriots' Day means one thing – Marathon Monday. Every year, over 20,000 people crowd the streets of Hopkinton, Mass. for the chance to test their limits, and see if they can make the 26.2 mile trek to Boston. This year I got that chance.

A distance runner for most of my life, the dream of being able to run the Boston Marathon has always been in the back of my mind. Sure, many people love to run, and enjoy going for 3, 4, or 5 mile runs regularly, but I've always wanted something more. From the time I was young, I have watched the Boston Marathon every year, amazed by the thousands of runners who dedicate months of their lives to train for an event that occurs only once a year.

Every runner has a different reason for running a marathon. Some to win money, some to raise money, for the shiny metal blankets given out at the finish, and still others run for the pure challenge of it. No matter what reason brought a runner to the starting line of the Boston Marathon, most runners will agree that it takes dedication, confidence, and pure guts to get them to the finish line.

THE IDEA

I have told myself ever since I was little that one day I was going to run the Boston Marathon. Honestly, it's much easier said than done. Year after year, at Watertown High School I thought to myself how amazing it would be to run the Marathon before I graduated, but never really followed up on it. I never had time. I didn't have anyone to train with. There were a hundred reasons keeping me from it.

Then, this past summer, while out for one of my daily runs around Watertown, it hit me. Nobody has time to train for a marathon; everybody has something else they could be doing. Yet, the difference between marathoners and non-marathoners is that marathoners make time for their goal. I didn't want to be a wannabe anymore. I wanted to be a marathoner, and that was that.

THE TRAINING

Nine months. I had nine months to train until it reached April 16, 2007. Nine months until I had to be able to run 26.2 solid miles. In the beginning it seemed as though I had all the time in the world. Yet, as summer turned into fall, and classes started getting busy, I started having doubts. Pushing through these thoughts and working hard, my mileage steadily increased.

1 MONTH, 1 WEEK, 1 DAY TO GO

Spring had finally arrived. Granted, winter seemed more like spring this year, but this was really it. March turned to April quicker than I could have ever imagined, and with it came the growing fear that I would never be ready in time. As my nine months dwindled into weeks and days, I was reminded by constant echoes of friends and family of how many days I had left. As if I didn't know.

I became obsessed with checking the weather for April 16. I had to know what my day was going to be like. My initial excitement for a day that was supposed to be sunny and 52 degrees was crushed as the projected temperature began to drop each day until it read "rain and wind with a high of 45 degrees."

My love of running in the rain saved me. I began to think this was exactly what I needed. That was until rumors began to spread that the marathon I had been training so hard for may be cancelled for the first time in 111 years. I was stunned, and almost heart broken. They can't do this to me, I thought. And yet there was nothing left to do but wait.

The fear of a cancelled marathon soon subsided, and was replaced instead by a fear of hypothermia. The marathon would go on as usual. Forecasters, friends and family said I would have to run 26.2 miles in the rain and wind, with 75 percent chance of severe hypothermia. Not to mention that this was said to be the worst marathon year a newcomer could have chosen as their first. Even if these warnings were meant to scare me, I wasn't about to back out.

PRE- RACE DAY

I'm not quite sure what other runners did the day before they ran the marathon this year. They probably rested, ate bowls of pasta, and stretched. But for me, by 7:15 a.m., I was with the rest of the UMass Women's Rowing team at the Henderson Boathouse on the Charles River. My boat was preparing to race Dartmouth College at 9:24 a.m. in the pouring rain – our third and final race of the Charles River Challenge Regatta.

Focusing on one race at a time, it is not until this race is over that I return to thinking about what waits for me tomorrow. I had already picked up my number, 23824, and all I had left to do was figure out what I was going to wear.

Sure, there was a risk of hypothermia, and I was thoroughly planning for that. But, I have waited nine months for this day to come, and now that it had, I was going to look good. Making sure my outfit coordinated in as many ways possible, while still keeping me warm, I compiled my look.

RACE DAY

By 4:30 a.m., I am up and dressed because the idea of sleeping on a day like today seemed utterly ridiculous. I woke to the sound of what seemed like 30 mile per hour winds and a hurricane, but what turned out to be a "Spring Storm." To me, it seemed like such an innocent name for something that had the potential to ruin my life.

By 6:30 a.m. I was out the door, leaving the warnings of my mother behind me. It wasn't until I got to my car, having almost been blown away by the wind, that I began to think my mother was right. Nonetheless, I remained stubborn, and had my father drive me to Tremont Street in Boston, where I would find our buses. Overcome with nervousness the entire way there, I let no signs show on my face. This was serious, and I had to stay focused.

Following the trail of people carrying bright orange Adidas bags, the ones given to us with our numbers, I merged into a line. Hundreds of people huddled together, trying to stay as dry as possible while waiting for countless yellow school buses to file down the road, and I could tell this was just the beginning of a confusing and stressful process that would get me to the starting line.

Helping us to relax, our bus driver told us jokes, and gave us an inspirational speech once we arrived in Hopkinton that began with him telling us we are amazing people, and ended with him singing his own adaptation of "Singing in the Rain" over the loud speaker. Needless to say, it was one of the best speeches I have ever heard.

MOVING THROUGH THE MILES

I may have been among thousands of other runners, but this race was solely my own. I weaved in and out of the packs, everyone a blur of faces as I moved past. As Hopkinton eased into Ashland, I began to realize that my pacing was completely off. The 10 minute miles I had planned on running, had somehow transformed into 8 minute miles. I knew this would catch up with me in the end, but there was nothing I could do now. Steadying my pace, we glided into Framingham.

With the rain starting up again, I could only hope that my legs would make it through the next few towns as quickly as possible. Yet, as soon as I passed the "Welcome to Framingham" sign, it was as though life shifted in slow motion. It seemed as though I was running as fast as I could, and getting nowhere. It was Framingham forever, and when I thought the worst was over, on came Natick. When you know there are a certain number of towns you need to get through, and you're seemingly stranded in one forever, it is as if you are going crazy.

I was once told that you can never imagine the types of things that go through your mind when running a marathon, and they couldn't have been more right. The confidence you once started out with turns into tiredness, and then into extreme doubt. No matter how prepared I came into this race, I eventually began to think I wasn't going to make it. The middle miles of this race tested my mental strength more than anything else.

Coming through Wellesley, I was faced with signs that pointed the direction to Watertown, my hometown. I have passed these signs numerous times throughout my life, but they never had the same effect they had during this day. Tired and soaked with a mixture of rain and sweat, I could think of nothing better at that very moment than to just go home. After questioning why I had ever thought this was a good idea, I forced myself to keep going.

Moving up on mile 20, I knew what was about to hit me. From the day I began training for the Boston Marathon I knew that halfway through mile 20 would bring me to Heartbreak Hill. Correct in its name, this hill has been known to make or break marathoners. Alone, the hill itself doesn't seem so terrible, but put 20 miles of racing before it, and you've got one major obstacle. Knowing that my sister was waiting for me at the bottom of the hill, I ran on, pausing as soon as I saw her. Moving with me up the hill, Stephanie is the one reason my heart was not broken.

My next great inspiration came at mile 24. Slowly making my way down Boylston Street, I am joined by three of my best friends. Dressed in jeans and t-shirts, David O'Brien, Jimmy Gagnon, and Michael Sunde jog alongside me to the finish, while grabbing Gatorades, slapping high-fives from people on the sidelines, and yelling "Go team D'Amico!" Their excitement gave me the energy to get through that last and never ending .2 miles of the course.

Finally, the end is in sight. Coming around the final turn of the course, I see one of the greatest sights I have ever seen – the finish line. Hearing my mother and brother, Michael, screaming for me from the sidelines, I take my final steps. Five hours, and 26.2 miles, and nine months of training later, I have finally made my way from Hopkinton to Boston. I am a marathoner.

ACCOMPLISHED BUT NOT OVER

I made it, and I still can't believe it's over. Letting what I just completed sink in, I have to walk for what seems like another marathon down the street. I return my tracking chip, receive my medal, and get the cherished shiny metal blanket.

After completing one of the most physically and mentally challenging events of my life, I can finally go home, sit down, and think about the pain I'm going to be in tomorrow. No matter how many times I thought about how much I hated running throughout the last 26.2 miles of my life, or how tired I got, I can't help but think about next year when I get to do it all over again.

Features editor Melissa D'Amico is the only Daily Collegian editor who is athletic enough to run a marathon. She can be reached at mdamico@student.umass.edu.

CENTRAL
UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS
APOLLO SUNSHINE
10:30 - 11:30
THE CORNERBOYS 9:15 - 10:15
MELODEEGO 8:00 - 9:00
FIVE ACROSS THE EYES 6:45 - 7:45
DEADSPIN 6:00 - 6:30
FREE ADMISSION - RAIN OR SHINE
AT VAN METER COURTS
4.20.07 RUN FOR THE HILL
AmericanAirlines
AA.com/college
Sponsored by UMass Central Area Government, an alcohol-free event, all bags are subject to search

State considers text-messaging system for emergency alerts

BY KEN MAGUIRE
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — A text-message emergency notification system is under review by the state's colleges and public safety officials in the aftermath of the Virginia Tech massacre, officials said Thursday.

Low-tech ideas such as tower-mounted sirens on campuses also will be considered leading to a June conference, announced Thursday, intended to review campus security and mental health counseling protocols.

"A number of things need to be re-examined in light of this incident," Board of Higher Education Chancellor Patricia Plummer said Thursday.

Plummer and state public safety Secretary Kevin Burke met on Wednesday at the request of Gov. Deval Patrick. All state colleges and universities are forwarding their emergency plans to Burke for review.

All private colleges in Massachusetts also will be invited to participate in the June meeting at the Boston campus of the University of Massachusetts.

"These discussions will assist campuses in refining their plans by bringing to the table the combined knowledge of our higher education, public safety and mental health professionals," Patrick said in a statement.

The goal of the symposium is to share and upgrade security measures, as well as consider better ways to get psychiatric counseling to those who need it.

"On campus right now, or any place, there's a lot of protection of privacy," Plummer said. "The discussion is how you balance the privacy rights with the safety of everyone on campus. What can be done? Does there need to be some legislative or other kind of practical changes that balance that privacy protection with the protection of everyone."

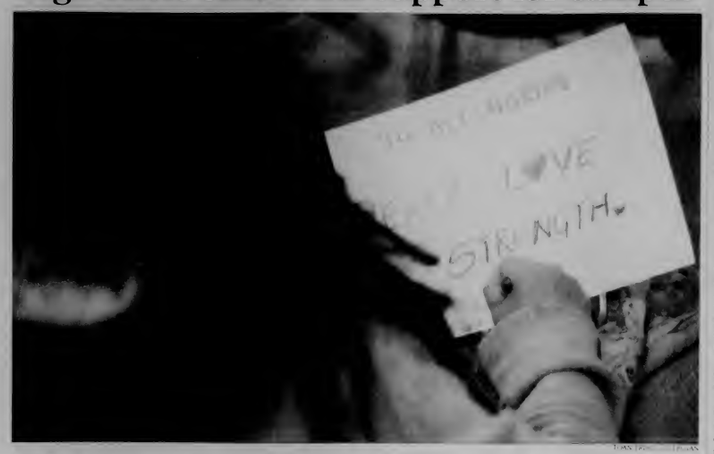
Immediately after Cho Seung-Hui killed 32 people at Virginia Tech Monday, questions arose about how the university handled the incident.

Virginia Tech officials did not send an e-mail warning about a gunman on campus until two hours after the first slayings, drawing criticism that they waited too long and relied on e-mail accounts that students often ignore.

Plummer said she hoped the state could explore purchasing an emergency text-messaging and automated voice-message system. She said some of the state's 29 campuses "have some of it on place already but we want it to be available elsewhere."

Jacob Oliveira, a 20-year-old junior at Framingham State College, said the text-messaging idea was a good one. He said most college students have a cell phone.

Vigil offers emotional support for campus



The UMass campus is celebrating "Hokie Hope Day" today to help support Virginia Tech, encouraging students to wear the VT colors: orange and maroon.

VIGIL from page 1

John Baillieul, a junior, thought that although the vigil was well done, he expected more people and said that it was "under attended."

Clark said that the groups responsible for the vigil were not looking for a high turnout but rather, only looking to help anyone who needed support at this point in time.

"The vigil was an important and crucial moment," Clark said. "We need to be conscious of our need to create meaning around this event. Virginia Tech is showing us what a helpful response will be on our part."

"People are emotionally distraught now but these emotions will fade over time," Dr. Lexington said. To help in this support, MHS offers various counseling services and campus support forums.

Dr. Lexington also said that depending on student support and response, a group opportunity could possibly be available to support those on campus in a smaller setting.

"We need to seize the moment, appreciate the day and love one another well," Clark continued.

"That kind of attention to each other is part of UMass life already. UMass has so much to be proud of," he said.

Clark said that today the UMass campus is celebrating Hokie Hope Day to help support Virginia Tech. UMass students can take part in showing their support by wearing Virginia Tech's colors: orange and maroon.

David Humphreys can be reached at dhumphrea@student.umass.edu.

Dad makes son wear sign for using drugs

A father says he wasn't trying to shame his 14-year-old son when he made the boy wear a large sandwich-board sign saying, "I abused and sold drugs."

"I'm not out here doing this to humiliate my son," the father told WATE-TV as the teenager walked up and down the sidewalk Wednesday in front of Cedar Bluff Middle School.

"I'm doing this because I love him," he said.

"We do have an extreme drug problem in America, and maybe it's time for extreme measures that parents need to take to monitor this problem that we have."

The man wasn't identified by the station to protect the confidentiality of the son, but he appeared on camera.

The son's face was not shown.

The father said he recently learned after reading the boy's MySpace page that his son was involved with marijuana and OxyContin.

That's when he decided to act, and the boy agreed to the punishment.

After a short time, the school's principal soon came out and asked the father to call it off, which he did.

By then the boy said he'd learned his lesson.

"This is embarrassing. I ain't going to be doing it again," the boy said. "Drugs are for losers. That's all I can say."

Associated Press

Fraternity holds barbecue to raise money for victims

FUNDRAISERS from page 1

be hosting a BBQ fundraiser for the Hokie Spirit Memorial Fund. The idea for the fundraiser came up when brothers of AEII were talking about plans for their Greek Week BBQ.

"We decided to do this fundraiser because we all realized during a meeting we had that this could have happened to us or to any other campus," said freshman, AEII member Aaron Schmerling. "We just felt like we had to do something to help these families out. We had to put ourselves in their shoes."

The BBQ currently has 250 confirmed guests, but the brothers are hoping to host 500-700 people.

"All the fraternities and sororities that are participating in Greek Week [are coming]...we invited everyone so anyone who wants to come will be able to," said Schmerling. He also mentioned that all businesses in the area have been invited to donate food or money to the cause.

According to AEII executive board member Scott Fureeck, the BBQ will include watermelon, hot dogs, and hamburgers, and two student band performances. No alcohol will be provided, but guests over 21 will be allowed to drink.

Fureeck also mentioned a poster board will be set up at the house. Guests will be able to write hopeful messages to Virginia Tech students, and those directly affected by the shootings. The poster board will be given to them along with the proceeds from the BBQ.

Alpha Epsilon Pi fraternity will be hosting the barbecue at their house, located 118 Sunset Ave. The cost is a donation of $5 upon entry, but all food and drinks will be free.

Cara Grannemann can be reached at cgrannem@student.umass.edu. Eden Unver can be reached at eunver@student.umass.edu.

Student criticizes lot surveillance forcibly removed, and some hit with beer bottles. The amount of vandalism in the lot prompted Nollner to write an e-mail to UMass Parking Services about the problem.

VANDALISM from page 1

In the e-mail Nollner calls on the University to protect the vehicles of students that have paid for the ability to use campus parking lots. By failing that the University should refund students at the end of the year, according to Nollner.

"The University has a legal obligation to protect our vehicles, and in no way is this obligation waived at any point in time during the permit application process," he said in the e-mail. "This is not something that will disappear until the University Police, Parking Services, and the Administration in general take action to prevent it from happening again."

Neither the UMPD nor UMass Parking Services could be reached for comment.

Nollner says he has received no response to his e-mail as of yet and he plans to take his concerns directly to the offices of Parking Services and, if necessary, to Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and Campus Life Michael Gargano.

"The University should try and take steps to protect our property," he said. "It could be as simple as putting cameras in the parking lots."

Derrick Perkins can be reached at dperkins@student.umass.edu.

Get Ready to Celebrate!
Israel Independence Day 2007
Amherst Town Common

Rail Location: Amherst High school
Monday, Apr. 23, 2007
5-8 pm
Large free concert
Israeli food with a student discount
Bedouin Tent with hookahs and backgammon
Raffle Prizes including first prize FREE flight to Israel
...and much more!

THIS EVENT IS MADE POSSIBLE IN PART BY A GRANT FROM COMBINED JEWISH PHILANTHROPIES IACT INITIATIVE
MAJOR FUNDING IS PROVIDED BY THE JEWISH ENDOWMENT FOUNDATION OF WESTERN MASSACHUSETTS, A COMMITTEE OF THE JEWISH FEDERATION OF WESTERN MASSACHUSETTS
SPONSORED IN PART BY ISRAEL ON CAMPUS COALITION ISRAEL ACTION GRANT PROJECT AND SUPPORTED BY THE AVI CHAI FOUNDATION, THE CHARLES AND LYNN SCHUSTERMAN FAMILY FOUNDATION AND MORRIS B. SQUIRE
The Upper Pioneer Valley Yom Ha'atzmaut Committee includes representatives from Hadassah, UMass Hillel, Smith College Hillel, Amherst College Hillel, Mt. Holyoke College Jewish [illegible]nion, Hampshire College Hillel, UMass Student Alliance for Israel, UMass Jewish Student Un[illegible]im, Congregation B'nai Israel, Congregation Sons of Zion, Jewish Community of A[illegible]el, Congregation Rodphey Sholom, Beit Ahavah, Lander-Grinspoon Academy, Cor[illegible]throples, Jewish Federation of Western Massachusetts

May we never forget

Scenes from last night's Virginia Tech vigil

Photos by Toan Trinh and Micheal Phillis

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

FRIDAY, APRIL 20, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it" Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Out of apathy and into action

What you can do

Senator John Kerry

Massachusetts students are justifiably proud of their world-class universities and a tradition of public activism older than the United States itself.

That is why I was surprised and saddened to read in Monday's Boston Globe that our state ranked 44th nationwide in its rate of student volunteerism.

I have met college activists at every school in the state who impressed me with their seriousness, intelligence, and dedication. Yet so many of their classmates are choosing to stay on the sidelines and do nothing to help their communities.

Across the country, volunteer rates fell in 2006 for the first time since skyrocketing after the attacks of Sept. 11. Today – National and Global Youth Service Day – we can and we must do better.

As we face tragedy together, the need to help each other is at its greatest. Tragic events like the student massacre on Virginia Tech's campus raise critical questions about whether we are meeting the needs of the mentally, socially and financially distressed among us. Our nation is strengthened by the community support, compassion and involvement of its citizenry. We cannot let anyone fall through the cracks.

But please, get involved and stay involved. This state and this nation need you to fight for the issues you care about.

The good news is that the people of Massachusetts are volunteering more than they have in a generation and rates are continuing to climb. Furthermore, these rates of growth in volunteerism are increasing more rapidly than any other state in the last four years.

But we are playing catch up with the rest of the country when we should be leading it. It is time to call upon the youth of Massachusetts to set the example as leaders in community volunteerism for the rest of the nation.

Boston College is leading the way in community activism. More than half of its students are involved in volunteer work. 600-700 students volunteer in Appalachia each spring break, while others commit to working at least four hours a week in homeless shelters, schools, and other non-profits. I applaud the efforts of those students who do volunteer – but again, I believe we can and we must do better.

I know that, as students, it's easy to feel powerless as if everybody is talking at you and nobody is really listening. I remember what it was like to be your age during another tragically misguided war in Vietnam just like the one we face today in Iraq. No doubt, the awful news coming out of Washington makes many of you wonder if you should just steer clear of politics.

But please, get involved and stay involved. This state and this nation need you to fight for the issues you care about.

Again and again, students have changed the world. In every major social movement – not just civil rights but also women's rights and social justice movements everywhere – the front lines are almost always students. So just because politics may have disappointed you, don't lose hope in politics. We need change, and we need your input. I cannot tell you how good it feels to know that you were part of making things go right.

So how can you make a difference in your community? We can all do our part, whether it's joining an organization on campus, volunteering in a soup kitchen, writing a letter to your representative on an issue of concern to you, mentoring a younger student or simply reaching out to a troubled peer. With luck, we might even be able to prevent the occurrence of the kind of tragedy that befell Virginia Tech's campus just a few days ago.

As Robert Kennedy once said: "Each time a man stands up for an ideal, or acts to improve the lot of others, or strikes out against injustice, he sends forth a tiny ripple of hope, and crossing each other from a million different centers of energy and daring, those ripples build a current that can sweep down the mightiest walls of oppression and resistance."

After Vietnam when vets were fighting for vets against a lot of politicians who hid behind slogans, some would weigh in against us saying "My country right or wrong." Our response was simple: "Yes, my country right or wrong. When right, keep it right and when wrong, make it right." That's our mission – yours and mine – to get off our rear ends – go out – and make it right today.

Interested in finding a volunteer opportunity? Go to www.ysa.org. Youth Service America, the organization that sponsors National & Global Youth Service Day, has more information about volunteer opportunities in Massachusetts.

John Kerry is a United States Senator. His Boston office's number is 617-565-8519.

Speaking up for Darfur

Sarah Shapiro

As concerned individuals, our own humanity comes into play when contemplating the millions of lives that are being destroyed in the Darfur region of Sudan. It is easy to look at the conflict cynically; together with the problems of so many other countries, torn by oppressive systems and destructive leaders. What is happening in Darfur, however, is not just any other conflict. It is the goal of the Sudanese government and the Janjawiid militia it supports, to completely eradicate Sudan of its black African peoples. Hence, though the causes are anything but simplistic, the irrevocable facts of genocide make it necessary that the international community act to stop it.

A divestment campaign is currently underway at both the University of Massachusetts and the state of Massachusetts.

For the past four years in Darfur, roughly 400,000 people have been killed and 2.5 million displaced by the pro-Arab government in northern Sudan and the Janjawiid militias. It began in 2003, when a rebel movement emerged in Darfur in response to decades of oppression from the government. In retaliation, the Sudanese government began their genocidal campaign, destroying millions of people's lives and traditions. The Janjawiid descends on a village, torching down all of the homes and raping the women, while government planes drop bombs to completely devastate the area. The fighting has already spread into neighboring Chad and the Central African Republic, where security is deteriorating.

Since the Sudanese being targeted do not have the power to stop the government's rampage, people abroad must respond to the direness of this situation. Around the country, students are mobilizing to increase advocacy and, therefore, progressive responses to the genocide. Some of the important campaigns that have been initiated throughout the United States are in divestment. Divestment is a means of taking money out of international companies that are based in the Sudan and that are benefiting the government in Khartoum. When Sudan first began exporting oil in 1999, their economy greatly improved; but since then, profits from oil have only helped the government continue their genocidal tactics. This is why the international community must pull out their investments and stop supporting the Sudanese regime.

Targeted divestment plans have already been implemented in states and universities throughout the United States, including, California, Connecticut, Illinois, Maine, New Jersey and Oregon. These states and other institutions are invested in Sudan through pension plans and mutual funds that trace back to companies, mainly in the Sudanese oil and energy sectors.

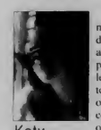
Because we do not want to hurt the civilians of Sudan, it is important to implement targeted divestment plans, so that only specific companies that directly benefit the Sudanese government are targeted. A divestment campaign is currently underway at both the University of Massachusetts and the state of Massachusetts. Recently, a targeted divestment bill was brought to the Senate house in Boston, as students and professionals gathered with human rights activists Mia Farrow and Smith College's Eric Reeves in support of the bill. It is currently being deliberated, which is why the time to show your support for Massachusetts divestment is now. If the Sudanese government continues raiding African villages, then the war will only continue spreading through Chad and the Central African Republic, where it has already infiltrated.

Aside from divestment campaigns, people throughout the country are organizing demonstrations and events for Darfur during the week of Apr. 23 as part of the Global Days for Darfur. From the Save Darfur Web site, you can enter your zip code and locate the event nearest you.

As humans, we must see how this genocide relates back to our own humanity. As adults growing up after the Holocaust, the puzzling question is why it took the international community so long to respond to the genocide in Europe. For too many years, Nazi Germany exterminated millions of Jews, gypsies, disabled people and homosexuals. Those people could have been saved sooner if we would have acted sooner, just as we have the chance to save Darfuri lives now. It is easy to get overwhelmed and to not see how one person can make a difference. It is also possible that divestment campaigns will not stop the genocide and that the Sudanese government will continue to avoid international pressure. To see the results of one's actions are not always possible though, nor are they the reason why we must help. Our humanity forces us to act out against these crimes, even if we can't always see the immediate results.

Sarah Shapiro is a UMass student.

Weeding out the facts



Katy Bruck

Believe it or not, marijuana is a commonly discussed and debated aspect of college life. The plant itself is pretty harmless, especially compared to alcohol, cigarettes or harder drugs, and it could comfort thousands of critically and chronically ill cancer and AIDS patients.

Most of the problems with the marijuana decriminalization/legalization debate revolve around rhetoric. It tends to elicit skepticism particularly of the reform coalitions that are based on college campuses. Any campaign is going to utilize rhetoric to further their cause, but an important question any young activist should ask themselves is why they feel so passionately about what they're fighting for.

One might be shocked to hear this, but nearly sixty percent of young people in the United States have used marijuana at least once in their lives. This percentage seems high, considering marijuana is a Schedule I substance, meaning its illegality is determined by "having a high potential for abuse" and no officially recognized medicinal benefits. Of course, the legitimacy of these claims has been hotly debated. Many argue that marijuana carries distinct medicinal benefits like those mentioned above, but more importantly that legalizing it would save hundred of thousands, if not millions of dollars in policing fees. Countries like Canada and Germany are even well on their way to decriminalizing marijuana, preferring to charge minimum fines and more flexible punishment over mandatory sentencing and jail time, as in the United States.

Considering how culturally prevalent marijuana is, and its comparative harmlessness, decriminalization and even legalization seem reasonable enough. After all, prohibition in the 1920s didn't work out too well, so what makes legislators think it'll work now?

The Massachusetts Cannabis Reform Coalition (MASS CANN) argues that "responsible adult users have a right to consume marijuana if they choose; society has the right to regulate that consumption" and that regulation should be enforced via civil penalties, similar to traffic tickets. MASS CANN is also involved in the debate over the therapeutic benefits of marijuana – a debate that is basically unanimous among most progressive medical professionals.

But a major tenant of the political argument for decriminalization or legalization is the idea that hundreds of thousands of peace-loving, recreational pot-smokers are languishing in prison as the result of a possession charge. Undoubtedly, the idea of sending an 18-, or so, year-old to prison for having a small amount of marijuana seems ridiculous. Most agree. But, there are a couple of problems with the rhetoric of MASS CANN on this point in particular.

First of all, statistics are not always the most reliable source of unbiased data. Numbers can be skewed just as easily as words, and in this case, it would appear that they have been (intentionally or not). When you look at the numbers out of context, it is shocking. There were literally almost two million marijuana-related arrests in 2005. According to the Bureau of Justice Statistics, in 2004, 12.7 percent of all state prisoners and 12.4 percent of Federal prisoners were serving time for a marijuana-related offense. That does seem like an awful lot of people.

But what the numbers don't tell you is that most of these people did not go to jail just because of a marijuana offense. Approximately 70 percent of those serving drug related sentences in state prisons are there for trafficking offenses, and over 80 percent of these had prior criminal history – not just limited to drug charges. Only 1.6 percent of the population in jail is for only marijuana-related crimes, and 0.7 percent of those for possession (of any amount) as the only charge. An even smaller percentage of those (0.3 percent) are first time offenders. It seems that these 3,600 people, out of the 1.2 million state prisoners, do not effect overcrowding and taxation as much as it would appear.

What the numbers don't tell you is that most of these people did not go to jail just because of a marijuana offense.

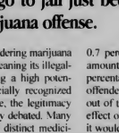
Just because someone is listed as serving prison time for a marijuana-related offense, does not mean that's the primary reason they're in prison, and this is where statistics can be skewed. Just reading the numbers doesn't account for additional charges or plea bargains either, which are frequently related in cases of drug charges.

The point here is that most of the pot-smokers you meet are not going to end up in prison. White, upper to middle class pot smokers are not the primary target in the War on Drugs, so far as I'm aware. Sure, plenty of money is wasted arresting and jailing people for pot. If you want to make that argument, plenty of money is wasted charging and incarcerating people on other drug charges too – not because other drugs are more enticing or harmful than weed, but because drug policy in this country does not address things like economic inequality and addiction.

So the question we're left with is how many of these reform-fighters are crusading for true social and economic change, and how many are twisting rhetoric to serve the purpose of decreasing personal accountability? As citizens of this country, with so many complex and profound issues facing us, there's a responsibility to try and weed out the causes that will truly change things for the better, and the ones that serve our personal vices.

Katy Bruck can be reached at kbruck@student.umass.edu.

Guilty until proven innocent



Andy Smith

One word never sounded so good to them. Six letters arranged in the perfect order gave three Duke University students part of their life back. The team watched helplessly as a party they threw turned into national news when the hired stripper said three of the attendees raped her. For a year they were labeled rapists, even though there was no physical evidence proving so. Then finally, on April 11, Attorney General Roy Cooper made the announcement that they were innocent.

For 395 days, David Evans, Reade Seligmann, and Colin Finnerty were guilty until proven innocent. When the news first broke in April 2006 that a 28-year-old black stripper was raped at a party thrown by the Duke University men's lacrosse team, many believed the woman was telling the truth. The original consensus opinion was that these were three rich kids who had everything handed to them their entire lives and felt they were untouchable, so they raped a stripper. This time, their parents couldn't save them. We could not have been more wrong.

A little publicized fact about the accuser was that she wasn't exactly an angel. According to a report published in the June 26, 2006 issue of Sports Illustrated, she had previously pleaded guilty to stealing a taxi in June 2002. She also wanted to "sell her story" to whoever would listen, in an attempt to make herself a lot of money. However, all she did was make herself look foolish by lying.

As the months passed, it turned from a rape issue to a race issue and back again. Even the Durham, N.C. District Attorney Mike Nifong joined the fray. He was coming up for re-election in the end of 2006 and apparently used the three accused players as a tool to get himself more votes. From the beginning, he assumed the three were guilty and tried to do everything he could to prove it. He also brought up the woman's race, making the public outcry even greater towards the three men. "I am not going to allow Durham in the mind of the world to be a bunch of lacrosse players from Duke raping a black girl in Durham!" Nifong yelled during a speech he made along his political campaign. Nifong left the case on January 12, 2007, right after the election. As we know now, they are innocent, but Nifong did get re-elected.

You throw a party at your house one weekend, and your life is ruined forever.

Try to put yourself in the position of the three Duke students. You throw a party at your house one weekend, and your life is changed forever. Suddenly you're facing the national media and will forever have your name linked with a rape you never committed. You are called racial epithets because the woman you "raped" is black and you are white. Now the likes of Jesse Jackson and Reverend Al Sharpton are coming after you because they believe the accuser. The ability to play a sport you love for a school you love is no longer there because you are not allowed on the team. Every job opportunity you could have had after college was withdrawn because no corporation wants to employ "that kid" from the Duke Lacrosse rape.

"It's not like I'm going to walk down the street and someone won't recognize me now as the person who was accused of rape," said David Evans on a recent episode of 60 Minutes. "No matter what you can try to move on but rape will always be associated with my name. Innocent might be a part of it, but that's just an adjective. When I die, they'll say one of the three Duke Lacrosse rape suspects died today. He lead a life and did this, but he was one of the three Duke Lacrosse rape suspects."

As much as we think we can relate to them, we can't. No one has any idea what it must be like to continually pronounce your innocence to a crime and have nobody listen to you. For a full year, Evans, Seligmann, and Finnerty said they were innocent, but nobody believed them. They became objects in a District Attorney's plan for re-election. Now it is over and soon will become yesterday's news.

It is quite a society we live in, where a seat in office is more important than someone's life. For over a year, Nifong was determined to make an example out of the three students because that is what the public wanted. In turn, that meant he would get more votes when the election occurred.

It is sad, but true, that they can not start over. Never again will they escape the public eye. They, and the entire Duke Lacrosse team, will still be talked about as they travel to campuses all across the country. Nifong has since apologized for the false accusations, but that does nothing to give the three innocent boys back what they lost: the ability to live a normal life. "The pain that's been going on for a year is not going to be cured by one announcement," said Colin Finnerty on 60 Minutes. I doubt it will ever cure it at all.

Andy Smith can be reached at ajsmith@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, APRIL 20, 2007 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Improv brings down UMass

College, professional groups set for weekend comedy jam

COURTESY MASS:IMPROVABLE

Mission:IMPROVable is one of three UMass improvisation comedy troupes that will be performing at the 11th Annual Comedy Jam.

By Ryan McAskill
Collegian Staff

Pretending to be a 90-year-old snake whose family is trying to get them to enter a retirement home may seem easy. Add in a spotlight, stage, packed crowd and other players on stage waiting to feed off your every move and, oh yeah, make it funny. Still sound easy? For the members of the University of Massachusetts improv comedy team Mission: IMPROVable, it's a typical Saturday night.

Mission:IMPROVable is an improv comedy troupe made up of 16 UMass students, which performs free shows every Saturday night at 8 p.m. in Herter 231. This Friday and Saturday, they will be apart of the 11th Annual Comedy Jam featuring numerous professional improv troupes from Boston, Chicago and New York.

The Comedy Jam is a unique experience. "You can't see a show like this anywhere around here," said Brennan Clark who is the director of Mission:IMPROVable and a junior at UMass. "The closest you'll get is Improv Boston."

Former UMass students, Lloyd Ahlquist, Jeff Durand, Ryan Kiessling, Aaron Krebs, Jason Reis and Jason Shomer started Mission: IMPROVable in 1996 as a weekly comedy show. The group grew in popularity and was soon recruiting.

"I'm glad to see that it's still going strong," said Krebs. "I think it speaks to the drive and commitment that students have. The best things I learned in college weren't from a book. They were from the friends and experience I had while doing Mission: IMPROVable. I'm very thankful that the University has given support to the group over the years. I would love to see even a larger support push from the University, especially in the wake of events going on around the country."

Krebs added, "I think Mission: IMPROVable offers a fun, non-drug/alcohol related environment that ease the stress that college can cause. It gives students an outlet that is positive. I would ideally love to see the chancellor and University push Mission: IMPROVable as a pilot program and highlight what UMass Amherst Mission:IMPROVable offers. UMass is a cutting edge school. I would hope that the University would take advantage of helping more students become aware of Mission:IMPROVable."

The six founding members went on to form Mission:IMPROVable Chicago. They have preformed at colleges nationwide over the last three years. Their members have been apart of three television pilots, shows like the "Blue Man Group" and multiple national commercials.

"It's funny, people say 'It's so nice of them to let you use their name,'" said Baseman. "And we're like 'no, their using our name.'"

"We let them live with the name because that's where we took it from," said Krebs. "We kinda feel that's where we came from and we're always about preserving our roots."

"We also have street cred in Chicago now," Clark added.

Each semester new auditions are held with anywhere from 10 to 60 people turning out. Following the first set of auditions, a call back is held and the best are picked to become new members. Those new members attend rehearsal two nights a week, but do not participate in shows until the final shows of the semester when they make their premier.

"We basically do a training semes-

See COMEDY on page 7

SCHEDULE FOR COMEDY JAM

FRIDAY 4/20
8:00 IMPROV WITH ATTITUDE*
8:30 LOS DOS DUDES
8:35 LIQUID FUN & THE LIGHTED FOOLS
8:55 WPI
9:15 HAVERFORD'S LIGHTED FOOLS
9:35 LOS DOS DUDES
9:40 SKETCH 22*
10:10 BI FRANK
10:40 IMPROV BOSTON

SATURDAY 4/21
8:00 MISSION:IMPROVABLE*
8:30 ACOUSTIC LOVE
8:35 ZEBRO
9:05 SARA KOSKE VIDEO 1
9:10 DIRTY WATER
9:40 SARA KOSKE VIDEO 2
9:45 STRANGER THAN FICTION
10:15 ACOUSTIC LOVE
10:20 DERRICK COMEDY
10:50 SARA KOSKE VIDEO 3
10:55 TEAM SUBMARINE
* UMASS TROUPES

Matthews' acoustic show excites fans

JACK KEYS / MASS DAILY

Dave Matthews, above, will be performing alongside Tim Reynolds at a sold-out show at the Mullins Center Saturday.

By Tim McCall
Collegian Staff

Performing together for the second time in Massachusetts, Dave Matthews and Tim Reynolds will be at the Mullins Center this Saturday night. The duo will be playing a mostly acoustic, intimate set ranging in material from Mathew's solo career, band, and Reynolds's career and will include classic rock'n'roll covers.

For the concert the arena will be split in half to resemble a theater environment. Concert goers from this past year's homecoming concert will recognize the setup of the concert.

Matthew's popularity has grown to renowned status in the past couple years. His full time band, Dave Matthews Band has sold millions of albums world wide. Even the band's live albums have been certified platinum. When he is not touring with DMB, he is busy doing other projects such as a solo career (in September of 2003, he released his first solo album "Some Devil") and touring with his second band Dave and Friends (his friends are Reynolds, Trey Antasio, Tony Hall, Brady Blade and Ray Packowski.)

To date Matthews has won two Grammy Awards. In 1997 DMB won Best Rock Vocal Performance by a Duo or Group for the song "So Much to Say." Seven years later Matthews won his second Grammy for the song "Grave Digger" from his solo LP.

Reynolds was originally from Germany, but has been living and playing guitar in Santa Fe, N.M. for 17 years. He can play the sitar, guitar, mandolin, violin among other instruments.

After their Saturday show at UMass the two men will play one more gig at Radio City Music Hall in New York City on Sunday. After that Matthews will be rejoining his day job with the Dave Matthews Band and heading out on a six month tour starting May 1.

The sold-out show begins at 8 p.m. and should be one for the record books.

Tim McCall can be reached at tim.mccall@gmail.com

'Taste of UMass' mixes food, advertising

KEITH LOEBLEIN / MASS DAILY

"Crazy Dan" Goldberg competed to win in Nathan's Famous Hot Dog Eating Contest at the "Taste of UMass." He choked down 12 dogs and won a chance to compete at the July 4th Coney Island Nathan's contest.

By Mary-Frances Heck
Collegian Staff

Last night UMass was treated to a once a year food extravaganza at the Mullins Center. The 14th annual Taste of UMass featured over 75 food service companies and entertainers. For only a meal swipe, students were transported to hog heaven where "all you care to eat" took on a new meaning.

In addition to commercial food retailers, each dining common featured different dishes from around the world. Franklin DC served up tropical shrimp salad with fruit while Worcester prepared Mediterranean baba ganoush and chicken kabobs. Berkshire had roast beef sandwiches and panini. Nothing beat Hampshire's Thai creations, especially their authentically prepared red curry chicken. The UMass Bakeshop served delicious berry shortcake and Southwest café treated students to pizza by the slice.

According to the dining services Web site, this year's Taste featured "healthy world cuisine." Sophomore Sarah Froberg was not so sure about the nutrition of the night's choices. She said, "Even though I didn't eat a nutritionally balanced meal I felt satisfied after. Most of the choices didn't seem that healthy. There were a lot of fried options, which was nice, but nothing that would qualify as a healthy dinner."

Sophomore Steve Micklo agreed. "There wasn't a single thing there that I thought would qualify as healthy. I think the granola cookies were about the healthiest thing they had," he griped. "It normally wouldn't be so bad, but there were no DC's open for a better alternative."

Junior Andrea Hoey also hoped for other options. "I liked that we have the chance to eat something different for a change, but I wish we still had the option of going to at least one DC on campus because the Mullins Center was so overwhelmingly crowded."

Froberg did not mind the hustle and bustle. "It was crowded, but I got caught up in the atmosphere. The people staffing the booths were really enthusiastic."

"We got there a little late, which turned out ok because the vendors gave away the rest of their samples

See TASTE on page 7

L.A. gang lifestyle explored in movie

By Teresa Reilly
Collegian Staff

Clifford "Big Heat" Jordan and Orlando Myricks came out to UMass on Wednesday to show their documentary Why We Bang. The pair sat in the back of the room as twenty students watched "Bloods" and "Crypts" talk about gang life in the streets of Los Angeles.

"I'm just happy it was successful," said Lenz Bayas, the representative from the Iota Phi Theta fraternity who organized the event, "I want to help tear down pre-conceived notions."

"Our film was created from the viewpoint of gang bangers," said Jordan. The 75 minute long documentary takes viewers through the hoods of L.A. and into the minds of true gangsters. The film works towards a goal of showing what the senseless violence of the streets is doing to the people of these communities. "We wanted to show that they real confused, but they're real people," said Jordan.

The movie looks to put faces on these people instead of the 50 Cent lyrics that most people see as the truth about gangs. "He's (50 Cent) not a real gangbanger," said Jordan, "he can't even go back to his own neighborhood. And Dr. Dre… please."

According to the movie's Web site, www.whywebang.net, over 15,000 people have died from gang violence since 1981 in L.A. County. Mothers are forced to mourn their children on a daily basis. "Young guys aren't listening," said Myricks, "they're out there shooting and killing everyday."

A scene of the film shows a mother carrying two posters. One has a boy who looks to be about seven with dates written under his name. The other is another picture of a boy with a patch over his eye. The mother tells her story of her seven year-old's death. She was bringing her son to pick up his soccer trophy when a car pulled up next to hers and opened fire. In the process her son was shot and killed and her younger son's eye was slit.

At times even memorials and funerals aren't even safe. Myricks told a story about his friend who was setting up candles for a memorial and was shot on the scene. Jordan looked down and continued by talking about how funerals aren't safe.

Even with so many of their gang members dying, kids still continue to join. "Everyone's got to find a way to be important," said Jordan, "these kids ain't got nothing else to look forward to."

Myricks is an ex-Crypt member. "I went to elementary school with these kids," he said, "we became like a family. Once we put a name on it was when it became a gang."

These gangs aren't divided into strictly Crypt and Blood. "It's a neighborhood thing more so than a Crypt vs. Blood thing," said Jordan. The documentary makes a strong point of stating that the only place these different groups get along is in prison, where the barriers become racial.

Myricks and Jordan are both fathers who constantly worry about the potential gang violence has on their kids. "I send my kids to the white school," said Jordan. "I keep my kids busy with sports, they do everything," said Myricks.

Even their daughters aren't protected from the effects of gangs, whether it is shooting or being shot at. While the film shows only a few women talking about losing their boyfriends at the age of fifteen the directors both nod their heads in agreement that women are involved. "I got shot at by a woman," said Myricks, "she had be running like a mother f*cker too."

As gang populations continue to grow, Jordan and Myricks will continue their work to help stop it. "I still don't know why this is happening," said Jordan, "if you want to help, don't go to nobody's hood and ask them how to help. Go to a Church or anti-gang organization."

Teresa Reilly can be reached at treilly@student.umass.edu

Student union gallery explores what love is

By Amanda Mitchell
Collegian Staff

Love, the four letter word that means so much to so many people, and yet is almost impossible to eloquently define in words. For centuries, artists have tried to express the complexities behind the nearly indescribable word. Yesterday the University Gallery opened an exhibit displaying a collection of modern artists' attempts to do just that.

On display from yesterday's opening until Jun. 3, the gallery is exhibiting "What is Love?," a mixed-media collection of photographs, paintings, and silk-screens, among others. It is the result of work done throughout the spring semester by curator Julie Thomson and Professor Mario Ontiveros' Art History seminar, "On Love and Loss in Art, History, and Practice."

According to Thomson, who is a graduate student finishing this spring, the theme of the exhibit directly correlates to the discussions that took place in Ontiveros' class. She said readings and discussions also greatly influenced the selection of the individual works included in the exhibit.

"It's not often that the University gets to display work from it's permanent collection because it takes so much time and research to put together," Thomson said. "This was a wonderful opportunity to really put together something great."

The display takes the viewer through several of the underlying concepts present in the emotion of love. Important to the exhibit is the understanding that love encompasses loss, as well as relationships outside of exclusive partners. Upon entering the exhibit, one encounters a portrait of Jackie Kennedy at her husband, President John F. Kennedy's, funeral. Snapped by photographer, Elliott Erwitt, the face of Mrs. Kennedy is a simultaneous embodiment of love and anguish. The juxtaposition of emotions caught so clearly in real life sets the stage for the rest of the exhibit.

"Perhaps it's not best to start an installation about love with loss," said Thomson, "but this photograph is just so striking that I felt it would be a good place to start regardless."

In the first grouping of works, the topic of love of a partner is addressed. Photographed couples representing different types of partnerships, such as married and unmarried, proudly stand against the white wall. Next two artists render their own wives, abstracting the dimension of the couple. The viewer sees love between two people and then love from the artists' point of view.

Following the couples, friendships are presented as a different dimension of love. "The love you feel for a friend is much different than the love you would feel for a partner," Thomson said. "But it is still a kind of love."

In this section of the exhibit, the work of George Segal is displayed. In one particular piece that includes a silkscreen record cover, Segal pays tribute to artist Marcel Duchamp. According to a paper written by Thomson that was made available at the exhibit, Segal and Duchamp were acquaintances. Duchamp was also referenced in a piece done by Nam June Paik, suggesting a triangulation between the three men, a friendship in the name of the love of art.

Finally, the last section of the exhibit displays love as an abstract. Included is a photographed portrait of Lauro Morales, taken by Diane Arbus in 1970. Though the man, who is a Mexican dwarf, is alone in the photo, the photographer has entered an intimate space with her subject. The man is relaxed, reclined in a nearly nude position in his hotel room in New York City. The viewer has the feeling of sharing an intimate moment with the subject.

Also featured in this section is a woodcut print done by Wang Hui-Ming, once a professor at UMass. The print is titled "Poems in Wood" and resembles the personals section of a newspaper, while simultaneously consisting of sexually explicit and intimate poems, again suggesting two different views of love.

"What is Love?" takes the viewer through the many stages and definitions of love in the small exhibit room. And, although there are few words present, the representations of love depicted through the lives and eyes of others in the installation come together to form what could possibly be the most comprehensive definition of love available.

Amanda Mitchell can be reached at amitchel@student.umass.edu

Acclaimed war documentary to grace Amherst Cinema

"Iraq in Fragments" is a multiple award winning documentary about the chaos that currently rules Iraq. It is currently screening at the Amherst Cinema.

By Morgan-ann Rousseau
Collegian Staff

On Saturday at 2 p.m. and Tuesday at 7 p.m., Amherst Cinema Arts Center at 28 Amity St. will screen Iraq in Fragments, director James Longley's 2006 documentary that illuminates post-war Iraq in three acts.

The film is a recipient of several awards, including Documentary Film Editing Award at the 2006 Sundance Film Festival, and the Gold Hugo Award for Best Documentary at the 2006 Chicago International film Festival.

The documentary spreads across three acts that build a vivid picture of a country apart by the chaos of war, and differences in religion and ethnicity. Fragments uses the verite style, with no scripted narration, to explore the lives of ordinary Iraqis. The subjects of the film are people whose thoughts, beliefs, aspirations and concerns are simultaneously personal and indicative of the larger issues in Iraq today.

Kenneth Turan of The Los Angeles Times said, "Longley's impeccably nonjudgmental camera knows exactly what details to record. Drawn from more than 300 hours of footage, the film's all too brief 94 minutes mesmerizes with its insight and, rarer still, its beauty."

The film's running time is an hour and 34 minutes. Tickets can be purchased at the Amherst Cinema Box Office, or online at www.amherstcinema.org.

Morgan-ann Rousseau can be reached at mrousseau@student.umass.edu

UMass troupes kick off festival

COMEDY from page 6

ter," said Natalie Baseman, producer of Mission:IMPROVable and a junior at UMass.

"There's a lot to improv," Clack said. "All the other members need to trust in you and support you in what you're doing. I know that when I start a scene the other people acting with me know where I'm going to go with it and know it is going to be funny. That takes time."

The current members of Mission: IMPROVable are not shy as to why they wanted to join and what keeps them going. "I'm an attention whore," Clark joked. "I like being the center of attention and this allows me be that but lets people support me doing that."

"I love to make people laugh and there is such a natural high that comes from improv," Basenian added. "It's an addiction."

Mission:IMPROVable is under the umbrella of student organization Student Valley Production, which has been a part of UMass since 1992. SVP began as student one-act plays and now houses the three UMass comedy troupes with 32 total members. The other two comedy troupes on campus are Sketch 22 and IWA (Improv with Attitude). While all three groups deal in comedy, they use different styles.

Mission:IMPROVable uses the short-form style of improv comedy similar to the popular television show "Whose Line is it Anyway?" Sketch 22 is a sketch comedy troupe along the lines of Saturday Night Live. IWA is the newest comedy troupe to UMass and focuses on the long-form improv style, which you'll see in most professional improv theaters like Chicago's Second City.

With rehearsals twice a week and shows every Saturday, the troupe is constantly trying to make the show better. "We're not trying to do good collegiate improv, we're trying to do good improv," Baseman said.

Over spring break members of Mission:IMPROVable traveled to Chicago to take improv classes at the famed Improv Olympics. While you may not recognize the name, you do know some of the up and coming comedians that got a start there. Alumni of Improv Olympics include Mike Myers, Vince Vaughn, Chris Farley, Tina Fey and Stephanie Weir.

The "street cred," that the original members have provided is paying off. "We called [Improv Olympics] up and said, 'We're Mission:IMPROVable from UMass, Amherst. Can we use your place?' and they there like 'Oh yeah, we know you, sure,'" said Baseman.

The dedication is showing as UMass is beginning to make a splash in the collegiate improv world. In February, Mission:IMPROVable was among 12 other collegiate improv comedy troupes including Boston College, Boston University and Northeastern, that competed in Improv Boston's Third Annual College Beanpot Tournament. UMass won every round that they competed in and made the finals against their self-proclaimed archrivals Suffolk University.

"It's like the movie 'Mighty Ducks,' they're our Iceland," Baseman said. "In the first round everyone played everyone and voting was based on crowd applause and they had a lot more fans then we did. The judges voted for the final round and we won. We got a huge trophy and a plaque with our name on it which is at Improv Boston."

The honors didn't stop there. An MVP (most valuable improviser) was chosen from each troupe with Mitch Whitaker taking the title for UMass while Natalie Baseman received the overall MVP award for the tournament.

The awards are more significant than they may seem. "There is a general feeling that women aren't funny," Baseman said. "In college and improv there is a large amount of respect given to female performers."

Improv comedy is a unique beast that is best seen live. Mission: IMPROVable is the best collegiate improv around and the Comedy Jam is a rare opportunity for UMass students to experience both top-notch professional improv and homegrown talent all at once.

The 11th Annual Comedy Jam is Friday and Saturday starting at 8 p.m. It is held in Hartlett 65 and is free to the public.

Ryan McAskill can be reached at rmcaskil@student.umass.edu

Mullins Center hosts 'Taste'

TASTE from page 6

towards the end," said sophomore Ben Broad. "I got three containers of hummus!"

A large number of vendors gave out drink samples. Local farms served apple cider. Coke products were on hand, and Berkshire Springs gave out bottles of UMass water. Apart from these usual suspects, it was hard to miss the variety of energy and tea drinks.

"There was POM tea which I guess is some sort of juice/tea fusion and this stuff called Steaz. It was root beer made from green tea," said Hoey. "It was refreshing but tasted like watered down soda."

"There were so many energy and sports drinks," said junior Jeanine Ledoux. "I had tried most of them, and contest winners took the stage before, like Rockstar and Vitaminwater, but I thought the caffeinated popsicles were a bit much," she noted in reference to Hershey's Ice Cream Banzai Energy Ice.

"Despite the variety of beverages, I thought the Patriot's cheerleaders were the most refreshing part of the event," laughed Broad.

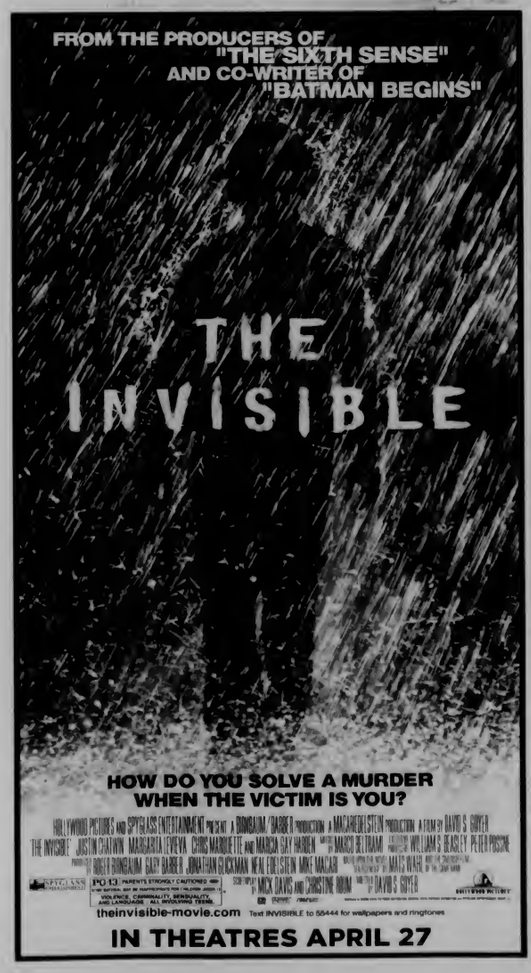
Many students enjoyed the samples, but realize that Taste of UMass is a marketing scheme. "I think everyone knows it's more of an advertising convention than some special thing UMass does. They have companies there trying to get you to take their things, trying to get college students to like their products," said Micklo.

Promotional ploys were not limited to free samples. Celebrity chef Jet Tila put on a cooking demonstration and contest winners took the stage with him. UMass Idol and Battle of the Bands were sponsored by local radio station 'LAZR 99.3.' Perhaps the most entertaining of all was the Nathan's Famous Hot Dog Eating Contest.

While most students ate their fill of Chinese, ice cream, energy drinks, and chips, an elite few dared to dream of greatness by packing in as many hot dogs as humanly possible. Competitor Paul Berube trained in the days leading up to the competition.

"I'm shooting for fifteen dogs in ten minutes," he said. If that is enough to win at UMass, Berube will have to train hard until July 4, when the night's winner will face off against world champion Takeru Kobayashi who won last year's title by eating 53 ½ dogs.

Mary-Frances Heck can be reached at mheck@student.umass.edu



FROM THE PRODUCERS OF
"THE SIXTH SENSE"
AND CO-WRITER OF
"BATMAN BEGINS"
THE INVISIBLE
HOW DO YOU SOLVE A MURDER WHEN THE VICTIM IS YOU?
theinvisible-movie.com
Text INVISIBLE to 58444 for wallpapers and ringtones
IN THEATRES APRIL 27

BRUEGGER'S BAKED FRESH DUO
We've never done anything halfway. Until now.
Any Half Sandwich
Any Cup of Soup
©2007 Brueggers Enterprises
Choose any two for only $6.29
FREE WiFi!
Amherst
170 N. Pleasant Street
413-253-5713
We accept the OCMP card!
WITH THIS COUPON
$4.99
No Grandaisy Classic Breakfast Wrap with a Medium Coffee
PLU 503 One coupon per person. Not valid with any other offer. Only original coupons will be accepted. Prices do not include tax. Valid at all participating locations. Expires 5-31-07.
WITH THIS COUPON
$1.99
For a bagel with cream cheese and a small coffee
PLU 499 One coupon per person. Not valid with any other offer. Only original coupons will be accepted. Prices do not include tax. Valid at all participating locations. Expires 5-31-07.
WITH THIS COUPON
$1.00 OFF
Any Brueggers DUO
PLU 502 One coupon per person. Not valid with any other offer. Only original coupons will be accepted. Prices do not include tax. Valid at all participating locations. Expires 5-31-07.
WITH THIS COUPON
$4.99 DOZEN
PLU 619 One coupon per person. Not valid with any other offer. Only original coupons will be accepted. Prices do not include tax. Valid at all participating locations. Expires 5-31-07.

'Disturbia' elevates PG-13 horror films

COURTESY PARAMOUNT PICTURES

Shia Labeouf of "Even Stevens" fame stars in this thriller about the murderer next door. Above, he sits with his co-star and onscreen love interest Sarah Roemer who plays city girl Ashley.

By Kerri DeMello

Often PG-13 thrillers are cast aside as horror flicks for the middle school crowd; however, Disturbia raises the bar with great acting, romance, comedy, despair, and true terror. Very rarely does a movie contain something for every audience member, but the cast of Disturbia proved the cynics wrong.

Kale (Shia Labeouf) is a respectable kid, who has come across family tragedy. When provoked by a Spanish teacher in his high school, Kale responds with a quick punch to the face and in turn is sentenced with three months house arrest during the summer. With nothing to do after his mother, Carrie- Anne Moss of The Matrix, takes away his computer and iPod, Kale turns to the window for entertainment. Luckily he has a beautiful, new neighbor right next door as a distraction.

Sarah Roemer plays Ashley, a good-humored beauty from the city whose hobbies include teasing the boys, sunbathing and oddly enough sitting on her rooftop reading. At first glance it's quite surprising that a romance quickly buds between the two, however, what girl can't resist the kid from "Even Stevens" getting handcuffed in his front yard, honestly? And since we all know spying on your creepy neighbors as a first date is the best foundation to any relationship the two mesh together perfectly.

Aaron Yoo brings some much needed comic relief to the screen with his character Ronnie, Kale's animated and slightly perverted best buddy. His outlandish remarks and entertaining expressions keep the movie as upbeat as it possibly can be. Yoo can absolutely be described as laugh-out-loud funny and while it may be solely because he is so ridiculous, it is certainly appreciated. With the tagline "Every killer lives next door to someone" Disturbia can't be all laughs with Ronnie, the movie has its fair share of terrifying moments also.

Disturbia takes its sweet time setting the scene, and while you may find yourself wondering, when suburbia is going to become Disturbia, be patient because once it starts it does not stop. Half of the fun of thrillers and scary movies is wondering when something is actually going to happen.

David Morse plays a killer a little too well and surely sends the audience members home with a chill down their spines. From the mixture of Morse's silent stare downs and friendly face the crowd will definitely be wondering who they really live next door to.

As the killer gets more and more involved in Kale's life the storyline in turn gets more and more terrifying. With scary images and the perfect horror movie music in the background this movie is not all about teenage drama.

Labeouf will certainly cause all the girls to be wondering why they didn't appreciate him more when he was on the Disney Channel. He has changed a lot for the better and it's doubtful that anyone's complaining. The fellas get their fair share of eye candy as well with Roemer's main costume being a bikini, coincidence? Not so much.

While the movie itself may not be the most unique thing in the world, the casting of actors is what really makes it great. Without Labeouf's convincing acting and new found maturity the movie would be going nowhere quick. Disturbia is not what most would expect.

It crossed the border of average and entered into the slightly above average area, very prestigious, and while you may not be running out to buy it at Best Buy anytime soon, it is well worth the student discounted ticket price at the cinema. Who doesn't love a good scream in a dark theater filled with college kids anyway?

Kerri DeMello can be reached at kademell@student.umass.edu.

Know your rights to stop harassment

By Atty. Charles J. DiMare and Emma McAlary
SLSO Legal Assistant, Fall 06'

Question– I am a student at the University of Massachusetts and I am feeling uncomfortable with the behavior another student is showing towards me. I think it is sexual harassment, but I'm not sure. What is sexual harassment and what can I do if I am being sexually harassed?

Answer– Under Massachusetts law, sexual harassment refers to any "unwelcome sexual advances, requests for sexual favors and other verbal or physical conduct of a sexual nature." Sexual harassment is considered a form of sex discrimination, and sexual discrimination in educational facilities is strictly prohibited.

Massachusetts law recognizes two types of sexual harassment, which are judged on the basis of the "reasonable person standard" - whether a reasonable person might interpret a behavior as sexual harassment.

The first, "quid-pro-quo," or "this-for-that" harassment, prohibits any professor, or any person in a position of authority at an education facility, to demand or request sexual favors of a student in exchange for an academic reward (or academic punishment when such favors are rebuffed.)

The second type, "hostile environment" harassment, applies to any sexually explicit conduct in view or in hearing range of a student that makes it uncomfortable or difficult for that student to complete his/her work. Most sexual harassment claims fall into this category, and it may occur between two students, a staff member and student, or a professor and a student. To determine whether a hostile environment exists, the courts typically consider such factors as the frequency and severity of the conduct, and whether the conduct is physically threatening or humiliating. Examples of such conduct include, but are not limited to, sexually explicit jokes, pictures, posters, and "teasing," comments about body parts or one's sex life.

Sexual harassment laws go beyond the classroom and extend to extra-curricular activities or other school related programs. According to the Code of Student Conduct, University officials are responsible for creating and maintaining a sexual-harassment free environment everywhere on campus, and they will "immediately respond to any incident of sexual harassment that comes to their attention."

Thus, any student who feels he or she is being sexually harassed may request that the University file "appropriate" charges against the accused, so long as the request is made within 12 months of the discovery of the alleged violation and the identity of the alleged perpetrator. A student may also file a complaint with the U.S. Department of Education's Office of Civil Rights, or with the Massachusetts Department of Education.

If you feel you are being sexually harassed, you have the right to tell your harasser to stop; however, a letter is an easier way to let your harasser know that you feel uncomfortable. Remember to keep a copy of that letter for your records. Keeping a record of any harassing behavior can also be helpful if you anticipate filing a complaint or take other action. The record should include what happened (the behavior exhibited) the date, the location of the incident, and information regarding any witnesses to the incident.

It is important to seek support from a friend or counselor if you feel threatened or believe you might be harmed. If you believe you are in immediate danger, call the police immediately. There are a number of great resources available to help victims of sexual harassment, like the Every Women's Center's Rape Crisis Hotline, the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination, the Equal Opportunity Employment Commission, and the Student Legal Services Office.

In addition, individuals impacted by sexual harassment or violence are encouraged to attend an upcoming empowerment rally "Take Back the Night 2007" on Thursday, Apr. 26 from 6 to 10 p.m. at Memorial Hall. The central purpose of the event is to speak out against violence that women experience, and to raise community awareness as a preventative measure against future violence. The event typically consists of a rally, a march, and often completed with a speak-out or candlelight vigil.

The information contained in this article refers to Massachusetts law and does not constitute legal advice. Fee paying UMass Amherst students with questions may call the Student Legal Services Office at 545-1995 to arrange an appointment, or come to 922 Campus Center to pick up more information.

Flaming Lips heads to Brown

Wayne Coyne, Steve Drozd, and Michael Ivans, above, are all members of the current incarnation of the Flaming Lips. The band is a part of Brown University's spring concert.

By Corey Charron
Collegian Staff

Brown University, in Providence, R.I., plays host to one the most exciting events the Northeast will encounter all year when the Flaming Lips, Yo La Tengo, and Mission of Burma visit for their Spring Weekend on Saturday April 21. The school's Spring Weekend has a long and illustrious history, with past performers including Bob Dylan, Bruce Springsteen, Ray Charles, and Elvis Costello.

The Flaming Lips have the reputation of putting on one of the most enjoyable and interactive live shows in rock. Wayne Coyne, their lead singer and guitarist, frequently enters a large plastic bubble and surfs throughout the crowd. Most concerts incorporate people dressed in animal costumes, dancing on stage, confetti, balloons, and puppets.

The band formed in 1983 when Coyne allegedly stole a set of musical instruments from a local church in Oklahoma City, Okla. Mark Coyne, vocalist and Wayne's brother, as well as bassist Michael Ivins helped form the group the Flaming Lips, who played their first gig at a transvestite club called the Blue Note Lounge.

After drummer Richard English joined the group they released their first recording, their self-titled debut, in 1985, on their own label, Lovely Sorts of Death. The band would see much personnel rotation throughout the years, with Wayne Coyne and Ivins being the only current original members.

The 1980s saw many albums from the Flaming Lips, along with a notable tour with the Butthole Surfers. In 1991 Warner Bros. signed the band to a major label deal following their impressive album, "In a Priest Driven Ambulance." Their first release on Warner Bros. came in 1992 with "Hit to Death in the Future Head," which found little commercial success.

Their breakthrough came in 1993 when "Transmissions from the Satellite Heart," became a surprise hit, mostly because the single "She Don't Use Jelly" became popular. The Flaming Lips appeared on MTV's "Beavis and Butthead," toured with the Red Hot Chili Peppers, and even performed on "Beverly Hills 90210."

The 1990s continued with more albums and touring, but not as much mainstream success. They secured their cult rock status with 1999's masterpiece, "The Soft Bulletin." The record stretched The Flaming Lips' experimental capabilities to places their fans never imagined.

2002's "Yoshimi Battles Pink Robots," continued the building of the band's reputation as being one of the most innovative bands in the world. Last year's "At War with the Mystics," landed at 11 on the American charts, and the band won two Grammy Awards for Best Rock Instrumental Performance and Best Engineered Album, Non-Classical.

Playing alongside the Flaming Lips will be indie-rock darlings Yo La Tengo, who boast a similar rich history and cult fan base. Ira Kaplan, guitarist and vocalist, and his wife, Georgia Hubley, drummer and vocalist, brought Yo La Tengo together in 1984 in Hoboken, N.J. The two put an ad in a local paper looking for someone with interest in the bands Mission of Burma, the Soft Boys, and Love. Guitarist Dave Schramm and bassist Mike Lewis joined the pair to form the group, but eventually left the band. The current lineup came to be in 1992, when bassist James McNew joined.

The group has received much critical success because of their eclectic music style, which varies from noise to shoe gaze to pop. Comparisons to the Velvet Underground landed the band in the movie, "Who Shot Andy Warhol?," acting as their classic counterparts.

The past decade has seen Yo La Tengo at their very best. Critics and fans alike agree that 1997's "I Can Feel the Heart Beating as One," 2000's "And Then Nothing Turned Itself Inside Out," and last year's "I Am Not Afraid of You and I Will Beat Your Ass," are among the best of the band's catalogue.

Mission of Burma, one of Yo La Tengo's influences, will also perform at Brown on Saturday. The post-punk collective began in Boston in 1979 and only lasted until 1983. A surprise reunion in 2002 led to a new release, last year's "Obliterati," which continued Mission of Burma's tradition in intense punk-inspired music.

Stardeath and White Dwarfs will kick off Saturday's celebrations with their experimental pop, in the same vein as King Crimson, the Flaming Lips, and Dinosaur Jr. They formed in 2004 in Oklahoma City, Okla., and released their debut EP in the spring of 2005.

Tickets are $15 for Brown students and $25 for the public. They are still available online and the Brown box office. Doors open at 2 p.m. and the festivities begin at 2:30 p.m.

Corey Charron can be reached at cchcharron@student.umass.edu

Huskies crush Minutemen

BASEBALL from page 12

(one earned) on five hits and one walk, while striking out a pair.

UMass did most of its damage at the plate off of Aaron Greenblatt in the eighth, scoring four times on the strength of a two-run single by Mike Donato and the first collegiate home run by freshman Cody Kauffman. Other highlights at the dish for the Minutemen included Bryan Garrity's first homer of the season and Adam Tempesta, who increased his streak of reaching base to 24 games with his single in the first inning.

"Bryan Garrity and Cody Kauffman [each] hit a home run," Stone said, "but other than that, we didn't do much."

Tempesta and senior Bill Rankin continued their hot hitting, as each pounded out two hits in the loss. With his pair of singles, Tempesta increased his team-leading batting average to .367. He also leads in hits (36), doubles (6), total bases (42) and is tied with Jim Macdonald – who is out with a broken finger – with a .429 slugging percentage.

With its win, Northeastern will play for the tournament championship against Boston College (13-21-1) at 3 p.m. on Wednesday at Fenway Park. The Minutemen will square off against Harvard (12-13) in the consolation game beforehand, at noon.

But before the Maroon and White set its sight on the Crimson, it must play a crucial three-game set against LaSalle (13-18, 5-7 A-10) this weekend at Earl Lorden Field.

"It's a very important weekend for us," Stone said. "We just need to play well. If we get good pitching on the mound and play well defensively, we'll give ourselves a good chance to win some ballgames – and I feel good about our chances. But we need to make a move in the league – a positive move – and the time is now."

UMass has enjoyed success against the Explorers, coming out on top in 13 of the 19 career meetings. But it was La Salle that took two of three from the Minutemen last year in an exciting series that was played in Philadelphia, Pa.

Senior and staff ace Chris Lloyd gets the call on Friday, while Jim Cassidy is slated to start on Saturday. Sunday's probable starter is yet to be finalized, but Stone said either Jared Freni or Mike DiCato will likely be on the hill.

Notes: Yesterday's game was supposed to be played in Lynn at Fraser Field, but was moved to Friedman Diamond in Brookline (Northeastern's home field) to accommodate the BC/Harvard first round game...Despite playing at its home field, NU was the road team – as originally scheduled...Yesterday's game was the 75th career meeting between the two schools, UMass still leads 38-37...Milano's home run in the first extended his hitting streak to 19 games, a school record...UMass is 14-25 in 39 career meetings against Harvard...UMass had lost nine consecutive Beanpot Tournament games...Its last win was in the 2002 consolation game against Harvard, 5-3... The last Beanpot Championship for the Minutemen was in 2000, over Northeastern.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@student.umass.edu. Log onto the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.

Minutewomen roll into Philadelphia

SOFTBALL from page 12

right now, it's all about securing a berth to that six-team championship."

The Minutewomen have won 17 of the last 21 conference crowns. However, Sortino believes the competition is as tough as ever, with nearly every team still in contention for the postseason, so UMass cannot find itself looking ahead.

"I think there's great parity in the league," Sortino said. "When you strive to be perfect and strive ahead of yourself, you get into trouble. You've got to stay where you are right now, so for the first game, it's game-on [today] at three o'clock."

Temple is historically a hitting team, and this year's version is no different. The Owls are second in the league in batting average at .309. However it is their pitching that has struggled mightily this season.

The Owl pitchers are last in the A-10 as a group, registering a 6.06 ERA, a full run higher than any other team in the conference.

"Their team is about scoring runs," Sortino said. "Their pitching isn't too solid, but I expect them to have an offense."

UMass is 59-14 all-time against the Owls. The Minutewomen swept Temple last season in a doubleheader in Amherst, 3-1 and 12-7.

On Sunday, the Maroon and White will see a vastly different team in Philadelphia, traveling to St. Joe's for a doubleheader with the Hawks.

In contrast to Temple's offense-heavy style, the Hawks are a much better team on the mound than in the batter's box. They currently rank fourth in the conference with a 3.36 ERA, while sitting in the basement of the league in hitting with a .218 team batting average.

UMass swept the Hawks in a doubleheader last season, winning the first game, 5-0, before taking the second game, 8-0, in six innings. The Minutewomen are 44-5 against the Hawks all-time.

Sortino said the game plan heading into the weekend won't change, despite the teams' different styles.

"We have to play our game," Sortino said. "Our pitchers have to pitch for what our strengths are. We don't go in there trying to accommodate anyone else's strengths and weaknesses. We take our strengths, and we try to execute as best we can. What typifies us offensively and defensively remains a constant, no matter who the opponent is."

Freshman pitcher Bailey Sanders will likely see more action this weekend after a solid outing in her last start. Last Tuesday at Boston College, Sanders threw a complete game, giving up just one earned run while striking out five and walking two on 72 pitches in the Minutewomen's 7-1 victory.

Sanders also pitched in relief of sophomore Brandice Balschmiter in Sunday's 5-2 win over Charlotte. UMass padded a 3-2 lead with a two-run double from Lauren Proctor in the top of the seventh inning. Sanders then came in to close the game, throwing just seven pitches in a perfect inning.

"I gave her the nod in the seventh inning when the score was 3-2," Sortino said of the decision put Sanders in to close the game. "[Proctor] broke it open to 5-2 with a very timely hit, but Bailey was coming out there at 3-2."

Sortino has used Sanders sparingly throughout the season while leaning on Balschmiter to hold down the circle. With the postseason just a few weeks away, Sanders needs to get more work to be ready for the A-10 Tournament and possibly the NCAA Tournament.

Sortino is slowly working her back into a regular rotation as she gets more comfortable at the collegiate level.

"She had to take care of the things she needed to take care of, and she did," Sortino said of Sanders. "Bailey is going to be out there. She gets better everyday. The time you haven't seen her [on the field] has been the time for her to do her work because she needed to fix some things and make some adjustments, and she's done that."

With three weeks left in the regular season, UMass needs its No. 2 hurler to be ready for regular duty.

"I think that her performance right now and her ability to come out and handle the game for us is timely, and obviously, we need her," Sortino said. "Bailey is definitely going to see action this weekend. She needs to, we want her out there and the team wants her out there."

Sanders has made 14 appearances for the Minutewomen this season, with 11 starts. She is 5-4 with a 3.34 ERA and one save. The freshman has given up eight home runs to Balschmiter's two in twice as many appearances.

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremy@student.umass.edu.

UM offense heating up at perfect time scored a season-high 17 goals in a five-goal win over Hobart last weekend. Eleven different Minutemen scored in the game, including Sam Moody and Fred Federico, who both tallied their first goals of the season.

M. LACROSSE from page 12

Senior captain Brett Garber – who is tied with sophomore attack Jim Connolly in goals with 20 – has preached taking quality shots all season and believes that the Minutemen need to be persistent with their shot selection. And when they do get good shots, capitalize.

"It's not about taking shots, it's about taking quality shots," Garber said. "And we have to find spots in the goal. We just have to keep coming. This goalie is very athletic and he's going to be all over the net so we just need to find a way to get around him. I know we will, we just have to make sure we do."

Georgetown has been in some close contests this season but has found a way to eek out a bunch of wins by close margins. The Hoyas have won five games this season by two goals or less. They have won three one-goal games and a pair of two-goal games.

"I just think it's an attitude," Cannella said. "Each time they step on the field they don't think they're going to lose. They're able to play well in tough situations and they play a very difficult schedule as well.

"They have some great players and some guys that have really stepped up for them. They have some young guys that are really playing well for them and doing a good job and Cass has been really solid in goal."

Connolly echoed Garber, putting emphasis on quality shots in the offensive end.

"The last two games, we've really been on a roll and we need to continue that. We need to finish our opportunities and continue to get good looks," he said. "We've been working on a few different things, more of the same stuff we've been focusing on every week. We're really focusing hard on shooting the ball well and making sure that the ball ends up in the back of the goal."

Rob Greenfield can be reached at rgreenfi@student.umass.edu

UMass–Georgetown rivalry a special one

PELLAND from page 12

been here for a year but I'm pretty familiar with the rivalry. I've followed UMass lacrosse for a while. We know how big of a game this is. This is a big game."

It remains to be seen whether or not Saturday's victor will ultimately come away with another league championship. Georgetown currently leads the group of eight with a spotless 4-0 league record with the Minutemen slightly behind at 3-1.

Should UMass prevail, they'll hold a head-to-head tiebreaker with two league games (Fairfield Tuesday, Rutgers to close out the regular season) sandwiched around the annual Syracuse contest. The Greyhounds are next at 3-2 in the conference, but don't put much confidence in them.

Rivalries are always an added bonus to big games and with the poor start the Minutemen suffered through this season, it seems as though winning this game – and gaining the ECAC's first-ever automatic qualifier – may be their only ticket to returning to the NCAA Tournament.

At least that's what history tells us.

Jon Pelland is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jpelland@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
is looking for new
Graphic Designers
for the Fall 2007 semester
Daily Advertising Designers
Nightly Production Supervisors
Advertising Production Manager
major can apply. Previous design ience not necessary, but encouraged.
Visit our office in the Campus Center Basement
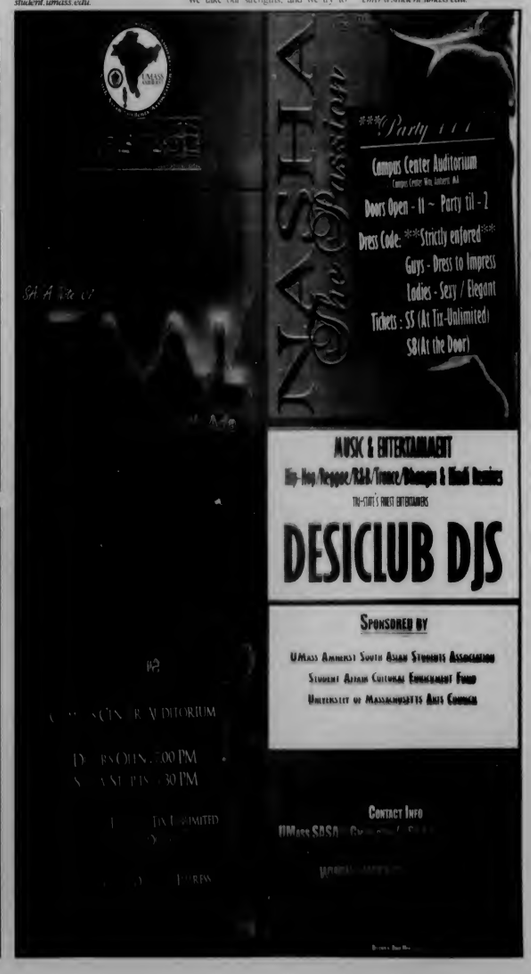
om 10am - 4pm for applications.



Rowers go for 12th straight league title

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

The promised land is in sight. However there is yet another mountain to climb for the Massachusetts rowing team. The Atlantic 10 Conference Championships will be held this weekend in Camden, N.J. The Maroon and White look to build upon a promising season and add a 12th straight A-10 Championship title, already a record in any sport in conference history, to the mantle.

The Cooper River seems to be a spot that UMass is partial to, as they did quite well for themselves last season. In the 2006 A-10s, the Minutewomen won four races: the quad, the lightweight four, the second novice eight and the second varsity eight. The second varsity eight and second novice eight both put forth particularly strong efforts, beating opponents by at least 20 seconds.

With several injuries, lineups have had to be changed in order to compensate for the losses. However, the team has put in extra time whenever and wherever possible and it has shown in the team's production.

Last week, UMass kept in stride with powerhouses Texas and Southern California and also a strong Northeastern team.

The Minutewomen have overcome multiple shortcomings as a team in a northern climate. They have not had the same luxury of year-round access to on-water training areas. However, UMass kept up with teams that are widely-viewed as the best in the nation.

The Massachusetts Varsity Eight team was leading its race against the Trojans until the 800-meter mark in the race, but the momentum of the boat was halted when a rower caught a crab. UMass would finish the race fourth, but throughout the first day of racing they came in third on three different occasions against ranked opponents.

The team stands behind the strong rowing of the Varsity Eight and Lightweight Four boats. Against teams up from the northern part of the country, the Varsity Eight squad has never finished a race lower than second place. Keeping up with a similar trend, the Lightweight Four boat has come in third in races with teams from up North only once, finishing second or better every other time.

The two boats have played a significant role in UMass' two victories in its last four regattas. In the regatta in Kingston, R.I., the Minutewomen finished tied for second.

In a recent conference coach's poll, the Minutewomen are expected to repeat as A-10 champions. Their top competitors in the conference are No. 2 Saint Joseph's and No. 3 Dayton. The Hawks are coming off of a free weekend and should be plenty rested to take on the defending A-10 champions. The Flyers had a strong showing at the Knecht Cup last weekend and their nationally-ranked Lightweight Eight squad is poised to do battle in Camden this weekend.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

UMass ranked entering A-10s

Minutewomen reach national poll for first time in history

By Mike Connors
Collegian Staff

Coming off a successful season, the Massachusetts tennis team hopes to advance deep into the Atlantic 10 Tournament this weekend.

However, the Minutewomen (11-7, 2-1 A-10) must take one step at a time, and will commence their push towards a conference championship with an early, 10:30 a.m. match against the St. Joseph's Hawks (11-8) today.

The regular season ended on a positive note with victories over Quinnipiac and Rhode Island. The wins helped the team accomplish another impressive feat on their already historic season.

With their 11 victories on the season, the Minutewomen were just nationally ranked No. 125 in the ITA Poll. In the team's 31 years in existence, no other team has ever been nationally ranked.

The strong A-10 holds three other teams in the Top 125. Entering the weekend, Temple is ranked No. 86, Richmond is just behind at No. 90 and Xavier is slightly ahead of the UMass at No. 120.

Michelle Spiess, UMass' all-time singles wins leader, also won her third Atlantic 10 Women's Player of Week award.

The Minutewomen come into the tournament as a four seed in a pool of fourteen. The Hawks sit second from the bottom, holding the thirteen spot.

Though in the same division, the two opponents have only faced each other twice in the past. The most recent contest resulted in a 4-0 UMass victory back in the 2002 Atlantic 10 Tournament.

Barring an unforeseen change in both team's lineups, the first singles match will include two former Louisville players on opposite sides of the court. Senior Michele Spiess went 19-10 for the Cardinals her freshman year at the first singles spot before changing allegiances and arriving in Amherst. St. Joseph's Stephania Velazquez, currently a junior, went 2-0 her freshman year at the No. 6 singles spot at Louisville.

Velazquez is 10-10 at the top singles slot on the season, and Spiess, the reigning A-10 Player of the Year, comes in with a more notable record.

An intriguing match comes at the second singles position. Masha Pozar has performed superb as of late, winning nine of her last eleven matches. During this time, one of the two losses came as a result of back spasms that forced her to forfeit the match.

Pozar's opponent will be freshman phenom Jennifer Kedzierski. After winning fifteen straight matches to start the season, Kedzierski has faltered in her last two matches.

If the first doubles team of Spiess and Pozar is retained, it will be nearly impossible for the opposition to compete. The tandem has repeatedly overwhelmed opponents with their outstanding skills.

Sophomore Stephanie Gimenez has enjoyed success at the sixth singles spot, winning seven of her 12 matches from that position.

The result of the match could lie on the young shoulders of the Minutewomen's Maude Lecluyse and Stephanie Gimenez.

Lecluyse, remarkably only seventeen years old, has thrived at the No. 5 the last two matches. After winning 6-1, 7-6 (7-5) against Quinnipiac, the freshman cruised to a 6-3, 6-1 victory a week ago against Rhode Island.

Stephanie Gimenez has shared similar success at the final singles spot. Following her 7-5, 6-3 defeat of her opponent from Quinnipiac, the second year player used the momentum to guide her to a nearly flawless 6-1, 6-0 win in the URI match.

Should the Minutewomen surpass the Hawks, they will have to be mentally and physically prepared for another match just a few hours later.

The team will take on the winner of the Xavier-St. Bonaventure match at 6 p.m. Xavier, the fifth seed, is the likely opponent if the Minutewomen advance. Though one spot higher in the conference tournament rankings, the Musketeers are ranked five slots ahead of the Minutewomen in the nationally ranked ITA A Poll.

Temple and Richmond, the respective one and two seeds of the tournament, each hold a first-round bye. The latter has captured the past three conference championships and is in prime position to hoist up its fourth consecutive trophy.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

UM sprints to UConn for invitationals

By Melissa Turtinen
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts men's and women's track and field teams are both counting on the nice weather this weekend at their respective UConn competitions.

The Minutemen will be competing in the Husky Spring Meet at 1 p.m. on Saturday. The women's team will be participating in the UConn Select Invitational starting at 10 a.m. tomorrow.

The men's team is participating in an invitation-only event. There are nine teams competing, including Brown, Boston University, Central Connecticut, Providence College, Quinnipiac, Southern Connecticut, Connecticut and Rhode Island.

"There is representation from many eastern conferences. It makes it a challenge of the conferences," said UMass coach Ken O'Brien.

O'Brien believes UConn, PC, URI, Brown and BU will be the toughest challenges in this upcoming meet.

"UConn has always been one of the toughest teams," O'Brien said. "Providence College doesn't have a deep team but they are Big East Champions in cross country so they should be tough competition in distance."

UMass had good performances in the first half of the season, with success last week at the home meet when the men's team placed second out of eight teams.

UMass has shown promise in the hurdles, 4x100 meter relays, 400 meters and the 4x400 meter relays. According to O'Brien, the middle distance and distances events have started to improve a lot in the last couple of weeks.

"What we try to do is to time our preparation by the end of the season. We really want to have as many athletes get close to their best performance by this time in a couple weeks, but we can see some improvements," O'Brien said.

All of the spring sports are hoping for better weather for the rest of the season. O'Brien explained how the weather can inhibit performances, but he still focuses on the things they can control.

"We'll work on sharpening our technique and lightening our practice load," O'Brien said. "We hope to polish things off to hopefully win top three or four in conference."

The Minutewomen will compete in a meet that consists of eight teams this includes UConn, Southern Connecticut, Central Connecticut, BU, Quinnipiac, Brown, and Providence.

"UConn and Brown have complete programs. They don't seem to have any holes in their event areas. 23 events and they are pretty solid in all of them," said UMass coach Julie LaFreniere.

LaFreniere expects freshman Lisa Wilson and junior Christina DeRosa to excel in their events this Saturday.

"The 5K is her real race, the 1,500 is just speed workouts for her," LaFreniere said of DeRosa's race.

Wilson's top event is the discus although she also competes in the hammer and the shot put.

"The hammer is very new to her, every week she is adding feet to her throws," said LaFreniere. "In the shot put she is learning a new technique and is struggling but improving."

Taryn Trapp is also expected to improve this week. Last Saturday Trapp debuted in the steeplechase.

"She's really getting her feet under her and she's getting stronger every week," LaFreniere said of Trapp's performance.

LaFreniere is expecting better performances by the athletes this week partly because of the improvement in the weather.

"I'm hoping for the good weather, it will be more conducive for our athletes to have better performances," she said.

The Minutewomen are hoping to score as many points as they can while working on individual athletes to show improvements in their personal events.

"This weekend and next will determine what heat they are in for the conference meet," LaFreniere said. "The faster they run the more likely they will secure a good section in the conference meet."

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtine@student.umass.edu.

Depth not an issue for Sortino in 2007

DEPTH from page 12

Normandin isn't UMass' only option if one of the starting outfielders goes down. Sophomore Davina Hernandez is hitting .250 on the season.

Against Rhode Island, Molinari went down with an injury and Hernandez stepped in going 1-for-5 with an RBI in the doubleheader. When Molinari exited the game, the count stood at 0-2. Hernandez entered and worked the count full and even fouled a few pitches off. Although she eventually went down swinging, battling to a full count let her see more pitches and gave her a better idea what to expect from the URI hurler.

"Sam's starting to come on and we can't move Candice or [Proctor]," Sortino said. "So it's a fight between [Salato], [Hernandez] and [Normandin]."

Freshman Sarah Reeves also hopes to make a play for some action. Although her batting average is just .100 on the season, Sortino knows what she has with the young infielder.

"It's tough breaking into the lineup," Sortino said. "Sarah Reeves, that kid is a hitter. I've got [Acampora] who's hitting, but [Reeves] could be a [designated player] or play third base. It's tough for her because the only thing she gets is a pinch hitting appearance and it's tough to be a pinch hitter, especially a freshman pinch hitter."

Even with her lone freshman pitcher, Bailey Sanders, Sortino carefully picks and chooses her new weapon's spots. Sanders allows Sortino to give her ace, sophomore Brandice Balschmiter, a breather whenever necessary. The keen tactician that she is, Sortino held Sanders from action until she worked out a problem in her delivery. Now, the problem is solved and Sanders is as effective as ever – just as the A-10 portion of UMass' schedule is heating up.

Sortino also hopes to see Sanders get some time in another capacity. Despite a poor batting average (.125), Sanders drove in three runs in limited at-bats early in the season.

"I haven't been able to put a bat in her hand because we've been working so much on pitching, but that kid can knock the ball clear out of the complex."

Joe Meloni can be reached at jmeloni@student.umass.edu

Typadis and Co. chasing top teams

W. LACROSSE from page 12

UMass won just conference game in seven tries.

But for those who like to find the silver lining on everything there is some good news in the sea of despair surrounding this team right now. The Minutewomen pulled off some late-season heroics to advance to the A-10 Tournament last season by winning four of their last five conference matchups, and in 2004, the team won their final three games to clinch a spot in the postseason.

It's safe to say though, the team's unexpected collapse and current predicament was probably not what UMass coach Alexis Venechanos and her staff envisioned when the team sat at 4-2 on March 13 and was off to its best start since 2003.

Duquesne has won its last two conference games over La Salle and St. Joseph's, but those two teams have a combined record of 0-6 in conference action this season. The Dukes' lone loss in the A-10 came in a 15-9 defeat to St. Bonaventure on Apr. 10.

Duquesne's Kathleen McNish has been a force to be reckoned with all season for opponents, with 27 goals and 33 assists on the season.

UMass is 3-2 all-time against the Dukes, including a 12-11 overtime win last season. The revenge factor may also play a role in Friday's matchup, as the Minutewomen's OT win over the Dukes was the deciding factor in keeping the Dukes out of the postseason for only the second time as members of the A-10 conference.

While UMass may be an even 3-3 all-time against St. Bonaventure, the team is not treading water with the Bonnies in the major statistical categories in 2007.

In three conference games, the Bonnies are averaging close to 15 goals per game, compared to seven goals for the Minutewomen. Katelyn Fass and Kimberly Ross lead St. Bonaventure's attack with 32 and 27 goals, respectively

To score 15 goals a game, you have to be able to gain possession and that's exactly what St. Bonaventure has done in 2007, averaging 13 draw controls per contest. The Bonnies are also a team willing to shoot on net any chance they get, but they also know how to find the back of the net, scoring on half of their shot attempts in conference games.

St. Bonaventure is no slouch on the defensive end, either, surrendering just 8.67 goals a contest in the A-10 this season. With the Minutewomen averaging just seven goals in its last three games, the Maroon and White have its work cut out for them Sunday in curing their recent offensive woes.

However, St. Bonaventure has yet to play the cream of the crop in the A-10 as the Minutewomen have. The Bonnies have played only one team on their conference schedule with a win to their credit while UMass has played teams with a combined record of 8-3.

Kevin Dooley can be reached at kdooley@student.umass.edu

SUMMER JOBS

Are you a creative, energetic, and nurturing person? Would you enjoy spending the summer in a beautiful natural environment working with children ages 5-13? YMCA Camp Norwich, just 20 minutes from Northampton, is now hiring Counselors, Lifeguards, and Instructors for Nature Study, Arts & Crafts, Athletics, Boating, Wood Working, Ceramics, and Music.

Call the Camp Registrar or stop by the HRYMCA for a camp brochure and camp staff application.

Hampshire Regional YMCA
286 Prospect Street
Northampton, MA 01060
413-584-7086 • www.hrymca.org

CINEMARK
The Best Seat
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St•413-587-4232
Schedule for Fri 4/20/07 - Thurs 4/26/07
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
Disturbia (PG-13)' 1:25 4:25 7:20 9:30
300 (R) 4:50 10:05
Pathfinder (R)' 12:55 4:20 7:25 10:10
Blades of Glory(PG-13) 1:35 4:35 7:40 10:00
Perfect Stranger (R)' 12:50 4:10 7:00 9:45
Meet the Robinsons (PG-13) 1:00 4:00 7:15 9:35
Are We Done Yet? (PG)' 1:30 4:45 7:30 9:55
Hot Fuzz (R) 1:15 4:05 7:15 10:20
Firefox (R)' 1:05 4:30 7:10 10:05
Vacancy (R) 1:10 4:40 7:30 9:50
Ghostrider (R)' 1:00 5:00 9:15
Argus Teen Hunger Force Movie (R)' 1:40 7:45
The Reaping (R)' 1:45 4:55 7:50 10:15
* no passes or superpasses
• NO PASSES NO SUPERSAVERS
Tickets & Showtimes available at cinemark.com

Remember when you felt like this?
Find it again...
UMASS
Haigis Mall bus stop • 10:00 am
Amherst College
Converse Hall bus stop
10:20 am
for the FREE
Sunday shuttle
to Dwight Chapel
Dwight Chapel
885 Federal Street Belchertown, MA 01007 • 413-256-8086
www.dwightchapel.org • Pastor Emmanuel Hogg
We're growing in Christ, come grow with us!

"Results you can feel ...without the side effects."
• headaches • neck pain
• back pain • sports injuries
• auto injuries • and more...
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractor
Participating provider for HMO s
Student Insurance, Blue Cross GIC
Car Insurance & most others
www.AmherstFamilyChiro.com
Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health
Most insurance accepted
228 Triangle Street
Amherst, MA
(near Bertucci's)
549-1500

NOW SHOWING APR. 20-APR. 26
amherst cinema
INTO GREAT SILENCE
Ascania: The Flowering Desert + Carnivorous Plants
A special presentation
Sun April. 22 4:00
THE HOAX
Fri-Sat 4:00 6:50 9:30
Sun 6:30 9:30
Mon-Wed 4:00 6:50 9:30
THE LIVES OF OTHERS
Fri-Sat 4:00 6:50 9:30
Sun 6:30 9:30
Mon 4:00 6:50 9:30
Tues 4:00 9:30
Wed 4:00 6:50 9:30
Thur 4:00
Iraq in Fragments
JANUS FILMS
THE SEVENTH SEAL
CHOTOROU SAN
ZERO FOR CONDUCT
28 AMITY STREET (413) 253-2547
www.AmherstCinema.org

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

9						5
		7	8	3	1	2
	2					4
		3	6		5	4
	4					2
		2	7		9	6
	6					3
		4	5	7	3	1
2						8

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Frizzy do
5 Stitched connection
9 Draw out
14 Daffy bird?
15 Senate gofer
16 Copier brand
17 Facilitates
19 Chaplain
20 Blight on the landscape
21 Delays
23 Metallic elem
25 Female deer
26 Two-point sci
30 No big deal
35 One more fer
36 Small silvery food fish
37 Equal score
38 Pinball violati
39 Spread on
40 Nap locale
41 Unwell
42 Leghorn local
44 "Guys and
44 Linchpin
46 Soldier's lodg
47 Skirt's edge
48 12/25
50 In the beginn
54 Game areas
59 Dishes
60 Space travele
62 Religious principle
63 Garden labyrinth
64 By way of, briefly
65 Intuit
66 Word with jacke or collar
67 Careless eater

DOWN
1 Out of the wind
2 Subtly clever
3 Early Hitchcock movie
4 Singles
5 Incorporeal consciousness
6 Consumed
7 Grow older
8 Webwork
9 Heroic deed
10 Mullite
11 Pakistani tongue
12 Part of FDIC
13 Previous partners
18 13, for a baker
22 In a weird way
24 Intricate
26 Dyeing method using wax
27 Nimble
28 "When Harry Met ___"
29 Baby fox
31 Count (on)
32 Bikini for one
33 Doughboy's weapon
34 Brewer's ingredient
36 Cross over
39 Tiny particles
40 Fifth note
42 Repeat
43 "Saturday Night Fever" craze
45 Pokshes
46 Lacking vegetation
49 Passover cracker
50 Play parts
51 "Oh, I Sing"
52 Huckleberry of fiction
53 Mild
55 Aardvark snack
56 Willie Wonka's creator
57 Continental bill
58 Torn ticket
61 Posed

IRON HORSE ENTERTAINMENT GROUP PRESENTS fountainsofwayne
plus Winterpills
SATURDAY, APRIL 21 • 8:30 PM
DOORS OPEN 7:30 PM • BALLROOM
STATE RADIO
PLUS FEAR NUTTIN' BAND
THURSDAY, APRIL 26 • 8:30 PM
DOORS OPEN 7:30 PM • BALLROOM
PIEBALD & MC CHRIS
plus House of Fools
THURSDAY, APRIL 26 • 8:30 PM
DOORS OPEN 7:30 PM • CLUBHOOM
Pearl Street Nightclub 10 PEARL ST. NORTHAMPTON
WIN TICKETS!
E-mail your name & favorite band to streetteam@iheg.com
TO PURCHASE TICKETS OR FOR MORE INFO VISIT OUR WEBSITE OR CALL
WWW.IHEG.COM
413-586-8686

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"I would rather have a cup of tea than sex."
-Boy George

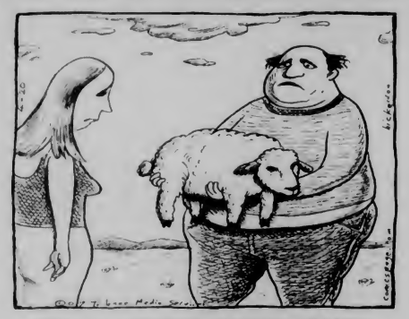
A COLLEGE GIRL NAMED JOE By Aaron Warner

HI, MY NAME IS JOE, AND I'LL BE SHOWING YOU AROUND CAMPUS FOR ORIENTATION.
IF ANYONE HAS ANY QUESTIONS AT ANY POINT OF TODAY'S TOUR, PLEASE DON'T HESITATE TO ASK.
IF I'M NOT ABLE TO ANSWER THEM, MAYBE WE'LL BE DONE QUICKER.

THE FAMILY MONSTER By Josh Shalek

How will I be remembered? I hope there aren't any bad stories about me.
Not everyone is remembered in the same way.
But weird? Did he not run over by a truck, or did he end up in a bottle. Wierwin?
Both of those scenarios are always better than my real ones.
Pretty memorable

THE QUIGMANS By Buddy Hickerson



HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Life is a crazy river and at times the only way to cross is to walk on crocodiles backs.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
When aliens come to earth they must meet dolphins before humans.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
For a person who suffers from motion sickness, a water plane is basically hell.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Your back is quite hairy. Might you be a Yeti?

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
The creation of strawberry milk was the biggest dairy innovation since utters.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Your feet are tough like Rocky Balboa. Invest in a pummous stone.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
You and you alone are the feel good movie of the year, and you're not even a porn!

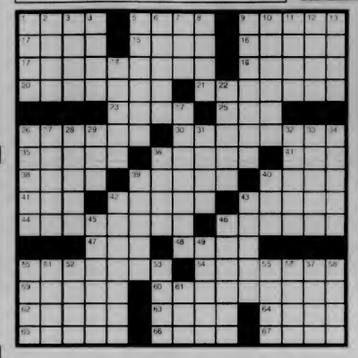
virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
It is impossible to speak French without sounding at least a little bit pompous.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Is there anyone who actually likes the way shoulder pads look?

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Cookies are like crackers which have ingested a cocktail of delicious steroids.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Naming your child Brandy leaves little doubt about where your interests lie.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
The Energizer Bunny has all kinds of stamina. He definately gets tantric.



Submit your comics!
collegiancomics@yahoo.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

IRISH AMERICAN BENNIGAN'S GRILL & TAVERN
LOOKING FOR A SUMMER JOB?
★FULL TIME AND PART TIME POSITIONS
★FAST PACED FUN WORK ENVIRONMENT
Stop by our booth at the Campus Center on Tuesday, April 24th 10 AM - 4 PM
Or call 413-637-9777 for more info

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ACTIVITIES
Amherst Golf Club 256-6894. Play golf Mon./Fri. $20.00 All day. Rate with Student ID.

ANNOUNCEMENTS
Like no other course, Army ROTC All money going to school and none for the weekend? We pay you to be a student and learn leadership www.umass.edu/armyrotc

APARTMENTS FOR RENT
Mill Valley Estates APARTMENT FOR RENT 2 bedroom $1125, 3 bedroom $1425, 4 bedroom $2175 Accepting Applications, 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winnco.com

APARTMENTS FOR RENT
Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Center of town, 1,2,3 bedrooms hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

EMPLOYMENT
Outdoor Recreation Jobs Rafting guides full or part time Massachusetts or Maine. Will train! Contact www.moxierafting.com 800-866-6943

EMPLOYMENT
Need a summer job? College Pro painters is hiring. Work with friends, steady hours, learn a valuable skill. Must be willing to work in the following areas: Milford, Millbury, Grafton, Auburn. Interviewers being held now. Please email collegepronorthbridge@yahoo.com

Drivers and kitchen help wanted. Nights and weekends. Apply at DP Dough. Downtown Amherst.

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

EMPLOYMENT
Moving: Local Moving Company looking for self motivated individuals, part-time positions available immediately. Weekday availability a plus. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call (413) 584-4746

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

HOUSE FOR RENT
4 bedroom in Northampton $1300 available sept. Also 3 bedroom $1200 available now or June 1st. No Pets, Skibiski Realtors 586-1827

PERSONAL
For the coed who met Dr. Ben the speedskater on the bus. Please call 413-256-1589

ROOM FOR RENT
Amherst nice house on bus route to all colleges. 2 rooms available immediately. Each 450 mo + electric. Call Ally 413-253-4929 leave message or call 413-626-7491

ROOMMATE WANTED
Cape Cod Seeking summer roommates starting 6/10 Yarmouth, MA near beach. Female only. 617-519-0178

SERVICES
Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-

SERVICES
1906. 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N Pleasant St Amherst www.birthright.org

Do you have legal questions? We have answers Contact Student Legal Services office 922 Campus Center or call 545-1995

Pregnancy Testing. HIV Testing. Birth Control. and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992 www.tapestryhealth.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, APRIL 20, 2007

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Beanpot blues

UMass falls hard to Huskies, hosts La Salle this weekend

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Fenway Park will host the Massachusetts baseball team on Wednesday for the 18th annual Beanpot Tournament, but the Minutemen will have to play for the consolation prize after their 17-6 loss to Northeastern yesterday in the first round.

After waiting out the rain on both Tuesday and Wednesday, the Huskies (17-9) jumped on UMass (9-16, 4-8 Atlantic 10) pitcher Ryan Walczak in the top of the first – scoring four runs with one swing of the hat – when Dan Milano connected on a grand slam to left-center field.

NU	17
UMass	6

Northeastern added one run in each of the next two innings, and blew the game wide open with another four-run outburst in the fifth. The Huskies continued their barrage at the plate, scoring five runs in the seventh and two more in the ninth.

"It just wasn't a good performance at all by our team," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "The effort we got today was very disappointing."

Every starter had at least one hit for NU, including four multiple-hit performances. The trio of Anthony DiCesare, Mike Iannsin and Frank Compagnone led the way for the Huskies, as each player scored three runs and knocked out three hits. In all, Northeastern reached base 26 times, including 16 hits, eight walks and two hit batsmen.

Walczak – making just his second start of the season – failed to get out of the second inning, giving up five runs on three hits and four walks in one-plus innings of work. The loss dropped his record to 0-2.

Five relievers combined to pitch the last eight innings for the Minutemen, with mixed results. Mike DiCato and Rory McDonald were solid, combining to pitch three scoreless innings. But both Tim Comiskey (three and two-thirds innings) and Beau Hodges (two-thirds) were roughed up, allowing five runs each. Aaron Smith pitched the final inning for UMass and allowed two runs.

The Minutemen had trouble getting to NU starter Dan Zehr, who picked up his third win of the season in six solid frames of work. He allowed just two runs

See BASEBALL on page 9

With a single in the first inning, sophomore second baseman Adam Tempesta has reached base safely in 24 consecutive games. He added a single in the sixth to increase his team-leading batting average to .367.

Top spot in ECAC at stake

Minutemen, Hoyas, rule conference

BY ROB GREENFIELD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts men's lacrosse team has won three games in a row. The Georgetown men's lacrosse team has won four in a row. UMass is 3-1 in the ECAC. Georgetown is 4-0.

The Hoyas won the ECAC in 2000, 2001, 2003, 2004 and 2006. The Minutemen shared the title with GU in 2001, then won it in 2003 and 2005. So when UMass and Georgetown match up Saturday at 1 p.m. on the familiar turf of Garber Field, ECAC supremacy is on the line.

"We play similar styles," UMass coach Greg Cannella said. "They're certainly not going to slow the ball down, neither are we. They are going to be as aggressive as they can and so are we. It's been a lot of fun. In the last several times we've played them, it's been a lot of fun to play Georgetown because I think they play the way the game should be played."

The Hoyas are dynamic and versatile up front, with three attacks and two midfielders scoring at least eight goals so far this season. Attacks Brendan Cannon (11 goals) Andrew Baird (13 goals) and Andrew Brancaccio (12 goals) lead the Hoyas in the offensive end.

"They have four attackmen that can do really well," Cannella said. "They have six middies that can do really well. So it's hard. It's going to be tough on our defense. Our faceoff play and our goalie play is going to dictate a lot of what happens in the game. It's very hard to prepare for a team that has the weapons that they have."

"We've been watching film all week on their offense," defenseman David Von Voigt said. "We've scouted really well for them and they have some great attackmen. We just have to be smart and not go for any stupid checks or anything. We just have to play our game like we've been doing every week and I think we'll be fine. We have the guys to cover up."

UMass comes into this annual matchup with the Hoyas on an offensive tear. The Minutemen

See M. LACROSSE on page 9

Sophomore attack Jim Connolly is building on the success he had as a freshman last year, currently leading the team in points with 27 on 20 goals and seven assists.

Young rivalry still one for the ages

Something big is at hand every time Massachusetts and Georgetown renew their rivalry on a lacrosse field. The same can be said of this year's edition of the infant series between the two schools.

This season, first place in the ECAC is at stake when the Comeback Kids of UMass (three straight wins after terrible start) welcome the league-leading (and perennial Top 10) Hoyas to Garber Field Saturday. That in no way makes this game unique – first place is always at stake between these two.

Jon Pelland

The ECAC might as well be a two-team conference, with the Hoyas and Minutemen butting heads each week. The pair rules the conference with an iron fist. Georgetown and UMass have either shared or outright won the league title since its inception seven seasons ago. The former has taken sole possession of the crown in 2000, 2004 and 2006, with the latter taking it outright in 2005.

That's not where it ends. The winner of this game has also won or shared the conference crown in six of the league's seven-year existence.

Where is the rest of the conference? This is supposed to be one of the strongest lacrosse conferences in the nation, but no one has challenged these two. Loyola was a pretty good team the last time I checked, but it apparently isn't championship material.

It's hard to believe the UMass-Georgetown rivalry has become this important in such a short period of time, they've only played each other seven times, but there's no way around it – the history automatically validates it as one of the top lacrosse rivalries in the nation.

Rivalries usually take years or even decades to blossom with full-fledged meaning. Maybe that stage was too boring for the Hoyas and Minutemen, so they decided to skip it and get right down to business.

Coaches say every game is important no matter who the opponent is, especially to downplay rivalries. Humility is a trait all coaches strive for.

As a writer, it's always cliché when the aforementioned phrase actually carries some weight. It's never fun to print that when a first-place team is about to beat up a cellar-dweller.

But knowing UMass coach Greg Cannella, he played down the rivalry, the history, and all the other hoopla surrounding the game to keep his players on track. If he could, Cannella would lock his players in a box just so they could stay focused.

"This game really has a great rivalry to it, but we're just trying to stay focused and stay with what's been successful for us this year," an obedient senior captain Brett Garber said.

I Mass loves the us-against-the-world approach to each game. There's no doubt it helped last season (see National Championship Game).

For a while at the beginning of the season it looked as if, for once at least, this game was just going to be about pride. UMass got off to a horrible

See PELLAND on page 9

Minutewomen to cap road trip in Philly

Sophomore Brandice Balschmiter continues to be a workhorse for the Minutewomen, having pitched more than 165 innings this season.

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Almost there. That's the mentality of the Massachusetts softball team and coach Elaine Sortino as they enter the final weekend of an eight-game road trip, with four games in three days.

After this weekend's games, the Minutewomen finish the regular season with nine straight contests at the UMass Softball Complex, leading up to the Atlantic 10 Tournament, also hosted this year by UMass.

The Minutewomen (22-12-1, 8-0 A-10) are in Philadelphia today to battle Temple (11-14, 5-3 A-10) at 3 p.m. with the nation's second-longest winning-streak in the nation (11 games, tied with Baylor) at stake. The two teams play again tomorrow at noon to close out the season series.

The Maroon and White remain in the City of Brotherly Love through Sunday for a doubleheader at Saint Joseph's (12-18, 4-6 A-10).

The A-10 standings will likely look very different by the end of this weekend's games. The first- and third-place teams in the conference will square off when UMass and Temple hook up tomorrow.

The Minutewomen have a golden opportunity to create separation between themselves and the rest of the A-10, with wins against the Owls and Hawks. UMass is currently in first place, with Fordham a close second at 11-1.

"Right now, our eye is on getting a spot in the [A-10] Championship, that's the first thing," Sortino said. "Then after that, you start to do other things, but

See SOFTBALL on page 9

Sortino has plenty of options on bench

BY JOE MILTON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

When a coach finalizes a recruiting class, all they can really hope to get out of the class is depth. The occasional freshman stud comes along, but the transition from high school to college often proves such a chore that coaches reserve their freshman for specific roles.

For most of the season, the contingent of rookies and bench players on the Massachusetts softball team has sat in the dugout watching the regulars walk all over the Atlantic 10 opponents.

There are six freshman position players on the Minutewomen's roster, of that group only shortstop Whitney Williams and catcher Jessica Serio have started more than 10 games. That – not to say the other four haven't contributed to the Minutewomen's success – UMass coach Elaine Sortino utilizes her entire roster over the course of the game, pinch running and pinch hitting whenever the situation dictates.

While senior Amanda Acampora ranks among the team leaders in every power category, it's no secret that her speed isn't keeping the coaches of the A-10 awake at night. So in any game Sortino has will remain close to the end. At captain for one of her trusty pinch runners. Typically, senior Michea Holness is first off the bench for the Minutewomen – senior Jackie Leman usually follows.

Not only does the presence of the bench players improve the depth of the Minutewomen, it keeps the backups loose and in the game if a situation forces Sortino to insert them into the starting nine.

One bench player whose performance made a case for some playing time in recent weeks is freshman Carly Normandin. Earlier in the season, Normandin connected for her first career home run against [illegible] ranked DePaul.

"Carly Normandin, she can hit," Sortino said. "She's young, but she has a lot of talent."

The Minutewomen's starting outfield is typically junior Lauren Proctor, senior Candice Molinari and sophomore Samantha Salato – all of whom produce offensively and provide steady defense for Sortino.

Down the stretch, Normandin could crack the starting lineup if one of the three starters hit a rough stretch or needs rest before the A-10 Tournament.

See DEPTH on page 10

UM trying to climb Atlantic 10 ranks

BY KEVIN DOOLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Here's a scary thought for the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team: The last time it came out on top in a game, radio personality Don Imus was still employed to mumble incoherently on the public airwaves.

UMass will be looking for its first win in almost a month when it embarks on its final road trip of the 2007 season this weekend against the Duquesne Dukes (7-6, 2-1 Atlantic 10) and the St. Bonaventure Bonnies (6-4, 3-0 A-10). Game time is slated for 4 p.m. against the Dukes at Rooney Field. Less than 48 hours later, the Maroon and White will be in Olean, N.Y. Sunday to square off with one of the best teams the A-10 has to offer for a noon start against the Bonnies.

The Minutewomen (5-8, 0-3 A-10) are owners of a four-game losing streak and have lost six of their last seven contests heading into this weekend's must-win games. At 0-3 in the A-10, I Mass is off to its worst start in the conference since joining the league in 1999. Another loss in their remaining four games means the Minutewomen will be watching the A-10 Championship Tournament from home for only the second time in nine seasons.

The last time the Minutewomen were following the postseason from afar came in 2005 when

See W. LACROSSE on page 10

Kathleen Typadis and UMass are now in a must-win situation for the rest of the regular season after dropping their first three conference games.

UMASS ATHLETIC WRAP

Sponsored by

University Health Services

Health Education

UMASS Athletics CALENDAR OF EVENTS

THIS WEEKEND

Friday, April 20

BASEBALL
vs. La Salle
3:00 p.m.
Amherst, Mass.

SOFTBALL
at Temple
3:00 p.m.
Ambler, Pa.

WOMEN'S LACROSSE
at Duquesne
4:00 p.m.
Pittsburgh, Pa.

Saturday, April 21

MEN'S LACROSSE
vs. Georgetown
1:00 p.m.
Garber Field

SOFTBALL
at Temple
12:00 p.m.
Ambler, Pa.

BASEBALL
vs. La Salle
12:00 p.m.
Amherst, Mass.

WOMEN'S ROWING
Women's Rowing
Atlantic 10 Championships
TBA
Camden, N.J.

Sunday, April 22

BASEBALL
vs. La Salle
12:00 p.m.
Amherst, Mass.

SOFTBALL
at Saint Josephs
12:00 p.m.
East Norriton, Pa.

WOMEN'S LACROSSE
at St. Bonaventure
12:00 p.m.
Olean, N.Y.

BASEBALL
vs. La Salle
12:00 p.m.
Amherst, Mass.

NEXT WEEK

Tuesday, April 24

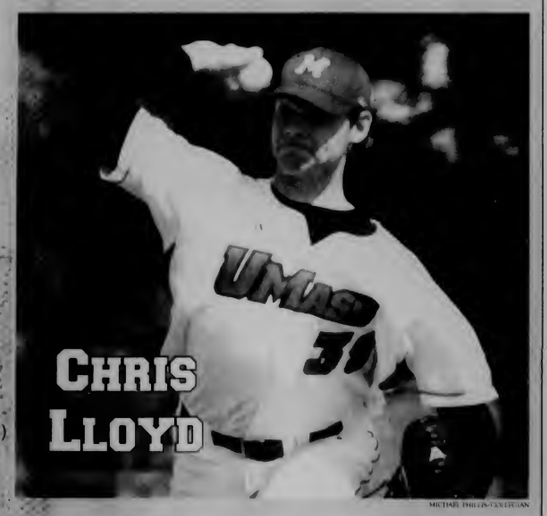
BASEBALL
at Central Connecticut State
3:00 p.m.
New Britain, Conn.

MEN'S LACROSSE
at Fairfield
4:00 p.m.
Fairfield, Conn.

Wednesday, April 25

SOFTBALL
vs. Connecticut
5:00 p.m.
Amherst, Mass.

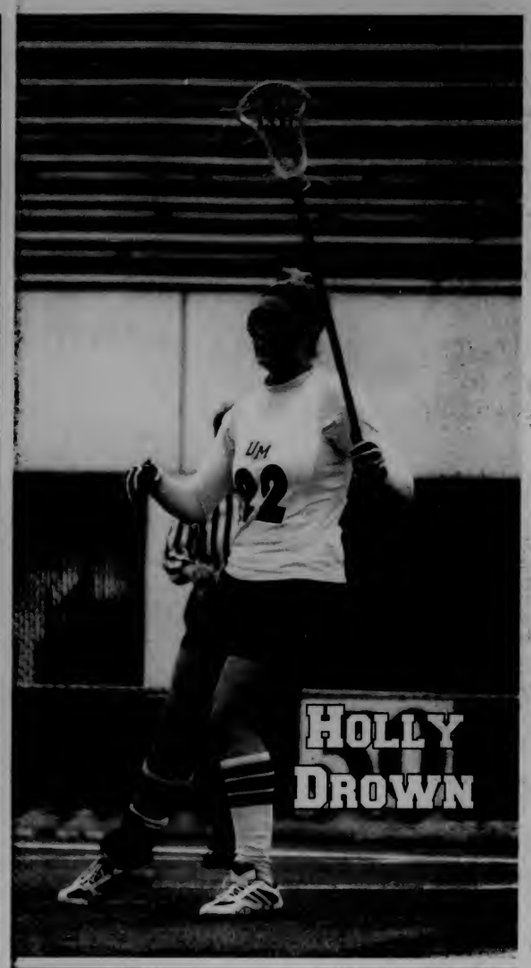
MEN'S LACROSSE
Beanpot Championship
TBA
Boston, Mass. (Fenway Park)



MICHAEL PHILLIS/COLLEGIAN

University Health Services

Health Education



APRIL
IS ALCOHOL AWARENESS MONTH

If you're over 21 and choose to drink alcohol, follow these tips for safer drinking:

- SIP SLOWLY. If you're a quick sipper, use less alcohol in your mixed drink.
- ALTERNATE ALCOHOLIC DRINKS with non-alcoholic ones, like water or juice. Help your body and save money at the same time!
- AVOID MIXING ENERGY DRINKS with alcohol. They can make you drink more and both are dehydrating.
- EAT SOMETHING before going out, to slow the absorption of alcohol.
- SKIP THE SALTY SNACKS – they increase your thirst.

DID YOU KNOW? 2 out of 3 UMass students have 4 or fewer drinks when they party.

Campus and Community Coalition
To Reduce High Risk Drinking www.umass.edu/ccc

MINUTEMEN FALL TO HOYAS
PAGE 10

CHECK OUT THE OCMP DINING OUT GUIDE IN TOMORROW'S PAPER!

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

SUNNY : HI: 83 LO: 54 | WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM | MONDAY, APRIL 23, 2007

VT gunman raises concern of depression

200 students a year seek help from Mental Health Services

By Holly Seabury
Collegian Staff

The tragic events that took place on the Virginia Tech campus last Monday have caused many to contemplate depression among college students nationwide. After the Virginia Tech student gunman, Seung-Hui Cho, was described as "mentally ill" and "troubled" by classmates and professors, students are left to wonder about similar types on their own campuses.

Cho, a senior at Virginia Tech majoring in English, showed clear signs of depression according to his peers. While he was never seen with any friends, Cho's five suitemates noted that he was extremely anti-social and always kept to himself. After an English professor took notice of the darkness and wickedness that developed in Cho's creative writing, she advised him to see the school's counseling service advice that Cho did not take.

At the University of Massachusetts, students who feel depressed or know someone who may have depression have options for help just like students at other colleges and universities. The University Health Services (UHS) offers a list of services provided by their Mental Health Services branch. Students seeking help are offered individual therapy, couples and family therapy, behavioral medicine, medication management, an eating disorders clinic and consultation/education.

According to Dr. Harry Rockland-Miller, Director of the Mental Health Division of UHS, about 200 students per year visit for therapeutic service.

"Our services are confidential and supportive. One can come in for a consultation, without any commitment for on-going treatment," said Rockland-Miller. "We have routine, urgent and emergency appointments and are ready to match a student's needs."

For those with the Student Health Fee, six therapy visits are included for each semester. A pro-

See UHS on page 3

An acoustic night electrifies

There wasn't one empty seat in the Mullins Center on Saturday night. Fans poured in to listen to Dave Matthews and Tim Reynolds jam on their acoustic guitars for over three hours on stage at the April 21 concert. For more on the performance, turn to page 5.

VT newspaper criticizes media coverage

Planet Blacksburg tried to preserve anonymity of the shooter from the mainstream media because they didn't want him to be the focus of news coverage.

By Joe Meloni
Collegian Staff

Within the past week, the front page of every major newspaper and homepage of every news Web site featured in-depth information of last Monday's shootings on the campus of Virginia Tech. After NBC aired a video sent to them by the shooter, the university's student web-based newspaper, Planet Blacksburg, decided to approach any coverage of the event by keeping the shooter's name or any information regarding him undisclosed.

Once most national media learned of his identity, they immediately began publishing information about the shooter and his motives. The focus shifted from coverage of the school and its dealing with the incident to the shooter himself.

In disgust, those at Planet Blacksburg decided not to give him any more publicity than he already received.

"We decided that we weren't going to use his name in any of our coverage," Planet Blacksburg news editor Courtney Thomas said. "He's getting what he wanted. He wanted media attention. He wanted fame and they're giving it to him. That really frustrates us. We thought that we could cover this well without mentioning him at all."

Thomas learned of the events while in class last Monday morning. While the entire university was on lockdown, Thomas and those in her class made phone calls to get any information they could. Once they heard all that unfolded, they began posting the information on their Web site.

"The faculty advisor for the newspaper was teaching the class," Thomas said. "So while they were stuck in classroom, they started calling people and posting on the site to report what was going on."

Members of the national media started using members of the newspaper to get information regarding the shooting and the university's dealing with it. At first, Thomas and her staff cooperated with anyone who contacted them for information. But when they began requesting information about the personal lives of the victims, Thomas drew a line.

"The place that we've been frustrated is when other news organizations called us and just asked for phone numbers of people that died," Thomas said. "We don't feel it's our place to give out that information."

In recent days, the paper chose to focus on the outpour of goodwill aimed at the students and families of the deceased. Universities

See MEDIA on page 3

Journalism series to hold All-Star Career Night

By Vincent Capone
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts journalism department continues its Kantor Lecture series on broadcast and the media this week with its final event, the Alumni and All-Star Career Night and Ice Cream Social. The event will be held tomorrow from 5 p.m. to 7 p.m. at the Blue Wall Café in the Campus Center.

The event will begin at 5 p.m. with an ice cream buffet and finish around 7 p.m. concluding with a door prize raffle.

All-Star Career Night will feature a panel of five UMass alumni with prominent careers spanning many different aspects of the journalism field. Steve Buckley, Sandy Lish, Audie Cornish, Aaron Saykin and Maria Sacchetti will speak on behalf of their experience on the current state of journalism and public relations.

Steve Buckley is a Boston Herald sports writer from the class of 1978 whose experience includes being a talk show personality, a book author and sports columnist for the Boston Herald.

Continuing to make up the panel is Sandy Lish '87, co-founder and principal of The Castle Group, a well-known public relations firm in Boston. A frequent public speaker, Lish was recently awarded the CWE "Emerging Business Star" award in recognition for her outstanding civic contributions. She was named one of the Boston Business Journal's "40 Under 40" business leaders and a Top 10 PR Specialist by Women's Business.

Audie Cornish '01, National Public Radio correspondent and member of the Association of Black Journalists, will share her experience with working with NPR's newscasts, such as their award-winning Morning Edition. Working out of Nashville, Tenn., Cornish spans a 10-state territory in the South and has covered the aftermath

See SERIES on page 3

Five Colleges hold 5th annual Relay For Life charity event

By Jennifer Hushion
Collegian Staff

This past weekend the 5th Annual Relay For Life charity event was held by the five colleges to raise money and support the fight against cancer, as well as remember all those who lost their battle.

The American Cancer Society worked with Amherst College, Hampshire College, Mount Holyoke College, Smith College and the University of Massachusetts to organize the student-planned event for cancer survivors and to remember those who have lost their lives to the disease.

"This weekend was a great success. This year there was a much larger turnout than last year," said Howard Shore, Publicity Chair for Relay For Life.

Voted "Best Charity Event" by the Valley Advocate Readers' Poll for 2005 and 2006, Relay For Life is an overnight event in which teams of 8-15 students, faculty, or staff can walk or run laps around the track on Pratt Field at Amherst College with the goal of keeping at least one member of the team on the track at all times.

Tracks are illuminated with thousands of glowing bags that have the name of a cancer survivor or a victim to the disease in remembrance. The glowing bags are especially poignant during the Luminaria Ceremony

See RFL on page 3

UMass' Sam the Minuteman runs the track on Pratt Field.

More jobs, more Social Security

By Lauren Moriarty
Collegian Staff

For a college student, Social Security is the last issue in focus. But there are projected shifts in the nation's population that could lead to this age group's financial distress. Shifts and changes in today's workforce may cause this generation to be neck-high in payments for a national deficit in the near future.

University of Massachusetts economics professor Robert Pollin explains the potential impact of financial depression for college students and what can be done to prevent it.

According to Pollin, as the baby boomers reach retirement there will be a significant decrease in the working population, shifting the ratio of retirees to workers. This means that in order to provide the nation's retirees with Social Security, payroll taxes will have to increase.

The government currently holds a $70 billion surplus in Social Security.

"It is good that the government has more than enough money in the Social Security fund to back themselves up for this anticipated crunch," said Pollin. However, this surplus is expected to decline in the next two years and will eventually be gone, leaving close to a $9 billion deficit by 2017.

Although some may argue that $9 billion isn't a huge discrepancy for the government to deal with, this deficit will only increase as the nation's baby boomers begin to retire around 2030. The rapid increase of retirees will cause the financial shortage to grow to about $256 billion – a much more difficult debt to recover from.

So what does this mean for today's college students? Workers in 2030 will have payrolls taxes that reach as much as 11.25 percent to make up for the lack of funds. But this problem will only worsen if nothing is done to prevent it.

"The problem is not serious; with minor adjustments [Social Security] would continue to thrive," said Pollin.

The anticipated deficit could also mean that the government would have to borrow money from other sources, but ultimately, it will be Americans who will be taxed to replenish the sources from which the government borrows funds.

Pollin suggests different solutions to prevent this problem and keep Social Security.

At the moment, all of the money collected for Social Security is put into a pool, which Pollin refers to as a "pay-as-you-go program." But President Bush's plan for the situation would eliminate the money pool and privatize retirement

See POLLIN on page 3

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 122

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Eric Athas
MANAGING EDITOR Rob Greenfield
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sherel Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jaimeson Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COPIES EDITOR Adam Staggin
EDITORIAL EDITOR Tucker Merrick
NEWS EDITOR Matt Bellveau
SPORTS EDITOR Danny Picard
SPORTS EDITOR Jon Pelland
FEATURES EDITOR Melissa D'Amico
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Peetz
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER David Valade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Puddester
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Sydney Towne
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Dolianitis
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonjakuakul
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Brendan Hall
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeremy Rice
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCAN IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Eric Athas

COPY EDITOR
Jamie Mason

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Amanda Allen

Virginia Tech students return to campus after massacre

BY JUSTIN POPE
ASSOCIATED PRESS

